About a dozen government employes, chiefly carriers with a sprinkling of clerks, went down to the Hendricks club at the time appointed. A number of the ordinary members of the club were present, but the carriers met in a room by themselves, no outsider except Mr. Backus being present. Mr. Salin was not in the room, though at the club at the time. Backus addressed the carriers, saying that there was a shortage of several thousand dollars, and that the post-office employes ought to raise three or four hundred dollars of the amount. The meeting, he said, was for the purpose of paying the campaign expenses, but no assessment would be made, the men being free to give or not. He added that "the next postmaster was named, and that he was a good democrat," and "that those that contributed freely would be remembered."

Some discussion followed as to how the money should be given, and objections were made at once to giving it to Mr. Dunn or taking receipts for it; and Dunn was warned that he had better be careful in his behavior lest he might get into trouble by coming into contact with the civil service law.

At one time Dunn intimated that he would receive the money himself, and again it was suggested that the contributions should simply be left in a box in the office.

Commissioner Roosevelt comments on the evidence as follows:

"This case seems to me to be akin to the cases of political assessments in the Baltimore post-office at the time of the republican primaries in the spring of 1891, and in the departmental service by the Old Dominion republican club in the fall of 1889. In both these cases the evidence showed that government employes had been endeavoring to assess other government employes, aside from what the evidence showed against outsiders. In each of these cases it was the opinion of the commission, on the evidence taken, that certain government employes were clearly guilty, exactly, as it seems to me, that the evidence shows Dunn in this case to have been clearly guilty of directly or indirectly soliciting money for political purposes from certain of his associates, and in one or two cases thus soliciting them in a government building. In each case the commission brought the matter to the attention not only of the attorney-general, but of the head of the department wherein the officials implicated were employed, being of the opinion that in many of these cases, even where there is difficulty in securing a conviction, there may, nevertheless, be amply sufficient evidence to remove all reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused and to warrant his dismissal from office, it being, in the opinion of the commission, very desirable that appointing officers shall take prompt action to punish the wrongdoers themselves, wherever they are in government employ. This case, and the two cases above mentioned, have, of course, many points of dissimilarity, although they resemble one another in this essential, all three including attempts to collect money for political purposes by certain employes from other employes of the government.

"In the case of the Old Dominion league, an organization composed partly of outsiders and partly of individuals in government employ, an attempt was made to collect funds from various employes in the departments at Washington, from the state of Virginia, for the purpose of aiding the republican campaign in that state. At Baltimore the postal employes, together with some of the employes in the office of the collector and the marshal, joined to assess one another and to solicit and receive from one another sums of money to be expended in the interests of one faction in the republican primaries. In the present instance a democratic letter-carrier, appointed when a democratic postmaster was in office at Indianapolis, but continued in office to this day under the operations of the civil service law, acts as the instrument of a local democratic campaign committee, in the effort to procure political contributions from various other democratic letter-carriers, in order to make up a shortage in the campaign account of the committee. This request is in the nature of a reductio ad absurdum of the arguments usually advanced in behalf of political assessments. Thus the circular sent out by the Ohio republican state committee in the last campaign requesting money from the various postal employes in Ohio, upon the ground that they owed their positions to the republican party. This was, of course, in so far as these positions are under the civil service law, a deliberate and willful untruth, and in any event furnished no excuse for the attempted blackmail. But the climax of iniquitous absurdity is certainly reached when an attempt is made to collect money from government employes by a democratic campaign committee on the ground that, thanks to the operation of the civil service law, these same employes have been kept in office nearly four years under a republican administration."

The Indianapolis case has been laid by the commission before the attorney-general and the postmaster-general for action.—Good Government, January, 1893.

HAVERFORD COLLEGE,
HAVERFORD, PA., Jan. 3, 1893.

Civil Service Chronicle, Indianapolis, Ind.:
We have been receiving the CHRONICLE for some time and it has regularly been put in our reading-room. We have understood that the paper is sent by a friend of the college; if this is not the case kindly discontinue and oblige. Respectfully,
ALLEN C. THOMAS, Librarian.

While writing I wish to say, while personally a civil service reformer, I doubt very much whether the cause is permanently helped by such unvarying and wholesale condemnation, and by such grudging praise when any commendation is given. I confess what I have read in your paper has, if anything, rather weakened my devotion to the cause than strengthened it. I believe in fairness to opponents, and while I have no doubt such is the proposed attitude of the paper, it does not convey that impression to me. One would think that the United States officials were the worst class imaginable—in fact about fit for the penitentiary—if the CHRONICLE's articles were fair accounts of the average official and office-holder and seeker. However wrong the "spoils-men" may be in their opinions, there is something to be said on their side, as the debates in congress when the present post-office tenure of office was passed, or thereabouts, will show. (Of course I write this as an individual.)

THE object of this paper has always been to set out the facts and circumstances connected with the use of the public service for personal and party ends, giving so far as possible the sources of information. Mr. Thomas makes no question about these facts. They are unpleasant and along with us, Mr. Thomas finds them so. But unlike us he can not bear that such things should be said about such nice men, as he knows many of them are. For they are nice men in the ordinary meaning of that term. They are respectable, they are carefully honest in all private relations, and they attend to all charitable and religious duties, as, for instance, Quay is determined that the Sabbath shall not be desecrated by a fair. But all the same, they buy votes, they steal public money, they use thugs and ruffians to cheat in primaries and conventions, they use public offices to quarter friends and relatives on the people, and they use the civil service to break down the will of the people. The only way to break up this business is to drag these persons and their acts out to daylight. Mr. Thomas is not alone in finding it too unpleasant. Everywhere there are multitudes of "good citizens" who think that something can be said on the other side. They, however, never say it. We have for years been trying to find some one who will argue for the "other side," and if Mr. Thomas will do it he can have room in the CHRONICLE. If his faith has become weak in proportion to the facts given in the CHRONICLE he must be a strong advocate of the spoils system by this time. If any thing can be said for the "other side" of Quay, it is time some one was saying it.—[ED. CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.]

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoils, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THERE are but eight complete files of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE and one of these has already been sold. Several more files could be completed if numbers 5, 16, 17 and 22 could be supplied.

THE publication of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE will be continued as heretofore. The subscription price will be one dollar a year, beginning with the second volume. The present number, which completes the first volume, has been delayed in order that this volume might include the whole of Harrison's administration. The index to the first volume will be sent to subscribers as soon as completed.

THE course of Mr. Cleveland since his election has been beyond criticism. He has shown himself master of the situation. He has proved that if a President-elect declares that he will not be harried by politicians about offices, there are no meeker men than those same politicians. He has been left to select his cabinet in his own way and from the men he wanted. The result is a cabinet made up of men who sympathize with his views and who will assist him in carrying them out. Are the people dissatisfied because he thus kicked out the bosses? They were never so well satisfied with Mr. Cleveland as they are now. Has the party been ruined? It never was so strong as it is to-day. What is true before inauguration will be true after. Let President Cleveland stand upon his constitutional rights and strike off once and for all the unlawful grip of congressmen upon the presidential office. Whatever the consequences let him put an impassable gulf between congressmen and the control of the civil service. If it must be, let us have the spectacle of congressmen refusing to perform their duties because the President will not pay them for it with offices. The country will make short work of such mercenaries.

WHILE Mr. Cleveland has been busy selecting his cabinet, with his judgment unhampered by party workers, the country has been treated to the sight of congressmen dividing the offices. They have no authority whatever in the law or in the constitution, and they do not seem to have the least authority from Mr. Cleveland. Nevertheless, they are holding conferences, ordering elections to decide "contests," and deciding who shall have this post-office and who shall have that collectorship. In this business our Indiana democratic congressmen appear the most prominent and the most contemptible. Senator Voorhees and Senator Turpie do not "agree" as to who shall have the Indiana district attorneyship. Senator Voorhees claims the appointment of the collector for the Terre Haute district as his perquisite as against Congressman Brookshire, and so it goes. Every one of these men went about the country before election upon a platform which declared that offices ought not to be subject to change at every election, and yet they are working day and night to bring about the change. They know very well that the Harrison administration was ruined because it failed to keep its promises in relation to the civil service. Most of these men did all they could to baffle Mr. Cleveland's efforts to better the management of the civil service during his former administration, and they mean to repeat their efforts. They do not care what disaster is brought upon the party. They want spoil to give to heelers and henchmen, and they mean to have it.

IN this determination of congressmen, Mr. Cleveland has presented to him the gravest question for decision that will come before him. His decision will settle the question whether his administration is to be a success or a failure. If he shall determine that the great departments of the government shall be confined to the exercise of their legitimate functions, and that congressmen shall be absolutely cut off from influence in the management of the civil service, and if he shall hold to that determination regardless of the consequences he will justly rank among the first statesmen in the world. If congressmen will not legislate upon the tariff, or the finances, or make appropriations unless they are paid for it by him with offices, let the tariff, the finances, and the appropriations go unlegislated upon. The first step toward buying legislation with offices will be a fatal mistake. Mr. Cleveland need not fear. In any such struggle he would have the country back of him as he has never had it yet.

WE do not wish to be understood as saying that cutting congressmen off from the patronage is the beginning and completion of reform; it is an absolutely essential step. Nor do we wish to be understood as taking any interest in the retention of mere politicians in places. But we do say that if the promises of the democratic platform are to be kept, mere politicians can not be succeeded by mere politicians. There is no limit to the power of dismissal; but before dismissals are made the reorganization of the system of appointment should be completed to the extremest extent possible. The entire service capable of it and not so transferred should be transferred to the classified service. Higher positions below presidential offices should be filled only by promotion. Only such persons as are known to be friendly to the civil service law should be appointed by the President to any place connected with it. No laborer should be allowed to be hired in the federal service except under rules like those of the Boston labor service. If congress will not approve the plan by making a law the President has ample power to do so by an executive order. There should be no headsman of fourth-class postmasters. If congress will not pass the Andrew bill for filling fourth-class post-offices, then the President should leave in the present incumbents, and through the present force of inspectors he should fill vacancies in accordance with the principles of the Andrew bill. The balance of the service the President could manage with comparative ease and without need of any advice from congressmen. Above all there is no hurry. There is plenty of time to mature plans. It is not important that any of the present clamorers should have an office. They are not seeking office for the public good but for their own private benefit. The public good requires that measures be taken to end disgraceful onslaughts for spoil such as our columns show are now going on.

THE division of spoils has wrecked the usefulness of every administration since Andrew Johnson went out of office. The one prominent feature in the history of the country since 1869 is the struggle of the Logans, the Conklings, the Camerons, the Mahones, the Gormans, the Voorheeses and the Quays to get offices for their henchmen and to force the President to give these offices. His yielding to these leeches against his own principles cast a blot upon Grant's noble career, and the last triumph of the division of spoil has been to make Harrison's administration a ridiculous and disgraceful failure.

THE viciousness of "politics" is unbridled in the present general assembly. The democratic politicians who control that body seem to think the people will stand anything. The law extending the terms of town officers is one of the most flagrant instances of swindling legislation that ever was enacted and it is well worthy of the cheats and swindlers who had a hand in it. Another worthy specimen of their work is the apportionment bill they are going to pass. It is practically the law lately declared unconstitutional by the supreme court. The proposed bill is such an impudent cheat and swindle that the Indianapolis Sentinel opposes it and Messrs. Hord and Wilson, two democrats from this county, voted against it. No such legislation is democratic or republican. It is imperialism applied by party bosses, and, like imperialism with a single head, under the form of law, it robs the people of their rights. A Fort Wayne paper has suggested that when this legislature finally adjourns, the people of Indianapolis should drum the rascals out of town, and it must be confessed that the spectacle would be gratifying and wholesome. And in this parade the true character of the members would be accurately illustrated by making each one carry in public view the property he has actually stolen from the state.

THE Indiana general assembly has transferred the power of appointing trustees in the various public institutions from itself to the governor. Indiana is now nearer a great office-holders' machine than she has ever been before. She also has some politicians who like to copy after Hill and Quay. It is useless to say that the law vests in superintendents the power of appointing subordinates. A request from a trustee, who may be a tool of the governor's, that certain persons be given places is not disregarded by a superintendent. This power to build up a personal machine was well apprehended by the opponents of the transfer, and in the lower house the change had to be carried through against a majority of the democrats and by a combination of the minority with the republicans. In this maneuver the republicans promptly voted down a proposal to make the boards non-partisan, although to so make them was one of the most ostentatious planks of their platform last fall.

A GREAT quarrel among the democrats is the result of this struggle over patronage. The state and the public institutions have in no manner been benefited. The state service will not be in any manner better. If the republicans elect the next governor, while the general assembly remains democratic, the latter will again take the power from the governor. If this general assembly had put the state service under the merit system it would have enacted one of those great reform laws which mark an epoch in civil administration, and it would adjourn with the party strengthened in this state as it never was strengthened before. Instead, we shall have no better service, and the party has on its hands the usual quarrel over spoils.

It is said that Mr. Frank Burke is seeking to be appointed district attorney for Indiana. Burke was a member of the general assembly two years ago, and as such he was one of the most persistent and malignant opponents of the bill which would have taken the benevolent institutions of this state out of politics. It is to be hoped that no such opponent of Mr. Cleveland's well known principles will be given an office. And before ex-Pension Agent Zollinger is given any office President Cleveland should be informed that while Zollinger held the pension agency here the clerks in his office were in plain violation of the law solicited for money for campaign expenses by his chief clerk and Zollinger has never denied that it was done at his instance. Now if it is answered that the federal grand jury investigated that matter and found no indictments, knowing something of that investigation, we are prepared to meet such an answer.

THE gift by President Harrison of a paymastership in the army to his private secretary, Mr. Halford, is a curious instance of the survival of royal favoritism among us, and sending him over seas to pay half a dozen agents their wages though all the world pays millions over seas every day by drafts, is a harmonious, further and probably final favor. Mr. Halford has in past years rendered service to General Harrison, and for this it would have been proper and republican for General Harrison to pay him at his own expense. Instead, he rewards him out of the public treasury as Elizabeth rewarded Burleigh with castles and estates. And some capable army officer who has waited all his life on slow promotion must wait still longer.

ANOTHER civil service reform paper is needed, one devoted simply to a chronicle of the doings of Tammany. The daily press of New York does its work thoroughly, and furnishes a great mass of material that ought to be startling to any person of average intelligence and conscience. But the cumulative effect of facts scattered through daily papers is largely dissipated. These facts should be combined, and arranged month by month; above all they should be put into compact shape for exhibition at the next centennial.

There are four great and disreputable chiefs, McLaughlin, Murphy, Hill and Croker, who are sure to furnish instructive material in the next few months. If Mr. Cleveland declines to hand over the state of New York to them as booty, they will try to crush him. What they do and how they do it, given in detail, will be curious reading for the patriotic citizen. In fact the hand of Murphy is already felt. John B. Riley, chief examiner of the civil service commission, has just been removed, because, as one of Murphy's henchmen said, "he was not with us, that's all."

It is now stated that during the past year, Governor Flower has suspended the competitive tests for thirty five to fifty places in order that henchmen of the machine might be more easily provided for. This has been the case at the state agricultural station. At the suggestion of Lieutenant-Governor Sheehan, the rules were suspended to let three of his heelers into the dairy commissioners' office. These worthies get $2,000 apiece. Last December Murphy had the rules suspended so that his henchman, Sternberg, could be appointed corporation bookkeeper in the secretary of state's office. In January the messenger in the office of the superintendent of public buildings died. There were men on the eligible list, but they were passed, and the place given to a heeler who had passed no examination. The attention of the civil service commission was called to this violation of the law, but the superintendent of public buildings is Murphy's father-in-law and nothing was done. Last week Labor Commissioner Dowling turned out six employes, and then applied to the commission to suspend the rules to enable him to make some appointments. So it goes. It is time for the civil service reformers of the state of New York to begin a crusade.

THE political reputation of Indiana has been such as often to embarrass her citizens who have outgrown their party bigotry and cant. Those who know the state best are not discouraged because Dudley and his sort have done a great deal of efficient "work," nor of the swinish onslaught going on now, but rather because of the apathy of those who regard themselves as good citizens, moral leaders by reason of intellectual or social position. As was noted in slavery times the northern man with southern principles was most exasperating and obdurate, so in Indiana the greatest incubus on the movement to down the spoils system has been the indifference or the hostility of many sons of New England, or of New England colleges resident in Indiana. It was therefore a happy coincidence that Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, the guest of the New England society of Indianapolis, December 22, should say in his address:

We think that our form of government is the one best calculated to attain this end. It is, of all others yet tried in this world, the one least felt by the people, least felt as an interference in the affairs of private life, in opinion, in conscience, in our freedom to attain position, to make money, to move from place to place and to follow any career that is open to our ability. In order to maintain this freedom of action, this non-interference, we are bound to resist centralization of power; for a central power in a republic, grasped and administered by bosses, is no more tolerable than central power in a despotism, grasped and administered by an hereditary autocrat. Let us not be deceived by names. Government by consent of the people is the best government, but it is not government by the people when it is in the hands of political bosses who juggle with the theory of majority rule. What republics have most to fear is the rule of the boss, who is a tyrant without responsibility. He makes the nominations, he dickers and trades for the elections, and at the end he divides the spoils. The operation is more uncertain than a horse-race, which is not decided by the speed of the horses, but by the state of the wagers and the manipulation of the jockeys. We strike directly at his power for mischief when we organize the entire civil service of the nation and of the states on capacity, integrity, experience, and not on political favor.

MR. WARNER'S remarks are aptly illustrated by a recent occurrence. Early in the session of the present legislature of New York, a bill was introduced to put into practice in Oswego a scheme of municipal reform which aimed to do away with the power of the machine by providing for primary assemblies of the people in numbers drawn by lot, the persons so chosen to meet at once, and choose a representative to vote in their behalf for municipal officers. Dr. Clark, a citizen of Oswego, had been urging the plan for years. The town was anxious to try it. As the New York Times said of the bill, "as there was nothing in it contrary to the constitution or to good morals, and inasmuch as the experiment was to be tried at their own risk and charge, there seemed no good reason why they should not be allowed to try it. That seems to have been the view of the assembly, which passed the bill by 87 to 21." But Sheehan, the lieutenant-governor of the state, and the lieutenant of Hill and Murphy, frankly explained that he would not "let it pass" if every man in Oswego wanted it, because, to quote the language attributed to him by Dr. Clark, "it would knock parties and politicians to the devil," and, upon being reminded that the assembly had passed it, cheerfully made answer, "I know they did, the d—d fools."

THE Boston Civil Service Reform Association recently gave Mr. Roosevelt a dinner. Henry H. Sprague, who presided, said that—

"The coming administration can not more clearly demonstrate its fidelity to the principles of civil service reform than by demanding a continuance of his service in the future. A man who has proved the sincerity and integrity of his motives by never hesitating to hold with an unflinching tenacity the members of his own party to a strict observance of the law, certainly can not be charged with partisanship or partiality if he pursue the same course under the administration of another party."

It is well to take count now of how much we owe to Mr. Roosevelt. Publicity instead of secrecy in all matters of the records has been the most effective step ever taken to guard against tricking the law. The invitation that competition was open to all, at once disposed of the bugbear repeated by high civil service reform authorities that in a republican administration we must expect only republicans to apply for examination, and likewise only democrats when their party was in power. To realize the effect of courage and common sense, note in the reports of investigations and in the letters of civil service reformers to the papers, say six years ago, the halting, quibbling stand on evasions of the law and what Mr. Roosevelt said at this dinner, as reported in the Springfield Republican:

The last great addition and great advance, the inclusion in the classified service of the free delivery post-offices, has been a blow to the spoils system right in its home, the local politician is attacked, and there is a "fierce fight" ahead in enforcing the law in many of these offices, most of all in the smallest ones. I earnestly believe that it is the duty of the commission to proceed upon the assumption that any sweeping change of force in any one of these offices shows prima facie that there has been a violation of the law, and that in the event of such sweeping change the postmaster himself should be held to a full accountability and required to show cause why he should not be regarded as having made such changes for merely partisan reasons.

THERE is one rule that we hope will in all cases be adopted by the new administration. When a man fixes his eye upon an office he wants but finds a present incumbent in his way and then goes about and gets others to help him make "charges," let the charges in all cases be in writing and signed by the persons making them. Then let them be given out for publication a substantial period before action is taken. If it is known that this is to be the rule much moral deterioration will be prevented. Where the protection of secrecy is allowed, most of the "charges" have no foundation whatever, but are manufactured under the impulse of a wolfish desire for prey. Every congressman, every party committeeman, and every citizen should be given to understand that what he has to say toward getting an officer out of his place must be said openly and that he must be prepared to take the consequences.

THE annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League will be held in New York in April at a date not yet fixed. Carl Schurz will preside and deliver the annual address. Any member of any civil service reform association may take part and vote in the League.

THE SPOILS SYSTEM.

CATSKILL, Feb. 20.—Brooding over the impending loss of his office, Postmaster Judson, of Prattsville, finally became violently insane, and to-day was brought before Judge Sanderson, who, upon the finding of physicians who examined him, decided that Mr. Judson be taken to the Hudson River Hospital at Poughkeepsie.

The next day a fever developed and later pneumonia. In his delirium the pressure that office-seekers and office-holders had distressed him with was made apparent by his ejaculations: "My dear Madam, I did not direct that your husband should be turned out. I did not know it. I tried to prevent it!"

At another time he cried: "It is wrong—I won't consent—'tis unjust!" And again: "Oh, these applications! Will they never cease?"—Death bed of President William Henry Harrison.

Gov. Altgeld's flight from Illinois for a health resort was caused by the office-seekers. This is what his physician said:—

If the horde of place-hunters would only give him peace, he would soon be on the road to recovery. As it is, as long as he remains here he will get no better.

THE MERIT SYSTEM.

In March 1892, post-master General Wanamaker announced that he would present a gold medal to the railway postal clerk, in each of the eleven divisions of the service who should make during the calendar year the best general record in his division.

Harry P. Swift of New York led all his companions. He is in the second class of the Greenport and New York railway post-office. In all he handled 35,309 cards in the examination, with a correct percentage of 96.84, and a record of 14 cards per minute. In connection with his work Mr. Swift showed remarkable development in his power to memorize. The distribution in the case work implied familiarity with the quickest method of forwarding, and the exact location of over 50 per cent. of the post-offices in the United States, covering most of the territory east of the Mississippi river. Mr. Swift has been in the service one year and a half.

THE ONSLAUGHT.

"Public office is a public trust. We reaffirm the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, [Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition] and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President, as in the recent republican convention by delegations composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which federal office-holders usurp control of party conventions in the states, and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government."—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

COOPER'S DOMAIN.

DANVILLE.—Democratic patrons of the Danville post-office to-day protested, in no uncertain manner, against Congressman Cooper's action in recommending William A. King, editor of the Gazette, as postmaster under the incoming administration. There are 175 democratic patrons of the office and there were 162 votes cast in the election which resulted in the selection of Robert W. Wade. Four ballots were necessary to decide which of the six candidates had a majority. Feeling among local democrats is running high, and those who went into the election claim that they are supported by the State central committee, while Mr. Kiug is endorsed solely by Cooper.—Indianapolis Journal, January 22.

MARTINSVILLE.—Congressman George W. Cooper was in the city to-day. His apartment at the Grand Hotel was constantly crowded by office-seekers during the entire time. The fact has leaked out that he promised James A. Lewis, county chairman of the democratic committee, the post office. The appointment will not meet the approval of the democrats. There has been a general sentiment prevailing here, suggesting the election of a postmaster by democratic patrons of the city. Should such a thing occur, Mr. Lewis would probably little more than receive a complimentary vote. It is generally thought that Eb. Henderson and son Guthridge will receive fat plums. Eb's son Will., who received half a dozen appointments during Cleveland's former term, is also curling his hair in anticipation of a clerkship of some sort.—Indianapolis Journal, January 25.

MARTINSVILLE.—Hon. Geo. W. Cooper, while in this city, yesterday, appeared to be in excellent spirits, with the exception of the recommending of a postmaster here. That part of his job he would like to let out to some person and pay them to take it. He does not favor the selection by popular vote, and yet he dislikes to appoint one for fear of exciting enmity that may work disadvantageously two years hence, when Judge Cunningham, of Bloomington, will make his nomination improbable as matters now stand. Being asked what he had to say about the local pension board, Cooper remarked:

"I am taking little interest in that, for I do not know what will be the policy of the new administration—whether it will be to divide the members of the board between the two parties or to select all from among democrats. At any rate you may say that Dr. S. A. Tilford will be one of the members of the board." The congressman also said Eb Henderson wants his old position as deputy revenue commissioner, and thinks there is no doubt but that he will get it. Being asked of W. S. Shirley's chance of becoming district attorney of Indiana, he replied: "Well, I can't say. I am embarrassed there because I have another candidate in my district from the same place. It is William Pickens, of Spencer."—Indianapolis Journal, January 26.

Congressman Geo. W. Cooper was here all day yesterday, and the applicants for the post-office were on dress parade before the distinguished gentleman. While he did not definitely state his preference for the position, the aspirants are satisfied that James A. Lewis will receive his approval. Cooper was somewhat astonished when notified that an election had been held at Danville after his preference had been made public, and he intimated that it would make no difference in the selection of a postmaster for that place. Eb Henderson, he says, will undoubtedly be appointed deputy revenue commissioner. He further stated that he [Cooper] was poorer now than when he became congressman, and his purchase of Washington property was purely a business transaction. He had mortgaged his property in Columbus to obtain the money to make the first payment.

Some dissatisfaction exists here over Cooper's action in refusing an election to determine the postmastership, and four of the applicants have expressed a wish that an election be held over his protest.—Indianapolis Journal, January 26.

The five candidates for the post-office at this place held a meeting last night in the democratic central committee rooms to try and agree upon an election. Nothing was accomplished and the fight still goes on.—Indianapolis News, January 28.

DANVILLE.—The democratic patrons of the Danville post-office held an election recently and elected R. W. Wade for postmaster.—Indianapolis Sentinel, January 31.

PLAINFIELD.—Notwithstanding that William Stanley has been but recently reappointed postmaster here, an election will be held to-morrow by the local democracy to determine a choice. The main object of a large portion of the democrats is to thwart the plans of Congressman Cooper.—Indianapolis News, January 27.

None of the democratic candidates for the post-office at Plainfield would submit his chances to a popular election, thinking it no use, R. F. Hiatt alone excepted, and for him but forty votes were cast. Congressman Cooper has named Isaac Holton.—Indianapolis News, January 30.

A special from Danville stating that an election had been held there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Cooper had decided upon the candidate whom he would recommend, was shown to the congressman, and he was asked if he wasn't meeting with some dissatisfaction in his selection of candidates.

"Yes," he replied, "that is to be expected. This, too, in spite of the fact that I have indicated whom I will recommend for the office. There has also been some dissatisfaction at other places."—Indianapolis Journal, January 25.

MARTINSVILLE.—W. S. Sherley, of this city, is a candidate for district attorneyship of Indiana. He was a delegate to the Chicago convention, and was one of the seven supporters of Cleveland from this state, giving him the nomination on the first ballot. Mr. Sherley says: "I believe I will be appointed to the district attorneyship. If Mr. Cleveland takes it upon himself to distribute the important patronage in this state, I am confident I will be appointed, for he can't be ungrateful to his friends, and the district attorneyship is the only office I would accept."

Among the twelve candidates, Judge Nelson of Logansport, Mr. Corbaley, of Madison, and John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, are recognized as Mr. Sherley's most formidable opponents, but as neither of these gentlemen was a delegate, while two of them, Kern and Corbaley, are from districts whose delegates opposed the nomination of Cleveland for a second term, the friends of Mr. Sherley claim he has much the lead in the race.—Indianapolis News, February 13.

MARTINSVILLE.—Eb Henderson, Sam Guthridge, James Lewis, and probably Charles G. Renner, will leave Tuesday for Washington to attend the inauguration. A ticket agent of an eastern line was here Thursday to see them tickets. Mr. Henderson is doing the negotiating for the crowd. After the rates and limitations of the tickets had been given, Mr. Henderson said:

"I don't want a ticket that will run out in eight days."

"How long," asked the agent, "do you want it to run?"

"Why, I can't tell, exactly. It might be four years. You don't think I'm coming home before I get an office, do you?"—Indianapolis Journal, February 25.

HAMMOND'S DOMAIN.

LOGANSPORT.—Congressman Thomas Hammond, of this district, has the largest post-office matinee on his hands that ever twitched the nerves of a politician, and all the fortune tellers in the Wabash valley could not give him a formula that would accomplish the appointment of candidates that would give entire satisfaction. In every town from the size of Logansport, which is 18,000 strong and the largest town in the district, to the snoring hamlet that goes by the classic name of Tailholt, is a following of enthusiastic office-hunters, and the new congressman has served notice on the party workers who have surfeited him with their supplications that he will name all postmasters within twenty days. Here in Logansport there are five prominent candidates for the post-office and about twenty others who are patrons of the black-horse style of campaign, and will feel as though commendable traits have gone uncrowned if they are not successful. The foremost applicants are V. C. Hanawalt, chairman of the county committee; Dr. H. D. Hattery, presidential elector; Harry Torr, ex-auditor, and John Hawkins, foreman of the Pan-Handle shops. Each of these gentlemen is entitled to credit for the zeal manifested in his work, while it is the calm, sober judgment of the vast majority that V. C. Hanawalt is entitled to the appointment from every standpoint from which the merit of a political figure can be reckoned. For thirty years he has been a hard-working party man and has been successively turned down, not because he was not popular, but because he was out-classed by the artifice of his opponents. He has never sulked in his tent, has labored strenuously for the ticket in campaigns when he had been treated shamefully by tricksters at the convention and when the only beneficiaries were those who had always fought him at the convention.

Harry Torr is a fine man, but has just retired to private life about $60,000 better off than eight years ago, when he became county auditor. He hardly had time to brush the dust off of his private affairs before he appeared as a claimant for the post-office, much to general surprise, but he is making a vigorous fight and will go down only after he has fought valiantly.

Hattery is a shrewd, persistent worker, and he has not lost any opportunity since the morning of victory to strengthen his chances with the congressmen. The fact that he is a presidential elector, endows his cause with some additional prominence, and he realizes it, too.

The dark horses who have been groomed and willing for three months are John Sheerin and B. F. Louthain. Louthain is proprietor of the democratic Pharos, has always been a potent factor in state politics and was postmaster during Cleveland's former administration. When it is remembered that Louthain was one of the intriguers that sprang the unexpected nomination of Hammond on the convention at the eleventh hour when there appeared to be no candidate but Zimmerman, it will be seen that Hammond must have gratitude for the editor.

John Sheerin is the brother of the Hon. S. P. Sheerin, national democratic secretary, and an official who can get almost anything under the coming dispensation.

In several other places the inhabitants have been given to novelties in the way of determining post-office contests. The scheme has been that of permitting all democrats to vote for the preferred candidate, and this man to be indorsed by the public as the desired appointee. When Congressman Hammond learned of this movement he thought it an invasion of his privilege to appoint regardless of any local assistance, and has notified all that he is not in sympathy with this procedure, and his language has been so positive that all who want to curry favor with him have dissolved connection with this proposition. Hammond will not permit the people to assume any position that threatens to lessen the dignity or patronage of his station, as he realizes it, but it is thought that the politicians who inside of an hour transformed him from a congressional delegate to a congressional nominee, will exercise an influence that will be heeded in the distribution of spoils.—Chicago News Record, February 9.

DELPHI.—There is nothing new in the post office situation. John Odell is still in the race with all his might, as are a half dozen others. Jim Weidner went up to see Hammond last week and reports a satisfactory interview. Isherwood, accompanied by Will Smith, also paid his respects to the next congressman, and it is said, fixed the whole thing up. When Odell, Weidner, Kennard, Rogers, Nieworth and the rest of them hear of Isherwood's appointment they can't say that I did not tell them about it in advance.—Delphi Journal, February 2.

Several weeks ago the leading democrats of this city decided that they would prefer to settle the question of postmastership at this place among themselves, and accordingly sent to Thomas Hammond, congressman elect, a petition to leave the matter to a vote of the democratic patrons of the office. The petition was signed by nine out of ten of the democrats of the city. In a letter to Hon. John C. Odell, whose name headed the petition, Mr. Hammond plainly and emphatically gives the petitioners to understand that he can name the postmasters in this district without any assistance. He said that petitions and recommendations would be received and filed and given due consideration at the proper time. Mr. Hammond's letter has aroused no little bad blood in the party here, but it has greatly stimulated the post-office candidates. No less than a half dozen are circulating petitions, and it is said that no one who can write is barred. The signatures of men and women, democrats, republicans and prohibitionists are gladly received. There can be no question but that R. M. Isherwood, editor of the Times, will receive the appointment. He is circulating no petition, but he stands in with the state machine, the members of which will name Mr. Hammond's postmasters for him.—Indianapolis Journal, January 27.

The Rochester Sentinel says that Congressman Hammond has named the incoming postmasters in Fulton county as follows: Rochester, J. Shields; Akron, Neal Hettmansperger; Fulton, H. M. Wood; Tiosa, Milton Fertz; Leiter's Ford, Wilson Brugh; Bruce's Lake, J. K. Smith; DeLong, Wm. Heeter; Blue Grass, John W. Rush; Grass Creek, Ed Cook; Bloomingsburg, S. Y. Grove; Grant, L. T. Barkman; Sidconger, Sol Burns, and Richland Center, Jesse Martindale.—Indianapolis News February 18.

DELPHI.—The post-office row at this place was brought to a focus yesterday when a letter was received from Congressman Hammond announcing to the contestants that he had decided to recommend the appointment of R. M. Isherwood, editor of the Times. Mr. Isherwood was chairman of the county central committee, and the son-in-law of Charles R. Pollard, who was a delegate to the Chicago convention that nominated Cleveland. This appointment is received with anything but joyous acclaim by the democrats of the city. The contestants were Hon. John S. Odell, a democratic war-horse, and James W. Weidener, a vigorous representative of the county democracy. Soon after the contest opened Congressman Hammond announced that the man who presented the best petition would be recommended for the place, and Odell and Weidener spent weeks circulating petitions. Isherwood circulated no petition, saying that if he could not get the appointment without thus humiliating himself he did not care for it. Without presenting the shadow of a petition he secures the place. This is what aggravates the other contestants and their friends more than anything else, and they are talking of dire revenge on the congressman. Isherwood will not give up the publication of his paper during his incumbency. The post-office and democratic organ will both be managed from the same tent and both will be auxiliary to the democratic county central committee, of which Mr. Isherwood will remain chairman.—Indianapolis Journal, February 26.

LOGANSPOUT.—Congressman Hammond will recommend V. C. Hanawalt for post master at Logansport.

CHESTERTON.—Among the petitions in circulation for appointment as postmaster, and there are a number of them, is one by F. F. Maroney, in which he says of himself: "There is no question about his democracy; it was born in him. His mother is a radical and cordially hates the politics of a republican and mugwump. All of his ancestors before him have been believers in the Jacksonian principles of democracy."—Indianapolis News, February 18.

HOLMAN'S DOMAIN.

GREENSBURG.—The candidates for the city post-office under Mr. Cleveland have agreed among themselves to submit their claims to the democratic patrons of the office and the action will be promulgated to the party in a day or two. The date for holding the election has not yet been fixed. The action on the part of the candidates, it is said, is due to a letter received from Congressman Holman, who advised such a step. Who the successful man will be it is hard to say, but at this time Mayor Cicero Northern and S. F. Rogers are the leaders.—Indianapolis News, January 31.

GREENSBURG.—The post office election occurs tomorrow, and the ten candidates have been unusually active to day in an effort to pull themselves together in good shape for the contest of the ballots. Charges and counter charges are being made on every hand. The struggle has caused much bad blood among the rival candidates, and it will be many a day before all the sore places have been healed.—Indianapolis News, February 27.

GREENSBURG.—The following was the vote for postmaster to-day: C. F. Northern, 29; W. N. Boyles, 29; William Haas, 9; John Lugenbell, 89; S. F. Rogers, 153; G. W. Magee, 15; G. P. Shoemaker, 89; M. Jackson, 13; Bernard Keeb, 65; Miss Lida Black, 6. Total vote, 445.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 1.

SHELBYVILLE.—The scramble for political spoils among the democrats is amusing. Before the official count disclosed the victor in the last election, men made their claims known for the various places. When it was announced that Holman was recommending elections, the applicants who did not possess the necessary political pull commenced to ask for an election for the post-office. There are already eight applicants for the postmastership, and if there is an election several more will shy their castors into the ring. The applicants up to date are John W. Vannoy, formerly mayor of the city; Wm. Buxton, ex-county recorder, and for years chairman of the county central committee; Ed Major, city clerk; Adam Flaitz, Joe Kennerly, deputy postmaster under Cleveland and the Harrison appointee; Wm. Ryse, an old and intimate friend of Mr. Holman, besides 'Squire Higgins, justice of the peace for years. S. S. Major, Cleveland's postmaster, is strongly talked of, but as yet he has made no statement. The friends of the candidates are anxious to hold an election, but those who possess influence desire to leave the matter to the appointive power.—Indianapolis News, February 15.

RUSHVILLE.—The democrats who are patrons of the Rushville post office have determined upon an election to settle the matter of a postmaster. It has been arranged by the candidates to hold the election Saturday, March 11, under the Australian system. This means of settling the matter has been suggested by the Hon. William S. Holman.

There are now in the field twelve candidates for the position, each of whom good naturedly pledged himself to abide by the results. The names of the worthy aspirants who desire to handle the U. S. mails are as follows: Perry Parrish, T. B. Monjar, Albert English, John Cavitt, J. T. Nixon, Perry Alexander, D. P. Shawhan, Patrick Lynch, Douglas Morris, T. M. Ochiltree, W. C. Meredith, J. F. Bigger.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 27.

TO THE EDITOR.—Sir: The communication published in your issue of this date from Rushville relating to an election of postmaster is far from stating the facts. Mr. Holman did not suggest an election, and parties here have letters from him of very recent date expressly saying he did not, nor has not intended, to suggest an election. This mode of settling the matter has not been agreed to by a part of the aspirants named in the published article. Some of them have expressly refused to engage in or take part in an election called in this manner. The central committee of this county, or the executive committee of this township, has not been consulted in the matter, and the call, if call there is, has been made by no one with authority to call an election. I do not understand that a few seekers for a petty office can disregard the constituted party authorities and have an election under any arrangements they may think proper and whenever they may think proper. If they can, then we will soon be having an election every day. I would be glad if you would publish this to correct the false impression made, or intended to be made, by the article referred to.

JOHN D. MAGEE.

Rushville, February 27.

—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 28.

TO THE EDITOR: SIR—In your issue of the Sentinel to-day I notice an article over the signature of John D. Magee in relation to the call for an election to be held here on the 11th of March, to determine who is the most popular democrat in the city for postmaster.

In his article he states that the election was not officially authorized by any one and that it is not the work of Mr. Holman. In reply to these statements I desire to say that the notice for an election is regularly signed by Thomas J. Newkirk, chairman of democratic central committee of Rush county, and that we have in our possession a letter from Mr. Holman requesting the post-office matter to be settled here by the democracy of this city.

Rushville, February 28. THOMAS M. OCHILTREE.

—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 1.

RUSHVILLE.—The democrats of Milroy concluded to decide their choice for postmaster at that place, a few days ago, by holding an election. There were several worthy aspirants for the position, and the election was held according to previous arrangements. The result was that a Miss Susie Pegg was chosen, she having received the necessary majority of votes. It has since leaked out that Miss Pegg is a strong prohibitionist. This result has brought about quite an uproar among the faithful, who declare that another election should be held to settle the matter.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 10.

MOORE'S HILL.—It is a reliably stated that there are thirty nine applicants for the post office at Aurora.

MOORE'S HILL.—A bitter post-office war, which threaten to involve the entire neighborhood, is waging at Boston. More's the pity, for the salary of the postmaster at the hamlet is not $40.—Indianapolis News, February 25.

BYNUM'S DOMAIN.

ANDERSON.—But little interest is taken in the post-office fight here. This is probably due to the prevailing impression that Dale J. Crittenger, editor of the Democrat, and a warm personal and political friend of Congressman Bynum, is an applicant for the place and has the inside track. Other candidates mentioned are Thomas J. Fleming, John Baker and B. W. Scott. Mr. Crittenger has the support of the leading men of his party, and it looks now that he could not fail to get the appointment, as it is understood Mr. Bynum is pledged to his support.—Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 4.

HAUGHVILLE.—There is a strong tendency toward having J. M. Taylor for Haughville's next postmaster. There is no dissatisfaction with the present incumbent, but the change in administration makes possible a change in postmasters, and the popular J. M. Taylor is the almost unanimous choice.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 10.

The Irish element of the Haughville democracy are putting forward John Gallagher as a candidate for the post-office.—Indianapolis News.

There are as many aspirants for the Indianapolis post-office as there are local democrats, almost, but the knowing ones say that Albert Sahm is the one "Vic" Backus had in mind when he told the clerks at the post-office that the postmaster was already selected.—Indianapolis Journal, February 27.

MARION.—W. J. Houck, editor of the Marion Leader, is a candidate for collector of internal revenue for the sixth district. A petition urging his appointment for this position has been circulated by his friends, and the names of a great many of the prominent local democrats secured. Mr. Houck at first was a candidate for the post-office at this place.—Indianapolis News, January 5.

Local democrats say that the question of federal patronage for this city has been settled; that the only appointment Indianapolis will get is that of the post-office and collector of customs. Cleveland has not been heard from, but "Bynum and the boys have fixed it all up." Congressman Bynum is reported to have said that Albert Sahm would be appointed postmaster, and it has been inferred from Mr. Bynum's talk that the collectorship would go to Maurice C. Donnelly; that Sahm would be appointed as a representative German and to satisfy the German-American club, and that Mr. Donnelly's appointment would be as an Irishman and a representative of the Shields club. J. L. F. Steeg, who is an applicant for the collectorship, had a talk with Mr. Bynum, and soon discovered that there was no chance for him, even when he said to the congressman from this district that he did not ask the office as a representative of the German, French, Irish or American element, but as a Democrat, he did not receive any encouragement. He has withdrawn from the race. Smith Myers, however, has not given up all hopes. He says that the man who beats Maurice Donnelly will be appointed. The appointment of United States marshal and district attorney will not, it is believed, be made in Indianapolis. It is believed that Captain Allen, of Frankfort, will be appointed pension agent; Judge Nelson, of Logansport, United States attorney, and Mr. Hawkins, of Sullivan, for United States marshal.—Indianapolis News, February 23.

AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Mr. Erwin yesterday introduced a resolution, which the house adopted, asking the Cleveland administration to "fire" all the mail clerks employed during the Harrison administration, and replace them with democrats.—Indianapolis Journal February 25.

The Cleveland Club gave a benefit last (Sunday) night at the Empire Theater, and drew as large an audience as was ever seen there. The object of the entertainment, was to secure funds for an excursion of the club to Washington, to attend the inaugural ceremonies. The show netted the club about $1,000. The first part of the entertainment consisted of regulation blackface minstrel show. Numerous pictures of Cleveland were hung about the boxes, and on the stage, and bunting was freely used. The first row of people on the stage were the performers, black faced, and dressed in swallow tail coats. In the center sat James Fennessy, the manager of the house, interlocutor for the nonce. A row of members of the Cleveland Club sat on raised seats just behind the performers, clad in light overcoats and silk hats, holding their canes rigidly before them. They were designed to help the decoration of the stage, and were much and loudly admired by friends in the audience. The great disappointment of the evening burst upon the audience when the curtain rose. The "Honorable Simeon Coy," so advertised to appear as one of the end men, at the last moment backed out. He was seen however, in the second row on the stage, wearing a silk hat and looking sublimely uncomfortable. During the whole of the first part he was not seen to move a muscle of his face. The lower boxes were filled with politicians. The Rhake family occupied the left box, and Ollie Lanham, with his family was to the right. The performers seemed to think the presence of these gentlemen a good joke, and various references to "7 and 11" were made which seemed to be thoroughly understood by the audience.

The first part was composed of songs and choruses in the best style of amateurs, and when such songs as "Push Dem Clouds Away" and "Sunday at Fairview Park" were sung the enthusiasm of the audience refused to be restrained.

When the curtain went down the male portion of the audience rose en masse and filed out of the house, and during the wait filled the wide open saloon across the street, drinking and congratulating each other on the success of the entertainment. Chief of Police Colbert looked benignly on. During the intermission Police Judge Buskirk appeared in front of the curtain and made a speech, in which he told the "boys" their duty, and emphasized the fact that "to the victors belong the spoils." Nothing was said by him or by the chief about the violations of law before them. It was the first evening, so far as is recalled, that a row of patrolmen was not in line in the foyer of the theater. There had been some curiosity to know if the authorities would interfere, as the entertainment was like others that had been suppressed.—Indianapolis News, February 27.

The politicians and applicants for places were flocking around "Gil" Shanklin last night in such a force that he was hardly able to eat his supper, and he got little sleep. "Where's Gil?" was an interrogatory heard about every five minutes, and, as a final resort, a room at the Bates was given to them, and from it they marched in on Mr. Shanklin in a solid platoon. Mr. Shanklin, who had a two-hours' talk with Mr. Cleveland, said to his friends that he found the President-elect thoroughly informed on the condition of Indiana politics, and that the result of the interview was that "Cleveland men" will be rewarded above all others.

Mr. Shanklin is advocating the cause of Maurice C. Donnelly for collector of customs, and this leads the friends of Donnelly to believe that he will be appointed. John Reaume and John Reardon are also mentioned for the place. John H. Foley wants to succeed Hart, of Frankfort, in the sixth auditor's office, or Colonel Shaw, of the treasury department. Charles Rogers has put in his application for superintendent of the railway mail service in the fifth district. "Denny" Colbert is an applicant for the same place. "Billy" Colbert wants a place in the Indianapolis post-office, and Thomas Colbert is a candidate for United States marshal. M. F. Kelly, now employed at the Central Hospital for the Insane, is applicant for consul at either Belfast or Londonderry, Ireland. "Con" Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, is after the same place. George W. Geiger wants the United States marshalship. John Higgins, assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, will ask for a place in the navy department. "Wils" McGinnis's friends are at work to secure his appointment as deputy revenue collector in place of L. F. Harvey.—Indianapolis News, February 24.

The friends of Isaac P. Gray say there is no doubt that he will be sent to Mexico to represent the United States. They say that he is well aware that the President will have a cabinet that will accord with his own views. Mr. Gray feels that he might differ with him on some things, and therefore it would be better that he be not in the position of a confidential adviser. He has, it is claimed, signified his desire for the mission to Mexico, and has been slated for that place. His friends say, that while they would prefer that he be given an office of more importance, they are satisfied, if he is. The office pays $12,000 a year.

It was hoped that Mr. Gray would be in a position to dispense a little patronage, and about half of the members of the club named in his honor, it is said, had their plates ready to hand out as soon as their patron was in a place to fill them. It is said, however, that Mr. Gray has not lost sight of his friends in his own good fortune, and will make an effort to have some of them remembered.

Captain Allen, of Frankfort, is in the city. He has returned from a political mission east. Captain Allen has been the steadfast friend of ex-Governor Gray. He has done everything that a loyal follower could do, and now that there is nothing else to do for Gray there are evidences that the captain is looking out for himself. He is a candidate for the Indianapolis pension agency. He has the support of the Indiana senators and has been asked by them to return to Washington about March 10. He was told while down east that Governor Gray would be given a place under the new administration.

Sheriff Hawkins, of Sullivan, is a candidate for United States marshal for the Indiana district. It is said of him, politically, that he has possessed himself of every political honor he has ever sought, and that his reputation and backing are of the best. He is not a relative of Edward Hawkins, who was marshal under Cleveland four years ago.—Indianapolis News, February 20.

Isaac Pusey Gray will go to Mexico as United States minister. All doubt of this has been set at rest by Mr. Gray himself, who said so, confidentially, to a friend. The Mexican mission was suggested for Gray by Mr. Cleveland himself. In a financial sense it is the best of the missions.

There is really only one candidate for the Indianapolis post-office who is making a determined fight, and that is Albert Sahm. Mr. Sahm has the indorsement of nearly the entire Indiana delegation, and the local leaders have made frequent trips to New York in his behalf. Those of his friends who have talked to Mr. Cleveland and to the latter's advisers say that there is no doubt but the appointment will be given to Mr. Sahm.

Fred Lorenz is the latest applicant for the position of superintendent of carriers at the Indianapolis post-office.

Local politicians who are watching events closely, say that the election of United States Senators is having a strong influence in the Federal appointments. There is a reconnoiter going on at this time. Senator Voorhees wants to succeed himself. The intimate friends of J. G. Shanklin say that he will be a candidate. W. D. Bynum is anxious to go up a step and is taking care of himself for the senatorial race. Governor Mathews' friends are insisting that he will make a good candidate for senator. Isaac P. Gray, his friends declare, has not lost his love for the senate. Thus it is shown that Federal appointments are mixed up to a great extent with political aspirations and ambitions, and the result is a great deal of confusion. The candidates for senator, it is said, will aid those who will best serve their future interests, and an office-seeker who has the indorsement of one of the aspirants will find it difficult to secure an indorsement from the others.—Indianapolis News, March 2.

D. F. Mustard, of Anderson, is in the city to-day. He was mentioned for United States treasurer, but says he had never thought of such a thing. A number of his friends, Mr. Mustard says, have urged him to apply for the pension agency at Indianapolis.

"I have not," said Mr. Mustard, "declared myself, and I am not, understand, a real sure-enough, applicant. If the matter gets all tangled up by the various candidates and an outsider is selected, why, I will try and be the outsider. I think I am competent for the place and I am a democrat. But I will not make a canvass or fight against any one else for the position."—Indianapolis News, March 2.

* * *

The Indianapolis Journal and Indianapolis News have been printing during the last two weeks a series of absurd statements touching ex-Governor Gray and his prospective relations to the new administration. The fact is, as intimated in these dispatches many days ago that due provision has been made for the ex-governor. As is pretty well known in political circles, both here and in Indiana, the ex-governor was quite anxious to enter the cabinet. His preference was the post-office department or the interior department. Quite a strong pressure was put by the ex-governor's close friends upon the President-elect to secure his appointment to one of these posts, or, in lieu of these, to some other position in the cabinet. The President-elect, however, after canvassing the situation thoroughly, could not see his way clear to tender the ex-governor a cabinet position. He thereupon determined to offer him the Mexican mission. The tender was made through a close friend of the ex-governor, and promptly accepted. His nomination will be sent to the senate very shortly after the inauguration—certainly not later than some day next week—and will undoubtedly be confirmed at once. There is not the slightest prospect of opposition to the confirmation from any quarter. The Mexican mission is a comfortable berth, with little to do and a good salary. But, of course, there is no patronage attached to it.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 28.

BRETZ'S DOMAIN.

Congressman Bretz has gained the reputation of being one of the frankest dispensers of federal patronage in either house of congress. Already, a month before inauguration, he has settled on the men he will recommend for the principal post-offices in his district, and makes no concealment of his choice. He read off a list of some of those he will recommend for appointment as postmasters under the new administration to the News correspondent to-day: Vincennes, Royal E. Purcell, editor Vincennes Sun; Bedford, John Johnson, editor Democrat; Shoals, Al Hacker, editor Democrat; Jasper, Charles Egg; Mitchell, Joseph T. Dilley.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, January 28.

OVER LORDS VOORHEES AND TURPIE.

The Indiana senators will have a lively question on hand when it comes to settle the post-office at Richmond. Luther M. Mering, who was defeated for congress by Henry U. Johnson, believes he is entitled to the appointment, but his democracy is not old enough to meet the requirements of some of the old time Jacksonian school, who believe that democracy like Bourbon ought to be at least ten year old before it is put on tap. Vigorous protests have already reached Washington against the appointment of Mr. Mering.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, January 28.

Mr. Luther Mering, of Richmond, who made an unsuccessful race against Congressman Johnson, is at the capital, and it is reported that he claims the privilege of dispensing the patronage of Mr. Johnson's district, which, by an arrangement between the senators, had been allotted to Senator Voorhees. Mr. Mering is an applicant for postmaster at Richmond.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 24.

The two collectors of internal revenue have, it is stated most positively, been agreed upon. It is stated that Judge Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, has been "officially" informed by the arbiters that he shall be collector of internal revenue for that district, and that Capt. William Bracken, of Brookville, who has recently been here, was informed that he would be appointed collector for that district. These selections are said to be positive and definite, and the Journal correspondent is authorized to say that unless President Cleveland turns down the delegation these men will be appointed, as there recommendation is to be unanimous. A great many men applied for these two places. Judge Holman, when informed that his district would get one of the places, and that he could name the man, nearly fainted. He had pretended to be anxious to secure the place, but when confronted with the responsibility he got red in the face, was confused, and finally acknowledged, before the delegation, that he was "placed in an embarrassing position," as he had two men for the place, and it leaked out that he had been playing fast and loose, and both of the applicants believed they had the judge's undivided support. Finally Senator Voorhees said he was willing to relieve the judge of his "embarrassment:" he would take the responsibility and name Captain Bracken, of Brookville. The judge, rather than permit the senator to take the responsibility, and consequently the credit, said he would also name Captain Bracken, so Dr. Hunter, of Lawrenceburg, who thought he would surely have his neighbor's support, is left out in the cold. There will likely be trouble over the appointment of Jump, of Terre Haute, to be collector of internal revenue. Editor Moss, of the Bloomfield Democrat, is said to be entitled to the place, if indorsements and general fitness count for anything. He is said to have by far the greatest strength in indorsements, and it is hinted that he intends to appeal to President Cleveland, in which event it is hard to foretell the result.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, February 23.

The announcement from Washington that Senator Voorhees would recommend ex Judge Joshua Jump for collector of internal revenue for this, the seventh district, was so much of a surprise that but few persons believed there was anything in it. In all the general discussion of applicants his name had not been used. It seems, however, that the Voorhees Lamb faction of the democracy had quietly agreed, several months ago, to get the appointment for him. That he is the choice of this faction is now frankly admitted by those who are best acquainted with the situation. Ex-Judge Jump is ex-Congressman Lamb's law partner and was not supposed to want office of any class. The firm has the best paying law practice in the city, but the collectorship, with the $4,500 salary, is a decided inducement for him. It is now well understood that Lamb has prevailed on Senator Voorhees to recommend Harry Donham, another lawyer, for postmaster. The report has been received here through private channels from Washington that all the democratic members of the incoming congress have consented to recommend the appointment of ex-Judge Jump. Among the other applicants are William M. Moss, the Bloomfield editor; J. M. Hoskins, of Clay county; George Dixon, of Evansville, and James Bolton, of this county.—Indianapolis Journal, February 24.

It is definitely settled that the matter of recommendations for the local patronage in the two republican districts of Indiana will be settled by Senators Turpie and Voorhees. The two senators have virtually agreed upon a division of the spoils, Senator Voorhees to deal out the appointments in Congressman Johnson's district, and Senator Turpie to have the say as to the appointments in Congressman Waugh's district.

George L. Dixon, of the firm of Mackey, Dixon & Co., of Evansville, is a candidate for collector of internal revenue in the Seventh district, and will have the indorsement of Representative Taylor, congressman-elect from that district. The appointment, however, as stated in the News some time ago, has been practically settled upon Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, law partner of the Hon. John E. Lamb, who seems to have his heart set upon this particular piece of federal patronage.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 24.

* * *

As already announced in a Journal special, Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, who is John E. Lamb's law partner, is to have the place, if Senator Voorhees, Jason Brown and Judge Holman can deliver it to him. There are other applicants for the place who are at this moment engaged in making trouble over Mr. Jump's selection. They are alleging that Jump is the creature of Crawford Fairbanks, a large distiller of Terre Haute, and that if he should be appointed it would give Fairbanks undue advantages.

Representative Brookshire has a candidate for that collectorship, and he is not discouraging the rumpus which is brewing.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, February 26.

Indians are beginning to arrive here for the inauguration, and incidentally to get government obs. Interest centers in the U. S. district attorneyship, marshalship and pension agency. Indiana will probably present candidates for pension commissioner, public printer, commissioner of internal revenue and at least one important diplomatic appointment, perhaps more.

John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, and Frank Burke, of Jeffersonville, continue to be in the lead for the district attorneyship. Senator Turpie will support Mr. Kern. Burke will have the support of Senator Voorhees and Representative Jason Brown. Senator Voorhees and Mr. Brown committed themselves in favor of Burke, before Kern sought to secure any influence. There will be no hard contest between the friends and supporters of these two rival candidates. Senators Voorhees and Turpie usually agree on all matters affecting the best interest of the state, and although each one of the senators will earnestly work to secure the appointment of his respective candidate, there will be no very great rivalry, and the appointment will be made according to merit.

It was reported a few days ago that Representative Brookshire would insist that he should be allowed to name the internal revenue collector for the Terre Haute district but as Senator Voorhees is not quite ready to concede this much to Brookshire, Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, will probably be appointed, as heretofore stated in these dispatches.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 26.

* * *

And still they come. The Indiana sight-seers and office-seekers are coming in squads and battalions. Among the prominent arrivals to-day is Thomas B. Buskirk, of Poali. He is after the United States marshalship for Indiana, and, it is said, will have the support of nearly all of the Indiana delegation. James M. Hoskins, of Brazil, arrived to-day. He wants to be internal revenue collector. Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, is said to be Senator Voorhees's choice. Representative Brookshire, of the Eighth district, will recommend another man for the position. Mr. Brookshire was asked to-day why he would recommend a man to oppose Senator Voorhees's candidate. He said because Holman was to be allowed the privilege of naming the collector of internal revenue for the Seventh district. He thought he ought to be conceded as much by the Indiana senators. Mr. Brookshire does not state whom he will recommend for the place, but it is believed to be Mr. Hoskins, of Brazil. S. H. Taylor, of Daviess county, and O. M. Packard, of Plymouth, are the leading candidates for bank examiner, although there are a few other applicants for this position, which pays $3,000 a year. Pugh, of Rushville, who is here, would like to have the place. Senator Voorhees promised to recommend Taylor if he was physically able to perform the duties. Senator Turpie will be for Packard, who is highly esteemed in his section of the state. All of the Indiana representatives in congress who know him intimately have the highest praise for his character and ability.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 28.

* * *

Thomas Hanlon, of New Albany, who has had his eye upon the collectorship of internal revenue, gives up that chase. He concedes that Mr. Jump, of Terre Haute, has it nailed down, and now Thomas says he will take any other good place which the delegation may give him. If he gets nothing under Uncle Sam he proposes to go back to railroading, provided he does not fall into the position of warden, of the prison south, a place now held by Mr. Patten. Mr. Hanlon has had the wardenship in view for some time, as a last resort before going into private occupation.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 1.

MARTIN'S DOMAIN.

NORTH MANCHESTER.—Samuel McCutchen has been elected postmaster by the local democracy of this city and vicinity, receiving a plurality of seven votes. The board will recommend Mr. McCutchen to the President through Congressman Martin for appointment.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 14.

Congressman Martin has within the last two days decided to recommend the following gentlemen for appointment as postmasters in his district: C. M. Hawkins at Marion; W. W. Timmonds, editor of the Sun, at Portland; W. A. Gutelius at Bluffton; Ed Smith at Converse (formerly Xenia); W. H. Campbell at Fairmount, and George Peele at Upland.

There are two candidates for consulships in the Eleventh district. They are J. H. Detray, of Portland, for consul to Havre, and Herman Wiecking, of Bluffton, for one of the German consulships.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 25.

Representative Martin has determined upon the men he will recommend for appointment as postmasters at a number of the most important cities in this district. They are as follows: W. A. Gutchins, at Bluffton; C. M. Hawkins, at Marion; W. W. Timmonds, at Portland; Ed Smith, at Converse (formerly Xenia); W. H. Campbell, at Fairmount, Mr. Martin will try to name the successors to the Hon. Warren G. Sayre, of Wahash, who is one of the Cherokee commissioners, and General James N. Tyner, of Peru, who is an assistant attorney general, assigned to the post-office department. He hopes also to name the successor to the superior of special post-office agents located at Cincinnati, who is also a Peru man, although this position rightfully belongs to the civil service classification.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 1.

THE GENERAL SCRAMBLE.

ROANN.—The local democracy of Roann have named Dr. Baird as the choice for postmaster.—Indianapolis News, January 31.

SALEM.—At an election held here to-day for postmaster, John D. Alvis received 133 votes; Henry M. Munklet, 110; John Stherlan, 33; Collin McKinney, 17; John Warner, 9. John D. Alvin was postmaster under Cleveland four years ago.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 3.

John J. Hoover was the successful candidate in the election for postmaster at Wabash to-day. There were eight names on the ticket.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 6.

NOBLESVILLE.—The post-office fight is fairly on. The candidates are G. W. Ingermann, who was postmaster under Cleveland and is ex-chairman of the democratic county committee; F. M. Applegate, F. W. Applegate, R. H. Goeble, O. A. Harnish, W. F. Lacy, E. Lacy and Henry Sappa. It has been decided that no election shall be held, but that each one shall go before the appointive power on his merits.—Indianapolis News, February 15.

TIPTON.—The post-office fight is now on in earnest here, and six candidates are in the field. Last night a meeting was held by the candidates, and it was decided, by a close vote, that they would hold a primary, nothing but democratic patrons of the office being entitled to a vote. The time was fixed for Saturday, March 4. The candidates are E. C. Elliott, Samuel Vawter, W. B. S. Ressler, J. R. Bowlin and Charles Means, of this city, and Wm. Smart, a farmer, with a prospect of one or two dark horses in sight. [Also Alpheus Bennett and J. W. Pope].—Indianapolis Journal, February 27.

NEW CASTLE.—A merry war is in progress among the numerous applicants for fourth-class post offices in Henry county. At each town there are from one to a dozen applicants, each confident of success. On Saturday elections to decide who should be the appointee were held in several towns. At Lewisville and Middleton, two of the most important offices, some of the applicants would not agree to allow the democratic patrons of the office to settle the vexed question and are still circulating petitions and seeking the influence of the more prominent politicians. The condition of affairs is daily growing worse and will only be settled when President Cleveland makes the appointments. At this place all is harmonious, and from outside appearances one would not judge that a new postmaster is to be named before a year rolls by.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 21.

Ed Smith, of New Castle, arrived in the city last night to secure a little "floodence" to aid him in his candidacy for postmaster of that place. He was chairman of the county central committee, and has always been an active democrat. His friends say that he is strongly indorsed. There are several other applicants for the place.—Indianapolis News, February 28.

James T. V. Hill, the colored lawyer, is a candidate for recorder of the general land office.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 28.

About all of the prominent federal offices in Indiana have been parceled out already by the Hoosier democratic delegation in congress. There has been a conference, at which consideration was given the claims of the army of applicants. As a result it is known by the delegation, "on the dead quiet," you know, who will get the places, provided, always, that Mr. Cleveland does not enter a veto to the arrangements. As has been announced frequently in dispatches to the Journal, ex-Governor Gray has been left out altogether, upon the request of Messrs. Morss, Shanklin and Bynum, but an effort will be made by Senators Voorhees and Turpie to veto that decision. The ex-governor has sent word that he does not propose to be left out or sent away on some third or fourth-class mission, just to be gotten rid of, so that he will achieve neither wealth nor fame. Although beggars should not be choosers, the ex-governor will recognize the fact that he is regarded as having no real claim to office. He says that if he is to be sent away he will go only to Mexico and take the mission which is now held by ex-Representative Ryan, of Kansas. The Mexican mission has been made first-class, and has a salary attachment of $17,500 a year. It is not believed that Sir Isaac Pusey will get nearer the Mexican mission than he is at present—that is if the three distinguished Hoosier democrats named can keep him out of it, but if he is not given it, his friends send word here that he will remain in Indiana and "see his enemies later."

It is stated that Frank Burke, of Jeffersonville, who is the protegee of Representative Jason Brown, will likely be United States district attorney, although John W. Kern is pushing him hard. Others "prominently mentioned" for the position are Judge Nelson, of Logansport; Charles Offut, of Greenfield; Mr. Cullop, of Vincennes, and Mr. Sherley, of Martinsville. Offut is "Bynum's man" it is said.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, February 23.

Ex-Editor Luther Short, of Franklin, wants to go to Constantinople as consul-general.—Indianapolis News, February 24.

* * *

Luther Short, secretary of the Indiana editorial association, would like to visit Constantinople as consul-general. John F. Sherman, of Waterloo, wants a consulship. Just which one he has not decided upon. Dr. Leibecker, of Aurora, thinks a German consular post would repay him for his services during the late campaign; but Prof. Rucker, of the Lawrenceburgh high school, says he has a claim on that at Leipzig. Prof. Wright, of Valparaiso, would like to represent the United States at Victoria, B. C., and believes he could put a stop to the smuggling of Chinamen at that port.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel March 2.

* * *

E. B. Swan, of Rockport, is a candidate for district attorney; J. G. Winfrey, of Evansville, for assistant district attorney general; Leroy Wade, of Posey county, wants a territorial judgeship; W. L. Hargrove, of Gibson, aspires to the United States marshalship; Thomas Fuller, of Warren county, would like to be a territorial district attorney; Henry Mellen, a Boonville lawyer, wants a consulship; Dr. Fritsch, of Evansville, would like to go as a consul to Germany, and Henry Kramer, of Rockport, who made an unsuccessful race for the democratic nomination for congress in the First district, would like a South American mission or consulship.

Congressman-elect Conn, of Indiana, has a candidate for public printer in the person of Editor Wadsworth, of the Laporte Argus. He will probably be indorsed by the entire Indiana delegation and formally entered as a candidate in a day or so.

The Hon. Eli Brown, who was here a few days ago, has been slated for the Frankfort post-office, according to the gossip. George Mitchell, of Batesville, is also here in quest of the post-office.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 24.

The Sentinel correspondent learned to night that practically the whole Indiana delegation will present the name of H. E. Wadsworth, editor of the Laporte Argus, for public printer. Representative Conn, of the South Bend district believes that Mr. Wadsworth will stand a very good chance for the appointment. It is understood that Senators Voorhees and Turpie, Representatives Bynum, Brown and Martin have agreed to support Wadsworth.

Brookshire had proposed a candidate in the person of W. C. Ball, of the Terre Haute Gazette, but it is not certain that that gentleman will be an applicant. If not, Brookshire will probably support Wadsworth. Bretz will act with his Indiana colleagues. Shively and Martin will talk with Holman and endeavor to secure his influence in favor of Wadsworth, Taylor, McNagney, Patton and others of the Indiana delegation have as yet had nothing to say with respect to Wadsworth's candidacy, but all of the Indiana men will doubtless soon be in line for Mr. Conn's man. Wadsworth has telegraphed Conn agreeing that his name be presented.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 24.

Gen. John S. Williams, of Lafayette, arrived to-day. He wants to be commissioner of internal revenue. Mr. Williams made a very efficient third auditor of the treasury under President Cleveland's administration, and as he may have the support of the Indiana delegation, his prospects for the appointment ought to be very good.

Col. C. A. Zollinger will probably be appointed pension agent at Indianapolis.

The petition in favor of the appointment of Henry E. Wadsworth, of Laporte, as public printer has been signed by Senators Voorhees and Turpie, Representatives Bynum, Brown, Holman, Martin, Shively, Brookshire, McClellan, Bretz and Representative-elect Conn, who is working earnestly for Mr. Wadsworth's appointment. Representatives Cooper, Parrett and Patton and Representatives-elect Hammond, McNagney and Taylor will sign the petition, thus making the Indiana delegation solid for Wadsworth, both as it is constituted in the present congress and as it will stand after March 4 next.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 26.

There is a new Richmond in the field for marshal for the Indiana district. It is ex-Sheriff Joseph C. Gray, of Versailles, Ripley county. It is said he made a very good sheriff, and believes he is well qualified for the office of marshal.

Colonel Jous, of Manilla, Rush county, Ind., one of Judge Holman's constituents, has made application for appointment as commissioner of pensions. This causes some surprise and comment here, in view of the candidacy of Colonel McLean, of Terre Haute, who, up to this time, has been the only candidate from Indiana, and seemed to have the united support of the delegation.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 24.

Not much is being said as yet concerning the postmastership of Indianapolis. The name of Albert Sahm is frequently and favorably mentioned for this appointment.

There are several candidates for the Indiana bank examinership, the place formerly held by Samuel H. Taylor, of Washington, Daviess county. Mr. Taylor's health will not permit his candidacy again, and it seems to be the impression here that the appointment will go to Orlando M. Jackson, of Plymouth, who would make a most excellent officer in the opinion of the Indiana representatives in congress who are intimately acquainted with him.

It is generally known that Gil Shanklin would like to be consul general to London. Some of the Indiana representatives will soon announce a complete list of post-office appointments in their respective districts. Representative Brown is inclined to appoint as postmaster at North Vernon James Remie, editor of the North Vernon Sun.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 26.

* * *

Among the candidates for the office of collector of customs for Indianapolis is W. T. Steele, ex superintendent of the Citizens' Street Railroad.—Indianapolis Journal, December 17.

* * *

D. F. Mustard, of Anderson, is mentioned for United States treasurer. His brother "Dick" says he (Dick) wants to go back into the railway mail service long enough to "fire" the republican who took his place. Thomas B. Buskirk, of Paoli, who bases his claims for United States marshal on the ground that he was chairman of the first democratic convention in the state to indorse Cleveland as a candidate for President, is the bearer of 116 letters and recommendations representing fifty-five counties of the state. He also says he has always been a democrat and a worker. His friends say his chances are bright. Lewis Jordau, it is said, is to have a place in one of the departments at Washington. Crawford Fairbanks, of Terre Haute, has not asked for anything, but it is said that he can be appointed one of the Mississippi river levee commissioners if he so desires.—Indianapolis News, February 24.

* * *

"Full little knowest thou, that hast not tride,
What hell it is in suing long to bide;
To loose good days, that might be better spent;
To waste long nights in pensive discontent;
To speed to-day, to be put back to-morrow;
To feed on hope, to pine with feare and sorrow;
To fret thy soul with crosses and with cares;
To eate thy heart through comfortless dispaïres;
To fawne, to crouche, to wait, to ride, to ronne,
To spend, to give, to want, to be undone."

* * *

W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, has two opponents for the district attorneyship who are strongly indorsed. They are Charles Korbly, of Madison, and ex-Senator Ewing, of Decatur county, son-in-law of Governor Matthews.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 17.

The Indiana candidates for office are beginning to arrive. John W. Kern, of Indianapolis registered at the Riggs house to-night. He is a candidate for district attorney. W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, and William A. Pickens, of Spencer, are also mentioned for the office. It is said Gil. Shanklin would like to go as consul-general to London. He is at the Willard hotel. C. E. Allen, of Frankfort, who is here, and Col. Zollinger, of Fort Wayne, are among the applicants for the Indiana pension agency. Prof. Moss, of Bloomfield; Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, and Dr. C. C. Cole are among the many applicants for collector of internal revenue for the Terre Haute district. Jump will be appointed. Representative-elect Taylor will recommend Mr. Nolan, postmaster at Terre Haute. Thomas B. Buskirk, of Orleans, wants to be United States Marshal for Indiana. Dr. W. D. Hunter and Capt. William Bracken are among the candidates for internal revenue collector for the seventh district. Representative Bretz will recommend John Johnson for postmaster, at Bedford, and J. T. Lilly, at Mitchell.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 19.

The visit of John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, to Washington, has been fruitful of results. It is stated on good authority now that he has a walkover for district attorney. The fight, it seems, had narrowed down to the field against Frank Burke, of Jeffersonville, and the field, according to latest reports, is prepared to combine on Kern. Mr. Burke has been backed by Congressman Jason Brown. The Gray and anti-Gray elements have figured in the district attorney fight to the disadvantage of Burke, who was a Gray man against Cleveland. Kern, it is claimed, was an original Cleveland man. Congressman Bynum has stated that he favored Charles G. Offut, of Greenfield. W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, who had a promising boom, some time ago, is declared now to be out of the race altogether. If Kern is made district attorney it will necessarily take the United States marshalship away from Indianapolis.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 21.

John C. Nelson came down from Logansport yesterday to add something, if possible, to his prospects as a candidate for United States district attorney. Judge Nelson has the support of S. P. Sheerin, secretary of the democratic national committee, whose standing and influence with the incoming administration is believed to be potential. Judge Nelson's most formidable competitor for the district attorneyship is Senator John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, who went to Washington last week to lay some pipes extending toward the office.

When Mr. Kern's friends recall the eulogy pronounced by him when he presented the name of the candidate recently elected United States senator, they think it is fair to presume that Turpie is for Kern. Senator Voorhees is understood to have a leaning in the same direction.

"I believe my chances are as good as those of any other one man," said Judge Nelson. Another man said he would rather have the backing of Mr. Sheerin than to be recommended to Cleveland by the entire Indiana democratic delegation in congress.

In Mr. Kern's favor it is urged that he was one of the earliest and most aggressive Cleveland men, while Judge Nelson and his most influential backer were identified with the opposition.

The other aspirants for the position are: W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes; Courtland Ewing, of Greensburg; Mr. Corbaley, of Madison, and Mr. Ballow, of Bluffton. Mr. Ewing is a son-in-law of Governor Matthews.

What is regarded as a serious stumbling block in the way of Mr. Cullop is the difference that has been stirred up between him and the Indianapolis Sentinel, it being taken for granted that Mr. Morss has some influence with the coming administration. Messrs. Corbaley and Ballow are not regarded as formidable factors.—Indianapolis Sentinel, February 21.

The next United States district attorney, it is now said by those who believe they know, will be Judge John C. Nelson, of Logansport. He is a personal friend of Si Sheerin, secretary of the national committee, and it is understood that Sheerin is urging him for the place.—Indianapolis Journal, February 25.

* * *

At a meeting held at the opera house last evening resolutions were adopted by a rising vote favoring the candidacy of John Brodie, chairman of the Porter county democratic committee, for the U. S. marshalship of Indiana.—Valparaiso Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, November 21.

* * *

Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, is an avowed candidate for United States marshal of Indiana.—Indianapolis News, December 18.

* * *

Northern Indiana politicians are crediting John Brodie, of Valparaiso, Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, and George W. Reid, of La Porte, as avowed candidates for district marshal of Indiana under the incoming administration, while Judge Pollard, of Delphi, wants to be commissioner of immigration.—Indianapolis News, January 16.

* * *

Thos. B. Buskirk, of Paoli, who wants to be United States marshal for Indiana, and who was supposed to be backed by the solid delegation of Indiana democratic congressmen, is, it is believed, drifting away from the goal. It is stated that he has not now the solid delegation, and that he may not have half of it.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 1.

* * *

Tom Newkirk, last clerk of the lower house, is making a fight for the office of collector of internal revenue for the southern district. He has the support of three of the seven congressmen in the district, and says if good backing amounts to anything he will get the office.—Indianapolis Sentinel, December 23.

J. W. Nusbaum, of Elkhart, Ind., has written to Congressman Shively and others of the delegation saying that he is a candidate for collector of internal revenue of the sixth district, and will file strong petitions later.—Indianapolis News, January 12.

W. H. Osborn, of Lawrenceburg, the well-known democratic politician and son-in-law of Dr. Hunter, is at the capital. His business here is to try to advance the interests of Dr. Hunter for appointment as revenue collector. Mr. Meudenhall, another democratic politician, of Greensburg, is here.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 15.

Dr. W. H. H. Hunter left for Lawrenceburg to-day. While here he was the guest of Judge Holman, and saw other members of the Indiana delegation about his candidacy for revenue collector of the sixth Indiana district. His hurried trip here was due to a report that Wm. Bracken had secured the indorsement of the Indiana congressmen. He returned in better spirits.

Judge Gooding, of Greenfield, arrived to-day, and called on the members of congress from Indiana.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, January 31.

The internal revenue collectorships of Indiana afford the liveliest contests that are now going on among the Hoosier democrats. Early in the week editor W. H. O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, arrived and took a hand in the fight that is being waged between his father-in-law, Dr. Hunter, and William Bracken, of Franklin county, for the collectorship of the sixth district. The pins had already been set up for Bracken, but O'Brien, who is a clever politician, has been expending his efforts quite freely to change the arrangement. James Mendenhall, of Greensburg, another democratic editor, was here Tuesday and Wednesday urging Bracken's appointment.

In the seventh internal revenue district there is quite as interesting a complication. Wm. M. Moss, editor of the Bloomfield Democrat, started out soon after the election to secure indorsements for appointment as revenue collector. The result is that he is the most strongly indorsed applicant for federal office now in the country. He has presented letters from the governor, Chairman Taggart, a majority of the Legislature, and nearly all the democrats of prominence in the state. In his own district he has also the indorsements as second choice of the friends of several of the other candidates. The fight will probably be between Moss and Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute. The latter is Hon. John E. Lamb's law partner, and it is understood that Mr. Lamb is very anxious to have the appointment go to Mr. Jump. Another point in his favor is that most of the revenues in the district are collected in Terre Haute. An effort is being made among Lamb's influential democratic friends to have Moss withdraw as a candidate for the collectorship, and apply for something else. But he is reluctant to do so. It is understood that a letter was sent out from Washington this week advising Moss to withdraw, as it had been practically settled among the Indiana delegation to recommend Mr. Jump's appointment.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, February 17.

AT WASHINGTON.

Hoosier democrats, up to the present time, have been content to fire at the federal patronage at long range. The Indiana delegation in congress has received as many petitions and letters for places as have come from any other state in the Union. But the number of "visiting statesmen" is not large. The fight that is attracting most local interest at this time is the contest for revenue collector of the sixth district. Apparently the two senators and most of the representatives who live in the sixth district are disposed to favor the appointment of William Bracken, of Brookville. But Congressman Holman is playing a mysterious part in the proceedings, and it is the opinion that he is secretly in favor of Dr. William H. H. Hunter, of Lawrenceburg, who was collector under the Cleveland administration. If Mr. Holman secures the appointment of Dr. Hunter, he will have to overcome the Bracken boom, which up to this time has had the field.

W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, is the most popular candidate for United States district attorney for Indiana who has yet entered the field, although it is understood that he will have many competitors.

Wm. M. Moss, of Bloomfield, and Dr. W. A. Cole, of English, are candidates for revenue collector in the seventh district.

Dr. Woolen, of Vevay, has been at the capital for several days. He was chief of the swamp lands division of the land office under Commissioner Stoekslager, and is said to be looking for his old position again.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, January 28.

* * *

The mail of the average Indiana member of congress is a burden to him these days. The candidates for office are more numerous than ever before. There are forty or fifty applicants for the two collectorships of internal revenue in Indiana. The pension agency is another office for which the candidates are as thick as blackberries.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 3.

Orlando M. Packard, of Plymouth, Ind., arrived at Willard's hotel to-night. Mr. Packard's friends believe he stands a chance to be appointed bank examiner. He will secure the support of Senator Turpie and Representative Conn. It is understood that when Senator Voorhees visited Washington, Davies county, during the late campaign, he assured S. H. Taylor that he would indorse him for the position. Mr. Taylor held the place under Mr. Cleveland's first administration.

Plymouth has another candidate. Dan McDonald, editor of the Plymouth Democrat, wants to be made third auditor of the treasury. Some of Mr. McDonald's friends aver that he was an "original Cleveland man" but there are those who remember that Mr. McDonald, just before the Chicago convention, requested that his name be withdrawn from the published list of Indiana editors who were for Mr. Cleveland's nomination.

William Merrill arrived from Connersville to-night. He is a candidate for postmaster. He is backed by the democratic organization of his county. Chairman Tom Taggart has also indorsed him.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 27.

Indiana will present another candidate for an important federal position not heretofore mentioned in these dispatches. Dick Johnson will try to be third assistant postmaster general. George W. Cooper, representative from the Columbus district, may be able to secure the support of a good many of the Indiana people for Johnson.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 1.

* * *

James C. Carleton, of Bedford, has arrived, and will seek a chiefship of division in one of the executive departments as soon as the administration changes.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, February 26.

E. J. Smith, of Connersville, is here. He used to be a special examiner in the pension bureau, and will be willing to take the place again providing he can get nothing better.

Solomon E. Jackson, formerly of Greenfield, Hancock county, now of Indian Territory, is here, and is a candidate for United States district attorney down there. He will probably be indorsed by Representative Bynum and perhaps by Senators Voorhees and Turpie. Mr. Jackson removed from Indiana about four years ago, and has already made himself prominent in the politics of the territory. He was a delegate to the Chicago convention, and voted for Mr. Cleveland's nomination. There is a spirited contest for the United States district judgeship for Indiana Territory, the place now held by Judge Shackelford, formerly of Evansville, Ind. There are three candidates for the position.

Thomas Hanlon, of New Albany, is here. He was being piloted around by Representative Jason Brown. Mr. Hanlon would, no doubt, like to be collector of internal revenue again. It is hinted that Mr. Hanlon would accept the United States marshalship if he were pressed hard, but failing to get anything better would be content with the postmastership of New Albany.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, February 28.

Dr. Jere Roberts, of Holton, is a candidate for local medical pension examiner. He is now in the city urging his candidacy. A little deal will be arranged to-day which will probably knock out the ambitions of two Indiana men, Col. McLean, of Terre Haute, and Col. Jones, of Mr. Holman's district, both of whom want to be commissioner of pensions. Col. Charles A. Zollinger, fourteen years mayor of Fort Wayne, and a politician of adroitness, will swoop down on the capitol to-day, and his coming portends the collapse of at least two booms. A deal is already arranged which awaits only the sanction of Colonel Zollinger, and that has been procured in advance, which amounts practically to the dropping of the names of Col. McLean and Col. Jones for pension commissioner and the putting forward of Col. Zollinger's name for deputy commissioner. Col. Zollinger was formerly pension agent. This position, according to the programme, arranged to-day, will go to Capt. Allen, another Indiana man. Editor Will A. King, of the Danville Gazette, who is to be recommended by Congressman Cooper for postmaster at Danville, arrived last night with Mrs. King. W. H. Hargrove, of Princeton, is said to be in the lead to-day for appointment as United States marshal. There are a number of candidates here, among them Buskirk, of Paoli, and Hawkins, of Sullivan. Samuel Harris, who is to be recommended for postmaster of Franklin, is here. James R. Ryan, of Bloomington, is desirous of being appointed inspector of supplies at an Indian agency. He arrived this morning. Edward D. Pugh, a national bank cashier of Rushville, is here seeking the position of national bank examiner for Indiana.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 2.

Among other arrivals are C. A. Zollinger, candidate for pension agent, Royal C. Purell, of the Vincennes Sun, candidate for Vincennes post-office, ex-State Senator Hudson, of Indianapolis, who wants to be consul to Toronto, and Capt. Kilaus, of Madison, who is an applicant for postmaster of that city.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 3.

Roscoe C. Griffiths, a well-known and popular lawyer of Muncie, Ind., arrived this evening. He comes to secure the collectorship of internal revenue for his district, a position which Dr. Hunter, of Lawrenceburg, and Captain Bracken, of Brookville, have been wrangling over for some time. Mr. Griffiths has strong backing and promises to be a winning compromise. L. A. Kirkwood, of Muncie, has also arrived, and wants his position of four years ago—that of post-office inspector on the Pacific slope.

Hon. Frank Burke, of Jeffersonville, a candidate for district attorney of Indiana, arrived last night.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 2.

Col. C. C. Matson arrived to-day. He is stopping with Hon. George W. Cooper. It is generally understood that Mr. Matson is after some prominent position in the treasury department. The Sentinel correspondent was told to-night that he wants to be commissioner of internal revenue. This is the position which John S. Williams is after. Whether Mr. Matson wants this commissionership or not, it is said that he will certainly be provided for in a handsome manner. Senator Voorhees and Mr. Carlisle are very good friends and the latter's recommendation of Matson, coupled with Senator Voorhees' indorsement, would go a long ways in securing the position for Mr. Matson.

Another candidate for district attorney arrived to-night. He is Elbert M. Swan, of Rockport, Ind. It is said that Tom Newkirk, of Rush county, has written a letter here, withdrawing from the contest for collector of internal revenue for the sixth district in favor of Tom H. Bracken, of Brookville. George C. Griffiths, another candidate for this place, arrived to-day. The contest is between Bracken and Griffiths. The latter lives at Muncie. Alexander Kirkwood of Muncie wants to be a post-office inspector again. He is also on hand.

W. A. Hawkins, of Sullivan, candidate for marshal of Indiana, is at the National. Mr. Hawkins' friends believe he will receive the support of Senator Voorhees and most of the Indiana delegation.

C. A. Zollinger and Capt. Allen, the latter of Frankfort, are the principal candidates for pension agent at Indianapolis. The Sentinel's correspondent received a tip that Zollinger would be appointed, but Allen's friends declare that he is a winner.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 2.

One of the most interesting rivalries is over the position of special bank examiner. There is only one to be appointed for Indiana, but there are four active candidates and a number of dark horses. The active candidates are Col. Taylor, of Washington; W. H. McIntyre, of Auburn; O. A. Packard, of Plymouth, and E. B. Pugh, of Rushville. Mr. Holman seems especially interested in Mr. Pugh's behalf. Congressman McClellan and Congressman-elect McNagney are backing McIntyre and are said also to have the quiet support of Congressman-elect Hammond. Congressman Conn is behind Packard's candidacy. The Indiana senators are said to be somewhat disposed to favor Col. Sam Taylor, of Washington. Geo. W. Geiger, of Indianapolis, has been putting in some pretty strong work for the United States marshalship. A short time ago it looked as if Mr. Kern would be taken and Mr. Geiger left, but in the last few days Geiger has sent on a large number of strong petitions, particularly from the traveling men over the state who are recognized as political factors that can not be ignored. Thomas B. Buskirk, of Paoli, who is backed by Congressman Bretz for United States marshal, is here also, and is making a strong fight. It is stated, however, on high authority, that he will hardly be appointed.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 3.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HAVERFORD, PA., Jan. 24, 1893.

To the Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

SIR—The January number of the CHRONICLE has just come to hand. You will doubtless allow me space to disclaim altogether the interpretation which you have put upon an informal note. A hasty personal postscript to a business letter, written without an idea of publication, might easily be so expressed as to be misconstrued, but, even taking this fact into consideration, I fail to find in my postscript anything to justify or excuse the use made of it, the title prefixed to it, or the comments made upon it. I distinctly stated that I was a civil service reformer, and yet because I criticised the methods employed by the CHRONICLE, and because I happen to live in Pennsylvania, you jump to the conclusion that I support Mr. Quay. No conclusion could be more inconsequent or further from the truth. It would be about as inconsistent for me to defend "spoilsmen" as for the editor of the CHRONICLE himself; yet nevertheless I believe in fair play, even towards those who do not support civil service reform, and even to—correspondents.

Respectfully, ALLAN C. THOMAS.

We quote the following from a correspondent at Crawfordsville:

"No papers published are doing so much good as those exclusively devoted to the civil service of the country, and I prize the CHRONICLE more than any other paper I get. The civil service is gradually extending, and if the President will extend the rules to the extreme limit that he can under the law, he will have the applause of the great body of the people who expect no office, and whose highest interest in office is, that the holders of them discharge their duties faithfully.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoils, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefit already gained through this instrumentality and the further usefulness it promises entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods.—President's Inaugural.

ALREADY the field seems broad for the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE during the next four years, and we earnestly invite all to subscribe who are interested in the cultivation of this field. The only promise we can make is to be thorough and impartial. The greater the support, the greater will be the usefulness of this paper.

SO FAR it does not appear that the President has determined upon any fundamental changes looking to the disuse of the offices as patronage. To make the applications public, to refuse to appoint ex-office-holders, to refuse to appoint editors unless they will give up their papers and other rules which have been given out from time to time, will lead to more or less improved administration but they do not and will not constitute reform. That can only come by such fundamental rules as will kill the patronage element in executive acts. Of these we have spoken elsewhere. Meanwhile our columns show the rush of office-seeking, and our President sitting patiently while the torrent boils and seethes around him. We are the going curiosity of the continents and hemispheres. We are the civic fool of the world.

THE appointment of Frank B. Burke, of Jeffersonville, to be United States district attorney for Indiana, is so unfortunate that it ought to be withdrawn. Burke was a member of our state senate in 1889 and 1891. He was one of the leaders in defeating the civil service bill which would have taken the benevolent institutions out of politics. He opposed the Australian ballot bill and was the only democrat in the general assembly who voted against it. He opposed the new charter for this city. Any measure that was for the general benefit could safely count on Burke's opposition. He is one of the most vicious men who ever got into public place. His appointment seems to be due to the influence of Senator Voorhees. After being the chief factor in bringing Mr. Cleveland's former administration into disgrace in Indiana, it is strange that Voorhees should have any influence. He is working solely and only to secure the re-election of Daniel W. Voorhees to the senate without friction. He cares nothing for the public service. He is a bourbon of the bourbons; he has never been known to lift up his voice for any kind of reform. There is a reform element in the democratic party in this state. It has had to fight steadily against such men as Burke and Voorhees, and against them it has already accomplished important work.

THE editor of the Anderson Democrat has been appointed postmaster of Anderson, Indiana. This is a good illustration of the way we do public business. Anderson is a large and flourishing city. Handling mail matter has become in the highest sense an expert business. Yet to take charge of it in a place like Anderson, we go out into the street and pick up a politician who never worked at the business an hour in his life. This is not done to further the public business, for public business is advanced in the same manner that private business is, and no private business ever goes into the street and picks up a politician for a manager. But by this appointment Congressman Bynum pays the editor of the Democrat for past and future services to himself. The principles of private business would have chosen from the lower ranks of the postal service some thoroughly skilled postal man for postmaster at Anderson. This would have been for the interest of the people, while the above appointment is against the interest of the people. Mr. Bynum and the whole crew who are now preying upon the public service could long ago have brought the proper application of business principles to the people's business; but they fight such application at every step.

It is claimed to be settled that Mr. Albert Sahn is to succeed Postmaster Thompson in the post-office of this city. Mr. Thompson's commission has two years and more yet to run. In this connection, Mr. Sahn says in an interview in the Indianapolis News of March 14:

"Should I be appointed postmaster here, I will not, as some have said, make a clean sweep from cellar to garret. In taking the office the incumbent takes oath to observe the laws, and I propose to follow the laws, especially the civil service law, in letter and spirit. So far as my liberties extend I shall appoint democrats to positions in the office, but otherwise the law will be enforced. Another thing that a misapprehension exists about is the time when I shall succeed Thompson. Mr. Thompson will fill out the time for which he has been commissioned."

Mr. Sahn's expression indicates the general political progress which has taken place among political workers. It is to be hoped that before Mr. Thompson's time is out such rules will be made as will leave very little "liberty" for partisan proscription. All but one or two of the chief places in this post-office should be filled by competitive promotion from among the under-employees of the office.

CONGRESSMAN CONN, of South Bend, Ind., has won immortality like only to that of Flannigan of Texas, who in the Chicago republican convention of 1880, hearing talk of civil service reform, with honest surprise inquired, "What are we here for if not for the offices?" Conn has promulgated some rules limiting the class among whom he proposes to divide spoil. One of these limitations is as follows. "No person can be a candidate for the office of postmaster who is not a good democratic voter in good standing, * * * and who has not been an active worker for the democratic party in past years." This is the view of public office held by the average politician and party manager, but very few of them are callow enough to put their views in writing. Cromwell made religion a test for office. How does he differ from Congressman Conn? King James II insisted that none but those who approved his policy should have a license for selling wine, beer or coffee. How does he differ from Congressman Conn? The test proposed by Conn is the one peculiar test of absolutism, and has been used by every absolute ruler who has governed since the world began. Men of the stripe of Congressman Conn had better stop talking about "democracy," and make their words square with their actions and beliefs. They like monarchical institutions; they like feudalistic notions, and they are doing all they can to perpetuate them. The only known democratic method of awarding public employment is by methods of selection which exclude politics, religion, race, or color. Yet Conn and his associates fight the application of this method with a desperation born not of a willingness to stand equal with all their fellow-citizens, but of a knowledge that only by the ways of the pirate and the buccaneer can they hope for place and profit.

GEORGE W. RUSSELL, has been postmaster of Irvington, a suburb of Indianapolis and the seat of Butler university, for some twelve years. The people like him, and more than two-thirds of the voting population, including all parties, have asked that he be retained. It seems that Congressman Bynum has determined upon a change. We shall watch with interest to see if this office will be kept "near to the people" by forcing a change when two-thirds of the people are against it. This is another proof of the humbug of the claim that the people demand "rotation in office." The only people in this country who demand rotation in office are the comparatively small number who want to quarter themselves upon the rest. The rest care no more for the change of a republican gauger for a democratic gauger in the public service, than they do for the change of a republican boilermaker for a democratic boilermaker in the Pan Handle shops.

THE Boston correspondent of the New York Evening Post writes to that paper an interesting letter upon Josiah Quincy, now assistant secretary of state. He quotes Mr. Quincy as believing "that it would be a waste of strength for the administration to neglect the tariff and currency problems to devote attention to the civil service in the way the National Civil Service Reform League would have it done." He would, further, "devote the strength of the reformers to extending the rules for the classified service." Mr. Quincy has long been a civil service reformer and he will take pleasure in doing his utmost to bring the foreign service to the greatest practicable extent under the classified service rules. We shall be much mistaken if the subordinate places in that service are given over to be the spoil of congressmen. As to the rest, we would rather think that the correspondent had misunderstood Mr. Quincy. Securing extensions of the classified service rules has come to be only one part of civil service reform. Probably the greatest evil that now exists in connection with the public service is the practice of allowing congressmen to station watch-dogs for themselves in the shape of fourth-class postmasters at every cross-roads. Is this to be repeated lest congressmen may refuse to legislate upon the tariff and the currency? Are congressmen to be bribed with offices to legislate upon these subjects? As to neglect of the tariff and currency problems, if left alone by congressmen, the President will have plenty of time to do his share upon these problems, while if congressmen are cut off from the offices they will have more time than they have ever had before in their congressional lives. The only true course in this matter is the straight and narrow one of doing right and the whole right, though the heavens fall, and leaving the people to take care of mercenary congressmen.

IN urging the gift of places to editors the Brooklyn Eagle says: "There are thousands of country newspaper men seeking to eke out an adequate income from petty but respectable sheets by obtaining little places." This fact is one of the greatest public abuses with which the country is afflicted. The law of Indiana requiring the printing of the ballot in newspapers, before elections, has just been repealed. It cost the people two hundred thousand dollars a year and was of little practical value; yet its repeal was taken as a personal insult by the "petty but respectable sheets" that are trying to eke out an adequate income. The political morals of the Eagle need regenerating. Fully one-third of the newspapers of the country exist only because they are in some manner quartered upon the public treasury. It is a truth that ought to be branded into newspaper ethics that the opinion upon public affairs of such papers, or of any paper that is receiving money from the public treasury except in the way of ordinary business competition is worthless. No paper should exist which can not be free and unbiased in its opinions. There is no greater misuse of power than the distribution of offices among editors to pay them for "fighting battles."

THE Eagle also says: "So long as government is run by parties, parties will be run by organizations. That long, too, the cause and case of parties will be forwarded by 'workers,' and by putting 'workers' in places." This is a well-worn statement usually called into play when there is no other excuse for seizure and division of plunder. It has been answered every day for many years in England, where, for instance, in the long struggle and repeated elections turning upon the Irish question, there has not been so much as a messenger's place with which to reward "petty but respectable sheets" or "workers," or any other agency that helped in the campaign. It will be so in this country. Administrative reform will make it so. When elections cease to be a fight for spoil, every American citizen will take a keen interest in the questions to be decided. Campaigns will be conducted with much less expenditure. Instead of levying blackmail upon office-holders, all the money needed will be raised without difficulty from the great body of citizens, for each will feel that he has something at stake. This is Sunday-school politics, but it will prevail. The false course of great and influential papers like the Eagle simply puts off the day.

IN his call for the coming meeting of the national republican league, Clarkson invites all "who believe in practical civil service reform, such as will separate the spoils idea from politics and yet preserve the people in control of public offices and all public affairs." What is control of the offices by the people? Is it distribution of places to henchmen by an oligarchy of politicians, or is it an impartial distribution of public employment after competitive tests in accordance with a law made by the people? What is "practical civil service reform?" Is it the Clarksons removing thirty thousand postmasters a year, or is it the Andrew bill, the Boston labor service, and the merit system as we have it to-day in the Indianapolis post-office? When it meets in May, if it means well, it will be better for the national republican league to say what it means. It will hardly be worth while to attempt to hoodwink any one by a general declaration for "practical civil service reform."

THE announcement that the civil service commission has canceled all examinations scheduled to be held between March 21 and June 30, in six states and in a number of cities, comes at an unfortunate time. The addition to the classified service made by President Harrison at the last moment increased the expenses of the commission, and it asked congress to appropriate a thousand dollars additional to pay the traveling expenses of examiners. This was refused, and the commission has been obliged to curtail the number of examinations. At the beginning of Harrison's administration the commission was unable to get eligible lists ready, and advantage was taken to put into the railway mail service more than two thousand heelers of congressmen—an act of treachery that cost the republican party dear. A similar condition has now come about. We trust to President Cleveland to do right in this matter. It will not be right to repeat republican treachery by hurrying in new postmasters and permitting them to carry out the doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils. We are not speaking in the interest of the retention of ward workers whom the republicans may have put into the offices in question. We are speaking in the interest of improved administration, of civil service reform. It is President Cleveland's duty to see to it that no unusual change takes place in these offices until the eligible lists are ready. It is hard to believe that if the President's time had not been so taken up by office-seekers, some way could not have been found to avoid this unfortunate postponement. A way has been found in a similar case in the bureau of engraving and printing. The resolutions of the National League, at its annual meeting in Philadelphia in October, 1889, declared it to be a "flagrant violation of pledges" that "a brief necessary delay in the preparation of eligible lists by the civil service commission was improved to sweep out of the railway mail service hundreds of employes, regardless of efficiency, and into these vacancies were hurried hundreds of partisans of the administration, with but a subordinate regard to their fitness." It is to be hoped that the League, which meets again in April, in New York, will not have a similar disagreeable duty to perform.

FOUR years ago President Harrison virtually invited the party-workers of the United States to "pitch in" for the offices. He disregarded the rule established to a large extent by his predecessor that officers should serve out their terms. He hustled out incumbents to make room for his party-workers at a rate never heard of before. Now, President Cleveland says that offices ought not to be used to pay party-workers and that present incumbents shall serve out their terms, no matter how long it may take. In these two policies there is a vast and refreshing difference in favor of the latter, and show in Mr. Cleveland a purpose to have reform instead of a debauch. We entirely credit him and his cabinet with this purpose. But while a change of officers made at the end of each officer's term is more orderly, it is, nevertheless, a change, and if each officer shall proceed, as heretofore, to discharge his subordinates to make room for his partisans, a clean sweep will occur the same as always and with the same motives; and before the end of his term Mr. Cleveland will have turned out more than 100,000 place-holders, and will have put partisans into their places. This is not reform. This is the power of official patronage which endangers free institutions. Again, congressmen are seeking to make the appointments the same as ever. Their motives are not changed. Senator Voorhees hardly slept nights until he got Isaac P. Gray an office that Gray would take, because Voorhees feared that Gray would interfere with his re-election to the senate.

Every congressman has some analagous motive with every appointment. As the Indianapolis Sentinel's Washington correspondent said, March 12, of the groan of congressmen at the President's refusal to appoint editors unless the latter would give up their papers: "What good can they do us with their papers under the control of others, perhaps disappointed office-seekers?" Appointment by congressmen is not reform. No permanent reform can come without the absolute separation of congressmen from patronage. They will never let go of themselves; they must be cut off.

EXPECTING TOO MUCH.

WE are receiving advice from various friendly quarters that, while we are undoubtedly honest and patriotic, we are asking altogether too much; that it is unwise and a waste of strength to press administrative reform to an extreme, and that such a course would endanger tariff reform and the silver question. We have no desire to be misunderstood. We want to be understood as pushing administrative reform to the utmost extreme. Now is the time. We want to be understood as holding that neither tariff reform nor the silver question are of a feather's weight when put by the side of the necessity of bringing about administrative reform and of bringing it about now. Taxation not in accordance with sound economic laws is a mistake and the people suffer pecuniary loss, but it is a passing evil like the routine evils that come and always will come in every period of government and are and will be corrected in every period. For a government to purchase and store a man's product to keep up its price is the very depth of economic stupidity, but it bears its own inevitable punishment and cure. If administrative reform is to be postponed to such questions as these it will always have to be postponed, for they will always be present. But the struggle against those who prey upon the people by seizing public offices and by controlling public contracts is a mortal one to government. If this struggle fails and comes to an end it is only a question of time when republican government will cease. Every postponement makes failure more imminent. The people get used to the warning and cease to listen.

Those reformers who fear for tariff reform and the silver question are but playing into the hands of both party machines. Mr. Julian, an eye witness of the movements of 1852, in his life of Giddings, says of the Free-Soilers of that date, "They saw clearly that what slavery needed was two pretty evenly divided parties pitted against each other upon economic issues so that under cover of their strife it could be allowed to have its way." The perpetuation of the spoils system needs just that condition now. We can not be a party to the scheme. We call upon the President to stand upon his constitutional rights and to take the great measures now left to be taken to complete the revolution which has been going on for more than twenty years. We are aware of the difficulties. We know that the road at some points is obstructed. But, in urging this action, we are not viewing President Cleveland as a pigmy or as a figure-head, but as a giant. A giant can make a way where there is none.

We are asking that the transfers to the classified service shall be completed to the fullest extent; that the system of promotion by competition in the lower grades shall be carried to the extent that the great body of even the nominations by the President to the senate shall represent the sifting process of merit in the service; that the Boston labor system already in force in the navy-yards, shall be applied to the entire federal labor service; that fourth-class postmasters shall only be chosen by some impartial method such as is set out in the Andrew bill; and that these and similar measures shall be carried to the extent that there is nothing left in federal appointments for congressmen or partisans to exercise their influence upon.

There is an element among reformers, weak-kneed, half-hearted and supercilious, withal, who declare that the civil service commission would be swamped and that the co-operation of congress is essential to the full completion of administrative reform. We know that, and to that we insist that if congress refuses to co-operate, the President shall not, thereupon, turn over the federal reins to congressmen nor to any other men as party plunder nor to "reward" anybody for anything. Because congressmen tie his hands it will not be any excuse for him to permit a repetition of Clarkson's disgraceful career, nor will it be any excuse for him to use the public service to "recognize" anybody. With the co-operation of congress in the application of non-partisan and impartial principles to government appointments, let the President express himself ready and willing to rid the service of mere politicians now in it. If congress, demanding plunder, refuses, let the President sit down and wait. Let the issue be defined and let the people discuss it. Let us see how long congressmen can stand that fire—the President refusing to prostitute the public service to personal and party ends—the congressmen demanding it. This is not the first President we have urged to make this stand, nor would President Cleveland be the first to refuse and to turn to the vexatious and unhappy course of temporizing with spoils hunters and trying to make one loaf go where twenty would not suffice—a course that surely leads to personal and party failure. There is now no half-way. To deprive a congressman of a cross-roads post-office infuriates him as much as to deprive him of all. After President Harrison had given everything, those to whom he had given most turned against him, and he only saved his nomination by whipping in thousands of place-holders whose bread he controlled. War there is bound to be. Then let it be for something great. If Mr. Cleveland is a great man he will appreciate and take advantage of the greatness of his opportunity.

TWO SPECTACLES.

Two great political spectacles are now presented to the world. In 1886, Mr. Gladstone and his party went out of office overwhelmingly defeated because they demanded home rule for Ireland. They began the work anew. There was not a post-office, nor a clerkship that could be hoped for by any voter who sided with them. Out of more than a hundred thousand offices not a hundred would be vacated by their success. They had but one principle upon which they could ask for success—that home rule was right. There was but one reward they could hold out—that home rule should be made a law. For seven years they urged this argument, and in converting the British people they achieved the triumph of popular government of this generation. After the election, Mr. Gladstone does not have to give public notice that office-seekers must keep away from him while he selects his cabinet. He goes into office but aside from the places immediately around him, he does not control a clerkship. Members of parliament do not come streaming around him introducing office-seekers by the thousand, nor at all. All his energies, all the energies of his cabinet, all the energies of members of parliament, and all the attention of the British people are given to the subject of incorporating into legislation the principle upon which the victory at the election was won. This is government by the people. And yet the offices of Great Britain are distributed upon the most democratic system known in the world—a system that gives the son of a day laborer an equal chance with the son of a peer.

The other spectacle is to be seen in this country. We have an election in which public questions are discussed with great earnestness and the result is decisive. The victorious party started into the campaign with the declaration that offices ought not to be subject to change at every election. Now what is the result? Have congressmen been busy with measures which would do away with a change of officers? Have they spent the time trying to get even a surface knowledge of the principles of taxation? Not at all. Some of them have traveled from county to county preparing for a change of officers. They have nominally attended a session of congress but their waking moments have for four months been given to dickering with party-workers relating to changes in offices. Forbidden by Mr. Cleveland to speak to him on the subject, before inauguration, they kept on, full swing, planning changes in office without Mr. Cleveland. The day after the inauguration they and the party-workers passed through the White House and looked at Mr. Cleveland. The next day, the wolf could no longer be restrained and the despatches say that Voorhees and other congressmen called upon the President, not to confer upon methods of incorporating into legislation the principles of the campaign, but to demand when the changes in office would begin. With this the scramble for office began. It seems likely to go on for months. Not a word is said in favor of any principle that was a part of the campaign. Every issue upon which the election was won has apparently been forgotten. This is government by an oligarchy of congressmen.

Which is the nobler spectacle, Mr. Gladstone and his host, daily and nightly fighting the battle of home rule, or Mr. Cleveland sitting at his desk day after day while congressmen, party committeemen, editors, party workers and all the other belongings of a party machine crowd around him in succession by thousands demanding post-offices, consulships, clerkships and all the other offices pertaining to the government system, not because of merit but as pay for service claimed by them to have been rendered to himself or to his party?

In order that there may be no mistake about the way in which public employment is awarded in England, we quote Mr. Gladstone's own words in a speech made in Greenwich, October 28, 1871. He said:

"It has been our happy lot in almost every department of the state—I believe there are but two exceptions—to give up that which has always been considered the special patronage and the highly prized patronage of a government, namely, the appointment of clerks to the civil offices of the country. We have abandoned that power; we have thrown every one of them open to public competition. The transition is now nearly complete, and, with regard to the future, I can say, that as to the clerkships in my own office—the office of the treasury—every one of you have just as much power over their disposal as I have. *

* * And in order that the public service might be indeed the public service, in order that we might not have among the civil officers of the state that which we had complained of in the army, namely, that the service was not the property of the nation, but of the officers, we have now been able to remove the barriers of nomination, patronage, jobbing, favoritism in whatever form, and every man belonging to the people of England, if he so pleases to fit his children for the position of competing for places in the public service, may do it entirely irrespective of the question, what is his condition in life, or the amount of means with which he may happen to be or not to be blessed."

How immeasurably Mr. Gladstone and the English government would be lowered in the estimation of the world if instead of leading the liberal party to a triumphant result in the contest for home rule he should sit "patiently" in his office while members of parliament crowded around by hundreds introducing their heelers by thousands and demanding for them post-offices, clerkships, consulships and places as watchmen, dog catchers, and what not, to pay them for services rendered to Gladstone or to his party. What a travesty upon Gladstone's great career and what an indignity upon the noble cause of home rule such a sight would be!

THE annual meeting of the National League will be held in New York April 26 and 27. The address will be delivered by Carl Schurz on the evening of the 26th, in the Madison Square Garden assembly room and the other usual meetings will be held. The dinner will be on the evening of the 27th. It is to be hoped that the west will be well represented. Any member of a civil service reform association is entitled to take part in the proceedings. Further information can be obtained by writing to William Potts, Secretary, New York.

"SOME removals" said President Jefferson "I know must be made. They must be as few as possible, done gradually, and bottomed on some malversation or inherent disqualification. Good men to whom there is no objection but a difference of political opinion, practiced on only so far as the right of a private citizen will justify, are not proper subjects of removal." We commend these Jeffersonian principles to the Jeffersonian democratic congressman and their followers now engaged in an onslaught upon the public service.

Probably the hottest contest now on is that over the public printer, with 2,700 places to give out. No less than thirteen candidates are in the fight, each one working vigorously to win.—Buffalo Express, March 13.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

The interference of senators and representatives with nominations and minor appointments in the civil service is not only without constitutional warrant, but it is an indecent and dangerous confusion of two functions which the constitution carefully keeps distinct. The senator or representative who makes himself an office broker, to pay his own parasites from the public purse, should stand well exposed in the pillary of public contempt, and by reason of such interference should forfeit the respect of the country and the confidence and support of his constituency.—George William Curtis.

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of these United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional demands as the rule by which my official conditions must be guided.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us constrain me to remind those with whom I am to co-operate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused, and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.—President's Inaugural.

To-day Senators Voorhees and Turpie called on President Cleveland and had a long talk with him. Their call was for the purpose of ascertaining the President's policy in regard to changes in the federal offices in the State of Indiana. The Indiana men have at least solved the difficulty presented by the candidacy at one and the same time, of Colonel Zollinger, of Ft. Wayne, for deputy commissioner of pensions, and that of Colonel McLean, of Terre Haute, for pension commissioner. One of the Indiana congressmen said this morning that both names would be presented to Mr. Cleveland, properly recommended, and the President would be left to choose either or both, as he saw fit.—Indianapolis News, March 7.

For bank examiner, Mayor Packard, of Plymouth, has secured the majority of the delegation, including Turpie. Congressman Conn has been very diligent in his behalf and has induced Dan McDonald, of the Plymouth Democrat, to withdraw in his favor.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 7.

Mayor Packard, of Plymouth, has gone home to await his appointment as bank examiner. He has the endorsement of both senators.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 10.

Judge Jordan, of Indianapolis, has filed his application for the first auditor of treasury. He says his interests will be taken care of by Turpie and Voorhees, and will return home to-morrow and wait there for his commission.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 7.

Senators Voorhees and Turpie are pushing Colonel Taylor, of Washington, for the position of national bank examiner of Indiana, while E. B. Pugh, of Rushville, Cashier McIntyre, of Auburn, and O. A. Packard are indorsed by individual members of the delegation. Pugh promises to be a compromise candidate.

Senators Voorhees and Turpie have an engagement with President Cleveland to-morrow morning. They will try to decide what ex-Governor Gray is to have, and will present the names of Colonel William E. McLean, of Terre Haute, for commissioner of pensions, and Mr. Zollinger, of Fort Wayne, for a deputyship under the commissioner of pensions. They will leave the President to decide which place the state shall have, and let him also decide between McLean and Zollinger.

Representatives Bynum and Martin saw President Cleveland to-day. They wanted to know about the rapidity with which changes are to be made in the offices.—Indianapolis Journal, March 8.

There seems to be a disposition among the Indiana delegation to repeat the mistakes of 1885 and to crowd upon the administration professional office holders. For example, the first candidate to be pushed for a place by the two senators is J. C. Carleton, of Bedford, who was postmaster under Cleveland and Buchanan, and several previous administrations. One of his sons has held an office in the house for eight years. To-morrow the two senators and Mr. Bretz will call upon the postmaster-general to urge his appointment as chief of division at $2,000 a year.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 8.

The two Senators claim as their own the marshalship, attorneyship, pension agency and the two collectorships. They had agreed to give the northern part of the state—the pension agency—to Zollinger, but now that he is ruled out on account of being an ex-officer the twelfth district, with Allen county, which gives nearly all the democratic majority of the state, was left without a representation on the Voorhees-Turpie slate. Congressman McNagney began to raise a vigorous kick against this discrimination, and threatened to appeal to the President. This morning he was reinforced by ex-Senator Barrett of Fort Wayne. The two senators were soon convinced that such treatment would not do. McNagney wants the collectorship or the U. S. marshalship for the twelfth district, and in this he is supported by other congressmen who desire to see fair play. Senator Turpie announced to-night that he would not enter into any arrangement by which that part of the state would be left out, and would not decide whom he would support for collector of the eastern district and marshal until he and Senator Voorhees could arrange matters from a geographical standpoint.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 9.

It took Representative John L. Bretz, the blunt German democrat who presides over the political pap of the second Indiana district, only fifteen seconds to-day to extract from President Cleveland a job lot of information which a number of more timid congressmen have been trying all week to ascertain. It had been reported that Mr. Cleveland had made up his mind to appoint no one to an office who ever held office under him; that this was to be an entirely new deal; and, having a number of constituents here who wanted to enter the post offices at their homes, Mr. Bretz thought he would find out the truth of the report going the rounds of the hotel corridors. So Mr. Bretz was early at the White House this morning and asked to see the President for a moment only. As soon as he appeared before the President he plumped it right out.

"I just came to know if it was true, as reported, Mr. President, that you will appoint no one who has ever held office under you?"

"It is true, sir," was the President's direct reply.

"Well," said Mr. Bretz, slightly out of breath, "does that apply to postmasters?"

"It does," came the President's answer. "It applies to all offices."—Indianapolis Journal, March 9.

It was stated yesterday upon apparently good authority, that Senators Voorhees and Turpie had reached an understanding as to the distribution of offices in the two republican districts of Indiana, and that Senator Voorhees would look after those in the sixth, and Senator Turpie those in the Ninth district. An aspirant for office in the sixth district to-day asked Senator Voorhees as to this reported arrangement, and the senator replied: "Appointments in those two districts will be made, as we understand, upon the joint recommendation of the two senators. We have not divided the territory."

Senator Voorhees' committee room was visited to-day by about one hundred Indiana office seekers. The senator is being run almost to death, but he is patient and good tempered about it. He says he recognizes the fact that the men who are seeking places have as much right to do so as he has to ask for re-election every six years. The excursion tickets expire with to-morrow, when the exodus for home will begin.—Indianapolis Journal, Mar. 9.

One of these fair days Mr. L. M. Mering, of Richmond, who was the democratic candidate for congress last year, will get himself into a delightfully lively political complication with Chairman Taggart and Indiana's two senators. It is stated by prominent democrats that Mr. Mering has for some days been trying to control the appointments in the sixth congressional district of Indiana. He takes the position that inasmuch as he was nominated for congress by the democrats of that district, and since he would have been entitled to distribute the offices if elected, he is the choice of the district democrats in the distribution of the patronage at this time. The score or more democrats from the sixth district who are now here are up in arms about it, and say that it is none of Mering's business; that tradition and custom have awarded the job of giving out offices in minority districts to the senators in the majority, and that Senator Voorhees and Turpie have not requested Mr. Mering's interference.—Indianapolis Journal, March 9.

Congressman Bynum called at the White House this morning with John W. Kern. Mr. Bynum has been for another candidate for district attorney, but now that Kern is so far in the lead, Mr. Bynum, it is understood, will not withhold his indorsement, as his own candidate is out of the race.—Indianapolis News, March 10.

Representatives Holman and Martin of Indiana saw the President. They have many friends who want places, not counting ex-Gov. Isaac Pusey Gray.—New York Times, March 9.

As for the collectors of internal revenue, they are not settled, except that Senator Voorhees will recommend Jump of Terre Haute, and that Mr. Holman claims the privilege of naming the collector of the eastern district and that Senator Turpie has not opposed them. However, Mr. Brookshire will make a desperate fight for Hulet against Senator Voorhees' man.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 14.

Senators Voorhees and Turpie, it is said, have agreed upon the following slate:

Marshal—Ex-Sheriff Hawkins, Sullivan.

District Attorney—J. W. Kern, Indianapolis.

Bank Examiner—O. M. Packard, Plymouth.

Collector of Internal Revenue—Joshua Jump, Terre Haute, and W. H. Bracken, Brookville.

For Second Comptroller or Commissioner of Internal Revenue—Col. C. C. Matson.

This leaves the Fort Wayne district, with its large democratic majority, without a state or federal office, as Zollinger can not be pension agent, Congressman McNagney entered a vigorous protest and demanded the U. S. marshalship. Senator Turpie was willing to concede it, but Senator Voorhees remained firm and said Sullivan county must have the place, and Hawkins must be the man. McNagney will appeal to the President, but the two senators claim these offices.

Hawkins is a bright young man; has served as sheriff of Sullivan county. He is but thirty years old. The appointment will be made Monday. A few days ago Mr. Voorhees hesitated about pressing Hawkins' claim, fearing it would interfere with Jump's chances for the collectorship, but the President informed him that the present republican collector would be allowed to serve until October. Voorhees concluded that Hawkins' appointment would not jeopardize Jump's interest. Jump is a law partner of John E. Lamb. Brookshire is still in the ring, with Hulet for the same place.

Bracken is a lawyer of Franklin county. He was an elector at large. Sam Ralston, of Boone, had a large number of indorsements for United States collectorship of the Terre Haute district. He did not come here but left the matter in the hands of friends here. It has been stated that Senators Turpie and Voorhees had divided the republican territory as far as it relates to the post-offices, Mr. Voorhees taking the sixth district and Turpie the ninth. Mr. Turpie denies this. He says the post-office appointments will be made upon the joint recommendations of the two senators. In Frankfort the fight is between Eli Brown and Mr. Marvin. Mr. Brown was postmaster under Cleveland in Columbia City.

This morning T. B. Buskirk withdrew his name as a candidate for United States marshal. It is said that Senator Voorhees notified him this morning that Hawkins, of Sullivan, would be appointed.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 10.

Congressman Taylor has decided to recommend ex-Representative John J. Nolan for postmaster at Evansville.

Congressman Brookshire is still making a valiant fight for his favorite, Mr. Hawlett, of Crawfordsville, of the position of internal revenue collector for the seventh district, which Senator Voorhees seems disposed to confer on Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute.—Indianapolis News, March 11.

To-morrow the President will settle the controversy which has been practically settled by the two senators, who have agreed upon all the state offices but the district attorney. Mr. Turpie is for John W. Kern actively, while Mr. Voorhees will present Burke's name. But he will make no fight against Kern. Mr. Kern called upon the President to-day and had a satisfactory interview. He will be appointed.

With this exception Mr. Voorhees' men get everything else in the state: Hawkins of Sullivan for marshal, Bracken of Franklin for collector sixth district; Jump, collector seventh district. Mr. Turpie will not oppose these selections by Voorhees.

The twelfth district is thus entirely ignored, notwithstanding the protest of Representative McNagney. He intended to appeal to the President, but he was advised by the other members of the house that such a course would result in no good, as the two senators would insist on controlling this patronage.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 11.

Capt. Allen, who wants the pension agency at Frankfort, Ind., was accompanied by Senator Voorhees. The Senator and Representative Bynum also filed papers indorsing John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, for the attorneyship of his district.

The United States marshalship is settled, and the United States district attorneyship for Indiana is still in doubt, but the chances are in favor of Kern. Senators Voorhees and Turpie joined hands in presenting Hawkins, of Sullivan, for marshal.

It was generally understood that Mr. Voorhees would yield the appointment of the United States district attorney to Mr. Turpie, in consideration of the latter's support of Hawkins; but Congressman Brown insisted on presenting Frank Burke, of Jeffersonville, for the attorneyship, and Mr. Voorhees stood by him. Both Burke's and Kern's claims were laid before the President to-day. Mr. Brown urged the appointment of Burke. Mr. Voorhees was not present, but sent a written request for his appointment. Messrs. Turpie and Bynum urged the appointment of Kern, and the President now has the matter under advisement, but Mr. Turpie feels confident that the President will nominate Kern.

Monday morning the Indiana delegation will meet and in a body present ex-Congressman Patten, of the tenth district, for commissioner of immigration, the place which his predecessor, Billy Owen, now holds.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

The announcement made by the President that no newspaper man would be appointed to office until he had relinquished his connection with the papers has caused another howl of discontent. The President wants every man appointed to an office to give up his business, and devote his whole time to the business of the government. This is directed especially against country editors who intended to run the post-offices and newspapers at the same time. In Indiana several editors have already been indorsed for postmasters, and this will come hard on them. They will have to give up their papers or the post-offices:

"In the first district, Philip Zoercher has a cinch on the Tell City post-office and he edits the News of that place. Representative Bretz has recommended three editors in the second—Purcell, of the Vincennes Sun, John, of the Bedford Democrat, and Hoker, of the Shoals News. They must give up their papers or get no post-office. In the third, there is Mercer, of the Brownstown Democrat, who has been selected by Mr. Brown. In the fifth, the editors of the Nashville and Danville papers have both been recommended by Mr. Cooper. In the sixth, McKillop, of the Muncie Herald, is the postmaster selected by Senators Voorhees and Turpie. In the seventh, Mr. Bynum has selected Crittenberger, of the Anderson Democrat, and Eugene Lewis, of the Greenfield Democrat. In the ninth, Eli Brown wants the Frankfort office, and he runs a paper there. In the eleventh, Fawcett, of the La Grange Democrat wants the post-office, and throughout the other districts are many editors whose services have been justly appreciated by their members with post-offices."

Of course, they can dispose of their papers, but say the congressman: "What good can they do us with their papers under the control of oth- ers, perhaps disappointed office-seekers." These editors are appointed because they can do the members some good in securing renomination, and without their county organs they are powerless.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

Editor L. C. Christie, of the Indianapolis World, the colored organ, was presented to the President to-day by Congressman Holman. Mr. Holman urged his appointment to the office of recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, now held by Blanche K. Bruce.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

Captain Allen, who wants the pension agency at Indianapolis, called at the White House, accompanied by Senator Voorhees. The senator and Representative Bynum also filed papers indorsing John Kern, of Indianapolis, for the attorneyship of his district.—Indianapolis Journal, March 12.

The Indiana senators have united in recommending Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, for consul to Calloa.—Indianapolis News, March 13.

Congressman Martin presented the application of Mr. Waugh for district attorney to-day.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 14.

Postmaster-General Bissell has requested all members of congress to file the indorsements of every applicant for postmasterships for consideration before appointments can be acted upon. This was construed as meaning that the recommendation of members of congress would be ignored and that the postmaster-general would take the matter in his own hands and decide upon the merit of the applicants, regardless of the wishes of members. This caused a general alarm among members and this morning Congressman Conn submitted in writing a number of interrogations, among the number being the following:

Will the recommendation of congressmen govern appointments of postmasters or will the petitions and letters of indorsement be considered in your department and appointments be made accordingly?

—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 14.

Secretary Reiley, of the state central committee, Judge Jordan and C. C. Kerr, of Indianapolis, left to-night for home. Judge Jordan's application for appointment as first auditor of the treasury has been favorably acted upon. Both senators urged his appointment and Chairman Taggart, Secretary Reiley and Mr. Bynum made especial efforts in his behalf.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

Senators Voorhees and Turpie took John G. Shanklin to the President to-day to urge his appointment to a consular office.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 16.

Mr. Bynum has made the following recommendations for postmaster:

Elias Hitghshire, Traders' Point; T. C. Wyrick, Maywood; Henry C. Cook, Bridgeport; James W. Webb, Southport; Charles C. Weaver, Acton; William M. Brown, Clearmont, Hancock county; A. T. Wilson, Mohawk; A. C. Vanduyne, Shirley; James M. Trul, Edinburg; John Gerner, Philadelphia; Frank Brandenburg, Charlottesville; Ira Beville, Cleveland, Madison county; James W. Barrett, Lapel; Assian Cook, Pendleton; William H. Barnes, Florida.

Weaver, Brown, Wilson, Bradenburg and Beville are "exes" and may be rejected by the post-office department. It is understood that the Indianapolis post-office will be filled by a democrat when the four years of republican rule have expired. Albert Sahm will be appointed. Postmaster Thompson will have served four years, part of the term as deputy. Had he succeeded a democrat he would then be allowed to go on. While he has a commission for four years, he is really filling out Wallace's unexpired term. The appointment of a new postmaster belongs to Senator Turpie, and Mr. Bynum says that as soon as the senator takes the initiative in the matter he will join him in the movement to replace Thompson with a democrat.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 17.

The Indiana congressmen are getting out of the city for their homes rapidly. Mr. Conn has been overrun with applications for office, and has been giving close attention to arranging the recommendations he intends to make, will leave for his home this week. Mr. Hammond will probably go the latter part of the week. Mr. Hammond, too, is wrestling with a large number of applications for office, and is finding it very difficult to appoint them to his own satisfaction. Congressman McNaghy has a room at Willard's, and has been holding levees from early morning till late at night daily, with the crowds of Indiana politicians who stayed over until after the inauguration. Mr. McNaghy hopes to return to his home this week also.—Indianapolis News, March 9.

Representative Hammond makes no secret of the fact that he has promised the Logansport postmastership to N. C. Hanawalt. Although there will be no change under several months, Mr. Hammond has come to the conclusion that the best way to avoid trouble is to anticipate vacancies as far in advance as possible, in which conclusion he has many followers. He has selected editor R. M. Mishelwood, of the Delphi Journal, for the Delphi postmastership, but there is a hitch in that selection.—Indianapolis Journal, March 15.

Congressman Conn has addressed the following to his constituents:

Now that the policy of the administration with reference to the appointment of postmasters has been defined there can be no further objection to the selection of those officials for the thirteenth Indiana district, and whenever a majority of the democratic voters of the same post-office present a petition before April 15, 1893, requesting me to call an election for the selection of postmasters I will do so under the following conditions:

1. No person can be candidate for the office of postmaster who was an office-holder under the former Cleveland administration.

2. No person can be a candidate for any post-office where the salary of such an office exceeds $800 per annum who is connected with any other business of any kind or character.

3. No person can be a candidate for the office of postmaster who is not a good democratic voter in good standing, who is not a man of good business ability, who does not bear a reputation for honesty, morality and sobriety, and who has not been an active worker for the democratic party in past years.

4. No person can be a candidate for a post-office who will not pledge himself to give his time and attention to the duties of the office, provided he is elected. In other words, every postmaster in the thirteenth district is expected to be a postmaster and not turn the office over to a paid employe.

5. No petition for the election of a postmaster will be accepted for consideration after April 15, 1893, and all recommendations for postmasters will be made before May 15, 1893.

The above qualifications of postmasters are necessary to applicants for post-offices where they are elected to appointment or recommended, and I earnestly request all democratic voters in the thirteenth district to give me their assistance in selecting postmasters who will discharge the duties of their several offices with fidelity, zeal and honesty to the general public.

C. G. CONN,

M. C. Thirteenth Indiana District.

—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 14.

Representative Conn and wife will leave tomorrow for home in Elkhart. Mr. Conn will return in a few weeks to deal out the post-offices.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

Representative Conn, of Elkhart, deprecates the Cleveland order forbidding the appointment of country editors to post-office and other positions, and in an interview in this evening's Star he says:

"My district is an agricultural district largely. I canvassed it very thoroughly and was brought in contact with the editors of the local rural press. No class of men do more in a campaign to further the interests of their party than do the editors and newspaper men. This is particularly true of the country editor. The circulation of their paper is small, they work very hard and they fight their battles as if the fate of the nation and their own lives depended upon the success of their candidates. They are certainly deserving of reward and should be the very last class of recipients for presidential favor who should be discriminated against."—Indianapolis Journal, March 15.

Congressman Conn left this morning for his home at Elkhart, Ind. He will be in Indiana two weeks closing up post-office matters.—Indianapolis News, March 15.

Congressman Conn, who left the city, accompanied by his wife, yesterday, goes home for the purpose of settling a number of post-office disputes in his district. He expects to settle up most of the offices and have his recommendations ready in about two weeks, when he will return to Washington.—Indianapolis News, March 16.

COLUMBUS.—The post-office war has broken out here in earnest and promises to result in a factional fight that threatens to disrupt the party. At the close of the last campaign Congressman Cooper recommended Capt G. E. Finney, who formerly held the office under Cleveland, for postmaster, over the protest of nearly every democrat here except himself. Delegations of prominent democrats waited upon Mr. Cooper and tried to persuade him to be silent, but he refused to listen to their supplications and claimed he had absolute right to appoint the postmaster, and proposed to exercise that right, regardless of what his constituents might think or say. Now, since Cleveland has ruled out the old office-holders, the fight has been renewed, and last night one hundred representative democrats met, and speeches were made denouncing Congressman Cooper in the most violent language as a dictator and usurper of power that by right belongs to his constituents. The result was the appointment of a committee to wait upon Mr. Cooper and demand of him that he "shall appoint" whom the democrats select, in such manner as they determine on. Cooper was specially invited to attend the meeting, but he left the city, it is said, to avoid being present.—Indianapolis News, March 14.

Congressman George W. Cooper was in the city an hour yesterday afternoon, en route home from the national capital.

"What do the office-seekers think of President Cleveland's policy concerning those who held positions under his former administration?" Mr. Cooper was asked.

"Well, it has caused a great many heart-burnings and disappointments. I have no objections to the rule if he applies it to the republicans who are now holding office, but if he does not I can see serious reasons why such a policy should not be pursued. I don't believe the fact of a man once having held office should disqualify him from holding again if he has performed his work in a satisfactory manner." Congressman Cooper says it is the President's policy to only appoint such men to office who will give their whole time to the duties of their respective places. This he believes will not work very successfully, and it is doubtful if it can be carried out at all. He thinks John W. Kern is sure of the district attorneyship, and looks for his nomination during the coming week. "Senator Voorhees," said he, "is making no fight on Kern, but is simply carrying out pledges made to the friends of Frank Burke."—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 13.

Congressman Taylor, of the first district, has been wrestling with Washington malaria. In consequence of his illness, Mr. Taylor has not had an opportunity to give close attention to the interesting array of office-seekers that is here from his section, and consequently will be detained in Washington for some time yet. Mr. Hammond will be here about the first of May, and the others will probably come about the same time, for then, it is expected, the administration will be prepared to take up and deal with the small offices. Congressman Hammond said to-day that he had not settled any of the large post-offices in his district yet, but would do so during his stay at home. He has had quite a number of applications for consulships and other places as bureau chiefs, etc., which he will file with the President before he leaves. One of the strongest applications which he will file is that of ex-Congressman Patton, who is a candidate for superintendent of immigration, which office was vacated by Mr. Owen, of Indiana, a resident of Mr. Hammond's district. Congressman Patton has the indorsement of all the Indiana and Kentucky delegations and has nearly all the representatives on the democratic side of the last house.—Indianapolis News, March 17.

Representative Bynum is still at the wheel, trying to turn out an office or two for his constituents, but he expects to get away when the decks are cleared. Jason Brown, Mr. Taylor and the other representatives here from Indiana are all anxious to go home.—Indianapolis Journal, March 18.

Among the callers upon President Cleveland this morning were several Hoosiers, besides the two senators and Governor Matthews. Representative Martin brought an uncommon name when he presented that of Jerome Herff, of Peru, as a candidate for the Havana consulship. Congressman Bynum introduced S. W. Ralston, of Lebanon, who wants to be appointed collector of internal revenue for the seventh district. Mr. Brookshire was also at the White House. The name of Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, was presented for collector of internal revenue by some of the Indianians.—Indianapolis Journal, March 18.

Congressman Taylor has filed the application of Dr. George W. Buckner, of Evansville, for recorder of the land office. He is a colored man.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 18.

Representative Pendleton, of West Virginia, was one of the early callers. He urged that Frank H. Jepson of his state be appointed United States treasurer. He also discussed for a few minutes the policy of allowing office-holders appointed by President Harrison to serve out their terms.

Representative Kilgore, of Texas, who has called daily at the White House, was there again to-day. He introduced Judge Robert McCart, of Texas, who would like to be appointed minister to Belgium.—New York Times, March 11.

Representative Entoe, of Tennessee, introduced R. H. Coe of his state, who is a candidate for United States marshal for the western district of that state.

Senator Lindsay, of Kentucky, with Representative Montgomery, presented the name of Gen. Richardson of that state for marshal, and Judge Severs for collector of internal revenue for the second Kentucky district.

Senator Palmer, of Illinois, came next, and he had a candidate for marshal for the southern district of Illinois. He recommended Capt. Brinton for that position.

Representative Oates, of Alabama, presented the name of Hannis Taylor, of Mobile, for the Spanish mission.

Representative Bynum was with the President long enough to say a good word for John Kern, of Indianapolis, who would like to be district attorney for that district.

Senators Proctor, Voorhees and West, George R. Tingle, and Representative Onthwaite, of Ohio, made brief calls. Mr. Onthwaite brought Thomas Wetzler, of Lancaster, editor of the Eagle, who wants to be public printer.—New York Times, March 11.

"This must be Kentucky Derby day," remarked Congressman Caruth this morning, as he walked into the President's anteroom and saw three Kentucky congressmen with thirteen friends, who are in the race for office, awaiting their turn. "That being the case," he continued, "I guess I'll make a few entries myself. Here's my friend, W. R. Kinney, whom I'll back for collector of the fifth internal revenue district. He's a good goer, too." Mr. Caruth also filed the papers of Caleb Dorsey for United States marshal of his district in New York.—Indianapolis Journal, March 14.

The report that Mr. Cleveland had told congressmen that he did not intend to appoint newspaper men to office for the reason, among others, that he might be accused of subsidizing the press, does not hold good. Congressmen Dockery, De Armond, Cobb, Burns, and Morgan, of Missouri, called on the President to-day for the express purpose of ascertaining the truth about the "no journalist need apply" rule.—Indianapolis Journal, March 14.

* * *

Representative Kilgore and Bailey, of Texas, were among the early callers. They came to present the name of C. B. Stewart, of Gainesville, Tex., for appointment as judge of the Muskogee (I. T.) court.

"Will you request a federal appointment?" Mr. Kilgore was asked.

"Not much," he replied. "I am coming back to congress to raise Cain."

Representative Springer, of Illinois, presented the name of Edgar Morrison, of Morrisonville, cousin to William R. Morrison, with an application for appointment as consul to Kanugawa, Japan.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

The Brooklyn contingent is not going to be satisfied with a small share of customs service patronage. Hugh McLaughlin wants both the appraiser and surveyor. He is said to care very little about the naval office, but he does want the other places.—New York Times, March 15.

* * *

Senator Irby (S. C.) with Judge Earle, ex-attorney general of South Carolina, who wants the district attorneyship for his state, visited President Cleveland to-day.

Representative Mercedith (Va.) introduced a candidate for the Lyons consulate—George S. Shackelford, of Orange, Va.

J. A. Manson, of Memphis, and E. P. Bond came with Representative Patterson (Penn.). Mr. Manson is a candidate for the United States marshalship of the western district of his state, and Mr. Bond wants to be internal revenue collector for its middle and western districts.—Buffalo Express, March 16.

The Mississippi senators are conceded by the representatives from that state the right to suggest and insist upon the appointments to some of the offices in Mississippi. To keep all disputes concerning the offices allotted to the senators from coming to the President, the senators to-day had a conference, and agreed upon certain nominations which shall be recommended and urged by both senators.

The Alabama senators and representatives have decided to meet at the capital March 28 and "consider fairly, fully and carefully all applications that have heretofore been or may up to that day be submitted to us for such joint recommendation, together with all papers filed in support of each such application, and shall act upon the same."—New York Times, March 14.

"The men who went to Washington after offices do not move out very rapidly, in spite of the hints which have come from the White House," J. J. Richardson, member of the national democratic committee from Iowa, said to a New York Times reporter at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday. Mr. Richardson has been in Washington ever since the inauguration, and has called on the President several times. He made several recommendations for federal offices in his state.—New York Times, March 15.

Although Pennsylvania and New York candidates are scarce, this does not apply to the northwestern corner of the Keystone State. The democrats of that section want office, and they are not afraid to ask for it either, and their representative, Mr. Sibley, is hustling with all his might to gather in as many loaves and fishes as possible before the other Keystone democrats awake to the situation.—Buffalo Express, March 15.

Speaker Crisp, who is a daily visitor, appeared about 11 o'clock with Mr. J. W. Walters, of Albany, Ga., who wants to be district attorney for the southern district of Georgia.

Mr. Edgar Morrison, of Illinois, called at the White House to-day with Representative Springer. Mr. Morrison is a cousin of the Hon. William R. Morrison, who is now asking the appointment and would like to be consul to Kanagawa, Japan.

Mr. Harry Hawkins, of Duluth, Minn., who desires to be governor of Alaska, was presented to the President this morning by Representative Baldwin of Minnesota.—New York Times, March 12.

Speaker Crisp was another of the early birds. He escorted Col. Blackburn, of Atlanta, who desires a foreign mission; Mr. Lindsey Johnson, of Rome, who would like to go abroad as consul, and Mr. T. W. Rucker, who wants to be the district attorney for the northern district of Georgia.

Senator George, of Mississippi, introduced to Mr. Cleveland Major Dockery of his state, who wants to represent the United States at Rio de Janeiro, and Col. Gordon, who is after the consulship at Hongkong. Lieut. Gov. Evans, of Mississippi, was also presented.

Senator Martin, of Kansas, came with Charles H. T. Taylor, the colored Kansan, who desires to succeed Mr. Bruce as recorder of deeds. Mr. Taylor left his papers with the President.

Representatives Dockery, Morgan, Burns, Cobb and Dearmond of Mississippi sought an interview with Mr. Cleveland in order to ascertain whether it was true that their editorial constituents need not hope for any appointments. Mr. Cleveland assured them that the report to the effect that newspaper editors would not receive any consideration at the hands of the administration was incorrect, and he could not imagine how it gained currency. So far as he was concerned, he said, newspaper men would be treated just as considerately as any class of citizens who might desire to serve the government. This information put the Missouri delegation in a very good humor.

The presence of Representative Wilson, of West Virginia, in Mr. Cleveland's office this morning was said by the gossips to have a close connection with the movement to make Senator Faulkner of West Virginia, chief justice of the new district court of appeals.—New York Times, March 14.

When the President passed into the public hallway, after his conference with the bishops, on his way to his office, he was waylaid by several congressmen and stood for a time in the hallway talking to them.—New York Times, March 16.

All the visitors to the President came between 10 and 11 o'clock, and consisted chiefly of senators and representatives, including Senators Berry of Arkansas, Voorhees and Turpie, of Indiana; Vance, of North Carolina; Mills and Coke, of Texas; Carey, of Wyoming; Palmer, of Illinois; Stanford, of California; Gordon, of Georgia; Representatives Brookshire, of Indiana; Amerman, of Pennsylvania, with John J. O'Boyle, of Scranton, who wants the postmastership there, and John J. Fahey, sheriff of Lackawanna county, Pennsylvania; Bynum, of Indiana; Painter, of Kentucky; Forman, of Illinois; Martin, of Indiana; Henderson, of North Carolina; Hicks, of Pennsylvania; Paschal, of Texas, and Henderson, of Iowa.—Indianapolis News, March 17.

The Pennsylvania delegation have come to a pretty good understanding among themselves, and, feeling that the situation with them is too serious to admit of their risking any mistakes, have assumed the waiting policy, having armed themselves against Harry as well as they can.

Representative Sibley's mail contains but little else than letters about the post-offices in his Pennsylvania district. The applicants began work on the day after the election in November and have kept it up ever since. For every presidential office in his district there are from five to eleven, and in one or two instances thirteen candidates. And the contest for the small fourth-class offices is nearly as brisk. For the Erie post-office there are said to be seven candidates.—Buffalo Express, March 15.

Whenever the Minnesota men can agree upon a method of procedure there are many men whose claims will be presented. Some have filed applications with the President to-day. Ex-Representative W. H. Harris wants to go to Alaska as governor, and he has some backing among democrats of his state. If he can not have that place his friends say he will be urged as collector of internal revenue for the Minnesota district.—New York Times, March 9.

It will be a week or more before the democrats of New Jersey will be ready to make an organized effort to secure the offices which they think should be bestowed upon them. They would have been clamoring at the White House before now but for the advice of several of the congressional delegation to the effect that from a well-organized plan of action much better results might be expected. In deference to this opinion the eager Jersey men are restraining themselves, and arrangements are making for a meeting of the New Jersey senators and democratic representatives to be held next week for the purpose of deciding upon the policy to be followed in besieging Mr. Cleveland.

So far, each of the New Jersey democrats in congress has received about 200 applications for post-offices from his constituents, and there is no sign that the deluge will cease at once. The question of post-office will probably be settled outside of the general patronage conference. Each senator and democratic representative will do his best for the men finally decided upon. From present indications there will be plenty of work to be disposed of at the conference. Candidates for internal revenue collectors, ministers, and consuls have already sent their names to members of the delegation, and they will be on hand when the time comes to decide upon the prize winners. Afterward the tug of war will come at this end of the line.—New York Times, Mar. 9.

The business of handling the office-seeker is being systematized, at least by one of the Texas senators. He is keeping a list of all the applications sent to him by his constituents, and his crop of 1893 promises to be an abundant one. So far he has received and placed on file 500 communications asking government jobs for as many men.—New York Times, March 8.

* * *

New Jersey's share of federal patronage is to be distributed decently and in order. In about a week the democrats of the state's delegation in congress will get together for a conference to settle the various questions arising in the distribution of offices, and such fighting as has to be done is to be settled by the delegation. In the conference the two democratic senators will take the places of the two republican members of the house. It is likely that to the senators will be left the settling of questions concerning appointments which have to be confirmed by the senate, while the congressmen will look after the others. Where the meeting will be held is in doubt, but the chances are very good that the Jersey men will get together in New York City.—New York Times, March 8.

Senator Palmer, of Illinois, called on the President this afternoon and presented the name of Judge Browning of Illinois for the position of commissioner of the general land office.

Ex-Representative Rogers, of Arkansas, is backed by some of the congressional delegation from that state for the office of solicitor general. His name has been presented to President Cleveland for that place. Senator Jones of that state called on the President this afternoon, and the appointment of Mr. Rogers was said to be one of the topics of conversation.—New York Times, March 8.

A Virginia delegation, consisting of Senator Hunton and Representatives Wise and Meredith, presented to the President the name of Judge John Goode, of Virginia, for the solicitor-generalship.

Senator Lindsay, of Kentucky, came with C. T. Allen, of his state, and asked Mr. Cleveland to appoint the latter an assistant postmaster-general. Mr. Wheeler and Mr. McKenzie want foreign missions and Mr. Watts would like to be a consul at one of the British ports. Their claims are being pressed by Congressman Wittiam J. Stone, who called on the President this morning. Chief Justice Bennett, of Kentucky, who came with Congressman Stone, merely paid his respects to Mr. Cleveland. Judge Bennett's claims will probably be pressed for the circuit judgeship left vacant by the promotion of Judge Jackson to the supreme bench.

Senator Palmer and Representatives Newberry and Durbin were ushered into the President's presence with several Illinois applicants for prominent offices behind them. They were ex-Congressman Scott Wike, Mr. Delos Phelps and Gen. R. J. Smith. Mr. Wike is after the position of comptroller of the currency, and Mr. Phelps wants to be a consul to some prominent place. General Smith is after the position of postmaster at Chicago.

Congressman Kilgore, of Texas, had a little talk with the President about the Mexican mission, the position for which he has been indorsed by the Texas legislature. Congressman Amos J. Cummings introduced to Mr. Cleveland a delegation representing typographical organizations. They entered a protest against the appointment of C. W. Edwards, of Wilmington, Del., to the office of public printer. A hot fight for the office has already begun.—Indianapolis News, March 8.

Two other visitors came a short time after who attracted some attention. They were Senator Irby and Governor Tillman, of South Carolina. They were among Mr. Cleveland's most bitter opponents up to the time of his nomination, but since that time have been "placated." Since the election they have been protesting that they admire Mr. Cleveland exceedingly, and they have said with considerable frankness that they believe the Tillman faction of South Carolina should be given a good share of the federal offices which will naturally go to that state.—New York Times, March 9.

* * *

Senator Mills, of Texas, was one of the early visitors at the White House, and after he had gone away Senator Hunton and Representatives Wise and Meredith called. They presented the name of John Goode for the position of solicitor general.—New York Times, March 9.

* * *

Another applicant for his former position appeared in ex-Minister Buck, of Kentucky, who had the Peruvian mission during the first Cleveland term. With him was Representative Breckenridge, of Kentucky.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

* * *

Postmaster-General Bissell has on his desk a "little list" which will cut an important figure for a few months to come. It is a list of 356 congressional districts of the United States, and alongside every district is, or will be, the name of the man who will contest the post-office patronage of that district. The list shows 217 democratic districts, and in each of these the name of the democratic congressman appears as the one who is to advise on offices.—Indianapolis Journal, March 12.

Congressman Springer, of Illinois, was one of the earliest callers, and he went away with the knowledge that Mr. Cleveland intended to adhere to his rule about not appointing former office-holders to their old office. As he himself jokingly expressed it: "My worst suspicions were confirmed." This is the second talk Mr. Springer has had with the President on the subject.

Undeterred by the no-reappointment rule, Col. Childs, ex-minister to Siam, asked the President to send him back to the land of the white elephant. He was with Representative Dockery, of Missouri, who put in a good word for him.

Congressman Richardson saw the President in behalf of Chief Justice Lerton, of the Tennessee supreme court. Judge Lerton wants to succeed to the circuit court vacancy caused by the promotion of Justice Jackson to the federal supreme bench.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

THE ONSLAUGHT.

"Public office is a public trust. We reaffirm the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, [Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition] and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President, as in the recent republican convention by delegations composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which federal office-holders usurp control of party conventions in the states, and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government."—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

JACKSONIAN DEMOCRACY.

That the indiscriminate removal of public officers for a mere difference of political opinion is a gross abuse of power; and that the doctrines lately boldly preached in the United States senate, that "to the victors belong the spoils of the vanquished," is detrimental to the interests, corrupting to the morals and dangerous to the liberties of the country.—Democratic platform 1832.

THE SCENE AT WASHINGTON.

Judge Gresham was feeling well this morning and did not seem to be in the least fatigued from the strain that had been put upon him by the events of two days and the importunities of many place-hunters.—Indianapolis News, March 6.

* * *

The steady tramp, tramp of the office-seekers sounded through the White House all day. There was practically no cessation in the line of people who ascended the stairway leading to the President's room, and nearly all who came saw Mr. Cleveland.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 8.

* * *

If some tents could be pitched in the spacious grounds about the White House and rations be served there, a large crowd of people now in this city would doubtless be very thankful. They would thus be spared the trouble of doing so much walking, as they are now doing, between their hotels and the executive mansion. In effect they have gone into camp before the President's door, and they lay almost continuous siege in an effort to reach the interior rooms where Mr. Cleveland does business. They want offices for themselves or their friends. The crowd is said to be larger than the most sanguine person had anticipated. Delegation after delegation has been admitted to see the President to day, and there has been almost a constant line before the White House doors of those who come alone to present their claims. Much of the President's time has been devoted to these visitors. For the most part, however, the President has been very accessible, and has received his visitors with a degree of good nature and interest in their errands which has been surprising.—New York Times, March 9.

The President was in his office at nine o'clock, and within two hours had exchanged greetings with a dozen senators and as many more members of the house, listened to a dozen or more pleas for appointments, and devoted the remainder of the time to some delegations from different states who wanted to discuss his policy with reference to appointments.

Soon after Senator Hill went away the crowd began to gather and at 10 o'clock the office hunters were there in a throng. As soon as they had gone there came a delegation who wanted to protest against the appointment of ex-Governor Gray, of Indiana, to be minister to Mexico.

A delegation of the Virginia democratic association saw the President. From other states the number of office-seekers is increasing and the siege at the White House and at some of the departments is kept up with a zeal that is exhausting. There are a dozen candidates for some of the fat positions and the claims of some are pressed on all possible occasions.—New York Times, March 16.

Secretary Carlisle has been so overrun with callers since he assumed office that he has not had time to give the subject of changes in the offices his attention. To-day he took possession of a private room in the treasury department, far removed from his office, where he could work without being constantly interrupted by office-seekers. The location of this room is kept secret. There he has begun work on a pile of applications of office that would have discouraged a less determined man.—New York Times, March 12.

* * *

The desire of members of congress and applicants for office to see the papers on file for positions has retarded the work of appointment division so much that Secretary Carlisle has issued an order on the subject.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 11.

* * *

For an hour and a half prior to the assembling of the cabinet Mr. Cleveland saw a large number of visitors, the greater number composed of office-seekers and their advocates.—Indianapolis Journal, March 11.

* * *

To-day the new secretary of the treasury got a taste of the wiles of persistent office-seekers. His room was fairly filled with callers. Mr. Carlisle's mail this morning was so large that it was taken to the appointment room in a great basket. It measured several bushels and nearly all of the letters were applications and indorsements for office. Five additional clerks have been detailed for work in the appointment division to assist in keeping the work up.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 9.

* * *

The President has been just as busy to-day as he has been every day during the week, and the number of callers ceased only when the word "Closed" was fastened at the main entrance.

It was said at the White House, late this afternoon, that Mr. Cleveland was anything but worn out with his week's work, and that the onslaught of the office hunters had apparently affected him no more than if he had been a rock.

The crowd began to call about 10 o'clock this morning. It included senators, representatives and place hunters in large numbers, and the waiting room was filled to overflowing.—New York Times, March 12.

To-day witnessed but little diminution in the number of callers at the state department.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

Despite the inclement weather, there has been a great rush of patronage seekers in the different departments to-day. The ante-room of Mr. Hoke Smith of the interior department was crowded at noon. Soon after 12 o'clock the door opened and Mr. Smith appeared. He seemed to be in good humor, notwithstanding the pressure brought to bear upon him since he assumed office.

During the day a large number of politicians from all parts of the West called upon Mr. Smith. Among them were half a dozen senators and a dozen or more representatives, all of whom came on political errands.

Mr. Smith told the correspondent of the New York Times that he had not been able to pay much attention to business since he took charge of the department.

Secretary Morton had a breathing spell to-day and at once began to familiarize himself with the details of the office.—New York Times, March 12.

* * *

The thunderbolt which burst over the heads of the patronage-hunters when the President announced that old office-holders would be barred for reappointment momentarily cleared the atmosphere, but only for a moment. It might be thought that this announcement would suspend applications while the old men were falling to the rear and the new ones getting to the front, but no sooner were the old applicants turned down than each senator and representative reached into his inside pocket, where he had a little list of available applications ready to spring upon the President.—Indianapolis Journal, March 12.

* * *

When Mr. Cleveland entered his office this morning, ready to take up the work of receiving senators and members of congress with their friends, he found a bigger crowd waiting for him than he has seen on any previous day since his inauguration. Possibly the bright sunshine had something to do with the size of the throng. It is more likely, however, that the rumors circulated within the past twenty-four hours to the effect that Mr. Cleveland did not intend to make the barrier against the office-seekers quite so heavy as had been at first intimated had much to do with the outpouring.—New York Times, March 12.

The calling at the White House was renewed this morning with about the same vigor that it was continued last week, but it did not last so long, the rush being over at one o'clock, leaving the President some time in which to consider business that required quiet for the attention that it demanded.

An object lesson in office-seeking is daily presented to every visitor to the Metropolitan and National hotels. These are the houses most popular with southerners, and at present they are full to overflowing. Democrats from all parts of the south crowd their corridors, the majority of them clad in black and wearing the inevitable black wool hat with expansive brim.—New York Times, March 14.

To-day closed a busy week for President Cleveland, and the last day was marked by as much activity and bustle among those seeking office as the first or any of the intermediate days.

Secretary Hoke Smith does not, however, reach his office a moment too early to suit the crowd of office-seekers, many of whom he finds when he arrives, waiting around the doors of the department until the hour of nine o'clock arrives, when they are admitted to the building.

At the post-office department there was the usual crowd waiting to see Postmaster-general Bissell, and the President's announced determination to permit all efficient postmasters to serve out their four years' term has produced a depressing effect. But many of the applicants for places are men of resources and they try to convince Mr. Bissell that the postmasters in their respective towns are anything but efficient and richly deserve dismissal in case they refuse to resign forthwith.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

The crowd at the White House has become so objectionable, from the standpoint of the man who thinks business ought not to be interfered with, that a set of rules for the government of the official portion of the mansion has been formulated.

This is the text of the rules:

The cabinet will meet Tuesdays and Fridays at 11 A. M. Monday will be reserved by the President for the transaction of public business requiring his uninterrupted attention.

The President will receive senators and representatives in congress from 10 to 12 o'clock on other days, except cabinet days, when he will receive them from 10 to 11 o'clock.

Persons not senators and representatives having business with the President will be received from 12 to 1 o'clock every day except Mondays and cabinet days.

Those having no business, but who desire merely to pay their respects, will be received by the President in the east room, at 1 o'clock P. M. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays.

The President intends to devote the hours designated for the reception of senators and representatives exclusively to that purpose, and he requests their cooperation in avoiding encroachments upon the time set apart to their business.—New York Times, March 15.

To all his political visitors Mr. Bissell said that the matters to which they had directed his attention would be considered in due time, and that he did not intend to rush things. Fourteen clerks have been detailed for duty in the office of the fourth assistant postmaster general in anticipation of the arrival of Mr. Maxwell. When the latter is confirmed and assumes the duties of his new position he will find several thousand applications for postmasters' places stacked upon his desk, and it will be his task to consider them in their order. The applications are coming at the rate of about a thousand a day now, and they are being acknowledged and filed for future action.—New York Times, March 14.

The second week of this reform administration opened with fully as large a crowd of office-seekers pulling and hauling as was here on inauguration day. But many of the old faces were missing. The Old Guard, the term applied to former office holders, had many of them gone to their homes, but the vacancies thus created were speedily filled by new arrivals. The consequence was that it was a large audience which awaited President Cleveland when he began the work of receiving senators and representatives with their friends this morning.—Buffalo Express, March 14.

* * *

There is a big book in the office of the chief of the appointment bureau of the treasury which is in great demand these days. It contains the names of all the democrats who have thus far asked for offices in the treasury under the new administration, and, after examining it, one is apt to ask himself whether there are any democrats in the country who are not office-seekers. Every state in the union is represented in this huge volume, and thousands of names have already been inscribed upon it. One of the employees of the office has been assigned to the duty of recording the names as fast as they are received, and he is kept almost constantly busy.—New York Times, March 15.

Up till noon there was a steady stream of visitors and cards fell like a steady snowstorm. Early in the day there were a number of senators who called to see the President and they were fortunate in that they were able to reach the ear of the chief executive at once. They were the envied of all the less fortunate mortals who were compelled to cool their heels in the ante-rooms, and who were fortunate if, after waiting all the forenoon, they were able to get as far as the private secretary's room. Among the visitors were Senators Mitchell of Wisconsin, Jones of Arkansas, Camden of West Virginia, Palmer of Illinois, Turpie of Indiana, Dolph of Oregon, White of Louisiana, Teller and Wolcott of Colorado, Mc-Millan of Michigan, George of Mississippi and Gordon of Georgia; Representatives Wilson of West Virginia, Enloe of Tennessee, Paschal of Texas, Black of Georgia, Forman and Cable of Illinois, Washington of Tennessee. Representatives Wheeler, of Alabama, and Washington, of Tennessee, accompanied Col. Ed Baxter, of Nashville, president of the Tennessee state bar association, and Joseph L. B. McFarland, of Memphis, who presented additional papers urging the appointment of Judge Lerton to the circuit judgeship made vacant by the promotion of Judge Jackson to the supreme bench. Senator Palmer brought Judge Southworth, of Litchfield, Ill., and William McCabe, of Chicago, who want to be an auditor of the treasury department and public printer respectively. Representative Onthwaite, of Ohio, presented additional papers indorsing Thomas Werts for the public printership.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 17.

"You are very much in the minority," said Mr. Cleveland this morning when Representative Honk of Ohio called with a friend and announced that neither of the men were looking for office. The majority were represented in undiminished force this morning, and Mr. Cleveland was very busily occupied until lunch time.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 16.

* * *

So many office-seekers, mostly from Indiana, appeared in the corridors of the capitol to-day that when a recess of the senate was taken, shortly after 12 till 3 o'clock, the doors leading to the floor of the chamber were kept closed "under executive orders." Thus the senators had a rest free from callers. When the doors of the senate are closed in executive session a senator can not be communicated with by any one on the outside.—Indianapolis Journal, March 16.

* * *

The visitors at the White House began coming somewhat earlier than usual to-day, and the larger number of them consisted of congressmen.—Buffalo Express, March 17.

* * *

As soon as the body had adjourned the army of officers who have been thronging the corridors for days past found entrance and opportunity to see their senators, and all found their way to the democratic side of the chamber, with the result that nearly every senator seated there was soon surrounded by a group of wistful-eyed men, or was obliged, in self-defense, to flee to the retiring rooms of the committee rooms.—Indianapolis Journal, March 17.

* * *

Office-seekers swarmed about the senate wing of the capitol to-day and made life miserable for the senators who ventured into the corridors. After the adjournment the doors were not opened to the public for a full half hour, in order to enable as many of the senators as desired to make their escape from the horde of place-hunters. Some of them availed themselves of this opportunity, while others remained and braved the storm. The sight of a senator importuned by a dozen or more men, with petitions in their hands and determined looks on their faces, is enough to impress the observer.—New York Times, March 17.

Postmaster-General Bissell naturally is anxious to have Mr. Maxwell confirmed as speedily as possible in order that he may relieve him of some of the pressure now centered against his department. The strain has been awful, but so far Mr. Bissell has seemed not to mind it, although it is apparent that he is anxious to shift the load of office-seekers upon Mr. Maxwell's shoulders in order that he may have the time to give his attention to the work of the department.

When the Express correspondent called upon him to-day, Mr. Bissell said: "I really have not a line of news. All of my time has been taken up by the office seekers and their friends. If you want to give the people of Buffalo some idea of this rush for office, tell them that I have been compelled to detail forty clerks from other divisions to help out the large force of clerks in the appointment division in briefing and filing the applications. I have not had time to consider whom I desire for my assistants."—Buffalo Express, March 17.

"GOOD POLITICS."

Ex-Governor Gray is the subject of considerable political speculation this morning. If not here now, he will show up soon. His chances for securing the Mexican mission are variously estimated, but it is impossible to predict how he will come out, in view of the rivalry for that office. The towering form of the Hon. J. G. Shanklin was seen about the rotunda of Willards to-day. He is the object of considerable interest to the Indiana politicians, and his recommendations are being sought with much eagerness. He will remain here several weeks.—Indianapolis News, March 6.

* * *

About 10 o'clock Secretary Gresham received a call from Senators Voorhees and Turpie, who remained with him nearly an hour. They were alone with the new secretary of state, and while they declined to discuss their visit, it is certain that their call was for the purpose of urging the appointment of ex-Governor Gray, of Indiana, as minister to Mexico.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 6.

* * *

Ex-Governor Gray and Hon. W. A. Cullop left last evening for Washington city over the Pennsylvania road.—Indianapolis Journal, March 7.

Ex-Governor Isaac P. Gray has his reward. He will be appointed minister to Mexico. It is stated on good authority that the appointment will be made at once. Official announcement of his appointment is likely to be given out from the White House at any time. Ex-Governor Gray spent last evening at the White House. Nearly all the prominent Hoosier democrats in the city called on him at his hotel yesterday afternoon and last night. This morning he appeared in the rotunda of the Ebbitt House, dressed in black broadcloth, with decollete vest, and a huge diamond stud that looked decidedly diplomatic. Mr. Gray came to Washington in response to a telegram from Senator Voorhees.

At the last moment the local influences that have always opposed the ex governor made a final stand against his nomination as minister to Mexico. They were willing to concede him the Chinese mission, but Governor Gray stated positively and unequivocally that he would not accept the appointment to the Celestial empire. He had back of him, for the Mexican mission, the influence of the Indiana senators, most of the congressmen and many influential men from other states. Finally Mr. Gray's political enemies gave up the fight.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 8, 1893.

Gray, it may be added, has only the support of Senators Voorhees and Turpie in his aspirations. Representative Bynum openly opposes him. Of course John Gil Shanklin and Editor Morss and their friends will not encourage Isaac's preferment. The most serious part of the Gray situation is found in the fact that Mr. Shanklin stands infinitely higher with the President and Secretary Gresham than Gray does, and Mr. Shanklin is to be given a place himself. Both can not be given first class missions. Indiana democrats declare it would be shameful to give Gray the higher place, and the friends of Mr. Shanklin say he would not accept an office lower in rank or less remunerative than is given Gray.—Indianapolis Journal, March 8.

Gray's nomination as minister to Mexico has been made out, and it will be sent to the senate to-morrow. This announcement was made by ex-Congressman Courtland C. Matson as he emerged from the state department this morning, after a conference with Secretary Gresham. Senator Voorhees saw the President again this morning, and this evening stated in most positive terms that Mr. Gray's appointment as minister to Mexico was a certainty, and that the President had assured him that it would be sent to the senate without delay, probably to-morrow. Of course the selection of Gray for a first-class mission, and especially the one of his first choice, is a hard slap at the Shanklin-Bynum combination, and it is a victory for the Voorhees-Turpie crowd.

Indiana's two senators have stood faithfully by Mr. Gray. They have made his appointment to Mexico the first requisite to their friendship for the administration, but ex-Governor Gray has not been idle. He has been looking out for No. 1. When, some time ago, he dispatched to Lakewood Hugh Dougherty, of Bluffton, and James Murdock, of La Fayette, his personal friends, to ascertain direct from Mr. Cleveland what it was intended the democratic ex-governor of Indiana should get in the way of an office, Mr. Gray showed an acumen which should recommend him to his party as a practical politician. He did not intend to take anybody's word for it, but was determined to learn for himself what the incoming President intended doing for him. "I shall take early occasion," Mr. Cleveland is reported to have said to Mr. Gray's emissaries, "to tender Mr. Gray a place which will be commensurate with his ability, and I hope satisfactory to him and his friends." This Mr. Cleveland said after the Mexican mission had been mentioned, and he said it in a way which led Messrs. Dougherty and Murdock to report to Mr. Gray that the mission was his own.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 9.

It has come to light that the nomination of Isaac P. Gray as United States minister to Mexico was practically agreed upon in this city. The night of Governor Matthews's inaugural ball a secret meeting was held, in a law office here, of prominent democrats from all parts of the state. At that time Gray was considered a cabinet possibility, and there was much opposition to him, and the feeling among some was that Gray should not be recognized at all, and especially should not go into the cabinet. John G. Shanklin took an active part in the meeting, and urged that in the interest of "good politics," Gray should get something. "If he does not," said Mr. Shanklin, "he will be the man about whom all the disappointed democrats in Indiana will rally, and in two years he will have the most powerful following in the state." Mr. Shanklin urged that Gray be sent out of the country so far that he would not be in touch with the Indiana democrats. John P. Frenzel was opposed to any recognition for Gray, but finally agreed with Mr. Shanklin that it would be "good politics" to have Gray recognized and send him across the sea. While the subject was under discussion S. E. Morss came in. He was in evening dress and did not remain more than ten minutes. Mr. Morss when asked for his opinion replied that his name was pending for an appointment and he did not think it proper for him to take any stand, but personally, he said, he was in favor of Mr. Gray being recognized. The Mexican mission was mentioned and Mr. Shanklin opposed it. He thought that would keep Gray too near home. It was finally decided to urge him for the Chinese mission. This knowledge of meeting came to the ears of Gray's friends, and James Murdock, of La Fayette, and Hugh Dougherty, of Bluffton, hurried on to New York and saw Mr. Cleveland, and from him received the understanding that Mr. Gray would be appointed minister to Mexico if he desired. Gray was communicated with and said he would take the place, and it has been given to him. Had the meeting mentioned not been satisfied that Gray would not be appointed to a cabinet place, a strong fight would have been made against him. Now it is said that Gray's friends will "remember" some of the men in that meeting when they come up for office.

Many democrats who have been opposed to Gray do not like to put themselves in print as approving the appointment, though they profess themselves to be pleased over the situation. They are glad that Gray is to be sent abroad. They would have preferred the Chinese mission, or something even farther away, but Mexico will suffice. They did not want Gray to stand in the attitude of a martyr to gather about him all the disappointed office-seekers and make trouble, as they say he undoubtedly would do had he not received substantial recognition. Some of his friends and some of his enemies wanted him sent to Russia. Others would have preferred Siberia. The Russian mission, however, was considered out of the question, as all the countries represented in St. Petersburg send their most skillful diplomats, and Mr. Gray's knowledge of diplomacy is not considered great.—Indianapolis News, March 9.

The first list of appointments sent to the senate by President Cleveland to-day fulfilled two predictions that have been made in the dispatches to The News and will probably prove a double disappointment to the Cleveland wing of the Hoosier democracy. In the first place, ex-Governor Gray's appointment as minister to Mexico was the severest blow of all. But Mr. Shanklin went down fighting bravely. Two hours before the nomination of Gray was sent to the senate, Shanklin, accompanied by Maurice Donnelly and Captain Baker, of Indianapolis, called at the White House and entered a solemn protest against Gray's appointment as minister to Mexico, on behalf of the Cleveland wing of the Indiana democracy. Mr. Shanklin stated to a reporter on leaving the White House that the appointment of Gray was a disappointment to the Cleveland men in Indiana and would be generally regretted by them. He was willing that Gray might be sent to China or some other mission, but objected to his being given the Mexican mission because he felt that it would lessen the chances of recognition of other Indiana democrats. When the rumor got abroad on the street yesterday afternoon that Gray's nomination would be sent in to-day, Shanklin hurried over to the White House and asked Private Secretary Thurber if he might be permitted to see Mr. Cleveland. Being informed that the President was very busy, Mr. Shanklin said he would call this morning, as he did.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 9.

The chief interest to the Indiana office-seekers in to-day's developments at the capital was in the nomination of ex-Governor Gray to be minister to Mexico. The selection was received with much favor by the office-seekers, most of whom have been long-time adherents of the ex-governor and who seem to think that he will have sufficient influence with the administration to land them in soft berths.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 10.

"Gil" Shanklin left for New York this morning, and it is reported he will not return to Washington. Ex-Governor Gray left his hotel this morning and went to the house of a relative. He will return to Indiana Saturday night. His indorsement is being solicited on every hand by the Indiana office-seekers. The ex-governor spends much time in the company of Senator Voorhes, and the two seem to be shaping affairs for Indiana.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 10.

"I regard the Mexican mission as the most desirable for a man of my temperament," said Mr. Gray to the Journal correspondent, "and it was my first choice. I would rather have the place than a cabinet office. I can make frequent trips home, and the climate is pleasant and the country most beautiful."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 10.

The Indiana democrats who led the "ninety per cents" at the Chicago convention, and, as they believe, made the nomination of Cleveland possible, do not attempt to hide their disappointment at the turn Indiana democratic politics has taken. To use the expression of them: "We are wondering where we are at." They say they have not lost faith in President Cleveland, but they believe it was impolitic for him to recognize the "ten per cents" or the Gray wing of the party, so soon after his inauguration. When J. G. Shanklin came here fresh from a visit to the President-elect, he was besieged by place-hunting democrats as long as he remained in the city. It was taken for granted that he was nearer the President than any other man from Indiana. No one then thought of going to Isaac P. Gray for a recommendation under the new President. It was frequently reported from apparently reliable sources that the President would appoint Gray to the Mexican mission, but the original Cleveland men refused to believe the story. As a result of the appointment, Indiana democrats who are seeking the smaller offices do not know which wing of the party should be asked to recommend them. They are asking themselves these questions: Is the Gray-Matthews wing the one to which the President intends to listen? or, is it the idea of the President to get Gray out of the way and then allow Gil Shanklin and the other members of the party who were for Cleveland "first, last and all the time" to control the patronage.—Indianapolis News, March 10.

The Post this morning prints an interview with editor J. G. Shanklin, of the Evansville Courier, on the appointment of ex-Governor Gray as minister to Mexico, in which Mr. Shanklin relates the following incident of the ante-convention campaign of Indiana: "The personal relations of Governor Gray and myself were pleasant up to a time that is now something more than a year ago. I telegraphed him to meet me in Indianapolis and took the train from Evansville. In order to have a witness to our meeting, I also telegraphed Mr. Taggart, chairman of the state democratic committee. Mr. Taggart, however, did not reach the hotel until after the talk had ended. The purpose of my visit was to secure Mr. Gray's support of Mr. Cleveland, and thereby place him (Gray) upon the national ticket as the vice-presidential nominee. He flatly refused, saying that he did not want the vice-presidency, and that the man who stood, or could stand, between him and the nomination for the highest office within the gift of the nation was David B. Hill, of New York. I laughed, telling him that Indiana would be glad to see him the Vice-President just as I would be glad to see him, but that 90 per cent. of its democracy were in favor of Mr. Cleveland against anybody. He said that Grover Cleveland's name would not be mentioned in the convention, save in the casual manner I said it would; that not only would its wearer be mentioned, but that he would be nominated and elected.

"Gil Shanklin," he declared, "you think that you are a politician. I am a politician—that is my business—and I am willing to put my judgment against yours."

"It is very true, Governor," I answered, "that I am merely a newspaper man, but I tell you that the presidency is utterly out of your reach."

"Subsequently, I went down into Orange county and made a speech to its convention. Its delegates to the state convention were instructed for Mr. Cleveland; Gray has not forgiven me. We do not speak when we pass by, which is not very often."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 10.

The fact is not concealed among leading politicians here that Governor Gray's appointment was to discharge an obligation made at the Chicago convention, by which he withdrew at an opportune time for Mr. Cleveland. It is understood that Mr. Whitney and Governor Francis, of Missouri, and other managers of the Cleveland boom, gave Gray's friends to understand that the latter would be given a cabinet place, although the position was not definitely agreed upon. The announcement made by Governor Gray's friends from Indianapolis, even before election, that in the event of Mr. Cleveland's success the ex-governor would be made postmaster-general, was doubtless founded on the deal at Chicago, and the expressed choice of ex-Governor Gray. When Mr. Cleveland found it impossible to confer a cabinet place on Indiana's ex-governor he did the next best thing and gave him the choice foreign mission. While Mr. Shanklin lost in his fight on Indiana's ex-governor, he has not, according to the general belief, injured his own prospects for abundant recognition at the proper time. Mr. Shanklin has said that he was a candidate for no office, and never asked Mr. Cleveland for anything, but when some of his friends had consulted him on the subject he had told them that there was only one position he would care to have, and that was consul-general to London. One reason assigned for President Cleveland's persistence in appointing Mr. Gray over the protest of Mr. Shanklin and other representatives of the Cleveland democracy is a respect for the pledge made by Mr. Whitney and Governor Francis. It is said that Mr. Whitney felt very much disappointed that President Cleveland did not confer a cabinet place on Mr. Gray.—Indianapolis News, March 11.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoils, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefit already gained through this instrumentality and the further usefulness it promises entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods.—President's Inaugural.

THE eye of the world still remains upon Mr. Gladstone. Night after night, he stands forth for the right of local self-government, and behind, and in support of him, watching every movement of the contest, and with every faculty enlisted, stand a majority of the British people, moved alone by the justice of the cause. He is a true leader of the people. He commands the admiration and approval of all nations. He is adding a crown of glory to a great career.

The eye of the world also still remains upon our American President. He too is occupied to the utmost point of endurance. Let any man read how, and then tell the American nation where it can turn to hide its shame and humiliation :

Senator Voorhees gathered together this morning all the Indiana candidates for consular positions still in the city and took them to the President in a body. They were Jerome Herff of Peru, who wants the Havana consulate; Editor Jennings of the Salem Democrat, who would like to go to Hamburg or some other place in Germany; Dr. Chitwood of Connersville for Berlin, or some other place equally as good; Con Cunningham of Crawfordsville, for Belfast; Dick Johnson of Johnson county, for a Canadian or South American port, and last but not least, that rising statesman from the Kankakee regions, George D. Glazebrook of Starke county, who thinks Buenos Ayres about a place suitable for his talents. Mr. Herff was introduced first. The President remembered meeting him and told him frankly that no change would be made at Havana for the present. He told him he could have something equally as good. Congressman Martin was also present to urge his appointment, and the President requested Mr. Martin to leave a list of six places that Herff would accept, which was promptly done, and Herff's friends feel confident that his name will be sent to the senate this week. It may be sent to-morrow. Senator Voorhees says there is no doubt of Herff's appointment.

The President catechised Cunningham about his business and nativity. Con said he was born forty miles from Belfast.

"Suppose that I find another good democrat for the place, what will you take then?" asked the President.

"Take the next best thing," replied Con with a profound bow, then gave way to Glazebrook, who bowed, too—not quite so low, however, as Con. "Many good democrats want the same place," said the President. "Yes, Mr. President," replied Glazebrook, and said no more. Jennings simply shook hands with the President, remarking that he was happy to meet him. Johnson and Chilwood had met the President before. The net result of this interview is that Herff will be appointed to an office worth about $5,000.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 6.

This was the most fatiguing day the President has had since his inauguration, and he was completely tired out after three hours and a half talk with senators, representatives and office-seekers.

"Did any of them get away?" asked the President when Senator Palmer entered his office at the head of a delegation of about twenty.

"I think not, sir; there appears to be a quorum present," answered Senator Palmer, gravely, as he ran his eye over the group.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Indianapolis News, April 6, says :

Congressman Martin made a clean sweep of the pension medical boards in his district yesterday. All the republican examiners were replaced with democrats, as follows: Wabash, Drs. Hale, Kidd and Barnet; Bluffton, Drs. Cook, Harton; Marion, Drs. Shirely, Horn and Barnes; Peru, Drs. Boggs, Passage and Helm; Huntington, Drs. Carson, Sprowl and one to be appointed soon; Portland, Drs. Hale and Dicks, one vacancy to be filled.

No administration with an adequate notion of pension reform would ever permit such use of pension offices for private ends as this. Under Mr. Cleveland's former administration the pension office, so far as Indiana was concerned, was one of the worst political machines that ever existed, and if tools of congressmen are to become pension examiners it will become so again. The only improvement now proposed is to appoint younger physicians. It will prove a worthless remedy. A congressman's tool is a congressman's tool whatever his age. Here, too, we must call upon the administration to show evidence of greatness. The reform must be from the bottom. The pension examiners must be as independent of congressmen and as free from political control as the army and navy surgeons are. This must apply to all branches of the pension service. Without this freedom from the political whip pension reform will be a failure, no matter how unexceptionable the pension commissioner may be.

THE work of Headsman Maxwell goes grimly on. It is given out that removals are largely for cause. Maxwell is not particular about exact meanings. That congressmen want the changes, is sufficient "cause" for him. It is also said that republicans have learned to resign. This is a lesson peculiar to clean sweeps. In some way the republican postmaster is given to understand that if he resigns his office, his traps will be bought by his successor; but if he refuses to resign, he will be removed and will have to store his traps in his woodshed for want of a purchaser. It is also said that, by order of the President, no fourth-class postmasters will be removed without cause unless they have served four years. Are they to be removed if they have served four years? If so, they will go at the rate of over thirty thousand a year. Does the President mean for the country to understand that, notwithstanding the platform upon which he was elected, and after all his own talk, he means to dismiss sixty thousand fourth-class postmasters to make room for sixty thousand of his own partisans? That is a question he ought to answer plainly. He can stop Headsman Maxwell by a word. He can put him out of office, and put in a man who looks upon office as a public trust, and not as a party snap. He can say to congressmen that when they give him the means and the machinery to appoint fourth-class postmasters upon business principles, he will rid the service of mere politicians. Then he can sit down and wait, and time will do the rest. We say this with entire confidence in Mr. Cleveland's power to destroy the greatest and most wide-spread source of corruption now remaining in the federal service. We urge it with the utmost earnestness, and in the belief that the President and his cabinet want to do what is best for the country.

As soon as Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell was named, we received reliable information concerning him from his neighborhood. He is from a western New York village, and his political ideas are such as grow and fester in the small wards of such a village. His experience away from home was to hold an office under Hill, which in some way he managed to hold until Mr. Cleveland had offices to give out. He is a very small partisan. He will trail his forehead in the dust before congressman, and thank them for the privilege. But he is dragging the administration into the dirt along with himself.

THE information comes from Washington that the administration thinks it should be judged by comparison with Harrison's administration. This is an unconscious admission that it is doing what it ought not to do. The claim that one party is not doing as much wrong as the other did, under the same circumstances, has been made a cover for wrong-doing long enough. The comparison must be made with what the present administration ought to do. To determine that, the platform upon which it went into office, the constitution and the laws, and the oath of office are the standards. Do these standards warrant the setting up of Headsman Maxwell to remove sixty-thousand fourth-class postmasters solely to make room for watch-dogs of congressmen?

It is in one sense a good sign when for any reason officers engaged in making clean sweeps deem it necessary to cover up their work. It shows a realization that they are doing that of which the people would not approve. The attempt to keep from the public the changes in fourth-class post-offices broke down before the day was out. A second "stagger" at secrecy was made in the notice to congressmen not to tell the names of those they recommend. The administration has now put itself in the light of wanting to make a clean sweep if it can catch the people looking the other way. This is all very silly. In other governments, secrecy is the dread instrument of iron-handed despotism; in a republic, it is the hiding place of the ashamed, the resort of the witless and the cover of the sly.

If anything is clear, it is the fact that there is no demand among the people for the carnival of spoil which is rapidly gathering full headway in Washington. On every hand those who have always been the warmest supporters of Mr. Cleveland, are expressing open disapprobation. One says, "Mr. Cleveland is acting very badly." Another says, "Cleveland could stop this postmaster business if he wanted to." Already the effect has been to bring the republican party into a state of convalescence. What has become of the new party which Mr. Cleveland and Judge Gresham were to build up? No candle ever went out any quicker than that party will go out if the division of spoil is continued. From present prospects it will be the duty of every independent to be more independent than ever and thousands in every state who have not been independent will find it their duty to become so. This will have to go on until both parties are destroyed, and a new one formed, or until one or the other learns that promises made before election will have to be kept after election.

It has been decided that the administration will not prepare a tariff-reform bill, lest congress should be jealous of encroachment upon its rights. Now let the President be equally jealous of congressional encroachment into his field. An amazing encroachment is now being made. There has never been a greater insult offered to the rights, the power, and the dignity of executive government than is now cast upon President Cleveland by congressmen in attempting to force him and his officers to quarter their primary and convention manipulators upon the public treasury. The true parallel to this is to be found in the pretorian guard of Rome and in the janissaries of Constantinople.

THE Springfield Republican aptly brushes aside the flimsy excuse attempted to be put forward in the statement that Maxwell in the same time has not removed postmasters so fast as Clarkson did. It says:

"Custom does not make right. If Headsman Clarkson put a stop to the official life of thousands of republican postmasters, that is no reason why Headsman Maxwell should do likewise. If the administration of President Harrison cast off all restraint in this matter, such policy, does not justify President Cleveland in doing the same thing."

And again:

"But the people of the United States are not going to be satisfied with any demonstration that this administration is less a sinner than its predecessor in dealing with the fourth-class postmasters."

The Republican also discusses most profitably the senate of the United States with its small items of party plunder. After the "battle was over and the victory won," and it was settled that a number of clerks were to lose their means of support for no cause in the world, the democrats fell to moralizing. The Republican thus describes it:

Nor did the democrats rejoice; far from it; they were as glum as the republicans. They acted as though they were ashamed of the job in hand, as well they might be. They professed to be driven to it by stern necessity, and to approach it as Jephtha approached the sacrifice of his daughter, with grief unspeakable. Said Senator Voorhees. "Sometimes after the battle is over and the victory won there are circumstances which are sorrowful in their nature. I, so far as I am concerned, encounter one of those circumstances now in parting from the able, courteous, kind and efficient officers of this body." Senator Blackburn could not trust himself "to speak of the sense of regret with which I contemplate his (Secretary McCook's) retirement from this chamber."

Senator Palmer said that if the proposition had been to change the secretary of the senate violently, "I am not now prepared to say what course I should have been compelled to pursue." Even Mr. Gorman, avowed spoilsman as he is, voiced the same note of regret that stern necessity compelled the removal of a set of officers who were competent, efficient and faithful, and who, he declared, had conducted the affairs of the senate as well as they have ever been conducted during the forty years he has known the senate.

AN interview with District Attorney Burke, in the Indianapolis Journal of March 28, runs as follows:

"The civil service reformers have a grievance with you," was suggested.

"Yes; they wanted a bill passed which gave the state board of charities power to select the employees of the state institutions. I was opposed to that because I believed that Dr. Wright, here at Indianapolis, and the several boards of trustees, were more competent and better equipped for this work than the board of charities."

It is hardly worth while for Burke to try to deceive about a matter so plain as this. The bill gave the board of charities no power to select employees. It directed the board to apply certain tests to those who desired employment in the state benevolent institutions. Those tests were to be such as would reach the practical fitness of the applicants for the duties to be performed, without regard to politics or influence or any other matter having nothing to do with the performance of those duties. From among those who best stood such tests, the present appointing officers were to select the employees. Burke was not in favor of such a plan; it was too democratic. He and Voorhees, and their likes, prefer the monarchical system of appointing by favoritism.

THE appointment of Burke to be district attorney was undoubtedly due to the fact that recommendations are kept secret in Washington. There is no more absurd notion. If a recommendation must be kept secret, the President should discard it. If recommendations were open to public inspection, men would stop lying about applicants for office. It is said that Burke had the approval of a number of circuit judges. That showed nothing; almost every man signs every recommendation for office that is laid before him. Mr. Francis T. Hord, a member of the late Indiana general assembly, became "singular" because he refused to sign recommendations of persons with whom he was not acquainted. If indorsements were not kept secret in Washington, the weakly yielded and chiefly baseless eulogy of Burke by Judge Elliott would have been buried out of sight by a flood of protests and facts showing Burke's unfitness.

It was well known that Senator Voorhees would seek an antidote for the "poison" which his efforts in behalf of Anti-Labor Burke instilled in the minds of workmen. As a starter he declared the other day in the senate, that "the most dangerous question now before the country is the encroachments of corporations with their power of colossal wealth against those who are helplessly in their power." Every pet of Voorhees in Indiana, beginning with John E. Lamb, is and has been for years a tool of corporations, ready at all times to do any work corporations want done. The following from the Indianapolis News of March 22 sets out the true nature of the Voorhees crowd:

"It is recalled that immediately after the adjournment of the Indiana general assembly, two years ago, there was great rejoicing over the defeat of the co-employees bill, and of other bills in which the railroads were interested, particularly the Pennsylvania and Vandalia railroads. The Vandalia railroad company placed at the disposal of Mr. Burke, who had fought so hard for the railroad companies, John E. Lamb, who had been an industrious lobbyist of the railroads, and other democrats, a private car in which they traveled to Hot Springs in elegant style. Champagne was the cheapest drink aboard. At Hot Springs there was a gathering in which were Senator Voorhees, Lamb, Burke, Crawford Fairbanks, the Terre Haute distiller Joshua Jump, and other democrats of that character. It was during the stay of that party at Hot Springs that, according to Senator Voorhees, the United States attorneyship was promised to Burke.

THE state of Missouri has passed a very complete corrupt practices act. The daily papers have given it such extended notices that it is not necessary to give a synopsis here. It was mainly brought about by the efforts of the Missouri Civil Service Reform Association, of which Charles Claflin Allen is president. This association includes in its work other subjects than its name would strictly indicate, and the passage of such a bill shows that it is in an active and healthy condition.

No bills are sent to non-subscribers who receive the CHRONICLE. An increase of subscribers is, however earnestly desired, and we ask all who are friendly to the objects of this paper to interest themselves in increasing its circulation. The second volume will cover President Cleveland's administration, as the first did that of President Harrison. Those who contemplate having the first volume bound should wait until the index, now being prepared, is ready. For number five of the CHRONICLE, fifty cents each will be paid.

THE annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League will be held in New York Tuesday and Wednesday, April 25th and 26th. The headquarters will be at the City Club, 677 Fifth Avenue. The annual address will be delivered by Carl Schurz at the Madison Square Garden Assembly Hall, Madison Avenue and Twenty-sixth streets, Tuesday evening, April 25th, at eight o'clock. The first meeting will be held Wednesday, at 10:30 A. M.

at the City Club. At 1:30 a collation will be served. Another business meeting will be held the same afternoon. Wednesday evening at seven P. M. the New York Civil Service Reform Association will give a dinner to the members of the League at the Hotel Savoy, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth streets. Every member of any civil service reform association is a member of the League, and is entitled to vote in its meetings.

POETIC JUSTICE.

When President Harrison extended the civil service law to the free-delivery post-offices, the examinations necessary to the preparation of the eligible lists led the civil service commission to ask congress for a thousand dollars to pay traveling expenses of examiners. Congress, under the influence of Holman and Dockery, refused. Holman advises Mr. Shanklin, of this state, to accept a Mississippi river commissioner-ship because it is a sinecure. The commission is a sinecure. It does nothing but take pleasant trips at public expense. There is no more need of a Mississippi river commission than there is of a Lake Ontario commission, or a Lake Champlain commission, or a Pogue's Run commission, yet Mr. Holman and congress vote twenty thousand dollars a year for this sinecure without any twinges of conscience. But a thousand dollars to hold a hundred examinations for perhaps ten thousand applicants can not be allowed. The consequence is that examinations have to be cut down in number. But we were mistaken last month in saying that they had been postponed as to the free-delivery offices recently classified. The civil service commission determined that the offices newly added were entitled to attention first, and therefore examinations in all of those offices will be held at once. This will furnish the new postmasters as they come in with eligible lists from which to fill vacancies. An object lesson in civil service reform will now be given in many cities in Indiana and all through the country. The commission has, however, been compelled to postpone in many places examinations for the departments at Washington, the railway mail service, and for the formerly classified service generally. True, congressmen are besieged with applicants for positions in these parts of the service. They can only tell applicants to get on the eligible lists. But applicants can not get on the lists unless examinations are held. Examinations can not be held because congress refused the thousand dollars. The siege will therefore have to go on. It is not the kind of a siege congressmen like, but they have only themselves to blame for it.

A LATTER-DAY DOUGHFACE.

THE Boston Herald of April 4 says that the best opportunity for the rapid advance of civil service reform was lost under Harrison. That the republican party had more in its ranks favoring the reform; it returned to power promising to promote it; and, having held office twenty-four years out of twenty-eight, it was peculiarly in a position to be magnanimous toward democrats then in office. That it hunted them out ruthlessly and retaliation was inevitable, and there is no occasion for surprise that it has come. That President Harrison has had to take the responsibility for this and justly. That the offices should be taken out of politics; but that it is not to be expected that the democrats will agree that civil service reform shall begin with themselves tabooed, and with the republicans in full possession, and that, too, after having been in possession so much more than their share of the time. That the American people like fair play, and will be at least charitable toward the democrats in this transaction. That the greediness of the republicans under Harrison put a discouraging obstacle in the way of ever having civil service reform. That a see-saw has been established between parties which is difficult of relief from executive quarters; and we must therefore rely more upon the legislative branch of the government.

It is such doughfaced talk as this that has kept, and will keep Massachusetts a republican state. The American people do like fair play, and one of the kinds of fair play they like, is to see one President judged by the same standard that another is. The Herald had better read over the platform upon which Mr. Cleveland was elected last fall, and also what he has said upon the subject of patronage. The platform covered, and was intended to cover by those who drew it, every phase of civil service reform. It covered the subject just as much as Harrison's platform covered it, and it carried with it as fair a promise as ever was made to stop the use of the offices as spoil. Now upspring reformers to whose mind responsibility and treachery were never charged too sharply upon Harrison, and to whose notion the lash could never be laid too heavily upon republican patronage pirates, and tell us that democratic patronage pirates, resistless and unresisted, will probably have President Cleveland by the throat until he delivers to them all the offices, but that we must not hold him responsible, and our proper course is to ask these same pirates to cut themselves off from spoil. We decline to join in this craven surrender. The officer in whom the constitution vests executive authority must be held responsible for executive acts.

To say that President Cleveland can not help himself is to offer him the greatest insult. It is to say that he is not a giant, but only a pigmy and a figure-head. He can help himself. The way to stop the use of public offices as spoil is to stop it. The man or the paper that says that because we had a Headsman Clarkson, we must therefore have a Headsman Maxwell, is the enemy of good government, and is a partner in the ward-rounder politics with which this country is infested. President Cleveland has but to refuse to change employees unless congress will make provision for the appointment of new ones upon business principles. The plans are well digested. There is not a shadow of an excuse. Any other course will not be from necessity, but from choice, and the responsibility will be fixed where it belongs.

THE PRESIDENT'S OPPORTUNITY.

We must not forget that President Cleveland's opportunity is almost the greatest that ever in the history of government came to a man the second time. In his first term he was not successful in his management of the civil service. His defeat followed. It was not caused by his attitude upon the tariff. As Harper's Weekly recently said, that attitude was the only thing that gave the campaign of 1888 any affirmative life. Now, again, by the drunken folly of the republicans, the opportunity has come to him. There is nothing for him in tariff legislation beyond what there was for Polk. There is nothing for him in currency legislation beyond what there was for Grant and Hayes. But the patronage system eats away public morality; in its perfection, as in Tammany Hall, and as in Maryland under Gorman, it destroys free government. Mr. Cleveland can kill this system in the federal service, and, in killing it, he can do the greatest work which has come to the hand of any American since Abraham Lincoln. But mere expedients, such as refusing to appoint ex-office-holders, if the places are filled after all as patronage; and such as refusing to remove fourth-class postmasters unless they have served four years, if the sixty-five thousand are after all removed to make room for partisans, will not kill it. They will leave it as flourishing as ever. The remedy must go to the root. Measures must be taken to exclude favoritism of every kind from the exercise of the appointing power. We do not represent that the contest will be mild or petty or easy. It will be one which Hercules might relish. The time is ripe. The means are at hand. The call to duty will not be stilled. The golden opportunity will soon pass by. If Mr. Cleveland lets it pass, he will refuse the greatness which is fairly thrust upon him.

THE SUMMARY.

The summary of the present state of the new administration as shown by public information, and in the columns of the CHRONICLE, is in general, as follows: The President and every member of the cabinet spend about all their time with office-seekers. The daily applications for postmasterships exceed two thousand. There have been over eighty thousand applications for consulships. A congressman takes as high as twenty office-seekers before the President at a time. All of the rules against appointing editors, ex-office-holders and so on are readily overstepped. Fourth-class post-offices are being filled with partisans of the administration at the rate of more than thirty thousand a year. There was an appearance at Washington of paying attention to other recommendations than those of congressmen, but practically there was nothing of this beyond such exceptions as have always occurred. It was regarded as worthy of note that three Indiana post-offices, out of several hundred already filled, have lately been filled with persons not recommended by congressmen, and Congressman Conn, in asking to have seventy of his favorites put into post-offices at once solely on his recommendation, seems to have offered too strong a dose even for Maxwell. In general, so far as the division of offices has proceeded, it has been made among the favorites and henchmen of congressmen; the latter are giving out the offices with an eye to controlling the primaries and conventions next year. They are constantly travelling over their districts, and to and from Washington, solely engaged in distributing offices. Positions of chiefs of division have not been put under the civil service rules, but they are being filled slowly with democrats. Hughes East was given one of these places with some hundred and forty men under him. He was correctly described in the Indianapolis Journal as a curbstone and bucket-shop lounge.

It is expected that Chester R. Faulkner, an Indiana illiterate, a chronic placeholder, and a favorite of Voorhees, is to have another. A small proportion of notably good appointments has been made, but the seemingly admirable selections for members of the cabinet have not been followed up by corresponding reform plans. The cabinet officers, in their acts, are not up to expectation from a reform point. The only distinctive action for reform so far taken by the administration is found in the declaration of Secretary Herbert, of his determination to maintain and extend the labor service system in the navy, and in the declaration of the President that he will divorce Indian affairs from politics. There is so far no sign of the reform influence

Secretary Gresham was to exercise. No movement has been made to place the consular service upon a permanent business basis, but, on the other hand, the places are being given out as "plums." The appointments of Burke and Risely were bad. The new Indian commissioner has no knowledge of Indian affairs, and he is said to be not much of a civil service reformer. If he is let to go as Maxwell is we may expect another wreck of Indian affairs to aid in bringing disaster to the administration. The appointment and retention of Maxwell with free scope to act is in direct violation of platform promises. The general conclusion must be that the administration has no fundamental plans of reform. The general aspect is that of a wild scramble for place, where the scramblers in squads, headed by congressmen, crowd in upon the President and other appointing officers and stop public business. Congressmen have entirely abandoned legislative duties or preparation, and have become simply squad leaders, marching their squads about the streets and through the public buildings of Washington in the onslaught upon the executive. The scene beggars description, and what we give elsewhere in the CHRONICLE is an almost infinitesimal part of what is actually occurring. The worst of it is that there is no demand among the people for a continuance of this system, and the great proportion of those who are demanding places have been paid in actual cash for all services they ever rendered to the party.

THE ONSLAUGHT.

"Public office is a public trust. We reaffirm the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, [Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition] and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President, as in the recent republican convention by delegations composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which federal office-holders usurp control of party conventions in the states, and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government."—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

JACKSONIAN DEMOCRACY.

That the indiscriminate removal of public officers for a mere difference of political opinion is a gross abuse of power; and that the doctrines lately boldly preached in the United States senate, that "to the victors belong the spoils of the vanquished," is detrimental to the interests, corrupting to the morals and dangerous to the liberties of the country.—Democratic platform 1832.

THE SCENE AT WASHINGTON.

March 18.—For two hours to-day it seemed to the White House attendants as if all the office-seekers in the country were in the mansion. For two hours, which is the prescribed time for the reception of congressmen who call to present the claims of their constituents for office, the public rooms of the White House were thronged. A list of the senators and representatives who were there would comprise the major part of the names on the rolls of both houses of congress. Mr. Cleveland was in a good humor.

"I intended to call and pay my respects to the President, but deferred it until some other time, on learning of the great pressure of visitors, and the many cares of office which were pressing upon him. The pressure for office is fearful, but not greater than usual at this period of a new administration. Indians were numerous, some of them probably a little over noisy, and too zealous in demanding recognition. There was more zeal than good judgment shown in many instances."—Wm. H. English, in Indianapolis News, March 20.

"Why, the hotels are full, the corridors are packed with office-seekers from everywhere, and they are making life a burden to the members of congress and senators from various states."—Governor Matthews, in Indianapolis Sentinel, March 20.

March 20.—There were a great many callers at the White House to-day, but none but those who had appointments with the President were permitted to see him.—New York Times.

March 22.—Secretary Herbert spends most of his time with office-seekers, and has had little opportunity to attend to departmental matters. To-day on his desk there were 500 letters. This pile of correspondence mainly related to places which will be filled by the President and were not confined to any department. Yesterday Mr. Herbert answered 105 letters. The people who have charge of the record book in the appointment division of the treasury department are beginning to wonder if there are any democrats in the country who have not applied for positions under the secretary of the treasury. To-day the flow of applications was as heavy as on any previous day since March 4.—New York Times.

March 23.—The rush for office continues, and the number of callers on the President to-day showed no falling off as compared with previous days. Senators and representatives formed the bulk of the visitors, but their missions were mostly in connection with local offices.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

March 23.—From all the visitors to the White House there comes one account of the reception of callers by the President, and that is an assurance that he is taking his arduous duties very calmly, and that he is not permitting the monotonous round of appeals to him to try his temper. Men who have had occasion to call upon the heads of several of the departments and afterward to go back to the White House, have declared that no member of the administration is so easily approached or more amiable when reached than the President. He does not appear to be worried; he listens to everybody as if he was willing to hear the applicant out, and he manifests an interest in every case that indicates that his attention has been fixed upon the story of his visitor.—New York Times.

March 23.—This was another busy day for Secretary Lamont at the war department and Secretary Herbert at the navy department. Each official had many callers, many of whom staid until after four o'clock before they secured an audience. Neither Secretary Lamont nor Secretary Herbert has had very much time to attend to departmental matters, and beyond the perfunctory signing of the daily mail—quite a task itself—the business of the government must wait until the office-seekers have been disposed of.—New York Times.

March 25.—Beyond the inward rush of scores of place hunters, with their escorts of senators and representatives, there was little of interest at the White House to-day. The President's office was crowded constantly.—Indianapolis News.

March 26.—Secretary Lamont is tired. Since he came to Washington he has worked without interruption when he was so free from visitors as to be able to work. But the contact with callers, some of whom are brief and business-like and some prosy and tenacious, has been almost constant. They come early and late. Before he leaves his rooms at the Arlington they are at his door. As soon as he reaches his rooms in the war department they arrive in crowds, and they stay there until he is obliged to go to the cabinet meeting or to luncheon, the luncheon hour being interrupted by the bold approach of the importunate. This is the experience, as a matter of fact, of each of the members of the cabinet. Their strength is sapped by this wearying receiving of callers, who come for the most part to urge the appointment of some one who is not satisfied to have filed his application for office.—New York Times.

March 26.—The congressmen say that the President reserves Monday to himself, and that, in consequence, they are left but three days in each week in which to transact their business at the departments. It is understood that an effort will be made to bring about a modification of the order, but it is unlikely that Mr. Cleveland will make any change which will give the office-seekers any more leeway.

For the past three weeks it has been practically impossible for any of the heads of departments to perform their legitimate duties, because of the free access to their apartments given members of congress and their friends. At all the departments the work is in arrears because of the unprecedented rush of place hunters. At present the daily applications for postmasterships at the post-office department exceed 2,000, with a good prospect that these big figures will soon be increased.—New York Times.

March 26.—Most of the leading railroad lines running south from here have arranged excursion rates for office-seekers, and the daily returns show that travel has never been so heavy as it has been since Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated. Mr. Evan Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, made the declaration some time ago that Georgia was entitled to 2,400 government offices, and it is reported that arrangements are now being made to run a special train from Atlanta to Washington for the exclusive use of office-seekers.—Washington Special.

March 29.—The departments were thronged with visitors to-day, mostly political, who made up for the time they were compelled to lose yesterday. The secretaries had scarcely a minute to themselves, and were practically unable to attend to the regular departmental business. The question has arisen as to the expediency of amending the President's order prohibiting the reception of visitors at the departments on cabinet days, so as to include one or two more days of the week. If to-day's experience is repeated throughout the week the heads of departments will have to transact all their official business on Tuesdays and Fridays, and surrender the remaining four secular days of the week to the office-seeker and his friends.—Indianapolis Journal.

March 30.—This was the most fatiguing day the President has had since his inauguration, and he was completely tired out after three hours and a half talk with senators, representatives and office-seekers.

"Did any of them get away?" asked the President when Senator Palmer entered his office at the head of the delegation of about twenty.

"I think not, sir; there appears to be a quorum present," answered Senator Palmer, gravely, as he ran his eye over the group.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

March 31.—There were no signs of letting up in the rush of office-seekers at the White House to-day. They came early and stayed late and some of them would have stayed later if opportunity had been presented.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

April 1.—Secretary Hoke Smith has announced that on next Monday afternoon, at four o'clock, he will see persons interested in the appointment of a governor of New Mexico, with the view of obtaining information for the President's use in making the selection. On next Wednesday, at the same hour, he will see all persons who may wish to be heard on the subject of the appointment of the governor of Utah, and on Thursday next, citizens of Oklahoma and others will be given a hearing on the subject of the appointment of a governor of that territory. The secretary has also announced that during the coming week he will not be able to take up any applications for appointments as surveyors general and registrars and receivers of land offices.—Indianapolis Journal.

April 1.—Mr. Cleveland devoted three hours to the politicians to-day. They were at the White House in unusually large numbers, and there was a crush outside the door of his private room, which continued up to the hour when the sign was hung out that the reception was over.—New York Times.

April 3.—People who stopped in front of the door of the secretary of the treasury this afternoon found attached to it a card with this inscription on it:

"No visitors or cards received after 1 P. M."

Inquiry developed the fact that Mr. Carlisle had benefited but little by the recent order barring cabinet officers from the general public on cabinet days by reason of the fact that on the remaining days of the week the office-seekers managed to make up for the time lost through its issuance.—New York Times.

April 4.—This was a "show" day at the White House, the calling of the visitors being checked at 11 o'clock by the arrival of the members of the cabinet to attend the regular meeting. Before that hour, however, there were many southern callers, who came in quest of appointments, asking for large and small offices. They are not easily discouraged, and the congressional visitors begin to be a little more importunate as adjournment of the senate seems imminent.—New York Times.

April 6.—There appears to be a new crop of office seekers in town. These are the men who want the post-offices, the clerkships in the departments here, and the smaller places. They wear broad-brimmed sombreros, yellow and stiff, and some have bulging hip-pockets, and a few wear their "pants" in their boots. There are so many of these brawny sons of election victories here that two or three extra sheets of the nominations sent to the senate each day are posted in the senate corridors for their benefit. It has been the custom for years when the President sends a list of nominations to the senate about 12:30 or 1 o'clock to make a dozen or more manifold copies for the information of press representatives and others. Three or four copies are immediately sent up to the press galleries of the senate, and a copy posted in the large room occupied by the clerks to the secretary of the senate. When the clerk from the White House appeared with his nominations, before the present arrangement, the fellows with the broad hats and bulging hip-pockets made a dash for him, and he could scarcely dodge into the senate chamber. When the copy for public posting was sent out, these fellows almost fell over one another. It was a mob. They wanted to see if their names were on the list. It is the same the next day. About the hotel corridors, day and night, the typewriters are driven to their utmost capacity. The applicants want their papers all copied in the nice, bold hand of the typewriting machine so the appointing power can readily read.—Indianapolis Journal.

April 8.—Candidates for consulships have been the last to go. During the last week they became a little mutinous and wanted to chew up each other. If one candidate for a consulship happened to get a hearing with a senator or a congressman, the others demanded like recognition at once. Each seemed to feel that some other applicant was trying to advance his own personal interests at the expense of all the rest. The senators have complained that all the candidates have injured their chances by insisting on going to the White House in a body whenever the senators arranged for a meeting with the President. One day this week there were seven applicants for consulships in the President's room at one time from the state of Indiana, and the impression which they made on the President by going thus in a body was not at all favorable.—Indianapolis News.

April 11.—A private letter from Washington, written by a gentleman who is deeply interested in the public questions which are calling most imperatively for attention from the Cleveland administration, contains the following:

"I do not believe that either the President or Secretary Carlisle has been able to give a moment's thought, since taking office, to either the tariff or the silver question, because of the offices and the office-seekers. Mr. Carlisle looks as if he were about to break down under the strain."

It is said by other observers that President Cleveland is also very weary of the struggle for office, which absorbs all his time, that his visit to ex-Secretary Bayard at Wilmington was taken for the purpose of giving him a brief respite from it, and that he is especially disgusted with the conduct of many public men in signing the "indorsements" of candidates for office, and then writing privately to him asking that he give no weight to their signatures. Every member of the cabinet is in a continual state of seige, and if Mr. Carlisle proves to be the first to break down under the strain, it will be only because he has less power of physical endurance than the others. Secretary Lamont, who is supposed to represent the President in his frequent trips to New York, finds himself accompanied by a small army of office-seekers, who take passage on the trains with him and "present their cases" to him en route. There were no less than thirty who adopted this method on the latest rally.—New York Evening Post.

THE GUILLOTINE.

Robert A. Maxwell began his duties to-day as fourth assistant postmaster-general. His predecessor, Mr. E. G. Rathbone, introduced him to the employes and then relinquished to him his chair and desk.

The new officer was prepared to begin work, but office-seekers made their appearance, and for the remainder of the day Mr. Maxwell listened to the "claims" of democrats from all parts of the country. It will be a week or more before Mr. Maxwell will be able to get down to business. There are thousands of resignations demanding his attention, and thousands of applications which must be considered. As soon as the office-seekers permit him to attend to the business of his office, it is likely that changes in the post-offices of the country will be rapid enough to suit the most exacting democrats.—New York Times, March 23.

Congressman Cooper is on deck again ready to tackle a republican postmaster.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 23.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster Maxwell's first day in office resulted in the appointment of forty-four fourth-class postmasters, and of this number five were to fill vacancies caused by the removal of the incumbents. Yesterday's appointments aggregated thirty-one, which included four removals.—Washington Dispatch, March 26.

The guillotine is doing rapid work among the fourth-class postmasters, making up for the time lost by Mr. Maxwell in getting started. The record of yesterday with sixty-seven removals in a total of one hundred changes, is not matched in absolute numbers to-day, but the percentage is greater, being thirty-seven removals in a total of forty-eight changes.

From this day forth we may expect to see greater speed than ever, for the entire clerical force of the department [about 400] is to be turned loose upon the work of preparing the documents. The regular employes of the appointment division have been found unequal to cope with the mass of matter accumulated in relation to the 58,000 post-offices within their jurisdiction. The letters containing charges and recommendations have therefore been sorted as well as possible and distributed through the several rooms in the department building, where they lie in heaps in corners against the wall, or under tables and in other out of the way places. This afternoon at four o'clock every clerk will drop his regular routine work and attack his pile, continuing at it for an hour. Every day the whole force will stay till five o'clock in the afternoon for this purpose till the work is finished.

Every letter has to be read, every newspaper clipping skimmed, the names attached to every petition counted and briefs made of all matters relating to the present postmaster or the person urged as his successor. Each bundle is then to be packed and endorsed, and placed in a cupboard devoted to its particular state. Mr. Maxwell will thus be able to make his changes by hundreds where he now makes it by dozens.

There is no business in the department more repugnant to the clerks who have to do it. They have a fellow-feeling for the men and women in whose decapitation they are assisting. They realize, as outsiders can not, how flimsy the pretexts are on which removals are made, and how little real scrutiny any of them get.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, March 28.

The largest number of changes was made in the state of Wisconsin, where there were twenty-two appointments, fourteen of the incumbents being removed. In Arkansas there were eight appointments and four removals, and in Tennessee seventeen appointments and ten removals.—Washington Dispatch, March 28.

Congressman Brookshire, who has been down with the grip, is now able to prepare victims for the Maxwell ax.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 29.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell to-day appointed forty-nine fourth-class postmasters. All but thirteen of these involve removals.—Washington Dispatch, March 29.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell has indicated the line of policy which will govern him in the selection of about 50,000 fourth-class postmasters this year. "In the first place," said he, "I don't propose to permit unsuccessful politicians to dictate appointments. Ex-congressmen and men who ran for congress and were defeated will not control appointments under me. In states where there is not a democratic senator, and the districts are represented by republicans in congress, the state, district, or county democratic committees, will be asked to make recommendations for postmasters. We want to deal with live democrats, men of influence, not worn-out politicians."

"Men and women who held post-offices four years ago will not be appointed if new blood can be found. The 'no-ex,' as a rule, will apply in the selection of fourth-class postmasters. Of course, if we can not get democrats who have not held the offices to accept them, we will reinstate the old postmasters, rather than permit the republicans to hold the offices. We are now ready for business, and changes will be made as rapidly as possible. It is the intention to reorganize the service and put in as many new postmasters as possible. There is no tenure to these offices, and changes can be made at any time."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 29.

Of forty-nine changes among fourth-class postmasters announced this morning, thirty-five are removals. No New York or New Jersey appointments were among them. Bradley B. Smalley, of Vermont, has been paying close attention to business since he arrived here from Vermont, and in one instance he spent thirty-five minutes at the post-office department, and secured twenty-one charges from republican to democratic postmasters. He considers this a strictly democratic administration.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, March 29.

The following fourth-class post offices in Indiana were filled with democrats to-day by Executioner Maxwell.

First district, on recommendation of Congressman Taylor: [Here follows list of 13.]

Second district, recommended by Congressman Bretz: [Here follows list of 26.]

It will be seen that Messrs. Taylor and Bretz did a good day's work in placing the post-offices of their districts in the hands of democrats. Hacker, of Shoals, is editor of the Martin County News.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell to-day appointed one hundred and eighty-eight fourth-class postmasters, and of this number eighty-five were to fill vacancies caused by removals. The largest number appointed from any one state was forty-five in Indiana, which involved eleven removals; in Kentucky there were twenty-four appointments and six removals; in Vermont there were twenty appointments and ten removals; in West Virginia fifteen appointments and eleven removals, and in Wisconsin ten appointments and five removals.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 30.

Representative Cooper got one post-office to-day. Mr. Bretz obtained one, also. Maxwell promises to swing his ax to-morrow.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

The rapidity with which the post-offices of Crawford county are changing hands is pleasing the ultra democrats very much. Seventeen new postmasters have already been chosen, and the others are daily expected.—Boston [Indiana] Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 30.

Quite a number of New York politicians congregated in the Arlington lobby to-night. Ashbel P. Fitch and Judge Truax came over this evening.

J. W. Hinckley, editor of the Poughkeepsie News-Press, spent an hour or more in conversation with Senator Murphy.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Maxwell dropped in about 10 o'clock, and Mr. Hinckley and he had a few minutes of private conversation. Mr. Maxwell was quite fatigued as the result of examining and signing the commissions of one hundred and eighty-eight postmasters during the day. Eighty-five of the places thus filled were made available by removals. Forty-five Indiana Democrats were rewarded with postmasterships. The increased force of clerks now at work under Mr. Maxwell enables him to swing the ax much more vigorously than he did last week. In a few days he expects to strike a much livelier gait.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 30.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31.—Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell again remembered the Indiana democrats, especially those of southern Indiana, well to-day. He removed thirty-six republicans and put in their places as many stalwart democrats, who had been designated by the congressmen in the districts in which they are located. Congressman Taylor of the first district, who fared so well yesterday, got the following democrats into post-offices to-day: [Here follows list of 2.]

In the second, Mr. Bretz, who also got more than his share yesterday, succeeded in landing the following additional to-day: [Here follows list of 5.]

Third district, recommended by Congressman Brown: [One.]

Fifth district, recommended by Congressman Cooper: [Here follows list of 3.]

Seventh district, recommended by Congressman Bynum: [Here follows list of 6.]

Eighth district, recommended by Congressman Brookshire: [Here follows list of 16.]

Twelfth district, recommended by Congressman McNaghy: [One.]—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell to-day appointed 136 fourth class postmasters, which involved fifty-nine removals. The largest number of appointments was made in Indiana, where there were thirty-six, involving eighteen removals. In Missouri there were sixteen appointments and seven removals; in Tennessee twenty appointments and seven removals; in Vermont eleven appointments and ten removals; in Kentucky nine appointments and two removals, and in West Virginia eight appointments, all the incumbents having resigned.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 31.

* * *

Indiana got fifteen new fourth-class postmasters to-day.—Washington Dispatch, April 1.

* * *

Beside the two presidential offices, Indiana got eleven fourth-class post-office appointments to-day, as follows:

Eleventh district—Congressman Martin: [Here follows list of 6.]

Congressman Taylor secured two more republican scalps in the fourth class.

Congressman Cooper got W. N. Smith at Dolon, Monroe county; and Mr. Bretz obtained J. W. Right's appointment for Wright, Green county.

Cannellton and Tell City, Perry county, became presidential offices last January, and President Harrison sent to the senate two republican postmasters who had been in nearly four years as fourth-class officials. Had they been confirmed they would have held four years more, and to avoid this Congressman Taylor, who was only an elect then, came here and spent the last three weeks of Harrison's administration to prevent their confirmation. He succeeded, and these two thriving cities of Perry will have their post-offices conducted by democrats, at Tell City by Phil. Zoercher, who has already been confirmed, and at Cannellton by the man who was nominated to-day. Dickerson of Spencer, is the second presidential post-office secured by Mr. Cooper. Harris of Franklin, was nominated last week. So far every appointment made has been upon the recommendation of congressmen.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 3.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell to-day appointed one hundred and nineteen fourth-class postmasters. Illinois heads the list with 19, Kentucky with 16, Missouri 14, Maine 13, Tennessee 13, and Virginia and Indiana 7 each.—Washington Dispatch, April 3.

* * *

Indiana postmasters appointed to-day: [Here follows list of 5.]—Washington Dispatch, April 4.

* * *

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell appointed one hundred and forty-three postmasters to-day. Mr. Maxwell said this evening to the correspondent of the New York Times that for the next few days he would devote his time to filling the vacancies caused by resignations. There were several thousand of these, he said, and the list was constantly increasing.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, April 4.

* * *

The following fourth-class appointments were made to-day for Indiana post offices: [Here follows list of 10.]—Washington Dispatch, April 5.

For the first time in the history of the post-office department the fourth assistant postmaster-general declined to-day to give for publication the names of the fourth class postmasters appointed yesterday. The only excuse given is that it was too much trouble to prepare the list. It is alleged that the real reason for discontinuing the publication of the names was to relieve the administration from the references which the press has been making to the work of "Headsman" Maxwell, and the disparaging remarks about wholesale removals.—Associate Press Dispatch, April 5.

Mr. Maxwell to-day appointed 134 fourth-class postmasters. Of this number 13 were in Indiana, 11 in Georgia, 22 in Pennsylvania and 14 in Kentucky.

Secretary Smith to-day directed the removal of 25 pension examiners now in the field. In making the selections for dismissal, it is said that the politics of the examiner has not been considered, but that the only question taken into account was that of proficiency.—Washington Dispatch, April 5.

Secretary Hoke Smith announced that to-morrow he would be glad to see at the department all persons who are interested in the selection of suitable persons to fill vacancies now existing, or which will exist within the next thirty days in the offices of registers and receivers of land offices, and also in the offices of surveyors general. He also requests those who intend to present charges upon which removals are asked, either for registers, receivers or surveyors general, to at once file their charges in full with the commissioners of the general land office.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 5.

* * *

Fourth assistant postmaster Maxwell, yesterday appointed one hundred and twenty four fourth-class postmasters.—Washington Dispatch, April 5.

At the bottom of the list of appointments made to-day appeared a note explanatory of the changes, and intended to excuse the large number of removals of republicans. After stating the number of appointments for to-day, the number of removals, resignations and vacancies created by death which were filled, the explanatory official note observed that "twenty-six of the postmasters removed served four years and over, and thirty-three served over three years. The fourth-class postmasters appointed to-day for Indiana were as follows: [Here follows a list of 17.]—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 6.

The total number of appointments to fourth-class post-offices to-day was 131, of which seventy-two were to fill vacancies caused by resignations and deaths, and fifty-nine to fill vacancies caused by removals. Twenty-six of the postmasters removed served four years and over, and thirty-three served over three years.—Washington Dispatch, April 1.

Forty-eight field pension examiners were removed to-day, including a number of Hoosiers, but their names could not be learned this morning.

Congressman Martin made a clean sweep of the pension medical boards in his district yesterday. All the republican examiners were replaced with democrats.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 6.

* * *

Congressman Cooper got another scalp to-day. Ford, the assistant chief of division in the pension office, who figured in the Raum scandal investigation, was removed to-day.

Congressman Bretz had the board in Dubois county changed to-day.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 6.

* * *

The Kansas office-seekers are in a bad plight. The office-seekers were completely knocked out when President Cleveland decided that until they settled their internal disputes and agree upon who shall receive the Federal patronage, no further offices of any kind whatever shall be filled in Kansas or by Kansas.

"A plague on both your houses," said Mr. Maxwell to-day to Mr. Mitchell, the Kansas stalwart. "I will have nothing to do with them."

Mr. Maxwell said that he was carefully investigating the various factions, and until he reached a conclusion would appoint no postmasters of that class in that State.—Washington Dispatch to Buffalo Express, April 6.

Postmaster-General Bissell has been taught by his experience of the past few days that he can not afford to attempt to muzzle the press, and has, therefore, transferred his efforts toward the suppression of news to the congressmen, whom he evidently expects to find more subservient. Every congressman who called at the post-office department to day was notified by the postmaster-general that hereafter he must not disclose to newspaper correspondents the names of the persons recommended for appointment. In every case the congressman promptly obeyed the order.

Headsman Maxwell's "explanatory note" accompanying the list of postmasters appointed to-day was as follows: "Total number of fourth-class postmasters appointed to day, 117, of which eighty-three were to fill vacancies caused by resignations and deaths and thirty-four removals. Of the postmasters removed twelve served four years and over." The changes for Indiana were as follows, all being appointments to fill vacancies created by resignations: [Here follows list of 21.]—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 7.

Although the heads of 120 fourth-class postmasters rolled into the sawdust under headsman Maxwell.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 8.

* * *

The President has called a halt on indiscriminate removals of fourth-class postmasters. Consequently Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell has announced that, by order of the President, no more removals will be made, except for cause or where the incumbent has served four years. The effect of this order will be to establish a four-year term of office in fourth-class offices just the same as that which is established by law for the presidential postmasters and other important officers. The enforcement of this rule does not make much of a reduction in the numbers of fourth-class postmasters appointed daily, however, for there are a large number of vacancies by resignation to be filled yet.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 8.

* * *

Indiana received four fourth-class postmasters to-day as follows: [Here follows list of 4.]—Washington Dispatch, April 8.

* * *

Indiana received the following new fourth-class postmasters to-day: [Here follows list of 7.]

The total number of fourth-class postmasters appointed to-day was 119. Of these, ninety-nine were to fill vacancies caused by death and resignations, and twenty by removals. Of the postmasters removed, seventeen had served four years and over.

Mr. Edwin C. Fowler, the chief clerk to the first assistant postmaster general, has been detailed to assist Mr. Maxwell. During the first administration of President Cleveland, Mr. Fowler was acting first assistant much of the time, and as chief to Mr. Stevenson, became thoroughly familiar with the duties of the office.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 10.

The total number of fourth-class postmasters appointed to-day was 119. Of these 99 were to fill vacancies caused by deaths and resignations, and 20 by removals. Of the postmasters removed 17 had served four years and over.—Washington Dispatch, April 10.

* * *

Of the 117 fourth-class postmasters appointed to day 19 are for Indiana as follows:—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel.

* * *

Political-butcher Maxwell had his partisan abattoir running in full blast to-day. His executioners dragged 177 republican postmasters under the guillotine, and beheaded them in the interest of office-seeking democrats. Indiana got 19 of the changes made by the bloody work. Fourteen of the decapitations were made by force, that number of republicans being forcibly executed. The appointments were as follows.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 11.

* * *

Representative Conn, of Elkhart, will arrive tomorrow. He hopes to be able to recommend a number of post-office changes for his district as soon as he arrives. Mr. Conn says there is nothing gained for any one by mincing matters, and that the only way to make changes in offices is to make them, and that he will openly recommend appointments as rapidly as he agrees upon the men.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 11.

* * *

Congressman Conn returned to the city to-day and made a beeline for Azman Maxwell with a complete list of fourth-class postmasters for his district. In most cases the terms of the republican postmasters do not expire till next winter. However, the fourth-class postmasters will be decapitated next week.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 14.

April 10.—The Maxwell ax did a poor day's work in Indiana to-day. The following democrats were appointed in the places of decapitated republicans: [6.]

April 11.—The total number of fourth-class postmasters appointed to-day was 177. Of this number 114 were to fill vacancies caused by resignations and deaths, and 63 by removal.

April 12.—One hundred and twenty-one republican fourth-class postmasters were beheaded to-day and as many democrats appointed. The slaughter continues unabated. Thirty-nine of them were removals. Indiana got thirty changes, fourteen of which represented removals of incumbents.—Indianapolis Journal.

April 13.—Indiana is still at the bat. She continues to get her share of the game of changes in fourth-class postmasters. To-day she got twenty-three, of which nineteen were removals. There is a greater per cent. of removals from Indiana postmasterships than in any other state. The changes to-day were as follows:—Indianapolis Journal.

THE ASSAULT UPON THE CONSULSHIPS.

Indiana has more candidates for consulships than any three other states in the Union, according to the estimates made at the state department. The number is between sixty and seventy, and is being augmented daily by new applications. In Mr. Bynum's district alone there are said to be about twenty-five. From the best information to be had Indiana will secure three foreign missions and four consulships. One of the foreign missions is already settled. Another will probably go to the Hon. Will E. English, and for the third there a large number of men on the waiting list, one of the most prominent being Montgomery Hamilton, of Ft. Wayne.—Indianapolis News, March 13.

Jonathan S. Lee, ex-member of the legislature from Vigo county, wants to be consul to the city of Mexico. He has been getting signatures to his petition among the state officials.

Colonel I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, left to-night feeling certain that he will be sent to Hong Kong as consul.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 10.

Col. I. B. McDonald of Columbia City has a dangerous rival for the Hong Kong consulate in the person of State Committeeman Charles Buchanan of Union City. He left for home this evening well satisfied with his prospects.—Indianapolis Sentinel, Mar. 12.

Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, is said to be booked for the consulate at Callao.—Indianapolis Journal, March 13.

Mort Hamilton, of Fort Wayne, arrived to-day with an application for a second-class mission.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 10.

H. E. Matthews, the well-known merchant of Indianapolis, it is said, can have the Belfast consulate if he wants it.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 13.

The Hon. John G. Shanklin has again returned to Washington. When he left here last week for New York it was reported that he would not come back. Mr. Shanklin is here and expects to remain for several weeks. He is said to be a candidate for a consulship. He is desirous of securing the consulship to Liverpool, but is ready now to take any other lucrative post.

One of the Indianapolis contingent who is back home and cheerful is M. A. Kelly, who wants to be consul to Belfast, Ireland. Kelly's friends are telling this story, part of which he says is true. He was presented to the President by Congressman Bynum, who said:

"Mr. Kelly is an applicant for the consulship at Belfast, Ireland, Mr. President."

"Yes, Mr. President," chimed in Kelly, "and a good man he is for the place, too."

At this the President bowed, and Kelly (so says that faithful chronicler, P. H. McNelis), not to be outdone in bowing, lifted his hat and bent nearly to the floor.

"Well, if I don't get the place," said Kelly, "the President can not say that I was not as polite as he was."

Will E. English, who has been making a strong fight for the Swiss mission, will, it is understood, apply for the mission to Sweden if he fails to be sent to Switzerland.—Indianapolis News, March 13.

A telegram has been received by Secretary Gresham, signed by all the state officers of Indiana, stating that the appointment of the Hon. Will E. English to be minister to Sweden would give general satisfaction to the democrats of Indiana.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

J. H. Defoe, of Portland, wants to go to Havre as consul. He speaks French, and as the Germans and Irish are recognized he claims that democrats of French descent who have always stood by the party should at least be given one place.

Dr. Chitwood, of Connersville, wants the Berlin consulate and D. W. Krisher, of North Manchester, Eleventh district elector, wants the Hamilton (Ont.) consulate. He was postmaster under the first administration, which fact rules him out of the race.

Dr. Egbert, of Richmond, left for Indiana to-night confident that he will get the Victoria consulate. Egbert has always been a hard worker for the party, has never held office and Wayne county made the largest gain in the last election.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

Representative Hord, of Indianapolis, says he is not here to apply for assistant district attorney, but to secure the appointment of his cousin, Percy Hord, to a consular position.

James H. Willard, of Bedford, who was a candidate four years ago for the Spanish mission, is now an applicant for appointment as consul to Frankfort, Germany. He reached the city a few days ago, and has been making an active canvass for the place.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 15.

George E. Trow, of Madison, who has been here several days, is an applicant for a consulship.

Will H. O'Brien, editor of the Lawrenceburg Register, and one of the active politicians of Mr. Holman's district, has been here several days quietly looking over the field. He is suspected of having designs on a consulship. He returned yesterday to Lawrenceburg.

Kirahm Walsh, of Fultou county, a retired farmer, has made application for a consulship at some point in Ireland.—Indianapolis News, March 17.

Louis Holtman, editor of the Brazil (Ind.) Democrat, arrived yesterday. He wants to be consul-general at Berlin.—Indianapolis News, March 16.

The Leipsic consulate is now held by Prof. Diederich, of Fort Wayne, and Congressman McNaghy has entered for the place Joseph Storm, of Fort Wayne.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 28.

J. C. Carlton, of Bedford, has returned to urge his appointment to a good soft snap. A few weeks ago he filed his papers for a two-thousand-dollar job in the post-office as postmaster, but now he is inclined to transfer his papers to the state department for a place in the consular service.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 7.

Dr. Teal, of Kendallville, who wanted the Glasgow consulate, has taken a toboggan slide since Morse's appointment to the post. He has come down to Leeds. Dr. Teal was a member of the last house.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 28.

Dr. Teal, of Kendallville, who came here shortly after the inauguration with his family, is desirous of going to Leith, Scotland.—Indianapolis News, April 7.

Tenney, of the Marion county auditor's office, has arrived with an application for the Ottawa consulate.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 28.

D. A. Jennings, editor of the Salem Democrat, has arrived, and is making a still hunt for the consulship to Hamburg.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 4.

D. A. Jennings, editor of the Salem Democrat, is dragging the Potomac river now for the Hamburg or Dresden consulate. He was at first undecided what to apply for, but when once he made up his mind he began with earnestness.—Indianapolis Journal, April 5.

Dick Johnson, of Frankfort, was also introduced by the senators. He wanted a consulship. Dr. Chitwood, of Connersville, who wants to go as consul to Berliu, and Dr. Jennings, of Salem, were also of the party.—Indianapolis News, April 5.

A. E. Manning, of the Marion county clerk's office, arrived to-day with an application for the Liberian mission, which is now held by Prof. McCoy, of Indianapolis. Manning is an original colonial democrat.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 5.

A. E. Manning, of County Clerk Wilson's office, has returned from Washington. He says that he has not made application to the state department for the Liberian mission, but that when he arrived there he was told that an application had been made for him, and that the place had been assigned to Indiana. He says that he talked with Secretary Gresham on the subject, and asserted that he would prefer any other position. He was assured that if he was not appointed to Liberia he would receive a place equally as good. The Liberian mission, which pays $5,000 a year, is now held by W. D. McCoy, of this city.—Indianapolis News, April 10.

Jerome Herff, of Peru, has secured the entire state delegation for indorsement for consul-general to Havana, salary $6,000 and fees.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 16.

Jerome Herff, the member of the state committee from Peru, left yesterday for his home, after having filed a strong petition for appointment as consul to Havana. There is a sharp rivalry for this place, but Mr. Herff has no opposition from Indiana and will be indorsed by the delegation. His Indiana friends believe he stands a fair show of appointment.

Jerome Herff, of Peru, is still in the city confidently expecting appointment as consul to Havana. He will remain here another week.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 23.

Jerome Herff's prospects for consul-general to Havana are improving. The Eleventh district has not yet been recognized, and Herff will be the first to get a big office from the district. Herff did some good work during the campaign. He has always been an active democrat, and has never held office. He is indorsed by the whole delegation.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 28.

Two candidates are on the ground, and will remain this week and perhaps longer—Jerome Herff, of Peru, who is looking in the direction of Havana, Cuba. There seems to be some doubt as to whether or not Mr. Herff will get Havana, as that consulship is so desirable that it has called out lively competition from all parts of the country. If he fails to land on the island it will not be for lack of Indiana encouragement and indorsements. He has the united state delegation and nearly every influential democrat within the Hoosier borders. The support that has rallied to Mr. Herff's cause is not purely perfunctory. There seems to be a strong desire, because of his active connection with Indiana politics, among the Hoosier leaders for Mr. Herff's political promotion. If he does not go to Havana it is averred that he will land one of the other choice consulships that are yet dangling over Indiana.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 31.

Jerome Herff, of Peru, was at the state department to-day, pressing his application for the consul-generalship of Havana, a position worth $15,000 a year, fees and salary combined.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 5.

Jerome Herff, of Peru, thinks his name will be bulletined for a good consulate.—Washington Dispatch, April 10.

Representative Martin said to-day that Jerome Herff, of Peru, would be appointed to a consulate this week. Mr. Herff became discouraged last week, and was about to leave for his home, when Mr. Martin assured him that if he would remain a few days longer the appointment would be made. Mr. Herff wanted the consul-generalship to Havana, a position worth $12,000 to $15,000 a year. Where he will go is not known, but the Cairo (Egypt) consul-generalship is mentioned as the place he may get.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 11.

Con Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, formerly of Indianapolis, has filed his application for the Belfast consulate.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

C. W. Cunningham, a Crawfordsville merchant, has been here several days. He came over from New York with "Gil" Shanklin, and has been keeping pretty quiet until yesterday, when he confided to some of his friends his ambition to be consul to Glasgow.

C. W. Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, is securing signatures to a petition to be appointed consul to Belfast.—Indianapolis Journal, March 23.

C. W. Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, has not given up his designs on a consulship. He arrived here yesterday, and was taken up to the White House by the senators this morning.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 5.

The candidacy of Cornelius Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, for the position of consul of Belfast, Ireland, and the fair chance he has of winning, is causing the democracy of Montgomery county to growl quite angrily. It was noticed that he was rather quiet during the last campaign, but when a couple of months ago he sold his stores and announced himself as a candidate for the consulate at Belfast, the triumphant democracy bade him God speed, and Congressman Brookshire, Senator Voorhees, John Lamb, Gil Shanklin, and others promised him their influence.

It had been whispered about for some time that the loyalty of Cornelius to Jeffersonian principles was questionable, to say the least, and the republicans laughed loudly as they boasted of Cunningham's offers to sell out last summer. John Johnson, ex-county recorder and a prominent Irish republican, has taken peculiar delight in spreading the good news and relating his own personal experiences and chats with the candidate for the Belfast mission. The most reliable charge, however, is one that comes from John S. Brown. He is one of the most prominent republicans in the state, and naturally when Mr. Cunningham felt a little shaky last summer in his faith, he could settle upon no better father-confessor than Mr. Brown. Mr. Cunningham stated that he had, through reading and observation, been converted to the principles of the republican party, and intended to vote for Harrison. He also intended to bring with him into the fold twenty heretofore staunch democrats. He desired some recognition for all this, however, and wanted Mr. Brown's assurance that in case victory alighted on the banner of the republican party that he would receive the district's indorsement for the position he now seeks from Cleveland.—Crawfordsville Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 27.

Those who know B. D. L. Glazebrook, doorkeeper of the last house of representatives, will be surprised to learn that he aspires to represent the government in the consular service. He is not particular where the position may be so long as he gets it.

Three judges of the supreme court—Howard, McCabe and Hackney—recommended him in a letter to the President as "a young man of ability and splendid morals." Governor Matthews also writes a letter for him, in which he testifies to his fitness for a place in the consular service. Ed Hawkins, president of the board of public safety, indorses him as "a sterling young democrat of northern Indiana, with influence." Oscar Henderson drops in line also, with a testimonial as to the applicant's ability. Other prominent democrats do likewise.

Glazebrook has been an office-seeker ever since he arrived at age. He is only about thirty years old now, and has already held one or two government positions, besides being given other places by his party.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 9.

It seems that an injustice has been done in the intimation that Doorkeeper Glazebrook is a chronic office-holder. With the exception of the legislative office of doorkeeper, he has held but one public office. He was in the railway mail service during the last half of President Cleveland's first term. Mr. Glazebrook carries with him to Washington a lot of as fine indorsements as were ever taken by any man from Indiana.—Indianapolis Sentinel March 10.

Ex-Doorkeeper Glazebrook of the late lamented house has arrived. He has not made up his mind what he wants.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

Ex-Doorkeeper Glazebrook of the Indiana house has selected his post. After consulting the Blue Book he decided to apply for the consulate at Buenos Ayers, Argentine Republic. The office is worth $5,000.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 13.

Ex-Doorkeeper Glazebrook was relieved of his pocketbook last night. Since the inauguration the city has been full of sneak thieves, and Glazebrook is not the sole victim.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 15.

Ex-Doorkeeper Glazebrook, of Starke county, announced to his friends to-day that he had "a dead cinch" on the Buenos Ayres consulate. Mr. Glazebrook has certainly been sleeping on his office ever since he came here, for he has not lost sight of it.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, Mar. 17.

Senator Voorhees introduced P. F. Glazebrook, of Indiana, a candidate for consul to Buenos Ayres, to the President to-day.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 25.

Glazebrook, of Stark county, has not used his toboggan yet, and is still sticking for Buenos Ayres.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 28.

P. F. Glazebrook lacks none of the staying qualities that are said to be essential to political success. He is bringing every influence possible to bear on the White House.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 31.

One of the most persistent office-seekers is

B. D. L. Glazebrook, late doorkeeper of the lower house of the legislature. After the legislature adjourned he concluded he wanted more of public life, and wanted to go to Washington to urge his claims. He had no money when he left this city, and would have been embarrassed about his board bill at the hotel if some friend had not stood good for it. But he managed to raise $30, and he started for Washington. He had $15 when he arrived there, but took a carriage, as bigger politicians with no more money have been known to do, and drove to the Arlington, the headquarters for the time of the administration leaders. The terms were $6 a day, but he did not care for that. "That the way to do!" he confided to a friend. "You have got to put on style in Washington. The Arlington is where the big fellows stop, and they take notice of who is there."

Glazebrook staid there two days. Of course he was by this time nearly broke. Then came the old story. He announced that he had been robbed, and on the strength of that borrowed $40 of his congressman, Conn. He soon ran out of money again, and was making no progress in getting an office. He telegraphed his father at LaPorte to send him some money in care of a certain bank. Day after day he called at the bank for some response, but he was as regularly disappointed. He finally telegraphed his father that he was appointed and must have some money. His answer was a telegram, which he opened expectantly. All it contained was: "Congratulations." The ruse had not worked, but at last accounts he was in Washington, still in the same quest of office.—Indianapolis Journal, April 1.

Senator Voorhees has asked the President to remove the consul at Buenos Ayres and appoint Ex-Doorkeeper Glazebrook, of Indiana. The President said he would think about it. "There are a great many applicants for the South American consulships," said he.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 5.

Glazebrook has been the most persistent office-seeker from Indiana, and he thinks he has made himself solid with the administration by abusing newspaper men here as well as in Indianapolis. The Buenos Ayres consulate is the most important in South America, and it has been filled by Baker for thirteen years. It requires a man of cool judgment and ability to fill the place. Baker, who is an old newspaper man, has been kept chiefly for his graphic reports on the resources and progress of the country, yet Glazebrook, whose only experience outside of a drug store has been as a postal clerk and doorkeeper of the Indiana house, has been indorsed by all the state officers, judges, members of the legislature, as a man eminently qualified to fill any position in the gift of the President. It is also true that some of his indorsers have written the President that their indorsements were given because they understood such documents don't count, anyway.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 11.

MISCELLANEOUS.

There is quite a lively fight on for the Ft. Wayne post-office between Col. W. W. Rockhill, of the Ft. Wayne Journal, and M. V. B. Spencer.—Indianapolis News, March 13.

County Chairman Merrill will be appointed postmaster of Connersville. Editor Hicks, of the Examiner, being an "ex," is out of it.

Editor McKillop, of the Herald, will be postmaster of Muncie. He was county chairman and is entitled to the place on account of his telling service to the party of Delaware county.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 11.

* * *

There is a story related among the democratic politicians of Indiana, which gives much encouragement to the original Cleveland men. The story is to the effect that the appointment of Gray to the Mexican mission does not mean that the President intends to allow the Gray-Voorhees-Matthews wing of the party to control the patronage in Indiana. The appointment of Gray, it is said, is the fulfillment of a contract made at the Chicago nominating convention by ex-Secretary Whitney. According to the story, the contract was made with Gray by Whitney without Mr. Cleveland's knowledge or consent, but that the President, much as he disliked to appoint Gray, could not well fail to fulfill the agreement entered into by his manager at Chicago. It is said that before the Indiana delegation in the convention agreed to vote solidly for Cleveland, there was an express understanding with Mr. Gray's friends on the delegation that the ex-Governor was to be well taken care of by the administration in case he failed to secure the nomination for vice-president, and in the event of Cleveland's election. It is further told that to make certain that the agreement was to be kept, Mr. Gray visited Gray Gables before he raised his voice for Mr. Cleveland.—Indianapolis News, March 13.

* * *

Editor Shanklin, of Evansville, who was so enraged yesterday at ex-Governor Gray's appointment, has postponed his departure for home, and will take a leading part in the hunt for spoils. In discussing the Gray appointment to-day, he said: "It is a humiliation, because Gray does not represent in any sense the democrats of a state which cast its electoral vote against one of its own sons in favor of Mr. Cleveland, of New York. He was not a Cleveland man, is not now, and will never be. I am, and the people for whom I am speaking, have been constant supporters of the man who will be our executive for the next four years.—Washington Dispatch to Buffalo Express, March 11.

NEPOTISM.

Vice-President Stevenson, made his son his private secretary.

Secretary Carlisle to-day appointed his son, Logan Carlisle, chief clerk of the treasury department, vice Stocks, resigned.

Senator Peffer has appointed his daughter clerk of the civil service committee of which he is chairman.

James S. Ewing, minister to Belgium.

[April 6.—Vice-President Stevenson was very much pleased over the appointment of Mr. Ewing, for he is his law partner at Bloomington. Mr. Ewing is about forty-five years of age, and has long been an active democrat. He is a cousin of the vice-president. Mr. Ewing was originally a candidate for a judgeship in Illinois, but surrendered that ambition when he discovered that the President desired to give him a foreign mission.—New York Times.]

Senator Voorhees has appointed his son, James P. Voorhees, clerk of the senate committee on finance.

[The appointment by Senator Voorhees of his son "Jim" as clerk to the committee on finance, was something of a surprise. It was said, a few days ago, that Chestner Faulkner, a protege of the senator who was formerly chief of the record division of the pension office, would be named for the place. It is said that "Judge" Faulkner will have a position with the committee. In addition to the clerk will be an assistant clerk and a messenger to be appointed. The salary of young Voorhees's position is $2,500 a year. It has been held under the republican organization of the senate by Benjamin Durfee, an authority on the tariff schedule.—Indianapolis News, March 16.]

Senators Cockerell, Blackburn, Pugh, Morgan, Vance, Mills and Harris removed experienced clerks to give their places on the senate committees, of which they are chairman, to their sons. Cockerell's son was clerk of his father's committee at the same time that his name appeared in the catalogue of Harvard college as one of its students. Senator Palmer made his daughter private secretary, at six dollars per day.—South West, March 24.

R. W. Springer, son of Chairman Springer, of Illinois, was clerk of the committee on ways and means, at $3,000 a year; B. A. Enloe, son of Chairman Enloe, of Tennessee, was clerk to the committee on education; B. U. Stump, son of Chairman Stump, of Maryland, was clerk of the committee on immigration and naturalization; the son of Chairman Peel, of Arkansas, was clerk of the committee on Indian affairs; the brother of Chairman Wise, of Virginia, was clerk to the interstate commerce committee; the son of Chairman Reilly, of Pennsylvania, was clerk of the committee on Pacific railways; the son of Chairman Tilman, of South Carolina, was clerk of the committee on patents; the son of Chairman Bankhead, of Alabama, was clerk of the committee on public buildings and grounds; the son of Chairman Catchings, of Mississippi, was clerk of the committee on railways and canals. Each one of these committee clerks drew $2,000 a year. The son of Speaker Crisp held a clerkship in the house at $2,200, and the brother of the sergeant-at-arms of the house held a $3,000 position.—Indianapolis Journal.

Asa Dickinson, brother of Confidential Messenger Don Dickinson, consul to Nottingham.

James Blackburn, of Kentucky, brother of Senator Blackburn, United States marshal. Eight years ago Mr. Cleveland deemed Blackburn unfit for the same office and refused to appoint him.

John Tracey, of New York, brother of Representative Charles Tracey, superintendent of charities for the District of Columbia.

John E. Risley, of New York, brother-in-law of Senator Voorhees, minister to Denmark.

James McKenzie, of Kentucky, cousin of Vice-President Stevenson, minister to Peru.

Newton B. Eustis, of Louisiana, son of Ambassador Eustis, second secretary of Legation at Paris.—Buffalo Express.

Seth Shepard, of Texas, nominated to be associate justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, was delegate at large at the Chicago convention.

James A. McKenzie, of Kentucky, who goes as minister to Peru, has been a delegate to the last two national democratic conventions. It was McKenzie who made the celebrated humorous speech at the St. Louis convention, wherein he likened Cleveland to a thoroughbred Kentucky racehorse ready for victory. At the Chicago convention he broke away from Henry Watterson's lead, and by another timely and funny speech carried a number of his fellow-delegates from Kentucky over to the Cleveland line.—New York Times, March 31.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

The interference of senators and representatives with nominations and minor appointments in the civil service is not only without constitutional warrant, but it is an indecent and dangerous confusion of two functions which the constitution carefully keeps distinct. The senator or representative who makes himself an office broker, to pay his own parasites from the public purse, should stand well exposed in the pillory of public contempt, and by reason of such interference should forfeit the respect of the country and the confidence and support of his constituency.—George William Curtis.

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of these United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional demands as the rule by which my official conditions must be guided.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us constrain me to remind those with whom I am to co-operate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused, and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.—President's Inaugural.

COOPER'S DOMAIN.

Editor A. Allison of the Nashville Democrat was appointed postmaster to-day at the request of Congressman Cooper. To-morrow the ax will fall on sixty republican postmasters in the first and second districts.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 23.

There were many surprised democrats in Spencer when it was announced that the appointment of postmaster had been made for this place, as it was not expected for some time yet. In fact, three remonstrances were being circulated against O. T. Dickerson, the choice of G. W. Cooper, which over one-half of the democratic patrons of the office had signed. Dickerson heard of the effort being made against him, and telegraphed Mr. Cooper, who hastened the appointment.—Spencer Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 5.

The appointment of Isaac Holton as postmaster at Plainfield is one to be commended. Mr. Holton is a good business man, and from a party standpoint he had well earned the office.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 13.

[Readers are referred to the December and succeeding numbers of the CHRONICLE for further information regarding these appointments. Harris, Allison, Dickerson and Holton were Cooper's "men" and Cooper, in spite of the protests of a large number of democrats claimed his right to name their postmaster, and he has done so.]—Editor of Chronicle.

The fight for the postmastership of this city has broken out again, and threatens to be more fierce than ever before. For a time after Congressman Cooper had publicly given out that George E. Finney, an ex-editor, who held the office during Cleveland's first term, should have the office again, there was a great stir among the other applicants for the place, and Mr. Cooper was publicly denounced. Now that the President's no-reappointment rule shuts out Mr. Finney, the strife for the place has become more fierce than ever. Publicly advertised meetings have been held, at which communications were read demanding, in very emphatic terms, that Mr. Cooper allowed an election to be held to determine who shall be postmaster.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 20.

Two hundred democrats held a public meeting at the court-house last night to "agree upon some plan to select a postmaster," and to receive a report from a committee deputed by a former meeting to wait upon Congressman Cooper and demand of him that he shall appoint, or recommend, whom the democrats select.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 21.

The democrats of this city are greatly stirred up over the matter of the appointment of a postmaster. Congressman Cooper has pledged himself to the man who held the position four years ago. He left for Washington Monday, and will see President Cleveland in regard to the rule that no ex-postmasters are eligible for reappointment.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 22.

For three months past the democrats here have been clamoring for a primary election in order that the masses, as well as the party bosses could have a voice in the selection of a man for postmaster. The plan was strenuously opposed by the Daily Dispatch, the party organ, the editor, C. H. Havens, being himself a candidate and unwilling to go into a contest for the place at an election. Last Friday petitions containing the names of three hundred representative democrats were presented to Capt. M. W. Barnes, and he, in his capacity of central committee chairman, issued a call for a primary to take place March 25. Accordingly, the election will be held Saturday. To-day a paper signed by fifty prominent democrats, was presented to the Dispatch, protesting against the course of the paper in opposing a popular expression from the patrons of the office. The bitterness is growing every hour, and the election will but add fuel to the flames.—Kokomo Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 23.

The post-office election in this city Saturday puts the local democrats in a strikingly peculiar position. Charles H. Leach, who won at the primary, is an old soldier, a good man, and out of a total vote of 886, with six candidates he secured 463 votes, or a clear majority of 40 over all his competitors. Havens declined to go into the primary. Havens has the indorsement of Senators Voorhees and Turpie.—Kokomo Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 28.

Harris, who was appointed by the President, postmaster of Franklin, is the chairman of Johnson county. He was recommended by Congressman Cooper.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 25.

Congressman Cooper has written a letter here that President Cleveland has refused to entertain the nomination and appointment of Capt. G. E. Finney as postmaster, for the reason that Mr. Finney was postmaster four years ago.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 30.

[Yet Congressman Bynum has just re-appointed three of his old postmasters.]

Kokomo is in the throes of a "post-office election." The movement is opposed by a number of leading democrats, and it has the hearty disapproval of the democratic newspaper organ, the Dispatch. The primary plan was suggested several weeks ago, and the advice of Senators Voorhees and Turpie asked. They answered, in effect, that all applications would receive due consideration, primary or no primary. This settled the matter until the appointment of Dale Crittenberger at Anderson. Crittenberger's father-in-law resigned in his favor, and the aspirants for the Kokomo office feared a like coup de etat here. C. H. Havens, who has had the editorial management of the Kokomo Dispatch, is said to be seeking the place. His father-in-law is the present incumbent of the post-office.—Kokomo Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 21.

Congressman Cooper has made the following nominations for postmasters:

Morton, A. V. Thomas; Roachdale, John Dodd; Ellettsville, J. E. Steele; Whiteland, J. F. Tracy; Stinesville, G. B. Easton; Hall, Dr. A. S. Tilford; Bean Blossom, Wm. Crosser; Beek's Grove, Andrew A. Manuel; Spearsville, E. E. Urich; Mt. Liberty, W. H. Seitz; Freedom, James H. Courim; Hartsville, John W. Bline; Morgantown, George M. Montgomery; Gosport, Clinton L. Wampler; Mooresville, James H. Bayliss; Raceoon, J. F. Shannon; Alaska, A. H. Seerest; Waverly, Samuel —; Hazlewood, E. V. Millan; North Salem, Wm. W. Hoeker; Ninevah, Addison M. Dunham; Trafalgar, Cary J. Slack; Cartersburg, Thomas A. Prewitt; Clifford, John F. Heyworth; Brownsburg, W. A. Enliss; Catawaet, Miss Levina Meek; Clayton, Henry Johnson; Taylorsville, George W. Cook; Elizabethtown, Phillip J. Sater; Bainbridge, Milroy Gordon; Clear Creek, George C. Wingfield; Mt. Clair, Morton Ellis; Victor, John W. Whitaker; Unionville, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Kerr; Romona, Sidney S. Bryant; Barnard, Noah H. Barlett; Kirksville, Joseph W. Crane; Reelsville, Wm. Poster; Bellunion, James M. Hurst; Needmore, John C. Chitwood; Cleona, Wm. Cook; Nashville, Alonzo Allison; Fincastle, Mrs. Era Edwards; Kinder, F. M. Kiphart; Samaria, C. L. Paris; Smith's Valley, Wm. L. Rush; Pittsboro, V. D. Richardson; Eminence, John R. Mannan; Mead, George L. Craven; Stone's Crossing, Albert Browning; Brooklyn, Levin H. Gamble; Friendswood, Frederick V. Beeler; Landersdale, John W. Park; Ramelton, James A. Mead; Hope, E. A. Norman; Rocklane, E. A. Shipp; Cloverdale, W. E. Horn; Smithville, Theodore Thrasher; Portland Mills, Fay Hamilton; Alaska, Arthur H. Secrest; Mt. Meridian, Wm. Hurst; Dolan, Wm. Smith; Amo, John W. Newman.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 4.

Dalton Wilson has been appointed postmaster of Greenwood, at the request of Mr. Cooper.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 6.

Congressman Cooper has secured the removal of Philip King, superintendent of the pension office building.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 15.

BROOKSHIRE'S DOMAIN.

Congressman Brookshire has settled eighty postmasterships in his district. During the last ten days he has devoted his entire time to the consideration of the applications.

Mr. Brookshire is just recovering from a bad case of the grip. Had it not been for this illness he would have visited each important town of his district to settle the post-offices on the ground.

Following is a list of the post-offices, and the names of the candidates he will recommend for appointment:

Clay County—Matt Jones, Ashboro; J. W. Sutton, Martz; Scott Inge, Knightsville; John Schoer, Poland; Mrs. Clarissa Varsley, Cloverland, C. G. McClintock, Staunton; Thomas Anderson, Carbon; N. H. Vego, Perth; Lewis McCullough, Asherville; Wm. McCullough, Center Point; Richard Gantz, Saline City; John S. Stongh, Brazil; Wm. Folsom, Bowling Green; Frederick Mackel, Turner; R. J. Hill, Harmony; D. W. V. Morton, Cardonia; Esau Bolin, Hoosierville; F. A. Staggs, Cory.

Vermillion County—John Cade, Gessie; David M. McDonald, Cayuga; Frank H. Munson, Newport; H. A. Sturm, Eugene; John W. Winterwood, Hillsdale; John L. Smith, Dana; O. N. Ayres, St. Bernice; Wm. Bebefel, Perryville.

Fountain County—H. J. Davidson, Hillsboro; J. W. Shuster, Stone Bluff; Monroe Barker, Yeddo; S. D. Alexander, Kingman; W. R. Etchison, Coal Creek; Mrs. Ellen Basham, Wallace; C. H. Quinn, Newtown.

Montgomery County—John E. Talbott, Ladoga; John Adams, jr., Parkersburg; Miss Jennie Sweeny, Yountsville; John W. McCordle, New Richmond; J. W. Kirkpatrick, Kirkpatrick; Charles McBee, Linden; Henry D. Serves, New Market; R. C. Cording, Wingate, Isaac Woodard, Bowers.

Parke County—Mrs. Anna White, Lena; Ellis Branson, Milligan; R. R. Pence, Catlin; J. C. Vickory, Bloomingdale; Frank Randolph, Waterman; Thomas Trump, Marshall; Norvil Hamilton, Bellmore; Geo. Kemp, Montezuma; L. B. Humphries, Rockville.

Vigo County—W. A. Michaels, St. Marys; Jessie S. Harrold, Lewis; B. H. Gallagher, Fonntnette; A. F. Miller, Macksville; R. H. Modisett, Seelyville; Chas. J. Asperger, Riley; James Hauger, Prairie Creek; Wm. Hansell, New Goshen; Edward Davis, Coal Bluff; Zina Doty, Burnett.

Sullivan County—Miss Minnie Duncan, New Lebanon; J. K. McClain, Farmersburg; Dora Beckett, Hymera; Harry Conkle, Farnsworth; Albert Gilmore, Pleasantville; Owen Kissner, Fairbanks; Robert Gambill, Allen Cave; W. H. Burks, Sullivan; W. C. Watson, Paxton; W. F. Latshaw, Carlisle; Mrs. Sadie McKissick, Dugger; W. L. Hunt, Meron; Wm. H. McGrew, Case; E. G. Carithers, Graysville; H. V. Stark, Shelburn.

The postmaster of Terre Haute will be named by Senator Voorhees. It is the custom to allow a U. S. Senator to name the postmaster of his own city.

Mr. Brookshire has not yet decided whom he will recommend for Covington, Attica, Crawfordsville and Clinton—all presidential offices. In Clay city a democrat was appointed by Harrison during the last days of his administration, and there is a strong effort made on the part of the local democrats to have him sustained by a democrat of Cleveland's choice.

Mr. Brookshire says that he will file all the applications, together with letters of indorsements and petitions, but will also file his own recommendation. Thus far the member's recommendation has not been overruled.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 31.

Representative Brookshire, who has been confined to his room at the National for several days with the grip, came out to-day and made the rounds of the departments in the interest of his office-seeking friends.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 2.

BRETZ'S DOMAIN.

A letter has been received from Congressman Bretz, stating that he has indorsed the application of John W. McCarty for postmaster of this city. McCarty is chairman of the county democratic central committee.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News.

About three months ago Congressman Bretz named the man that he would recommend for postmaster here, but since Cleveland's statement that he considered an election a good recommendation for appointment, application was made to Bretz to let the matter be settled by an election. He refused, and now the matter will be carried to the postmaster-general for decision.—Mitchell Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 29.

Miss Lois Buskirk has been recommended by Congressman Bretz for postmaster of Paoli. She is the daughter of Tom Buskirk. [Candidate for U. S. Marshal and failed.]—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

The announcement in Friday's Journal of the appointment of A. C. Hacker as postmaster at this point, and A. T. Ackerman at Loogootee, the two principal post-offices of Martin county, though not wholly unexpected, has created a great hubbub in the camp of the local democracy. The appointments are condemned in unmeasured terms by the better element of the party, and Congressman Bretz is being roundly denounced by the leaders. At Shoals Fabius Gwin, a popular and sterling young democrat, who has ever been an active and ardent champion of the party, and who has been giving the best of satisfaction as an officer, is displaced to make room for the above appointee, who for the past few years has been the editor of the News, the democratic official county organ.

At Loogootee the successful applicant is even more obnoxious, he being an ex-saloon keeper, who for many years, until the past few weeks, has been running a dram show continuously.—Shoals Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 3.

The appointment to-day of democratic postmasters for Marion and Vincennes, caused some rejoicing among democrats here, because in both cases the republican postmasters were removed. These two appointments indicate the policy of the administration next January. Hawkins, who was appointed postmaster for Marion upon Mr. Martin's recommendation, was chairman of the Grant county democratic committee in the last campaign. He is a man of business capacity. Purcell who secured the Vincennes office through Mr. Bretz, is editor of the Vincennes Sun, the oldest paper in the state.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 31.

In the second district Congressman Bretz has settled a number of post-offices. For Bedford he will recommend John Johnson of the Democrat; for Vincennes, R. E. Purcell of the Sun; Mitchell, T. J. Dilley; Worthington, Mr. Wilson, who is in the grocery business; Linton, a Mr. Beasley, and Jasper, Charles Egg.

Huntington has not been settled. Capt. Fisher, Ed. Pickhardt of the News, and Frank Burns are the candidates, with the chances in favor of Pickhardt. At Paoli, Dave Murr of the News, and John Pro are the candidates. James Frost for Orleans has been selected by Mr. Bretz.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

The following physicians were appointed medical examiners to-day upon the recommendation of Congressman Bretz: [Here follows list of 15.]—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 1.

Congressman Bretz has appointed A. C. Hacker, editor of the Democrat, postmaster at Shoals.

TAYLOR'S DOMAIN.

Leonoy Wade of Posey county seems to have a "cinch" on one of the assistant generalships of the department of justice. He is backed by Congressman Taylor and two senators. Indianapolis Sentinel, March 24.

Congressman Taylor of Indiana, has filed the application of Thomas Fuller, of Barnesville, for seal agent to Alaska, also that of Dr. W. Fritsch, of Evansville, for consul at Frankfurt.—Indianapolis News, March 24.

Congressman Taylor has not settled all the post-offices in his district. Two of the presidential offices, Tell City and Cannelton have already been filled. Philip Zoercher of the Tell City News is the new postmaster of his city, and Albert A. May will be appointed for Cannelton. For Evansville he has recommended John J. Nolan, who was a member of the legislature of 1889 and 1891.

Mt. Vernon has four candidates. John C. Leffel of the Star, A. A. Sparks of the Democrat, Silas Jones and Connty Chairman Harlan. Mr. Taylor will recommend Harlan. Poseyville has two candidates, J. Haynes of the News and A. R. Trenor. New Harmony held an election, and Wm. Richards was nominated by a large majority, but they are petitioning against the appointment. For the Princeton office are Dr. A. R. Burton, A. W. Lego, W. H. Evans, O. M. Knobb and Thomas Nichols. At Oakland City, Lewis Deltch, Mr. Phillips who keeps the Phillips Hotel, George Mayo, Green Brashire and Martha Robinson are the applicants. At Petersburg, Thomas K. Fleming, Dan C. Ashley, Perry Chapple, Milton Mitchell and O. R. Patterson. At Boonville, Francis D. Sches, Thomas B. Thel, Robert Taylor and Griffith Taylor. At Rockport, George Pracusky, John Nester and Mrs. Conin.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 31.

Congressman Taylor went to the White House this morning, and afterward to the department of justice accompanied by judge E. A. Ely, of Petersburg. Judge Ely comes from Congressman Taylor's home town. He was entered in the race for a territorial judgeship, either of Arizona or Oklahoma.—Indianapolis News, April 1.

In the First district Congressman Taylor secured the appointments of Drs. Hutchinson, Lomax and Clothe for Perry county, and as pension examiners for Warrick Drs. McVey, Tucker and Guyatt. They are all democrats.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 7.

If Representative Taylor, the new member from Petersburg, Ind., representing the First district, is not careful he will have more applicants for office on his hands than he can well take care of. His list, large as it is, has so far been anything but a mascot, and plums do not seem to be dropping into his hands. To-day he comes to the front with another lot. Among them is Dr. Wm. A. Fritch, of Evansville, who wants to be consul to Stuttgart. Mr. T. W. Venneman, also of Evansville, is another applicant for office who appears to be well qualified. He wants to be one of the board of Mississippi river commission. He has been connected with the river service for the past thirty years, and is now the president of the water ways commission. Another newcomer, fresh from Indiana and in search of office, with a record behind him which would do credit to any man, is Capt. John J. Sinzicuh, also of Evansville. Capt. Sinzicuh is a candidate for supervising inspector of steamboats for the Sixth district.—Washington Dispatch to Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, April 10.

Congressman Taylor, of the First Indiana congressional district, has secured the appointment of the following medical pension examiners, all democrats:

Gibson County—Drs. M. W. French of Ft. Branch; G. P. Powell, of Princeton, and George Strickland, of Francisco.

Spencer County—Drs. Molasky, Hackleman and Curry.

Three county boards remain yet to be changed in the First district. They are Vanderburg, Posey and Pike. They will be reorganized soon.

Congressman Taylor will secure the removal of Postmaster Stokes Bennett, of Evansville, in a few days, and the appointment of the Hon. "Jack" Nolan in his stead.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 12.

BYNUM'S DOMAIN.

It is stated that Congressman Bynum, who wants to act with the greatest circumspection in his recommendation of an appointee for the office of collector of customs, will return to the city soon and take up the matter. He hopes to nominate a collector without stirring up any more ill feeling than is now manifesting itself about other appointments.—Indianapolis News, March 23.

Mr. Bynum has made the following recommendations for postmasters: Alfonte, Samuel Denton; Carrollton, Asa Hutton; New Palestine, Sophia Mitchell; New Augusta, George Avery. Avery was appointed to-day.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

Romeo L. Depuy, the ex-laundryman of Indianapolis, was to-day appointed chief of the eastern division of the pension office, to succeed Captain Wilhite, of Crawfordsville, removed. Depuy was recommended by Representative Bynum.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 31.

Congressman Bynum, who returned to the city yesterday, called at the White House this morning. "I just stepped in to see if things had been running all right during my absence," said he. The Indianapolis congressman was alone.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 4.

Irwin Dickson of Indianapolis came here a week ago to accept a position which Congressman Bynum had secured for him—treasury watchman. Dickson went home last night and will return his commission as soon as he reaches Indiana. He is a one-legged soldier and draws a pension of $40 a month. He owns two houses and lives in one. His salary here was $55 a month, which would have paid house rent with but $15 surplus. He concluded he could save more by remaining at home in his own house and live on his pension money.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 8.

Congressman Bynum arrived from Washington yesterday afternoon. He will spend this week, and perhaps a part of next, in his district consulting with constituents as to merits of the many candidates for federal office. The special object is to gather information that will enable him to make up his list of candidates for postmasters intelligently. Mr. Bynum went to Anderson to-day, and will spend three or four days in the eastern part of the district. He says it is his desire to ascertain what the local sentiment is in each town, and to follow it in making recommendations.

Yesterday afternoon and last night Mr. Bynum had many callers at the Grand Hotel. Albert Sahm, who is booked for the Indianapolis post-office, spent some time with him, but Mr. Sahm says that the Indianapolis post-office was not mentioned during the conference. It is the understanding that Mr. Bynum has consented that Senator Turpie shall name the Indianapolis postmaster, but the congressman, it is said, is willing to second the request of Senator Turpie that Mr. Sahm be appointed.—Indianapolis News, April 16.

Congressman Bynum is in Madison county, looking after the fourth-class postmasters in that district. He is very anxious, it is said, to build up a following which will steer him over the shoals of a renomination two years hence.—Indianapolis Journal, April 12.

Congressman Bynum found it necessary to-day to flee from the office-seekers. It was almost noon yesterday when he wrote his name in the Grand hotel register, and from that time until after midnight he did not have a moment's rest. It is estimated that not less than two hundred persons called on him in the interest of themselves or some one else. About half of the callers wanted places in the departments at Washington; the others wanted post-offices, or recommendations for positions under the chief federal officers in this state. This morning Mr. Bynum said to some of his friends that he could not endure the pressure. During the afternoon he took a train for Greenfield, where he will remain two or three days considering the applications for post-offices in Hancock county.

Congressman Bynum has had a hundred callers a day at the Grand Hotel. Among them was Dr. Joseph D. Youart, who wants to be a member of the pension examining board. Youart says he "made it possible for Bynum to secure the nomination for Congress the first time."

Mr. Bynum has, so far as it is possible for him to do so, settled one question of interest to those concerned. The Irvington post-office through several administrations has been in the hands of George W. Russell, republican. He is an applicant for reappointment, and has the support of George W. Julian and other influential democrats, as well, of course, as of republicans. Dr. Dougherty, physician and druggist in the suburb, also applied for the post-office. Dr. Long and other democrats obtained signatures to a petition in Dougherty's behalf, which, together with democratic argument, was sent to Bynum. Russell's friends used the wire effectively, they hoped, and made a plea that, on civil service principles and because there had never been politics in the office, Russell ought to be retained. A third candidate also appeared, and the entire community took sides. No small affair has recently given the suburb so much more or less good-natured concern.

"Have you settled the question as to who is to be postmaster at Irvington?" Mr. Bynum was asked to-day, as he wearily opened one of many letters. The congressman looked over the spectacles to which he has been driven by stress of service in behalf of applicants, and said, decidedly:

"Yes, it is settled. The post-office will go to Dougherty. There was nothing else to do."—Indianapolis News, April 13.

Congressman Bynum is in town, and is besieged by office-seekers and friends at the Grand Hotel, having just returned from a short trip to Madison county. When asked what had been the object of his trip, he said: "Well, I am looking after the appointment of postmasters, though I can't say that anything of importance has been done as yet. I am just making a survey of the situation, so as to know better what is expected. I go from here to Hancock county to continue my survey, and may have something more interesting to say on my return," concluded Mr. Bynum.—Indianapolis Sentinel, April 14.

In the March CHRONICLE was a partial list of Bynum's intended postmasters. Since then the post-office department has made official his choice at Acton, Southport, and Charlottesville.

MARTIN'S DOMAIN.

A few days ago Congressman Martin wired John Young, of Huntington, that he had been appointed state agent of the agricultural department by Secretary Morton; the next day Congressman McNagney also wired Argo, of Ft. Wayne, that he had been appointed to the same place. Both claimed that Secretary Morton directed his chief clerk to issue the commission to their respective candidates in their presence. An investigation shows that no commission has been issued. Mr. Morton admits that he promised both men, but under misapprehension, and that he must recall his promises and reconsider the whole matter. As it stands now Young is indorsed by Voorhees and Martin, Argo by Turpie and McNagney.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 31.

The controversy that has been going on for a month between Messrs. McNagney, of the Fort Wayne district, and Martin, of the Bluffton district, for the control of the state agent of the agricultural department, was settled to day by the senators. N. E. Argo, of Allen, Congressman McNagney's man, was appointed, and John Young, of Huntington, Congressman Martin's man, was given a job at Hammond as beef inspector, at $1,200 a year. Argo will receive $900, but will have nothing to do but guess at the condition of the crop and send a report accordingly.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 6.

Congressman Martin has appointed C. M. Hawkins, chairman of the democratic county committee, postmaster at Marion.

Congressman Martin said this morning that he expected Jerome Herff to be named for some good consulship this week.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 12.

HOLMAN'S DOMAIN.

Judge Holman said to-day that if John G. Shanklin would accept the position of Mississippi river commissioner, he could undoubtedly secure the appointment. "To my mind," said Judge Holman, "the Mississippi river commission is the greatest official snap going. The salary is $5,000 a year and it involves no labor to speak of. For my part I have been in favor of abolishing it. But, if Mr. Shanklin wants the office he certainly can get it and I don't see why he should not draw the salary as well as anybody else so long as the commission is to be maintained."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 7.

Judge Holman has not acquiesced in the movement to appoint O. A. Packard, of Plymouth, bank examiner.—Indianapolis News, April 8.

Rumors of a new arrangement of the political slate, particularly on bank examiner for Indiana, has brought O. M. Packard, of Plymouth, to the capital, and he has been trying to strengthen his indorsements. He already has the two senators and a majority of the representatives, and it is believed he will get the appointment, although Congressman Holman still thinks that cashier Pugh, of the Rush county bank, has a fighting chance.—Indianapolis News, April 13.

S. K. Gold, of Dearborn county, is here. He says he wants nothing, but the fact that he has been hobnobbing with Congressman Holman and other Indiana statesmen looks suspicious. Gold wants something.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 7.

S. K. Gold, of Dearborn county, returned home with his wife to-day. He was offered a $1,200 office in the treasury department through the influence of Congressman Holman. Gold declined, as he could not support his family on such a salary.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 11.

Congressman Holman has made the following recommendations for medical examining boards: Rush county, Drs. Megee, Smith and Hacklemen; Ripley county, Drs. Roberts, Anderson and Abbott; Dearborn county, Drs. Gatch, Rectamns and Freeland.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 15.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Yesterday Congressman Conn was informed by Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell that letters of recommendation and petitions must accompany the congressman's indorsement for the appointment of postmasters. Mr. Conn had previously filed with the department his own recommendation for postmasters, but not the indorsement of the patrons of the offices. He was then given to understand that the congressmen would settle every post-office contest. To-day Maxwell informed Conn that under no consideration would the recommendation of the congressman be final. Conn replied that he could not afford to make recommendations and then be turned under; that if he could not have the influence to name a fourth-class postmaster he would make no recommendations whatever. In three cases postmasters have been appointed in Indiana lately where the congressman had recommended some one else. This new rule which Conn has just discovered is not to the liking of congressmen.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 16.

Henry C. Paul and John Peters, of Fort Wayne, were here to-day in consultation with Representative McNagney over the Fort Wayne postmastership. There is a serious hitch over this place. Two or three men are demanding it, and say they will have nothing else. Each one has strong claims. It is believed here that the editor of the Fort Wayne Journal will get it, although ex-Pension Agent Zollinger's friends believe he is a sure winner.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 12.

The Hon. Jason B. Brown arrived home yesterday from Washington City, and is looking unusually well considering the vast amount of arduous labor performed by him since the adjournment of congress.—Seymour Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 8.

OVERLORDS VOORHEES AND TURPIE.

This morning a grand rush was made on the White House. Senators Voorhees and Turpie and Congressmen McNagney and Martin took Colonel Zollinger, of Ft. Wayne; Dr. Chitwood, of Connersville, and Judge Lowry, of Ft. Wagne, to the White House and introduced them to the President. Judge Lowry has been here for nearly a month. It was rather amusing to witness the way in which Judge Lowry got ahead of another office-seeker this morning, who wanted to get in the White House. A well-known Hoosier who is a candidate for a consulship, and has been hanging on to Washington for several weeks, had an engagement with the two senators and one congressman to take him up to the White House, and present him to the President. He wanted to go alone with the members of the delegation, because he thought it would have more effect than if he came in company with a number of other office-seekers. Last night he quietly went around and made engagements to meet the senators at the Riggs house this morning at 10 o'clock. They came at the appointed hour, but Judge Lowry had heard of it meanwhile and was on hand, and when the two senators and one congressman stepped into the carriage to be driven to the White House, Judge Lowry stepped in and completed the circle, while the candidate for consulship elevated his nose in supreme disgust and walked away.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 1.

Two months or more ago the question of a primary election was broached to about ten gentlemen who were known to be seeking the place. The vote on the question broke in the middle and it was determined to ask the advice of Senators Voorhees and Turpie, who, it is supposed, will make the recommendations for the "orphaned" ninth district. They replied, and by the strongest possible inference disapproved of the primary plan.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 25.

Eli W. Brown, of the Frankfort Crescent is not only an applicant for the Frankfort post-office, but he claims the right to name all the postmasters in the ninth congressional district. In the last campaign the democrats made two or three nominations for congress, but they all declined to make the race, as the district is 4,000 republican. Mr. Brown volunteered to make the race, and a few days before the election his name was placed on the ticket by the district committee. He made no canvass of the district and paid no campaign assessment. His name was used simply to fill up the place on the ticket. But now he bobs up as a defeated candidate, claiming the same right to name postmasters that members have. It has always been the custom to let the senators look after the post-offices in republican districts and Senators Voorhees and Turpie have an understanding in the disposition of post-offices of the sixth and ninth districts. Tomorrow Brown will meet the two senators to talk the matter over, but it is not likely that they will yield to him this power. They are more competent to settle the post-office appointments than Brown.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 29.

Senators Voorhees and Turpie, Messrs. Sheerin, Murdock and Eli W. Brown, editor of the Frankfort Crescent, held a conference this afternoon to decide who shall name the postmasters in the ninth congressional district. Mr. Brown claims the right, as the last democratic candidate for congress, to control this patronage, but Senator Turpie does not concede it, for by an arrangement with Senator Voorhees just after election he was to control post-offices in Waugh's, and Voorhees in Johnson's districts. "Jim" Murdock and Sheerin also want to take a hand in the matter. Brown may have a say in the offices, but it will not be final. It is conceded that while Senator Turpie will have the ostensible say, Murdock will really control matters.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, March 29.

Senator Turpie presented to the President to-day Col. J. M. Hoskins, of Brazil; M. S. Scudder, of Washington and John T. Taylor, of Guthrie, Oklahoma. Hoskins is an applicant for internal revenue collector.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, March 30.

CONGRESSIONAL OFFICE BROKERS AT LARGE.

Congressman-elect Latimer has made a spectacle which is a little the worst yet presented. He is the man who introduced the resolution at the democratic convention last May which declared:

"We shall look upon the nomination of ex President Cleveland, if forced upon the party at the Chicago convention, as a prostitution of the principles of democracy, as a repudiation of the demands of the farmers' alliance, which embody the true principles of democracy, and a surrender of the rights of the people to the financial kings of the country."

In spite of that, he is now assuming to have influence with Mr. Cleveland, and has begun a programme of distributing fourth-class post-offices to his friends in the farmers' alliance. He called a meeting at Seneca City recently, which had for its object the discussion of the distribution of patronage in his district. Thirty or forty were present, nearly all alliance men. Mr. Latimer acted as auctioneer, and, while the alliance men were ready takers, he disposed of about all the offices in the district. He called out the offices, and nominations were made, and then, according to published reports of the meeting, came speeches of commendation.—Columbus, S. C., Dispatch to New York Times, March 8.

A representative of the Connecticut delegation in congress submitted to the President the name of Daniel M. Morgan, of Bridgeport, Conn., for the position of United States treasurer. He is a banker and is said to have the indorsement of all the democratic congressmen from his state and of Carlos French, the member of the national democratic committee.—New York Times, March 9.

* * *

F. R. Richardson, of the Atlanta Journal, Cleveland delegate-at-large, is an applicant for appointment as minister to Guatemala. He is backed by about the entire delegation in congress.—New York Times, March 11.

* * *

Representative A. J. Pearson, of Ohio, called and presented the name of Ross J. Alexander, of Bridgeport, Ohio, for first assistant postmaster general.

Representatives Catchings and John Allen, of Mississippi, called with Joseph Johnson, of Alabama, and introduced Col. W. M. Inges, of Mississippi, who is a candidate for United States minister to Guatemala.

A delegation from Iowa called and made recommendations for one or two places. They were Representative J. T. Hamilton, Thomas Bowman, W. H. Butler and F. E. White. They recommended Mr. Butler for superintendent of the railway mail service.—New York Times, March 10.

* * *

Senator Palmer brought with him Messrs. Brinton and Shutt, of Illinois, the former an applicant for the United States marshalship for the southern district of Illinois, and the other a candidate for the office of district attorney for the same district.—Indianapolis News, March 10.

* * *

Representative Springer, of Illinois, who was also one of the President's callers to-day, asked him if the rule of not appointing men who had held office under him four years ago was to prevail as reported. The President replied in the affirmative, and when asked if the rule was inflexible, Mr. Cleveland responded that it would be so substantially. There might be exceptional and extraordinary circumstances which might cause some departures from it, but he could not call to mind any possibilities to justify change from the policy decided upon. Mr. Springer asked if the rule was also to apply to fourth-class postmasters. Mr. Cleveland's response was that he had not thought about that, but he gave the decided impression that it would prevail to as great an extent as possible with the small postmasterships.—Indianapolis Journal, March 10.

* * *

The delegation in congress from Minnesota, with Michael Doran, the national committeeman, proposes to make an onslaught on the White House, en masse, as soon as possible. Its members had intended to do so to-day, but decided to postpone it, and Representative Castle was the only one who came.—New York Times, March 9.

* * *

This morning the Missouri delegation in congress called upon Postmaster-General Bissell and asked him to define his policy regarding the appointments of postmasters and others that came under him. The delegation stated that they desired this information in order that they might be governed by it in making their recommendations.—Buffalo Express, March 11.

* * *

A delegation from Minnesota called and was at once allowed to enter the private office of the President. Michael Doran, the national committeeman, and Judge Charles E. Flandrau, of St. Paul, headed it, and Representative Hall was one of the party. When it was their turn to talk to the President, they asked him to appoint Louis Baker, the editor of the St. Paul Globe, to one of the foreign missions. They said Mr. Baker would like a mission of the second class, and that Brazil would probably be agreeable to him. They asked that James Bowers, of Minnesota, be appointed solicitor-general, and they named some of their candidates for the local federal offices.

"Are the applications filed at the proper departments?" asked the President.

"They are," was the reply.

"That is the proper course," said the President.—New York Times, March 11.

* * *

Up to date 847 unterrified democrats of West Virginia have filed their applications for federal offices. The list is headed by Joseph S. Miller, of Cabell county, who was commissioner of internal revenue during Cleveland's former administration.—Buffalo Express, March 15.

Senator Edward Murphy, Jr., of New York, was one of the first callers. He had with him Editor John M. Francis, of the Troy Times, the ex-minister to Austria, and his grandson, who desired to pay their respects to the President. They remained only a few minutes. A reporter called Mr. Murphy's attention to the general absence of New York office seekers, and the senator is credited with this reply: "That shows the power of organization. New York will be heard from at the proper time. Instead of having every Tom, Dick and Harry running down here to Washington and bothering the life out of the President, the leaders of the party in New York will decide upon the men whom they desire to have appointed to positions in the federal employ and whose appointment they think will benefit the party most. These names being decided upon, the men will come on to Washington, present their papers, and will, if necessary, be introduced to the President. Yes, organization is a great thing."—New York Times, March 14.

Troy is the home of Edward Murphy, Jr., chairman of the democratic state committee, to-day the most powerful democrat in the state outside of New York and Kings counties. In this county Mr. Murphy's will is the law of the land. No appointment to office is made without his endorsement, nor can an aspirant for a political nomination reach the coveted goal without his approval.—New York Times, Oct. 27, 1892.

Representatives McMillen, Enloe, and Richardson also of Tennessee, and a party composed of G. B. Murray, J. N. McKenzie, W. R. Chambers, Dexter Reed, L. D. Hill, George C. Elston, and A. C. Weleh, of the same state, made the President a short visit. They would like to have him appoint Judge Lerton, now chief justice of the state supreme court, to succeed Circuit Judge Jackson, who was promoted to the United States supreme bench.

Speaker Crisp and Senator Gordon, of Georgia, were among the visitors. They presented the name of Bascom Myrick, of Americans, who was a Hill delegate at Chicago, for a foreign appointment, and R. W. Patterson, of Macon, for a government directorship in the Union Pacific Railway.—New York Times, March 12.

* * *

Representative Washington, of Tennessee, was one of the morning visitors. He fell to discussing appointments for places in the District of Columbia. Mr. Enloe presented F. W. Moore, a candidate for pension agent at Knoxville, and Mr. Washington introduced Judge H. H. Ingersoll, of Knoxville, who has an application on file for the position of solicitor-general. Mr. Washington also presented James H. Bible, of Chattanooga, who would like to be district attorney for the eastern district of Tennessee. Some of the party with Mr. McMillen are also candidates for the positions. Mr. Murray wants to be district attorney. Mr. McKenzie would like to be marshal of the middle Tennessee district, and W. R. Chambers would like to be consul at Melbourne.—New York Times, March 12.

* * *

George William Carnth, editor of the Gazette, of Little Rock, Ark., and a brother of Congressman Carnth, of Kentucky, presented an application for the position of minister to Turkey. He was vouched for by Senator Jones of Arkansas.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 12.

* * *

Telegrams from Washington convey the information that Congressman John M. Clancy is to keep his weather eye open for federal patronage at that end of the line. The announcement runs: "He has been officially designated by Hugh McLaughlin to represent him on all questions of patronage affecting Kings county."—New York Times, March 12.

* * *

Congressman McMillan, of Tennessee, brought J. N. McKenzie, a candidate for marshal of the fourth district of Tennessee, and G. B. Murray, of Gainesville, who wants to be district attorney for the same district. With Congressman Cobb, of Missouri, came Judge Speck, who has made application for the surveyorship of the port of St. Louis. A. W. Bascom's claims for collector of internal revenue in the Lexington district of Kentucky were presented by Congressman Paynter, of Kentucky.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 18.

The Texas delegation saw the President, and state that he will probably nominate A. W. Terrell, of Texas, minister to Turkey.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 18.

* * *

Wm. F. Harrity, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the national democratic committee, and Attorney General Hensel, of Pennsylvania, were among the first to enter the President's apartments. They had come in response to invitations, and they remained some time. The object of their visit was to discuss the question of the Pennsylvania appointments. Both gentlemen are uncommunicative to-night concerning the result of their visit, but those who understand the political situation in Pennsylvania say there is little doubt that they made satisfactory arrangements for patronage for Pennsylvania democrats.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 21.

* * *

The visitors declined to reveal anything concerning their conversations with Mr. Cleveland and his assistants, but those to whom they talked have not proved so reticent. In the first place it was absolutely determined that the political patronage of Pennsylvania should be disposed of upon the recommendations of Mr. Harrity and his friends in the state administration. No man will be appointed to office in the Keystone commonwealth who is objectionable to those gentlemen. To such an extent will this be carried that Postmaster General Bissell is credited with having presented Messrs. Harrity and Hensel to Assistant Postmaster General Maxwell, the "headman"—as he is humorously known in Washington—with the remark: "These are the friends whose counsel we will follow in Pennsylvania." That decision determines the selection of over 4,000 postmasters.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 22.

* * *

The Illinois delegation is again cast down. For several days its members have been pressing upon the President the advisability of appointing Judge Browning, of Illinois, as commissioner of the general land office. Senator Palmer and others have been at the White House repeatedly to recommend their man, who was set forth as a candidate of exceptionally high character, of thorough integrity, and free from all railroad and speculative entanglements. There was an anxious caucus this afternoon at Willard's of the Illinois senators and several of the representatives, the upshot of which was that Senator Palmer went to the White House even at 5 o'clock, to make one more appeal for Judge Browning. Mr. Palmer was oppressed to learn from the President that it would be useless to urge further the appointment of Judge Browning, for the reason that he had decided to appoint Mr. Lamoreux, of Wisconsin. Mr. Lamoreux is the candidate of Senator Vilas.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 22.

The nomination of Daniel M. Browning, of Illinois, to be commissioner of Indian affairs, made yesterday, occasioned a good deal of astonishment, as the President was supposed to be looking for a man who had made a specialty of the study of the Indian question. Mr. Browning is an Illinois lawyer, with some experience on the state bench. He is a great friend of William R. Morrison, but was backed by the solid delegation of Illinois for the commissionership of the general land office, and the Indian office appears to have been given him as a consolation prize. Republicans admit that he is a good lawyer, a man of excellent character, and gifted with abundant common sense in business affairs. He is said not to be much of a civil service reformer, however. It was supposed that if the office was given out as a political place it would go to John H. Oberly, but Mr. Eckels, nominated for comptroller of the currency, is a brother-in-law of Mr. Oberly, and this, together with the extraordinary number of Illinois appointments, has probably worked against Mr. Oberly's chances.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, April 13.

Mr. Cleveland is bound to have difficulty in distributing the patronage in Kansas. There are two factions of the democratic party in the state, the "stalwarts" and the "fusionists." Senator John Martin and ex-Governor George W. Glick represent the "fusionists" here. To-day David Overmyer, J. B. Crouch and W. M. Mitchell, representing the "stalwart" democracy, reached the city. The avowed object of their visit is to see that none but "stalwart" democrats are given offices. So far Senator Martin has shown a disposition to forward the interests of populists as well as democrats. He has already presented to the President the names of a number of Kansans for office, and the "stalwarts" declare that the most of these are populists at heart. They claim also that Mr. Martin proposes to make further fusion between the populists and democrats of Kansas possible by giving offices to men of this stripe.

Senators Martin and Peffer have daily conferences, and it is an open secret that they are trying to have the offices bestowed in the interest of the fusion element.

Next week there will be many Kansas men at the White House, and the troublesome question of the patronage will be brought squarely before the President.—New York Times, March 18.

* * *

It is understood here that Congressman Alexander and Senators Ransom and Vance have made up a slate. They propose to have the President appoint Col. W. R. Kenan, collector and G. L. Morton, postmaster. It is also understood that the men for the places under these two heads have been selected. There are several other applicants for both offices and the friends of these men have combined to see what can be done. A telegram has been sent to Mr. Cleveland and a public meeting has been held to protest and formulate a petition. Four hundred signatures have already been secured. A strong delegation will go to Washington to try and "knock out" the congressman and senators.—Wilmington N. C. Dispatch to New York Times, March 24.

The Virginia delegation in Congress held a caucus last evening at the Ebbitt house, all of the members being present. After a discussion of nearly three hours they came to the conclusion not to indorse any applications at this time but to present to President Cleveland the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

We desire to act in harmony and union, and wish to ascertain what are your wishes as to the mode of presenting or indorsing the names of applicants for the marshalships, district attorneys and internal revenue collectorships.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 24.

* * *

A large delegation of Illinois democrats, escorting Jerry O'Donnell, a candidate for public printer, appeared at the White House to-day, led by Senator Palmer.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 30.

* * *

The senators from Missouri were exceedingly gratified to find that Mr. Cleveland had respected their wishes and appointed Mr. Max Judd to be consul-general at Vienna. Mr. Judd is one of the most prominent Hebrews in Missouri. He is very wealthy and has long been identified with St. Louis politics. Prominent Missouri democrats say that his nomination at this time will add several thousand votes to the democratic ticket in St. Louis in the coming municipal election. Besides being an expert politician and business man, Mr. Judd enjoys the distinction of being one of the best chess players in the United States.—New York Times, March 23.

* * *

The crowd was very great. Tenuisce was represented in force. Representative Washington had with him six constituents, whom he presented to Mr. Cleveland.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, March 23.

* * *

Minnesota had a hearing to-day. Congressman Hall, Representative-elect Baldwin and Mr. Lawler presented the name of Mr. Lewis Baker, editor of the St. Paul Globe, for minister to Brazil. Mr. Harry Hawkins, of Duluth, for governor of Alaska, and Mr. C. F. McDonald for receiver of the land office at St. Cloud.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 23.

Congressman Barnes Compton, of Maryland, was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday.

"Is it true that word was passed around to Maryland democrats that their chances would not be helped by a visit to Washington?"

"Yes," said Mr. Compton. "Our delegation in congress advised them to stay at home and not worry the President.—New York Times, March 26.

* * *

There is a determined fight over the Raleigh post-office. Senators Vance and Ransom are pressing Chas. M. Busbee, and Congressman Bunn is for W. C. Stronach. Mr. Bunn was here yesterday and announced, after a consultation with his friends, that he would protest to the postmaster general and President Cleveland against the impertinent interference of the two senators as to this office, on the ground that by custom he has the right to dictate who shall fill this important office. Mr. Bunn was much incensed at Senators Vance and Ransom, and he does not intend that they shall rob him of this important piece of patronage.

Mr. Busbee married a niece of Mrs. Vance, and this fact will be called by Mr. Bunn to the attention of the President as suggesting a species of nepotism.—Raleigh Dispatch to New York Times, March 27.

* * *

For the information of all the democratic candidates for offices in Erie county it might be stated that ex-Representative Bunting, of Hamburg, is the proper man to apply to, and not to Mr. Hertel, who made the hopeless contest against Judge Daniels last fall. It is understood among the post-office department officials that Postmaster General Bissell has directed that Mr. Bunting's indorsement be recognized in all cases but one in Erie county outside of Buffalo, and that exception is the office at Hamburg, the home of Mr. Bunting.—Washington Dispatch to Buffalo Express, March 29.

* * *

As there are no democratic senators from Iowa, the referees for the state will be the representatives in the fifty-second congress and the state organization. Whatever the recommending authority, it is understood among the Iowans that there shall be no exhibition of differences at the White House over the offices, but that there shall be a settlement of all disputes before the preferred names are sent to the executive for approval.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 31.

Mr. W. J. Brinton, treasurer of the state central committee of Illinois, is registered at the Denison House. He arrived yesterday from Washington, where he has been for several weeks in the interest of his application to be appointed United States marshal for the southern district of his state. When asked what his chances are, he said:

"I have no opposition as yet, and I think I will be appointed. We did not ask for the removal of the present marshal, whose term is not out until July 1, and between now and then one can not tell what may happen. I have, however, the recommendations of Senator Palmer and of the congressmen of the state, besides many business men.—Indianapolis Journal, April 1.

Senator Camden, of West Virginia, escorted Col. W. C. Handlon and Dr. Charles W. Cowan, of Wheeling. Dr. Cowan has his eye on the Ottawa consularship. Judge Long, of New Mexico, was introduced to the President by Delegate Joseph, of that territory.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, April 1.

Many senators and representatives were in the throng. Senator Bate, of Tennessee, introduced one of his constituents who presented a card upon which was printed "Jacob Schaefer, applicant for United States consularship, Cologne, Germany." Mr. Schaefer wants that office, and he does not care who knows it. Senator Bate also presented J. W. Gaines, who has applied for the district attorneyship at Nashville.

Congressman-elect Cockerill and Cooper, with Congressman Kilgore, of Texas, brought Col. Dick Ware, of Mitchell county, who wants to be marshal of the western district. They also presented John McConnell, of Childress county, who would like to be marshal of the northern district.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, April 2.

THE USE OF PATRONAGE TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.*

The President of the United States is a legislative officer. He is required by the Constitution, he was expected and intended by its framers, to aid in making the laws he executes; to this end he is given powers, in a measure atrophied by disuse, which, wielded by a true leader of freemen would profoundly, affect, if they did not control, the work of congress. It may be well to briefly consider what are his means of legitimate influence before dealing with the special subject of my paper, for I believe that, while many good citizens are now troubled lest congress refuse the President practical support for a policy which the people endorsed by his choice, comparatively few realize that such anxiety questions his statesmanship no less than the enlightenment and patriotism of senators and representatives.

I need not dwell upon the more familiar feature of the President's legislative power; everybody knows that he has "power, by and with the consent of the senate, to make treaties," although everybody does not know, or, at least, constantly remember, that treaties are laws and may override and repeal other laws enacted by congress. In more than one country the principles professed by our tariff reformers were embodied in treaties of commerce for the very purpose of thus eluding a hostile chamber. All have heard of his right of veto, but all have not reflected that this constitutes him a standing "committee of conference," wherewith the author of every proposed law must deal, or how seriously and positively this act may affect the course of legislation. The tribunicia potestas was a prime factor in shaping the old Roman polity.

The President, however, has further legislative duties and is armed with the authority these imply. "He may convene both houses or either of them." If congress tries to run away from its work, to hide itself from public opinion, he can chain it to its post. And he not only may but "shall from time to time give to the congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." In the stormy days of Andrew Johnson a senator once proposed that a message from the President be not read; a night's reflection, however, convinced every one that, when he chooses to talk, congress is bound to listen. Indeed, to refuse him a formal hearing, would be to hand him a trumpet; he speaks over the heads of the people's other servants to their and his common master; if they stuff their ears with cotton, that master will be the more certain to listen, the more ready to act.

The value of such a privilege to a President depends on the President himself. A critic of the constitution of the German Empire, writing when this was newly framed, said it ought to have provided that the chancellor should always be a man of genius and never grow old or fall ill. Our fathers were less exacting, but in the Presidency they created a place far too big, as they conceived and shaped it, to be filled by a little man. They foresaw that its incumbent might be great enough to be dangerous, they did not think of him as small enough to be contemptible. Therefore the trust committed to him and the means granted him to fulfill this trust are not devised on the hypothesis of his own insignificance. If he has no thoughts worth the uttering, or if neither he nor any of his chosen advisers can clothe what thoughts he has in language worth the reading, then it is a matter of little moment that he is ever entitled to the country's ear when he sees fit to claim this. It is no great boon to a dumb man that we always recognize his right to the floor. But from a President who has something to say, and can, either himself, or through a fitting mouth-piece, so say it that his countrymen will stop to hear him, this privilege has an enormous value. He can lay bare to public scrutiny in any exigency what he would have the people know; he can, in any controversy, place his adversaries on the defensive and summon them with unequalled authority, to the bar of public opinion. When he speaks he compels a hostile congress to answer him, and the answer, whether given by a hundred orators, whose discordant words the country will have no time to heed, or in the cumbrous pronouncements of large assemblies, is of necessity far less effective than his speech. If, wielding these weapons, a President can not so awaken and guide public opinion that even an unwilling congress must give the form of law to his policy, this shows either that his policy is not the people's or that he is unfit for his place. Should he ask indulgence for irregular and unworthy means employed to the same end, because otherwise he had failed, he stands as a lawyer, who for lack of skill, learning and eloquence to gain his cause, has bribed the jury; and indeed bribery in a form more than ordinarily repulsive and noxious, has been too often the resource of helpless mediocrity, struggling with the responsibilities of his mission.

The President, as first servant of the people, chooses, or ought to choose, an immense number of under-servants to help him in his work. Their offices no more belong to him than does the furniture of the White House; and he has as little right, either in law or in morals, to place one at the disposal of a complaisant congressman as to reward the latter for his vote with a piano or a painting for which the treasury has paid. Bishop Latimer called bribery "a princely kind of thieving;" it may have seemed so in his day, but I, at least, see little room for the adjective, when the President of the United States uses his patronage as a huge corruption fund to repay official perjury and breach of public trust in the national legislature.

The nature of the legislation obtained is altogether beside the question. Lord Bacon professed to have never decided any cause against his judgment of its merits, although he had often exacted pay for his decisions, but posterity has ratified the finding of his judges that this fact (if fact it were) in no wise lightened his guilt. The southern or western congressman who believes in free silver or inconvertible greenbacks or agricultural "sub-treasures," is to my thinking foolish or ignorant, or both, but he may be an honest man; if, while so believing, he votes for the best law which the most experienced financier can devise to restore a sound currency because, by thus voting, he will get a foreign mission for his brother-in-law or a consulate for his invalid nephew, or a post-office for his best "worker," then I pronounce him a scoundrel, and those who pay him the price of his infamy no whit better than himself.

There is one feature about this beggarly business which makes it superlatively mean. The plaintiffs or defendants who greased the itching palms of the Lord Chancellor in Bacon's days did so out of their own pockets. What they gave him may have been unfairly earned or wrongfully withheld but it was at least formally their own. They were accessories to his breach of trust, but were not themselves unjust stewards. When, however, a President distributes appointments in return for legislation, this costs him nothing personally but his self-respect and the esteem of good men. He is no less bribed than is the senator or representative with whom he bargains; each of them buys up the other. For one servant to pay another to betray the confidence of their master is sufficiently shameful. That he should do this with the talents that very master has placed in his keeping deepens to ink the shade of his perfidy.

This abuse is no less dangerous than odious. The President called for by the constitution is well nigh omnipotent in legislation where he inspires and voices public opinion but as nearly powerless when this no longer sustains him. He ensures the constant supremacy of the whole country over local prejudices or interests; he can do little or nothing to thwart its will. He is a demagogue in the first and best sense of the word; by him the people can be always led, but never driven. And if he is sternly and vigilantly limited to his lawful instruments of agitation and influence he can only—therefore he will—be such a man as can handle these. A nonentity or worse could never reach the chair that was fashioned for and first filled by Washington.

But something much worse than a nonentity will serve to swap off pounds of patronage for yards of law-making; for this occupation "statesmen" who tamper with bills and choose for judges purloiners of election returns have a right of pre-emption, if not a patent, which those of another type should not seek to infringe. Such methods may seem at times to advance public welfare; England appeared to owe many years of peace and comparative prosperity to the systematic corruption of Walpole; but no free people can long tolerate them and remain long free. When the executive can say of the legislature truly and safely, as the lady said of her hair, "It is my own, for I have paid for it," although not, as she added, "with my own money," a system of legal checks and balances, however elaborate, may serve to disguise but will not qualify a practical autocracy. The forms of a republic lasted at Rome long after Augustus, and subsist now with much parade throughout Spanish America.

Against this peril the founders of our government sought to safe-guard by constitutional provisions which suffice only to prove their solicitude. That "No senator or representative shall, during the times for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such times; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office," is of little avail; that the President can appoint only "by and with the advice and consent of the senate," is, for this purpose, of less than none. Our real protectors are the strong common sense and sturdy honesty of the American people. Some well-meaning persons may from time to time persuade themselves that to secure good laws when these seem sorely needed, the President can be forgiven a prostitution of his constitutional powers, a violation of his oath of office. I believe the people can, and, if need be, will be made to see that as well might a woman sell her chastity to give the profits in alms.

The strangers who this year throng our shores may perhaps report on their return home, that they found in Chicago, with other exhibits of our civilization, a specimen of the model American mayor; such of them as pass through Albany can tell their fellow-countrymen what manner of men triumphant democracy delights to honor in the rulers of our greatest state; let us hope, however, that they may not find the fair image of popular government

PARTY PLATFORMS AND PROMISES.*

The workmen in the navy yards and a few places in the Indian service and under the fish commission were all that Mr. Harrison gave us in fulfillment of his extensive engagements, until after the election of 1892. It is when an administration is in extremis that its heart turns toward reform. It was amid disheartening surroundings in 1893 that the republican party favored the enactment of the civil service law. It was after his defeat in 1888 that Mr. Cleveland classified the railway mail service. It was after the writ of ejectment was served last November that President Harrison included all free delivery offices. Our chief executives are not wholly unlike that other distinguished ruler with whom the affliction of disease was a condition precedent to his desire to assume the sacerdotal office. In a civil service reform sense it may be said of more than one of our Presidents that nothing in his official life became him like the leaving of it. The retiring administration resembles the swan, it sings sweetest in the hour of its passing. And so may it continue to be until the time when it shall be no longer necessary for the people to decree the death of the singer before they can hope to listen to the music. Rotation in political office is not without its uses. In the last campaign the respective situations of the two parties were reversed. It was the republicans who were stricken dumb by the paralysis of office-holders, it was the democracy which lifted up its voice like one crying in the wilderness. For it is with parties as with Presidents, there is no greater incentive to the culture of self-sacrificing patriotism than exclusion from the table of patronage. Public virtue resides principally in the party out of power. Sweet are the uses of adversity. It is sorrow that chastens and purifies the soul. It is largely in recognition of this fact that Indiana civil service reformers are so often found in the ranks of the opposition. We want to be in the company of those who stand most for political rectitude. * * *

It was the exiled democracy who could see much more clearly that things were not going on as they ought to go. And as theirs is the platform intended for the guidance of the present administration, it will be well for us to consider, somewhat in detail, the meaning of the language, and what we have a right to expect from a fair reading of its terms taken in connection with the declarations of Mr. Cleveland since it was adopted. I will promise that this is not done in any spirit of prophecy. We have had both words and acts from the same sources before and we know that they have not always kept step together. There was great appropriateness in Dante's punishment of the Soothsayer, "Because he wished to see too far before him; backward he looks and backward goes his way." The outlook in retrospect is not always so comforting as that which fancy pictures for the future. "Retrospect," as President Harrison informs us, "will be a safer basis of judgment than promises."

The question is simply this, what have we the right to expect from the platform? "Public office," it says, "is a public trust." If it be this, it can not be used to pay personal or party debts. It can neither be made a family prerequisite, nor a fund for the reward of those who have rendered efficient service in conventions and campaigns. It is the administration of the office to the benefit of the people which must alone be considered, otherwise the trust will not be performed. A trustee can not deal either personally or as a member of a firm or corporation with the trusted property. A President can not so deal with the offices either for himself or his party.

"We reaffirm," so says the platform, "the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876, for the reform of the civil service and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same." The enforcement of such laws can not be expected if men who have the appointing power in the classified service are themselves unfriendly to the law, and like the late Aquilla Jones, say "that they despise it." Men do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles. The law can not be enforced unless the commissioners are men of unflinching integrity, earnest purpose, ability, energy and enthusiasm. This is not enough, but the law can not be enforced if other officers of the government fail to do their duty in regard to it. It can not be enforced if the department of justice fail to prosecute those who violate its penal provisions. It can not be enforced if cabinet officers, heads of divisions, postmasters, collectors and all other officers in charge of classified subordinates fail to remove men who violate it. If the postmaster-general or the secretary of the treasury should, like their predecessors, retain in the service men who by their own confession are guilty of collecting prohibited political assessments, it can not be enforced. The party has promised then that this thing will not be done.

The platform of 1876 referred to in these resolutions declares "Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if the civil service be subject to change in every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot-box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ." We are therefore to have no "clean sweep." The civil service is not to be subject to change as the mere result of the election. We are no longer to see the participants in the political contest rewarded by the offices. That is what the platform means. These places are to be posts of honor assigned for proved competency. How shall this competency be proven? Within the classified service no doubt by examinations and probation, and outside of that service is there any better proof than experience? And yet we find that the President looks with disfavor upon applications of persons who held office under his former administration for reappointment to their old places. No doubt in some cases this disfavor is justified. But is not the rule which excludes the good as well as the bad rather inconsistent with the platform? But the declaration goes further. The place must not only be assigned for proved competency, but must be held for fidelity. If this rule is observed no man who has been thoroughly faithful to his trust will be removed or supplanted. There is no question of any four years term in this; fidelity is to be the criterion of retention.

The platform of 1876 says something even more important: "The dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of our public men nor the instrument of their ambition." If this be carried out in letter and spirit democratic congressmen can no longer seek re-election by apportioning federal offices in their respective districts. The postmaster-general will no longer regard as conclusive the recommendation of a congressman, nor indeed as valuable in any other sense than as giving information of the qualifications of the man to be appointed. The domain of public office is no longer to be held upon feudal tenures by those congressional barons and divided among their henchmen. It is no longer to be a tax upon the time of representatives in congress nor the instrument of their ambition. When patronage shall be abolished as completely as this platform calls for we shall have passed the turning point in civil service reform.

THE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

[Committee on Resolutions: Carl Schurz, William D. Foulke, Archibald M. Howe, Charles J. Bonaparte, C. W. Watson and Lucius B. Swift.]

"On the 4th of March last the democratic party took charge of the national government. The platform upon which the people intrusted it with power declared that public office was a public trust, and they have a right to expect a fulfillment of this assurance by the present administration. Public offices can not be used as a reward for party services, but should be bestowed without other consideration upon those best fitted to administer them.

"The platform reaffirmed the declaration of the democratic convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, and called for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The people, therefore, have the right to expect not only that the civil service commission shall be composed wholly of men of courage and devoted to this reform, but that the heads of departments and bureaus and chiefs of divisions, as well as all officers of the department of justice shall be impartial and vigilant in prosecuting violators of the law and in otherwise promoting its efficiency."

"The platform of 1876 declares that the dispensing of patronage should be neither a tax upon the time of our public men nor the instrument of their ambition. This declaration implies the abolition of congressional patronage, and we look to the President to see that the system by which offices are distributed among congressmen and by them are portioned among their political friends and supporters shall entirely cease.

"These declarations further tell us that the efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if the civil service be subject to change at every election. We are, therefore, justified in expecting that under this administration there will be no general change in the offices, and the declaration that such places should be posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ, assures us that there will be no removals of faithful and efficient public servants, no matter what may have been the term of their service.

"The President himself has in frequent public utterances explicitly declared his conviction that the system which distributes public position purely as the reward for partisan service, threatens utterly to demoralize our political life, puts our government to a dangerous strain, and undermines the working of our free institutions. Declarations so clear and emphatic justify the belief that he will use his whole power to secure the extension of the civil service law to all branches of the service to which it is applicable and to apply its principles likewise to all executive appointments.

"As it is the evident duty of the President to remove unfaithful or inefficient public servants and bring to justice offenders against the laws of the United States, the league demands the dismissal of every federal officer who has failed to obey in letter and spirit the civil service law, and also demands the effective prosecution of all who have violated its penal provisions. And it expresses its hearty appreciation of the zeal and energy of the civil service commission in exposing abuses and crimes among unworthy officers during the last presidential campaign.

"The civil service commission has performed its duties in a manner which deserves and has the approval of the country. The League declares that congress in refusing to appropriate funds sufficient to provide for the necessary examinations, did not represent the sentiment of the people, and it earnestly commends the action of the commission in providing, nevertheless, for immediate examination in the newly classified free-delivery post-offices. And as four years ago the League condemned the late administration for taking advantage of a brief delay in the preparation of eligible lists, to sweep hundreds of employes out of the railway mail service and fill their places with partisans, so now the league would regard a like change in the newly-classified offices as an evident evasion of the law and deserving of the like condemnation.

"The removal of office-holders upon secret charges without opportunity for defense, denial, or explanation on the part of the accused, is unjust, inquisitorial, promotive of slander and falsehood, utterly inconsistent with the spirit of American institutions and a disgrace to a great government, and the League earnestly urges its immediate discontinuance.

"The unequivocal utterances of President Cleveland justly raised the hopes of all who believed in civil service reform. It is, therefore, with regret that the League must record the fact of the allotment of fourth-class postmasters as the prize of political service, and it hopes that a method may be adopted in the near future by which such appointments and removals in this, the most numerous class of office-holders, may be made in accordance with the principles of civil service reform.

"Fourth-class post-offices as prizes for political service have long been and still are the treasured fields of the spoilsman, and since the adoption of the civil service law appointments of fourth-class postmasters have constituted the most widely advertised as well as the most scandalous exhibition of his activity. Arbitrary removals in the postal service, for political reasons alone, impose upon the country the delay and expense which necessarily result from replacing efficiency and experience by ignorance and inexperience.

"The League again commends the bills introduced by the Hon. Sherman Hoar providing that all postmasters should be removed only for cause stated, and by the Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge providing that fourth-class postmasters shall be appointed without regard to political consideration."

THE ADDRESS OF CARL SCHURZ.

When I was honored with the request to deliver this annual address, I accepted the charge with very serious misgivings. For I remembered that on many successive years on occasions like this you have been wont to listen to a voice the exquisite charm of which still lingers in our ears, and will never cease to echo in our hearts. No man can succeed George William Curtis here without being oppressed by the consciousness of inability to fill his place. It would be a vain attempt to rival his annual addresses in their abundance of knowledge and illustration, their ripeness of thought, their strength of reasoning, their delicacy of humor, and their literary grace. They were so complete an arsenal of facts and arguments that it is almost impossible to speak on the same subject without repeating him; and the repetition will always fall short of the original. And no one succeeding him at the head of this National League can hope to be so naturally, so spontaneously, accepted as the ideal leader of an organized endeavor for purity, justice, and honor in politics. It may be said without in the least straining the sense of words that George William Curtis and the cause of civil service reform were made for one another. All that the reform aspires to was illustrated and exemplified in his personality.

Who can speak of him in other than tones of eulogy? It is a consoling satisfaction to the soul of a friend to do so. We, members of the League, who have worked with him so long, are fond of recalling the many titles he held to leadership among us; his sincerity, unselfish devotion, and singleness of purpose; his profound understanding of the subject and large experience; his fearlessness in the defense and in the application of his principles; his keen discernment of opportunity; his absolute freedom from small jealousies; his cheerful and generous recognition of the merits and services of others; his gentleness in meeting adverse opinions; his sense of justice and his fine tact in composing differences; in the inspiration flowing from his very being in the common endeavor for high aims—all these things gave him without question the first place in our councils. The leadership, therefore, fell to him by a general consent the absolute unanimity of which, never broken, proved that we all felt it to be due to our cause and due to him. Thus the death of Mr. Curtis is to us in the truest meaning of the word an irreparable loss. He could not bequeath to us his genius nor his virtues. He could leave us only his teachings to remember, the inspiration of his zeal to quicken our own and his noble example to follow as best we can.

But if he were now here to dictate my speech, he would call it away from himself and direct it to the cause which he cherished so much, and which was in so large a sense his own. Indeed, the ultimate victory of this cause will be the fittest monument of this great citizen whom we who knew him well so warmly loved, and whose memory the American people can never too highly honor.

It is a comfort to his surviving friends to know that, although he did not witness the full consummation of his endeavors, he lived at least long enough to see his cause rise from small beginnings to a measure of success promising complete triumph at no very distant day. The question is only what President and what political party will carry off the greatest honors of the achievement.

I speak of this with so much assurance because civil service reform has grown and flourished in spite of the bitter hostility of an overwhelming majority of the professional politicians in both parties. They have exultingly proclaimed its death and burial a hundred times. It has survived an endless number of obituaries. They have derided it, and reviled it, and plotted for its destruction in a hundred ways. Without knowing it, by their very enmity they have advanced its progress. Men have begun to respect and to love it for the enemies it has made. We have not far to seek for the reason. What is civil service reform? It is the application of common sense and common honesty to the public service. And the American people are in the main a sensible and an honest people. It is the restoration to full power of honorable and patriotic motives in our political life. And the Americans are, in the main, an honorable and patriotic people. Therefore they will insist upon the general application and enforcement of civil service reform principles in the same measure as they recognize how sensible and honest and patriotic those principles are. In the acquisition of this knowledge they are at times powerfully aided by striking object lessons. Recently they had one of them.

OFFICE SEEKERS AND THE NEW ADMINISTRATION.

The fourth of March last a new administration went into power. Untold thousands of men poured into the national capital clamoring for office; not for offices that were vacant, but to be vacated in order to make room for the clamorers. No matter whether he was ever so good a public servant, the man who was in was to be kicked out, to let him in who was out, no matter whether he would be not half so good a public servant. The office-hunting throng swept into the White House and into the departments like a cloud of locusts. The President, sturdy as he is, could hardly stand up before the impetuous onset. The cabinet ministers, all new men in their places, who felt the urgent need of studying somewhat their departmental duties, were hunted down so that they had hardly time to eat and to sleep, much less to study. When their cry for pity availed nothing, they at last barricaded their doors with strict regulations. They went into hiding in order to save some hours for the business of the government. The post-office department was not only overrun by the crowd, but snowed under with written applications and recommendations for office which in huge heaps covered the floors of the rooms, and the whole force of the department had to work after business hours merely to open and assort them. Senators and members of the house of representatives ran wildly about like whipped errand boys to press the claims of greedy constituents or mercenary henchmen. It was what Mr. Cleveland calls the madness for spoils in finest efflorescence.

And what are these claims for office that are so vehemently urged? I know them well from long and varied experience. Special fitness for the duties of the office is the one thing which even the most daring claimant but seldom dares to claim. He does indeed claim that he can do one thing as well as another if he is only permitted to try, like the Yankee who, when asked whether he could play the violin, answered, he guessed so, but he had never tried. So the office-seeker is ready to try his hand at administration. In most cases the claim to office is based upon party service, the payment or collection of money for the campaign chest, the making of speeches, or other political work deserving reward. And this claim is fortified with all sorts of reasons appealing to sympathy. Here is a patriot who has a large family to support and needs a post-office to help him along. There is another who wants a consulship abroad because he himself or his wife is in bad health and a change of climate would do good, or his daughter has a fine talent for music which should be developed in Europe. There is still another who wants the prestige of official recognition in the shape of a collectorship or a marshalship to enable him to exercise still higher political authority over the minds of his fellow-citizens. A man in Kansas, so the papers report, recently urged the appointment of his daughter to some place in the postal service in connection with the World's Exhibition at Chicago, on the ground that she would be the largest public servant in the country, weighing 472 pounds. And for aught I know, this qualification is as good as many of those seriously urged.

This spoils carnival has been going on since the 4th of March, and it is not ended yet. In a measure it continues through the larger part of the Presidential term. I affirm and maintain that the American people are heartily disgusted with a spectacle so absurd, so ludicrous, and at the same time so barbarous, shameful and revolting—a spectacle exposing the American name to ridicule and reproach. When speaking here of the American people I do, of course, not mean all the people. I do not mean the machine politicians of the two parties, who live on spoils. I do not mean Tammany Hall. I do not mean those poor creatures in congress and in other high places who know they have not ability enough to sustain themselves as statesmen, and depend upon a following bought with patronage to prop them up. I do not mean the selfish speculators in politics who find in the corruption underlying the patronage trade a congenial element. Nor do I mean those who like to be fed at the public crib, no matter whether they furnish an equivalent for their salaries. All these classes are the fast friends of the spoils system; but they form only a small minority of the American people. When I speak here of the people, I mean the men and women who earn an honest living by honest industry. I mean the patriotic citizens who have the welfare of the country, the success of free institutions, and the honor of the republic sincerely at heart.

In their earnest endeavor to serve the public interest, these people may be warm partisans. They wish their party to be successful and to win control of the government. But a large majority of them are in their inward souls disturbed and disgusted when they see, after a party victory, hordes of partisans pounce upon the offices of the government like a band of greedy mercenaries plundering a captured city. They are ashamed when, after the incoming of a new administration, they hear of President wishing to abolish this scandal but not being permitted to do so by the ravenous spoilsmen of the party, and of an official guillotine at work and of so many heads falling every day. This shame and disgust may not, by all who feel it, be loudly expressed in words; but nevertheless it exists, as in times gone by the conscientious abhorrence of slavery existed among the masses of the northern people long before exciting events loosened their tongues.

THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

But there is one part of the public service which now remains untouched by the tumultuous debauch of the spoils carnival. It is like a quiet, peaceable island, with a civilized, industrious population, surrounded by the howling sea. The President and the chiefs of the government departments contemplate this part of the service with calmness and contentment, for it gives them no trouble while the turmoil of the office-hunt rages all around it.

The good citizen, anxious for the honor of his country, beholds it with relief and satisfaction, for here he finds nothing to be ashamed of, and much that is worthy of this free and great nation. This is the "classified service," covered by the civil service law, the creation of civil service reform. On the portals the words are written: "Nobody enters here who has not proved his fitness for the duties to be performed." The office-hunting mob reads this and recoils. The public servant within it calmly walks the path of his duty, undisturbed by the thought of the greedy cormorant hungering for his place. He depends upon his merit for his security and advancement, and this consciousness inspires his work. This is the application of common sense and common honesty to the public service. It is civil service reform.

The present civil service law was enacted under President Arthur. Under the rules established by virtue of it applicants for clerkships and other subordinate places in the government departments in Washington and in the greater custom-houses and post-offices in the country have to pass appropriate competitive examinations to prove their fitness for the places they seek, and the appointments are made from those rated highest, without any regard to political affiliation or influence. Removals are discretionary with the appointing power; but inasmuch as the element of favoritism is eliminated from appointments, removals are no longer made merely to make room for more favored individuals. The public servant who proves himself faithful and efficient is, therefore, wherever the law is honestly observed, substantially secure, no matter to what party he may belong. And it may be said that, under the national government, the law, as far as it reaches, is honestly observed. That it is universally recognized to be so is due, more than to any other man, to Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, who, as a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, has performed his duties with rare fidelity, energy, and fearlessness. All the high officers of the government whose working force has been under the operation of the civil service law have, without any notable exception, borne emphatic testimony to the fact that the law has relieved them of serious difficulty and trouble, and has given to the country a greatly improved service.

At the close of President Arthur's administration in 1885 the number of places classified, that is, covered by the civil service law, was about 15,500. At the close of President Cleveland's administration, in 1889 it was about 27,300. At the close of President Harrison's administration in 1893 it was about 43,400, to which should be added several thousand laboring men in the navy yards placed under similar rules by the voluntary and most laudable act of Secretary Tracy. As the whole number of places under the national government amounts to about 180,000, we may say that more than one-fourth of the service of the national government has ceased to be treated as mere spoils of party warfare. In one-fourth the party boss has lost his power. One-fourth is secure from the quadrennial loot. In one-fourth influence and favoritism go for nothing. One-fourth has been rescued from barbarism. One-fourth is worthy of a civilized country. So much civil service reform was accomplished in the time of three presidential terms. But great and encouraging as its progress has been civil service reform, having conquered only one-fourth of the service, has done only one-fourth of its work.

There are still the laborers in the government departments and the higher grades of the clerical force, such as the chiefs of division, to be brought under the civil service rules. These rules are to be extended to many offices in which they are not yet in operation. The quadrennial slaughter, this relic of American savageness, has to be abolished first with regard to the fourth-class postmasters, of whom there are at present about 65,000, and whose execution en masse has so frequently caused conspicuous scandal. A bill regulating the appointment, and in effect precluding the wholesale removal, of this class of public servants, has already been before congress. This or a similar measure should be pressed until it becomes a law. Meanwhile it is reasonable to ask that the spirit of civil service reform be observed in all executive appointments. Although the President, in making the so-called presidential appointments by and with the advice and consent of the senate, can not under the constitution be bound by rules restricting his power, yet he may impose rules upon himself for the government of his own conduct in the exercise of the appointing power, so as to strip the offices of the character of party spoil and to treat them as what they are really intended to be—places of trust and duty and to be administered for the benefit, not of a political party, but of the people.

MUCH EXPECTED OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

I know patience is one of the most necessary and most useful of virtues, especially in the pursuit of great reforms. But this virtue should not be cultivated to the extent of disregarding and neglecting any really existing possibility. And even the soberest view of the circumstances surrounding us at present persuades us that the time is fully ripe for a further and a very essential advance in the reform of the civil service. Since the enactment of the civil service law every President of the United States has done something to extend the area of its operation. As it is said that no rich man in Boston can decently die without leaving a sum of money to Harvard University, so it seems no President can quit office without commending himself, by a tribute to civil service reform, to the merciful judgment of posterity. But President Cleveland has authorized us to expect from him a legacy of extraordinary value.

He is known as a man of genuine convictions, and may be trusted to mean what he says and to act according to his meaning. On no subject of public concern, neither on the tariff nor on the currency, nor on constitutional principles, has he expressed himself with deeper earnestness, with more emphatic directness, than on the necessity of civil service reform. Here are some of his words:

"I venture to hope that we shall never again be remitted to the system which distributes public positions purely as rewards for partisan service. Doubts may well be entertained whether our government could survive the strain of a continuance of this system, which upon every change of administration inspires an immense army of claimants for office to lay siege to the patronage of government, engrossing the time of public officers with their importunities, spreading abroad the contagion of their disappointment, and filling the air with the tumult of their discontent. The allurements of an immense number of offices and places, exhibited to the voters of the debauch the suffrage and rob political action of its thoughtful and deliberative character. The evil would increase with the multiplication of offices consequent upon our extension, and the mania for office holding, growing from its indulgence, would pervade our population so generally that patriotic purpose, the support of principle, the desire for the public good, and solicitude for the nation's welfare would be nearly banished from our party contests and cause them to degenerate into ignoble, selfish, and disgraceful struggles for the possession of office and public place."

And in his last inaugural address he said:

"One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office, and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils, civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefits already gained through this instrumentality, and the further usefulness it promises, entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, and who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods."

These are patriotic and statesmanlike utterances. The man who pronounced them showed that he well understands the nature of the disease, and he would not permit us to doubt his earnest determination to apply the remedy. It is true, his words do not distinctly promise this or that specific measure. But he points out so clearly the evil to be redressed and the end to be reached, that the adoption of efficacious means is obviously implied. If "the system which distributes public positions purely as rewards for partisan service," which "debauches the suffrage and robs political action of its thoughtful and deliberative character," the system which makes it doubtful "whether the government will survive its continuance" is to be done away with, if "the demoralizing madness for spoils" is to be stemmed for the sake of the better performance of the public service, and "the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods," then, evidently, public offices must cease to be regarded as political patronage and be treated in the truest sense as public trusts; the civil service rules, recognized as efficacious, must be extended to all the branches of the service to which they are applicable, and the principles of civil service reform, recognized to be correct, applied to all appointments, whether they can formally come under the rules or not. Nothing could be plainer.

We may, therefore, reasonably expect that President Cleveland, who now has the benefit of a larger knowledge of men and things than during his first term, will exert his whole power to do what the administration which preceded him promised but failed to do—extend the civil service rules to all branches of the service to which they are applicable, and to cause the spirit and purpose of civil service reform to be observed in all executive appointments. It is especially to be hoped that, as to executive appointments and removals, a beginning may be made with the 65,000 fourth-class postmasters; that the sweeping changes in this branch of the public service formerly customary may yield to civilized methods, and that the savage spectacle of the postmasters' massacre may forever disappear, to be remembered only as a relic of barbarism which strangely survived among the freest people on earth, down to the last decade of the nineteenth century.

When a President announces his firm determination to stop this savagery without fear or favor, and to be governed only by the public interest in making such changes in any branch of the service as may be necessary, it will probably no longer be difficult to carry through congress a law regulating the appointment of the minor postmasters upon sound civil service principles. Then the superstition that every branch of the administrative machinery must be manned with adherents of the party in power will be thoroughly exploded, and the back of the spoils system will be broken forever.

I venture to affirm that the President who gives the decisive impulse towards such a consummation will render the republic a more lasting service, will entitle himself more to the gratitude of posterity, and will achieve greater renown for himself by this one act than he could by the most ingenious device of taxation and the most brilliant financial policy. For he will have removed an evil threatening not only our material welfare, but the very vitality of our free institutions. He will have imparted a new moral spirit to our political life, rendering infinitely easier the rational solution of the other problems hanging over us.

To doubt that President Cleveland sincerely wishes to accomplish this would be to doubt that he is an honest man. The question may be asked whether his party will not throw discouraging obstacles in his way, such as the republican party threw in the way of President Grant and his successors, and whether he can be moved by them from his purpose. But the democratic party should be the last to do so, if it is to deserve the name it bears; for civil service reform is, in its field, the most perfect realization of the true democratic principle.

WHAT TRUE DEMOCRACY IS.

The truest definition of democratic government is furnished by Abraham Lincoln's famous saying that it is "government of the people, by the people, and for the people;" of the people, for the people constitute the sovereignty from which it springs; by the people, for the people through their chosen representatives and servants conduct it; for the people, for it is to be conducted solely for the people's benefit. The people are, therefore, evidently entitled to the best service they can get, and no interest, neither that of a political party nor that of any citizen, has a right to stand in the way. Those intrusted with the power of appointing officers are, consequently, in duty bound to regard office solely as a public trust, and to appoint only persons found fittest to give the people the best possible service.

Democratic government rests upon the principle of equal rights. It abhors privilege and favoritism. But it is privilege and favoritism upon which the spoils system rests—the privilege of those in authority or of influential politicians to dispose of the public offices as their patronage, distributing that patronage by way of personal or political favor. It is justly said that the offices belong to the people and must be open to the people. Most certainly. But what does this mean? Does it mean that they must be open only to those who have influence themselves, or who have the influence of powerful politicians behind them? No, according to true democratic principle it means that the offices must be open to all citizens according to their fitness to fill them; that they must be most open to those who are most fit to fill them; and that free and equal opportunity be furnished to all for showing who are the most fit, whether they be rich or poor, politicians or no politicians, backed by influence or not backed. Under the spoils system the offices are open only to the privileged few—those favored by the influence of the powerful. Civil service reform has undertaken to open the offices to all according to their ability to serve the people. The spoils system asks the candidate for office: "Does your member of congress recommend you; or does the party boss in your state or county ask for your appointment? Or are you backed by a man who gives much money to our campaign fund? What men of influence have you behind you? If you have none, you can have no place." Civil service reform asks the candidate: "Are you a man of good character, and what can you show to prove it? What do you know? What can you do? What ability and acquirements have you to serve the people? Have you more than other candidates for the place?" On the one side, under the spoils system, the aristocracy of influence—and a very vulgar aristocracy it is—robbing the man who has only merit unbacked by power, of his rightful chance. On the other hand, civil service reform, inviting all freely to compete, and then giving the best chance to the best man, be that man ever so lowly, and be his competitor ever so great a favorite of the wealth or power. On that side the aristocracy of "pull," on this the democracy of merit.

This is true democracy, and, as a civil service reformer, I have a right to say, "I am a democrat," Senator David B. Hill to the contrary notwithstanding. But what are you, spoilsman? You may be whatever else, but as a democrat you are an impostor.

The spoils politician is fond of objecting that civil service examinations do not always point out the fittest man for the place. Perhaps not always. The best marksman does not hit the bull's-eye every time; but he misses it rarely. The civil service examinations may have a small record of failures. But what the system, fairly conducted, always does is to snatch public office from the undemocratic control of influence and favoritism. And there is the point which stings the spoils politician. It would trouble him little whether or not the fittest man is put in the proper field of action. That is not what he cares for. But that the reform system so effectively repels the demoralizing touch of political favor, that it so thoroughly takes away from the office the character of spoil, that it does not tolerate public place to be a means of bribery and an article of barter—this the spoils politician will never forgive us, for it destroys his trade. The very democracy of civil service reform makes the spoilsman's heart sore with sorrow, and in the bitterness of his soul he wildly denounces it as an aristocratic notion imported from England, and as a thoroughly un-American contrivance.

There is no better illustration of the democratic character of civil service reform than its history in England. Our opponents might read with profit, although they would read with dismay, the excellent work of our friend Mr. Dorman B. Eaton on the civil service in Great Britain. They would find that England, too, had its spoils system once, with all the characteristic attributes of tyranny, corruption and demoralization. They would find that the struggle against the spoils system there was a struggle against the abuse of the royal prerogative and the predominance of the aristocracy. They would find that England had its movement for civil service reform, and that it was a movement for honesty and economy in government, and for the rights of the citizen. They would find that the growth of civil service reform in England went hand in hand with the decline of aristocratic influence, and with the growth of the democratic idea in government. They would find that the progress of the democratic idea there in the shape of civil service reform has banished from the service the power of influence and favoritism; that it has truly opened the public offices to the people; that it has given the poorest child of the people the right freely to compete with the son of the richest peer to show his fitness for official employment within the civil service rules, and to obtain it according to the showing; that it has vindicated the right of the best man to the best chance. They would find themselves forced to the conclusion that the spoils system, as it has grown up in this republic in the last sixty years, is only a relapse into the corrupt and demoralizing patronage system of monarchical and aristocratic England when it was at its worst, and that civil service reform is the embodiment of the truly democratic principle there as well as here.

JEFFERSON AS A CIVIL-SERVICE REFORMER.

That it is so here as there, does that make it un-American? What fool is there to pretend this? It is just as little un-American as Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights; just as little as the common law, trial by jury, and the writ of habeas corpus; just as little as constitutional government, free press, and free speech; just as little as common honesty and common sense. In fact, the principles of civil service reform are none other than those which governed the original democracy of America. Thomas Jefferson is called the father of the democratic party. The sons would do well to learn and inwardly digest and keep living in their souls the lessons taught by the sire. What are those lessons? Jefferson was elected to the Presidency after one of the hottest party contests this country has ever witnessed. He went into power in 1801. There was a heavy pressure for place from members of his party, the offices being almost all in the hands of the defeated federalists. What did Jefferson do? Let us see. On March 24, 1801, he wrote to Dr. Rush: "With regard to appointments, I have so much confidence in the justice and good sense of the federalists [the defeated party] that I have no doubt they will concur in the fairness of the position that after they have been in the exclusive possession of all the offices from the very first origin of party among us to the 3d of March, at nine o'clock in the night, no republican [democrat] ever admitted, and this doctrine newly avowed, it is now perfectly just that the republicans should come in for the vacancies that may fall in, until something like an equilibrium be restored. But the great stumbling-block will be removals, which, though made on those just principles only on which my predecessor ought to have removed the same persons, will nevertheless be ascribed to removal on party principles." He then designates some persons that should be displaced, and proceeds: "Of the thousands of officers, therefore, in the United States, a very few individuals only, probably not twenty, will be removed, and those only for doing what they ought not to have done. I know that in stopping thus short in the career of removal I shall give great offense to many of my friends. That torrent has been pressing me heavily and will require all my force to bear up against, but my maxim is fiat justitia, ruat cælum." And in his letter of July 12, 1801, to the merchants of New Haven, he said: "It would have been a circumstance of great relief had I found a moderate participation of office in the hands of the majority. I would gladly have left to time and accident to raise them to their just share. But their total exclusion calls for prompter corrections. I shall correct the procedure, but that done shall return with joy to that state of things when the only question concerning a candidate shall be, Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he faithful to the constitution?"

I invite the modern democrat to contemplate in a spirit of candor and soberness, and perhaps with some reverence, the example set by the father of the democratic party. The federalists, the first party in possession of the government, had filled almost all the offices during three presidential terms. When, after a furious contest, the democrats came into power, the provocation for sweeping changes was as great as it has ever been since. What did Jefferson do? He was a warm partisan himself, and a keen politician too. But did he permit himself to be swept off his feet by the greedy clamor of his adherents? Did he resolve upon a clean sweep and, in the sanguinary parlance of to-day, "set up the guillotine" to make the heads of federalist placemen promiscuously fly into the basket? Did he proceed upon the idea that under a democratic administration all government officers must be democrats? Not he. He deplored that the federalists should have found it necessary to fill almost all the offices with federalists. He denounced this as an injustice; but he did not propose to retaliate by being as unjust as they had been. He simply declared his purpose to equalize the possession of the offices between the parties by making a small number of removals, but only for cause, and then by filling vacancies as they might otherwise arise in the ordinary course of things with a just proportion of democrats. This done, then Jefferson would joyfully return to the regular practice of making appointments on the sole ground of fitness without regard to party.

It was thus clearly Jefferson's professed object, not to make the government service a partisan service, but on the contrary to take from it the character of a partisan service which it had borne before; and then to start it anew on a distinctly non-partisan basis.

How did he carry out this plan? He did indeed make some removals, perhaps a few more than he had originally intended, and more than his secretary of the treasury, Albert Gallatin, wished him to make, but in the eight years of his two presidential terms made after all only thirty-nine, and, as he often solemnly affirmed, not one of them solely for party reasons. There being at that time no law limiting the tenure of offices to four years, and office-holders being not in haste to die and unwilling to resign, the process bringing about the equilibrium was necessarily trying to patience. But Jefferson saw no danger to his country nor to his party in the circumstance that a large number of the offices still remained in federalist hands; for, being a sensible man, he knew that a postmaster had to receive and distribute not democratic or federalist letters, but simply letters; that a collector of revenue had to handle not democratic or federalist money, but simply money; that the officers of the United States courts had to secure and enforce not democratic or federalist justice, but simply justice; that Indian agents had to take care of not democratic or federalist Indians, but simply Indians; and so on. This was Jeffersonian democracy—the democracy which Thomas Jefferson not only preached but practiced.

He stood not alone. With him James Madison and Albert Gallatin formed the famous triumvirate which initiated the democratic epoch and have ever since remained the most brilliant constellation of the democratic firmament. Of these fames Madison was the greatest constitutional authority. He had been one of the makers of the constitution and he has always been respected as one of its weightiest contemporary expounders. He expressed it as his opinion that under the constitution the power of removal from offices filled by the President with the advice and consent of the senate rested in the President alone. But did he think that the President had the lawful power to remove meritorious officers merely to put party friends in their places? Let us hear him! "The President who does that," said Madison, "will be impeachable by the house before the senate for such an act of maladministration, for I contend that the wanton removal of meritorious officers would subject him to impeachment and removal from his own high trust." Nor were these idle words. These principles were well kept in mind by the democratic Presidents of that period; for we find it recorded that Madison, during the eight years which he was President, made only five removals; Monroe during his eight years only nine, and John Quincy Adams during his four years only two.

Nor was Gallatin, the great financier and administrator of the triumvirate, of a different mind. In a circular to the collectors of revenue drawn by him, he emphatically expressed his desire "that the door of office be no longer shut against any man merely on account of his political opinions, but that, whether he shall differ or not from those avowed either by you or by myself, integrity and capacity suitable to the station be the only qualification that shall direct our choice." And then he went on to say that office-holders should not use their official standing and opportunities as a means of partisan influence.

Such was the democracy of Jefferson, Madison, and Gallatin, the greatest apostles of the democratic church in America. And it may not be presumptuous to suggest that Jefferson, Madison, and Gallatin are as democratic authorities preferable to Hill, Murphy, and Croker, and even to Senators Gorman of Maryland, Voorhees of Indiana, and Vance of North Carolina, to whom civil service reform is an abomination and the distribution of offices as spoils a necessity of political life.

WHAT A JEFFERSONIAN ADMINISTRATION WOULD DO.

It may be profitable to consider what an administration conducted on the principles of Jeffersonian democracy would do under existing conditions. It would, of course, scorn the idea of making "a clean sweep," turning out all public servants belonging to the opposite party, to put in its own. It would not make a removal except for good cause connected with official conduct, and it would utterly reject the notion that such a cause was furnished by the circumstance that a man has been in place four years—a notion, by the way, from a business point of view, so strikingly preposterous that it is amazing how it could ever be seriously considered among sensible people. Imagine a merchant discharging his salesmen and book-keepers, a manufacturer discharging his foremen and artisans, a railroad corporation discharging its engineers and switchmen, a bank discharging its cashiers and tellers every four years on the ground that they had been in their places long enough and somebody else ought to have them now. Would you trust a bank conducted upon such principles with your deposits, and would you like to travel on such a railroad? The Jeffersonian administration would, therefore, as a matter of common sense, never think of applying to the far more important government business a rule which would be scouted as criminally absurd when applied to the business of a railroad or a bank. It would go further and consider as an improper removal the non-reappointment of a meritorious officer to whose place the existing four-years-term law applies, and it would do all in its power to bring about the repeal of that mischievous law. It would remember that this law was in its very inception a fraud practiced on the people. Crawford, the secretary of the treasury under Monroe, instigated its enactment under the pretence that it would give him better control over officers handling the public money, a pretence the futility of which became soon apparent. His real purpose was to strengthen his hold upon the office-holders and to make them further, as a political machine, his chances for the presidency. The bill was passed without debate, and Monroe signed it in a hurry without consideration. Thomas Jefferson, in a letter of Nov. 28, 1827, addressed to James Madison called it "the mischievous law vacating every four years nearly all the executive offices of the government." And thus he describes, with admirable foresight, its effects: "It saps the constitutional and salutary functions of the President, and introduces a principle of intrigue and corruption which will soon leave the mass, not only of the senators but of citizens. It will keep in constant excitement all the hungry cormorants for office, render them, as well as those in place, sycophants to their senators; engage them in eternal intrigues to turn out one and put in another, in cabals to swap with, and make of them, what all executive directories become, mere sinks of corruption and faction." Madison replied: "The law terminating appointments at periods of four years is pregnant with mischiefs such as you describe." And in a letter to Monroe he raised serious question as to its constitutionality. Its repeal was urged by the foremost statesmen in our history, Clay, Webster, Calhoun, and others, but in vain.

An administration conducted on Jeffersonian principles would not permit so iniquitous a law to survive; for if the law was mischievous then, it is, in consequence of the multiplication of the offices to which it applies and the greater "madness for spoils," infinitely more mischievous now. A Jeffersonian administration would certainly never think of still increasing the mischief by applying a four years' rule to offices to which the four years' rule does not apply—such as the minor post-offices. And I am glad to learn that the rumor which ascribed to the post-office department the intention of adopting such a rule, is unfounded.

A Jeffersonian administration would recognize that the mere practice of permitting officers belonging to the opposite party to serve out their four-years terms, then to be all supplanted by men of the ruling party, would not be a reform of real value. It might be an improvement upon more brutal practices formerly prevailing, but it will in the course of four years result in a general partisan change. It will be a clean sweep slowly and bashfully executed, a clean sweep ashamed of itself, but a clean sweep for all that, to be followed by another clean sweep when the other party comes into power, a substantial continuation of the old demoralizing abuse. It will have only one merit, the merit of carrying the proof of its own consistency on its face. Look at it. A democratic executive permits republican office-holders to continue in place, one, two, or three years, until their terms expire. The democratic executive thereby recognizes two things: (1) that these republicans are good officers—for if they were not, they would have been removed for cause; and, (2) that republican officers may continue to serve under a democratic administration without detriment to the public interest. In other words, the democratic executive practically recognizes that the public interest does not demand the displacement of these republican officers—and yet, taking advantage of the mischievous four years-term law, the executive displaces them—displaces them confessedly without valid reason.

The Jeffersonian administration will not do things so irrational; but, casting aside all inconsistencies and subterfuges, it will simply follow the precept given by Jefferson, Madison, and Gallatin, remove only such officers as are, upon fair ascertainment, shown to have become obnoxious to the public interest; fill vacancies in such a way as to give the service an unpartisan character, and ask about candidates only: "Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he faithful to the constitution?"—employing, in order to secure to such questions reliable answers, the most trustworthy methods and instrumentalities. This is democracy according to Jeffersonian teaching.

It is the destruction of the spoils system. It is civil service reform. And he is no Jeffersonian democrat—he is no true democrat at all—who will obstruct, or rather, who fails actively to support the President in any endeavor to bring about a practical return to these sound democratic principles.

GROUND FOR REFORMERS' HOPES.

Is such a consummation beyond reasonable hope? Why should it be? I do not underrate the difficulty of uprooting abuses which seem to have become imbedded in popular habits and ways of thinking. But no brave man will recoil before an error because it appears popular; and frequently he will find it in reality far less popular than it appeared before he resolutely attacked it. Those of us who witnessed the first beginning of the civil service reform movement might well have been discouraged by the seeming hopelessness of the undertaking. The politicians despised it as an idle dream of visionaries, and waved it aside with a sneer. The people seemed to ignore it with stolid indifference. The first practical attempt resulted in dismal failure. That public sentiment was in any degree prepared for it when the work was begun, few of us would have been sanguine enough to affirm. But that public sentiment became rapidly prepared for it as the work went on, nobody will now deny. The danger now is, not that those who have the matter practically in hand rush ahead of public sentiment, but that they lag behind it.

One by one the old fictions by which the spoils politician sought to discredit civil service reform are vanishing into thin air. Of the demagogic pretence that it is an out-landish notion imported from England, an un-American contrivance, I have already spoken. We still hear sometimes the silly story that it will build up an office-holding aristocracy. That people should fear the growing up among us of an aristocracy of millionaires—that I can conceive. But think of an aristocracy of revenue collectors, custom-house appraisers, district-attorneys, and United States marshals! Imagine a nobility composed of postmasters, Indian agents, and department clerks! If there be anything like a federal aristocracy in politics, it is that born of the spoils system—the party bosses, the machine leaders, the dealers out of patronage—such as King Croker, Duke Murphy, Marquis Sheehan, Earl Gilroy, and the sturdy barons holding fiefs and wielding power as Tammany district leaders here—a somewhat rough nobility to be sure, but quite as enterprising as any that levied tax on unprotected merchants' wagons and upon the unwary traveler's purse in the middle ages. It is for the Jeffersonian democracy to deal with this precious chivalry.

SPOILS A SOURCE OF PARTY WEAKNESS.

There is the other curious conceit that the spoils of office are necessary to hold political parties together, to create an interest in public affairs among the people, and to give life and spirit to our political contests. Is this possible? Look at England, where, after the overthrow of one party and the coming into power of another, scarcely more than sixty offices change hands. Look at Germany, where the victory of one and the defeat of another party involves no change in the administrative machinery at all. There are no spoils there, but are there no parties? Are there no party contests stirring the popular mind to its very depth? And now, in the freest of all countries, where the people in the largest sense are called to govern themselves, where the people owe so much to their democratic institutions and are said to be so proud of them, here there should not be patriotism and public spirit enough, here it should require the sordid allurements of spoils and plunder to inspire the citizens with an active interest in their own affairs? Shame upon the slanderers who revile and blacken the American name with so infamous a charge! For it is a slander, wanton, foul, and abominable. There was as much interest and ardor in our political contests as there ever has been anywhere in the world before the spoils of office were an element in American politics. There was more interest, more patriotic fervor, more self-sacrificing devotion, than anywhere and at any time in history, in the greatest political contest this country has ever seen—in the struggle for the salvation of the Union—in which hundreds of thousands freely offered their lives without any thought of spoil. And now it should be necessary to stimulate the patriotism of the American people with plunder? In the name of the national honor I repel the calumny.

If there has been anything calculated to chill patriotic zeal in public affairs, and to drive high-minded public spirit out of active political work, it was the intrusion of the spoils system that did it. It has injected the virus of mercenary motive into political endeavor. It has attracted to political organizations bands of greedy camp-followers and enabled them to crowd out men of self-respect with their disgusting predominance. It has put the political boss, the leader of organized selfishness, in the place of the statesman. It has tended to make the political parties mere machines in the service of sordid greed. Instead of imparting healthy life and spirit to our political contests, it has sought to degrade them to the level of scrambles for plunder. Take out that spoils element and there will still be parties, but they will not become mutual assurance companies of speculators and self-seekers. These parties will not be smaller, but they will be better. There will still be political workers, but they will be workers for public measures and policies, no longer the mercenary crowd working for loot. There will be leaders, but statesmanlike leaders of thought and endeavor—no longer leaders of hireling bands. There will be party contests, but contests of opinion fired with the enthusiasm for great principles—no longer miserable cat-fights for post-offices and collectorships. It is true the political trickster, whose whole statesmanship consists in the art of political barter, and the patriot whose whole public spirit springs from a desire to be fed at the public crib—they will be sadly discouraged and chilled; they may perhaps sullenly retire from the trade. But the real patriotism and statesmanship of the country, inspired with new zeal and hope, will move untold thousands to more than fill the gaps.

We hear it said that the "heelers" and the men of dirty work are necessary for party organization. Remove the spoils system, and you will see how superfluous they are. Their places will be taken by men who attend to organization with no less zeal and far more honorable purpose. This city groans under Tammany dominion, and Tammany asserts that its methods are necessary to hold an effective party organization together. Take away the spoils, put all the non-elective places, from the department commissioner to the street-sweeper, under sound and strict civil service rules, and there will be the end of Tammany. But the city will have other organizations for government, and then a government of public spirit, a government in which the best men will be proud to take part; and it will at once appear how little the political ardor and activity of the Tammany kind was required to make New Yorkers happy. We hear it said that the possession and the use of the spoils of office is needed to render a political party strong and successful. It is refreshing to see what the American people have of late come to think of the virtue imparted to a political party by the possession of the plunder. In 1884 the republicans had all the offices, and they were defeated; in 1888 the democrats had all the offices, and they were defeated; in 1892 the republicans had all the offices, and they were defeated. And if in 1896 the democrats should have all the offices again, that possession would certainly not save them from defeat.

As an element of party strength the possession of the offices has clearly proved a failure. The wise politician will seriously consider, in the light of recent history, whether it is not really an element of party weakness. How much stronger than a party gorged with spoil would that party be in the respect and confidence of the people that could truthfully say: "I was in control of the government, and I have not selfishly abused my power. I have removed no meritorious public servant, although many of them were politically opposed to me. For every appointment I had to make, I have carefully selected the fittest man regardless of party. The interest of the people was my supreme consideration. I have faithfully treated the public offices as public trusts." Would not a party able to say this win for every discontented office-seeker ten recruits among our good citizens?

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM GOOD POLITICS.

I say, therefore, that civil service reform is not only right, not only democratic, but also "good politics." It is good politics in a larger sense now than it has ever been before. The rapid repetition since 1881 of the sweeping changes in the public service, with the scandals of absurdity and brutality inseparable from them, has stirred up a moral sensitiveness among good citizens all over the land, which is constantly increasing. The ravages committed by Mr. Clarkson in the postal service during Mr. Harrison's administration called forth much severer criticism than anything done by Mr. Stevenson before him; and fifty removals made by Mr. Maxwell now, whatever explanations may be given, cause a far more painful sensation than five hundred removals made by Mr. Clarkson did four years ago. The national pride begins to be stung by a feeling of shame at the thought that abuses so glaring have been permitted to live so long in this mighty republic of ours; and this feeling will be especially keen at this period of the World's Exposition—it might be called the world's meeting—upon our soil, when merchants, manufacturers, working men, artists, men of science, men of letters, statesmen, publicists, thinkers of all nations visit this republic. They will study not only our natural resources, our material development, and the productions of our industries, but the working of our political institutions, our morals, our customs, our manners, our ways of thinking, all the fruits of our civilization. The patriotic American, mindful of the honor of his country, asks himself with anxious interest how the spectacle of the passage of our national government from the control of one party to that of another will strike these keen observers, and how their experiences communicated to the world, will affect the standing of this republic in the opinion of civilized mankind.

Imagine such men to go to Washington in order to look into the machinery of what may without exaggeration in some respects be called the greatest and certainly the freest government on earth—the one which ought to be the model government of the world. Imagine them to find the National Capitol occupied by eager crowds clamoring for the public offices as the hireling soldiery of past centuries may have clamored for the booty of a town taken by assault. Imagine them to find the President of the United States, the greatest elected officer in the world, literally besieged by the throng of office-hunters demanding his instant attention. Imagine them to see the President, as well as the secretary of the treasury, at a moment when the financial interests of this people of 65,000,000 are drifting into the perils of a great crisis, obliged to confess that the place-hunting invasion does not leave the highest officers of the government time quietly to study the pressing dangers of the situation and the means to avert them. Imagine the observers to inquire into the "claims" of the impetuous office-hunters, and to find in an overwhelming majority of cases mere party service urged as their only title to public employment, coupled with an impatient demand that all officers of different politics be instantly ousted to make room for the victors. Imagine them to see senators and representatives, the law-makers of the republic, vehemently pressing such action. Imagine them to take up their daily papers and to find in one of them a despatch announcing that yesterday 150 new postmasters were appointed, among them fifty in the place of persons removed, mostly because they have been in office four years, just long enough to make them experienced and useful postmasters; in another paper a jubilant outcry that the "headman" in Washington is vigorously swinging his ax and makes the heads fly; and in still another a threatening growl at the slowness with which the executioner is doing his work, and which is chilling the enthusiasm of the party. Imagine these bedlam scenes to be the pictures these observers would carry home with them of American practical sense, of the American development of democratic institutions, of the fruits of American civilization, of the character of this great republic of ours, which we proudly think should be in all things an elevating example, a guiding star to all nations on earth!

The shame of the fact that the spoils system, of which all this is but the natural outgrowth, has prevailed among us for more than half a century, we can not hide from the searching eyes of mankind—just as in times gone by we could not hide the hideous blot of slavery. Nor is the existing evil of less moment than that which we have overcome. We find it recorded that a few days after the fall of Richmond, Abraham Lincoln pointed out to a friend the crowd of office-seekers besieging his door, and mournfully said: "Look at this. Now we have conquered the rebellion; but here you see something that may become more dangerous to this republic than the rebellion itself." But as we overcame slavery and the rebellion, so the American people can again furnish the proof that, however strongly an evil may be entrenched in power and in habit, they are, in the exercise of their democratic government, wise enough, patriotic enough, and vigorous enough to deal with it. And nothing would redound more to the glory of this republic than such a demonstration now, when, more than ever, it is the observed of all observers.

AN APPEAL TO THE PRESIDENT.

When thinking of the means to abolish the spoils system, our eyes turn not unnaturally to the man whom the people recently put at the head of the national government. He has the power to strike a decisive blow; he has the opportunity, and it would be an offense to doubt that he has the will. He knows as we know, that the people put him where he is because he was trusted to be opposed to the vicious methods which have so long poisoned our political life. He was believed to be able and willing to secure to the people not merely a smaller measure, but the opposite of a tyrannous and demoralizing spoils politics of which they are tired. He owes his elevation to the hope that his administration would be different from most of those which preceded it, not merely in degree, but in kind. We, who are an organization of devoted volunteers in the struggle for this cause, may, without presumption, speak to him and say: "You are beset by politicians great and small, who for their own advantage, seek to drive you from your noblest purposes. Tell them once for all that the President of the United States, as you understand his duty, has in the use of his power only one interest to serve and that is the common welfare."

You have told us that it is very doubtful whether our government could survive the strain of a continuance of the spoils system. Tell the spoils-seekers that it is the sacred duty of the President of the United States to guard the government against this perilous strain, that he has no right to continue it, and that, therefore, the distribution of offices as party spoils must cease altogether. You have told us that the use of offices as rewards for partisan activity involves "a misappropriation of the public funds." Tell them that the President of the United States has no right to misappropriate the public funds, and to increase the cost of the government and the burdens of the people, by displacing efficient public servants because they belong to the opposite party, and by filling the places with inexperienced and therefore expensive men of his own. Tell them this with decision and firmness, and soon the wild scramble will cease which harrasses you and your aids beyond endurance, almost blocking the wheels of the government and exposing us to the scoffs of civilized men. Let all concerned well understand that only the public interest will be served and no spoils are to be had while you are president, and you will find congress more willing than it ever has been to regulate the service permanently by rational legislation. It may be said that by doing this you will offend many politicians. So you will. You will offend the same men whom you have offended many times before, and whose hostility has been your glory and strength. And they will be equally offended if you do only half of it. But by doing the whole you will win the support and the lasting gratitude of a patriotic people. No living man has more reason than you to know that the people can be trusted, that as to all questions of political morals they are far in advance of the professional politicians, and that they are capable of enforcing their will. If they were not, then you would not be where you are. We read of able and brave men in history whose achievements remained crude and commonplace, while a little more of bold decision at the moment of great opportunity would have made them heroes and placed them among the immortals. Yours is the opportunity of a generation. It is an enviable opportunity, worthy of the noblest, the most patriotic ambition. As Abraham Lincoln stands in our annals as the liberator of the slave, you may stand there, if you will, as the regenerator of our political life.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

WE gladly gave the space of THE CHRONICLE last month to the addresses and resolutions brought out at the meeting of the National League. These put the League and the cause of civil service reform before the country in the bravest and best manner. There is not a single note of finching or equivocation. The same standard is to be applied to this administration that was applied to its predecessor. In Carl Schurz as president the League has secured a great leader.

JOHN H. DAUGHERTY, who removed to Irvington last fall from California, has been made postmaster there in place of George W. Russell, removed. Mr. Russell had held the office for twelve years, and nearly the entire community interested desired his retention. This was shown by their petition, signed by the people without respect to party, which was duly forwarded to the postmaster-general. Daugherty got up a counter petition, and among its signers were sundry minors and women, and people who did not receive their mail matter at Irvington, including residents of neighboring towns, which have post-offices of their own. This fraudulent petition was forwarded to the postmaster-general, along with charges of official misconduct against Mr. Russell. On learning these facts, a leading and influential democrat in Irvington, went to Washington representing Mr. Russell and asked the postmaster-general for the privilege of looking at the papers of Daugherty in order that the character of this petition and the falsity of the charges against Russell might be shown. This was refused with the statement that nobody but Mr. Bynum could be permitted to see the papers. Mr. Russell and his friends were dumbfounded at this ruling. They expected, as a matter of simple decency and fair play, that the opportunity to make a defense against charges would be promptly given, and that the real wishes of the people concerned would be consulted. But this did not suit Mr. Bynum, who "decided" that Daugherty should have the place. By all the rules of fairness which appeal to the American people, Mr. Russell should have been enabled to find out what particular charges had been made, and who made them. He would not only have had the means of defending himself, but he would have put Mr. Bynum on trial for these star chamber proceedings.

SENATOR VORHEES is a state calamity and a national nuisance. If he has ever done anything that reflected honor on the commonwealth he misrepresents, we fail to recall it. He can be regularly counted on to be on the wrong side of every public question and every public policy and principle. Everybody knows this. And yet no man in the whole United States appears to have so much influence with the President. What does it mean? The Terre Haute post-office episode is the logical result of Voorhees's methods and Voorhees's ideas of public office.—Indianapolis News.

The question the News asks is being asked on every hand and by every condition of men. The apparent power of Voorhees is the most astonishing fact of Mr. Cleveland's second presidency. If the appearance is true, the old truth will come home bitter to the President that he can not serve two masters. He can not serve the people of this country and Dan Voorhees.

ONE who has not been in personal contact with the executive officers in Washington can hardly realize the terror in which they stand of the individual vengeance of congressmen. A fair illustration of this pitiable condition is seen in the wording and tone of the letter of First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones upon the Terre Haute post-office. Congressmen, at any sign of hesitation in an executive officer, at once begin to threaten him. Executive officers are rare who do an act without first considering whether it will offend a congressman. Congressmen are the instigators and managers of the secret charge system. They are ashamed of their work and want it kept covered. If it were not for them that infamous practice of our government would cease, and charges would be as public as other matters are. The average congressman has gone on threatening and bullying, and using underhand and secret means, until he appears to be a cross between a bully and a sneak. All this is for patronage. In this degraded condition of things it is a relief to have one congressman, Dr. Everett, of Massachusetts, declare that he will have nothing to do with the distribution of patronage. If one district can get along without an office-broker, all can. The President, for himself and all officers under him, should declare the independence of the executive. He should cut off congressmen absolutely from all connection with appointments to office. Nothing but good would result. Congressmen are too cowardly to stand before the country as refusing supplies to the executive because they are refused control of offices.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND asked Mr. Roosevelt to remain on the civil service commission and the latter consented to do so. It was against Mr. Roosevelt's personal inclination to stay, a more congenial career being open to him in other directions. But the call of reform was too imperative. There was no one to take his place. And he is appreciated, not only by civil service reformers, but by the American people, who like a man who will not equivocate, who will not temporize, who will not play the sycophant, who will not flinch, but who knows his duty and will do it, whatever the consequences—in a word, whom no man nor set of men can make afraid. These are the qualities the times need.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND can not honorably leave Mr. Roosevelt handicapped. The civil service commission has again come to a standstill so far as usefulness is concerned. Commissioner Johnston's later acts show that our former estimate of him was correct. He is simply a bourbon politician and another edition of Edgerton, whom Mr. Cleveland removed. His course has been such as to encourage such assaults upon law and reform as were made at Terre Haute. He is in sympathy with the enemies of civil service reform, and makes it his study to see how much the operations and influence of the commission can be limited. He does not represent civil service reform and is not in sympathy with it. He must know this, and if he is an honorable man he will get off from the commission. This cause has struggled too long and too hard to be in any manner blocked by such a man. If he does not resign the President should deal with him as he did with Edgerton, but with much more promptness.

THERE never was any excuse for the least uncertainty with regard to the newly classified free delivery offices. Four years ago, as Mr. Roosevelt shows in his report, the republicans while waiting for the eligible list turned over 2,000 men out of the railway mail service, and this was always properly denounced as an act of treachery, and it was one of the costliest of many costly mistakes made by the Harrison administration. It was the duty of President Cleveland and the postmaster-general to regard the platform upon which they went into office, and, in carrying out its letter and spirit, to give special attention to the newly classified offices. A single word from them that changes must wait upon the eligible lists would have been sufficient. This word was not spoken but, instead, they have given the impression that if a newly appointed postmaster can, with the help of his congressman, hustle around and get hold of his commission and get possession of his office in time, whatever he does in the way of a clean sweep will be all right; that they will neither give him active help nor stand in his way. After this kind of hustling the postmaster at Little Rock was permitted to turn out eleven employes to make room for his favorites, and at Quincy (Ill.), it is said, a clean sweep has been made. This has simply put another good weapon in the hands of Mr. Cleveland's enemies. Nor can it be credited to the President, but rather to the postmaster himself, that Postmaster John J. Nolan, who recently took charge of the Evansville office, refused to make removals until there was an eligible list to fill vacancies from; and he emphasized his determination with the remark, "There will not be any jimmy or crowbar business in this office."

THE President has appointed Charles W. Dayton postmaster of New York. Mr. Dayton is a lawyer and is nominally a member of Tammany Hall. He was a Hill democrat in the snap and anti-snap struggle, and supported Hill for President. Of his qualifications he said when he heard of his appointment: "Why, I know absolutely nothing about postal matters, and to the running of the post-office have never given a thought. It is best to be absolutely frank. Whatever talent for postal affairs I have will have to be developed by study and experience." About the same time he said of the 140 places which are outside of the classified service: "There is not much chance for a clean sweep, and even if there were I would not take advantage of it." Later, to the Harlem democratic club he said: "I belong to the democratic party and to the regular organization of that party in this city, and when it becomes my duty to take a stand, in its behalf I will be found as firm as a rock." June 10, while making a call at the post-office, he said: "I will put in good democrats wherever I find that a change would be for the benefit of the service." The President has been much commended for the "adroitness" and "wisdom" of this appointment. This commendation, however, does not pertain to the manner in which the man can perform his duties, but to the fact that the appointment is an unresentable move against the ruling Tammany Hall bosses. Either in the New York post-office itself, or elsewhere in the postal service, there must have been a man who not only was not an ignoramus in postal matters, but who was well-fitted to take the place once filled by Pearson. This was the man the country was entitled to have, for the management of this office concerns the whole country. In omitting to find and select that man, Mr. Cleveland has missed a great opportunity to carry out the reform promises of his party and himself, and he has put another weapon into the hands of his enemies.

IF Postmaster-General Bissell can stand the odium which his plan in relation to the fourth-class post-offices if carried out will bring upon him, he can stand anything. There is no doubt but that he means to accomplish the greatest reform which now remains to be accomplished in the civil service, but it is in no spirit of criticism that we point out that he is pursuing the hardest possible road. He will not remove any postmaster without cause. But to fill vacancies he relies upon congressmen, and democrats only are appointed. Congressmen are ravenous for vacancies, and they hunt for causes of removal. Trumped-up charges to an extent never before known will soon flood the postmaster-general. If these are listened to, the reform would have been better not undertaken. If they are not listened to, congressmen will not accomplish a clean sweep and their exasperation against Mr. Bissell will be sharpened by defeat. The only true way is for Mr. Bissell to stand upon the constitution and the laws. The simple announcement that congressmen shall no longer have any voice in filling these offices, but that vacancies will be filled without regard to politics upon information to be obtained on the ground by inspectors and officers of the department, would meet with an approval throughout the country that would astonish Mr. Bissell; and further, after a thirty-day spasm, he would have less hatred and opposition from congressmen than he will under the present method.

SECRETARY CARLISLE promptly quartered his son Logan on the country by making him chief clerk of the treasury. Of the tried and experienced clerks of the treasury young Mr. Carlisle says that he does "not believe in these indispensable people, and when I hear of one go he will, no matter what the mugwumps say." The father says, "The idea that any officer under this government is essential to its efficient administration is absurd." Having thus delivered themselves, they set about violating the pledges of the platform upon which both of them got places. As perhaps the fittest example of efficiency and experience they dismissed the chief of the stationery division, and put into his place a democrat without experience in the duties to be performed. If the Carlises, father and son, want to do Mr. Cleveland great harm they have only to continue carrying out their ideas. The remark of the son, concerning present employes, that they had "heard notice in November which ought to have been loud enough" is the remark of a smartish and unfeeling upstart. As to Secretary Carlisle, it seems likely to be found that even in matters not pertaining to the civil service he is not a statesman but only a Covington lawyer with many rickety notions.

THE distribution of patronage in Washington has taken on phases not known before in fifty years. The President has been compelled by the perpetual presence of the mob to cut off all conferences with office-seekers, and the postmaster-general refuses to remove fourth-class postmasters without cause. This leaves it that congressmen are the only ones who have the ear of the President in the matter of patronage, and their vicious power is so far consolidated and strengthened. The congressmen are the root of the trouble. The moment the President declares that he will never allow the influence of a congressman to enter into an appointment, the atmosphere will clear and business methods will spring into use in all departments of the government with surprising rapidity. We have pointed out elsewhere the likelihood that the postmaster-general will be flooded with baseless charges trumped up by congressmen to make vacancies for their henchmen in fourth-class post-offices. In other respects the situation has not greatly changed. Congressmen are giving their time, as usual, to getting their followers quartered upon the people. Senator Turpie innocently expressed the fact the other day in his remark, "The time since the adjournment of congress has been largely occupied in preparing and presenting candidacies for various appointments." But it takes the hardest work they have ever done to get their men in. Probably the Voorheeses, the Bynums and the Vests have had more bad hours since the fourth of last March than they had had before in all their lives. Spoil appointments are not made more than a third as fast as they were under Harrison, but they are still spoil appointments. The heads of division have not been classified but are slowly being removed and their places given to democrats. No one will claim but that making Hughes East and Lewis Jordan heads of division in Washington from Indiana, is the spoils system in its worst form. Of the former we have before spoken; the latter is over sixty years old and is a bourbon politician, and has always been an open and active enemy of the merit system in every shape, and is not a man of established efficiency in any department; and as to the party services for which this office was openly given him, he was paid in cash for the services more than they were worth. The President has no right to allow under-employees to be beaten out of a chance of promotion by competition by such appointments as these. It should be borne in mind that a slow clean sweep has all the evils of a rapid one. There have been some excellent appointments, but in general the spoils system is going on, and complete and effective plans for its disuse seem to be slow in appearing.

THE TERRE HAUTE POST-OFFICE.

The decision of First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones, in its main point, that Postmaster Donham must fill vacancies from the eligible list, completely blocks the game which Voorhees and the postmaster were trying to play at Terre Haute, and all their efforts have been wasted. Aside from this the decision in its fulsome and unendurable sycophancy, clearly inspired by fear of Voorhees, sounds like the usual decisions of the ward politicians who get into the under places at Washington. For instance, Jones knows well enough that the charge of insubordination is wholly untrue and dishonest. Donham was a mere interloper, was forbidden to take possession until a certain time, was trying to take possession after he had been so forbidden and the insubordination consisted in the employees continuing to obey Postmaster Greiner, which it was their duty to do. Jones speaks of this attempt of Donham with his followers to mob the office as "possibly too hasty and ardent," but he thinks it will be approved by Donham's political associates.

Reference of one branch of the case, the removal of clerks and carriers, to a subordinate will not relieve the President of responsibility as to Donham himself. It is well to keep in mind the case as it must be considered by the President: Some persons of Terre Haute, who styled themselves democrats, wanted to get control of the post-office, so as to fill it up with their followers before the civil service rules took effect. They have always openly declared this to be the purpose of their conspiracy. The postmaster had some weeks to serve, but before his time would expire the rules would go into effect. It was therefore represented to him directly, and also through his friends and relatives, that if, in order to enable the project to be carried out, he would resign, he would be given a certain amount of money. At the same time he was told, in substance, "If you do not resign, an immoral act will be charged against you to secure your removal." He refused to resign and the immoral act was charged. There was influence enough to procure a government inspector to be sent to Terre Haute to make the investigation, and he went with orders to report, and did report, to John E. Lamb. The inspector reported the charge proved and the postmaster was removed, seven weeks before the end of his term. The fact that he had become blind, that he had a wife and children, and a large number of relatives, whose pain under this knife is like almost no other, should perhaps be left out of consideration in forming an impartial judgment.

How do the democrats of Indiana like this work? We can say for hundreds of them, from personal knowledge, that they loathe and despise it. When Senator Voorhees took up this transaction he entered upon the foulest work a man can put his hand to. It is for such work that respectable people shun a man. It remains to be seen whether the people of Indiana have spirit enough to drive this dishonorable blather-skite out of public life.

If President Cleveland can tolerate a postmaster who obtained his place as Donham did, he has the power to keep him in, but he will put a weapon into the hands of his enemies, than which they will ask no better. We do not need to repeat the other well known reasons for which Donham should have been removed instantly. His avowed purpose to get possession of the office to beat the civil service law, was enough. His refusal to obey the order of the department to delay taking possession was enough. His illegal attempt to dismiss carriers, was enough. His openly declared enmity to the civil service law, was enough. How long would a republican guilty of any of these offenses be now left in office?

SWINISH SPOIL.

The United States inspection of meat for export at this point teaches several lessons. The Harrison administration set up an establishment of one physician, Dr. Brayton, at $1,400 a year; six young women as assistant microscopists, each at $600 a year, and one tagger at $720 a year. There was nothing small or mean about this provision for meat inspection, the cost aggregating $9,720 annually. During all of the last winter and until Harrison went out of office this array must have been kept under pay solely to reduce the surplus, for one person could have done all the work and more, commencing with the tagging and ending with a look through the microscope. Now comes Secretary Morton and reduces the force to a physician, two assistant microscopists and a tagger. But he makes the discovery that the policy of this administration could not be carried out if a tagger with republican proclivities were to cut strips from hogs for inspection, and so the republican tagger is dismissed and a democrat is appointed, and to this extent the policy of the administration is safe from betrayal. For a like reason it was found that young women whose fathers were or had been republicans could not be trusted to fasten the meat upon slides for the microscope and they were promptly discharged and others whose relatives were democrats were, at the direction of Bynum and Turpie, given the places. One of the dismissed assistants was a daughter of the late ex-Governor Conrad Baker, and if there is any smaller business than to turn her out because her father was a republican it would take a microscope of much higher power than that used in meat inspection to find it. Likewise, Dr. Brayton being a republican could not be trusted to examine slides under the microscope any longer and he was dismissed and one Dr. Stucky, "a good sound democrat," was given the place. Dr. Brayton is a physician in high standing with a large practice, which he doubtless attended to diligently while holding this office, the government having little for him to do, while Dr. Stucky is not a physician of high standing nor with a large practice and he will have to idle away a good deal of time; but he can probably look through a microscope and find worms in pork. The secretary of agriculture would do well to turn his attention once more to the meat inspection department and take the politics out of it. And we make the further suggestion that since exporting meats goes by fits and starts the pay for inspection should be per hog, so that when for weeks and months there is nothing to do the reduction of the surplus may cease.

THE REORGANIZATION OF PENSION BOARDS.

About all that is known here concerning changes in medical pension boards has come through the Washington special correspondence of the Indianapolis Sentinel. According to this information the clean sweep of these boards in Indiana is nearly complete and soon will be entirely so. This change consists in turning out republican doctors and putting in democratic doctors. There was some talk about keeping a republican doctor on each board, but Congressmen "Cooper, Bynum and others convinced the commissioner that such a board produced discord, and each side tried to work the applicant. * * * Often the democratic member would vie with the republican member in rating the applicant just to catch his vote." These remarks, made June 2 by the Sentinel correspondent, tell more of the work of these worthless boards than could be told in whole columns. There are 1,237 medical pension boards, and the country pays them $1,750,000 a year. The places have always been treated as spoil, and the doctors have been the tools of the congressmen who got them their places. To the congressmen and these boards, rating persons for pensions who ought not to be rated, is due most of the dishonest pensioning which has occurred. There is no choice of parties. The democrats are just as dishonest as the republicans. There never was a more corrupt political machine than the pension machine in Indiana during Mr. Cleveland's first administration.

There are undoubtedly many persons drawing pensions whose names should be struck off. But if these political boards are put before the country as an instrument with which to distinguish names fraudulently on the list, the country will conclude either that there is no honest intention to make the list true, or that the administration stupidly fails to grasp the situation. For instance, suppose persons in Indianapolis have obtained pensions on the ground of physical disability, but in fact are not physically disabled. Is it expected that Congressman Bynum and the board lately named by him will have the confidence of this community in its fairness in pointing out these fraudulent pensioners? We can assure the administration that a very few moves by this congressman and his board would produce almost open rebellion here, for the reason that the board is a political board and its acts would be believed to be biased by political considerations. After a short course with these political boards the administration will find it too late for anything except reflection upon how great defeat a party can suffer just after winning a great victory.

In purging the pension list the administration has a stern duty, and it will have to perform it in a manner so honorable and fair that all the world will say it was done honorably and fairly. In this work, congressmen and political boards and politicians should be absolutely discarded and ignored. The only boards in which the ex-soldiers and the people have any confidence are army and navy boards, for the reason that they are known to be clear of politics and free from the coercion of congressmen. The transfer of the pension boards to the classified service and filling them anew from eligible lists, thus making the members independent, is the very least that can be done with safety. There is absolutely no method of appointment except by competition which will free them from suspicion.

STEPS TOWARD "PURGING THE PENSION LIST."

Congressman Conn caused a clean sweep to be made of the republican examining surgeons in the thirteenth district. The following democrats were to-day appointed in their places:

La Porte county—D. L. Brown, Michigan City; Jacob Martin, Rolling Prairie; T. S. Omis, Laporte. St. Joseph county—John B. Bedling, Nottre Dame; N. T. Montgomery, C. A. Dougherty, South Bend. Marshall county—J. W. Edson, Bourbon; C. F. Wahle, Bremen; J. H. Wilson, Plymouth. Kosciusko county—Levi J. John, Mildford; L. F. Moody, Princeton. James M. Amiss, Silver Lake. Elkhart county—Wallace F. Hanl, Elkhart; John S. Suks, Naponee; Daniel F. Miller, Goshen.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 20.

Examining surgeons were also appointed in the first district, upon the recommendation of Congressman Taylor, as follows:

Posey county—Drs. Ramsey and Pearce. Vanderburg county—Drs. Carter, Wosshen, and Mulheisen.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 20.

Drs. J. T. Smith, of Lockport, P. L. Fish, of Quincy, and John M. Stucky, of Spencer, have been appointed pension examiners for Owen county under recommendation of Congressman Cooper.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 20.

Representative Taylor has had the following board of pension examiners appointed for Rockport, Ind.: Drs. Ehrman, F. M. Hackleman, and Felix Maslow.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 25.

Congressman Brookshire is disposing of his pension boards just now. He will reorganize each one in his district. To-day he recommended appointments upon pension boards as follows:

Terre Haute—Drs. Haworth and Moorehead, of Terre Haute, and Russell, of Riley.

Clay County—Drs. Veach, of Staunton; Tulley, of Brazil, and Madisett, of Corry.

Sullivan County—Drs. Durham, of Graysville; Delashmutte, of Sheldon, and Pertile, of Carlisle.

Parke County—Drs. Vancleve, of Catlin; Peare, of Bellmore, and Goldsbury of Bloomingdale.

The appointments of the above medical boards are expected to be made to-morrow. Mr. Brookshire will name the members of the other pension boards in his district very soon. Most of the remaining unorganized boards will likely be named by him to-morrow.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 25.

Upon the recommendation of Congressman Bynum the pension medical board for Hancock county was reorganized yesterday with the following members: Drs. Martin, Boots and Selman.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 29.

Representative Bynum has caused the pension medical boards of Marion and Madison counties to be reorganized. To-day the following members were appointed upon his recommendation:

Marion—Drs. Rooker, of Castleton; W. J. Brown, and Ernest Reyer, of Indianapolis.

Madison—Drs. J. W. Branch and J. B. Fattie, of Anderson, and Dr. S. W. Edwins, of Elwood.

They are all democrats and the retiring members are all republicans. The commissions of the new members will be sent out next week.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 5.

Congressman Brown to-day selected and recommended to the commissioner of pensions the following gentlemen as examining surgeons for the pension boards in his district:

New Albany—Drs. R. P. Rutherford, Frank H. Wilcox, Richard M. Ziegler.

Charlestown—Drs. W. F. Work, S. S. Williams, J. M. Nickles.

Madison—Drs. J. V. Rawlings, T. E. Swan, C. C. Copeland.

Scottsburg—Drs. T. W. Warmouth, H. Tammage, S. H. Smith.

North Vernon—Drs. A. B. Light, W. M. Stemm, O. Gaddy.

Seymour—Drs. D. S. Cummings, A. May, J. H. Green.

Salem—Drs. C. W. Murphy, H. S. Paynter, J. K. Mitchell.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 3.

Congressman Cooper to-night sent the following nominations to Washington for members of the pension boards:

Bartholomew county—Drs. K. D. Hawley, R. E. Holden, J. K. Smalley.

Johnson county—Dr. E. B. Williams, to fill vacancy.

Morgan county—Drs. S. A. Tilford, C. M. Lindly, M. F. Brackney.

Putnam county—Drs. G. W. Bruce, J. R. Leatherman, J. F. Culley.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 5.

A few weeks ago the appointment of democratic physicians to pension medical boards was announced in nearly every county in Indiana, but the commissions were not sent out. When the new commissioner of pensions took possession of his office, the question came up as to whether the boards should be composed of three democrats or two democrats and one republican. Ex-Commissioner Black exerted his influence in favor of the minority representation board as he had them under the former Cleveland administration. Representatives Cooper, Bynum and others convinced the commissioner that such a board produced discord, and each side tried to work the applicant. If an applicant was rejected the minority representatives would console the applicant by telling him the only way to secure a pension was to "vote our ticket next time." Often the democratic members would vie with the republican member in rating the applicant just to catch his vote. The Harrison administration recognized this defect in a minority-rep-representing board and all the members were taken from the republican ranks. The boards will now stand solidly democratic and the commissions of the physicians heretofore appointed are being sent out as fast as they can be filled out.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 2.

GOVERNMENT BY CONGRESSMEN, OF CONGRESSMEN, AND FOR CONGRESSMEN.

BYNUM'S.

There are democrats in Indianapolis who would pay well for information that will lead to the discovery of the hiding-place of Congressman Bynum. The congressman returned from Hancock county some time Saturday, and since then has been avoiding the members of his party who are afflicted with the desire for public office. Mr. Bynum was shaved at the Grand Hotel barber shop Saturday evening, and since that time his best friends have been unable to get any trace of him. There was a large and impatient crowd in waiting for him at the Grand Hotel all day yesterday, and to-day the Grand, the Denison and the English Hotels were besieged by the men who want places. The members of some of the delegations became indignant when they learned that the congressman was purposely avoiding them.

As the day grew older it developed that the congressman had agreed to meet various office-seekers, some at the Grand, others at English's, and still others at the Denison. Among those who called at English's was Chairman Jackson of the Hancock county democratic committee. He was informed that Mr. Bynum was not in the hotel.

"But I have a letter from him, agreeing to meet me here," said Mr. Jackson.

"I can't help that," said the clerk, "he isn't here." About that time the telephone in the office of the same hotel rang. Terry Cullen, manager of the Denison House, was at the other end of the line. The conversation was about as follows:

"Is Bynum stopping with you?"

"No."

"This is Cullen, of the Denison. If he is there, I should like to know it. There is a delegation over here from Anderson looking for him."

"Sorry, but we can't help you out. We would also like to know where he is."

During the forenoon the delegations, representing all sections of the district, traveled from one hotel to another in the fruitless search for the missing congressman. Trips were made to the congressman's law office on East Washington street, and to the residence on Bellefontaine street he formerly occupied, but no trace of the missing congressman could be found. A few of the men who do not want office themselves, but had agreed to take time to call on the congressman in the interest of friends, were indignant because he had written that he would meet them at a certain hotel, and then had failed to keep his appointment.

Mr. Bynum came out of hiding this afternoon and announced that he would return to Washington this evening.—Indianapolis News, April 17.

The action of Congressman Bynum in avoiding the seekers after federal offices during the last few days of his stay in the city is being criticised by many members of his party. Some harsh things are being said about the congressman by the men who feel that they were mistreated. It is asserted and not denied that the congressman wrote letters to constituents in Hancock and Madison counties promising to meet them at certain hotels here and then deliberately remained away from the hotels while the visitors were in the city. "I have no doubt Mr. Bynum was worn out by the office-seekers," said a democrat to-day, "but he shouldn't have made promises he did not intend to keep. These things will be treasured up against the congressman, and when he asks for another nomination he may find that some of those who have stood by him in the past have deserted him.—Indianapolis News, April 18.

Congressman Bynum reached Washington Tuesday night. As soon as the Hoosiers beheld his towering form in the rotunda of Willard's they gathered about him, and drew their petitions. It looked to many as if Mr. Bynum had aged very much since he left Washington, to escape the importunities of office-seekers, only to find in Indianapolis that he had encountered even a more voracious crowd than he left behind.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 20.

To the Editor of The Indianapolis News:

Your statement that I made engagements and broke them is untrue. I challenge you to produce a single letter making an appointment which I did not meet.

W. D. BYNUM.

Washington, D. C., April 20.

[Mr. Bynum is something of a simpleton, or else he thinks the News is. Of course he is safe in challenging us to produce a letter of his making an appointment which he did not keep. We recorded the assertions of a great number of angry and disappointed men that he had promised to see them and failed. We took their word for it. We are not quite willing to take Mr. Bynum's word to the contrary.—Editor the News.]

The next surveyor of the port of Indianapolis will be John Rail. This, it is said, has been practically decided by Congressman Bynum, with whom the appointment lies absolutely, the federal constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. He has no education, and the Journal has shown in the past that the degree of his illiteracy is sufficient to bar him out of any place of trust requiring business ability. He was engineer at the water-works pumping station for a long while, and has lately been employed by the Electric Lighting Company, at work but little better than common unskilled labor. Talking with a prominent democrat yesterday, a Journal reporter heard him say: "Rail is absolutely unqualified for the place. He has no property interests, and there has been no call in his life for him to acquire the commonest rules of business. He would not know what a 'sehedool,' as he would pronounce it, is, much less understand it."—Indianapolis Journal, April 17.

Congressman Bynum said that he proposed to name John Rail as his choice for the appointment of collector of customs of the Indianapolis port, and announced that he would make the recommendation at a date long since passed. The fight against Rail has become so pronounced that the congressman has become alarmed and it is said is trying to figure out some way to let go. Maurice Donnelly is practically out of the race, and Smith Myers does not have much hope. But John A. Reaume is making an earnest fight for it. He left for Washington a few days ago and carried with him a formidable bundle of papers containing charges against Rail. Among the documents is a verbatim copy of a resolution introduced in the board of aldermen by Mr. Rail, when a member of that body, in which he is said to have used some eccentric orthography. Rail and his friends, however, do not seem to be at all frightened, and are sending in strong denials of the charges made against the candidate. They feel satisfied that Rail will receive the appointment.—Indianapolis News, May 15.

Albert Lieber, who went to Washington several days ago, saw Congressman Bynum, of course, and had a little talk with him.

"Did he intimate who will be appointed collector of customs here?"

"He says John Rail will be appointed. The protests that have been forwarded, he says, will not affect that situation any."—Indianapolis News, May 22.

There is much talk among Indianapolis democrats over what is regarded as the endeavor of Congressman Bynum to put all of the responsibility for the attempt to remove Postmaster Thompson upon Senator Turpie. It is said by members of the party that the effort to have Mr. Thompson removed originated with Mr. Bynum, and that while he was at home a few weeks ago he assisted in getting into shape the charges against Mr. Thompson. Democrats say that now, when it looks as though the effort would be a failure, Mr. Bynum desires to throw the responsibility upon Senator Turpie; that Senator Turpie has taken little, if any, interest in the attempt to have Mr. Thompson removed, and that all the scheming has been done by Congressman Bynum, assisted by Senator Voorhees.—Indianapolis News, May 24.

The Hancock Democrat calls for the retirement of Congressman Bynum in this district, speaking of him as "a would-be deputy President or patronage boss of the worst type," who "has outlived his usefulness in congress, and is unfit to properly represent the people."—Indianapolis News, June 2.

Congressman Bynum has recommended Franc Harbitt for postmaster of Elwood.—Indianapolis News, April 29.

After a long struggle the Elwood postmastership is settled, and Francis M. Harbit is the successful man. The scramble after that position here has been one that has caused much enmity between the different factions of the democratic party. Candidates for the office were James Parsons, who held the office under a former democratic administration; "Dock" Peed, David DeHarity and Francis Harbit. Mr. Bynum was deluged with correspondence against Harbit by different democrats who did not want to award honors to Harbit. But all to no avail. Bynum had given his promise.—Elwood Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, May 25.

Mr. Bynum has recommended Eugene Lewis for postmaster of Greenfield at the request of nearly all the active democrats of the county. Lewis is editor of the Greenfield Herald, but it is understood he is to give it up. It will probably be consolidated with the Hancock Democrat in the interest of democratic harmony. Mr. Bynum has also recommended for appointment for postmasters in Madison county, F. M. Harbett at Elwood, W. J. Cunningham at Alexandria, William Wright at Frankton.—Indianapolis Sentinel, May 4.

There are more presidential post-offices in Madison county than in any other county in the country. Anderson, Alexandria, Elwood, Pendleton and Frankton all pay over $1,000 a year. Pendleton and Frankton, while not actually presidential offices at present, will be made so at the next quarterly settlement. With the appointment of Harbett at Elwood and Cunningham at Alexandria to day, these five big offices all pass over into democratic hands. The Anderson office was the first one in the country to be filled by the present administration. Mr. Bynum has done well for Madison. It was through his untiring work that this change was accomplished.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 24.

Mr. Bynum also secured the appointment of J. D. Compton of Indianapolis as carpenter of the treasury department; salary, $1,000. Compton is an old soldier, and was backed by the democratic soldiers' and carpenters' union.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 29.

Several appointments have been made and charged the seventh district for which Representative Bynum is not responsible. The appointment of James Neal to-day for special inspector of customs is among the number. This appointment was secured by Colonel Dick Bright, Senators Voorhees and Turpie, and Mr. Bynum wants it distinctly understood that he refused to indorse the application. Under President Cleveland's former administration he was steamboat inspector.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 16.

Congressman Bynum is so much interested in the controversy over the Indianapolis post-office and surveyorship that he will not leave the capital for some time yet. He will probably be here during most of the month of July.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 13.

CONN'S

Congressman Conn, of Elkhart, reached Washington late this afternoon, having arranged the post-office matters in his district. He went at once to Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Maxwell, and submitted a list of recommendations. Mr. Conn will remain here for some time.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 13.

Congressman Conn's action in withdrawing his recommendations for fifty-four fourth-class postmasters yesterday, because Fourth Assistant Maxwell said that the congressional recommendation was not necessarily final, will not be receded from. He said to-day: "Mr. Maxwell told me when I first presented my indorsements that they would be acted upon. Yesterday he saw fit to go back on this ruling. I will now file all applications with him and he can settle the matter to suit himself. I will indorse nobody."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 15.

Congressman Conn has decided to settle every postoffice in his district, cross-roads and all, by election. He has recommended candidates for all the fourth-class offices in the district, but upon being informed that his recommendations would not be considered unless accompanied with petitions he withdrew his indorsements, and will let the department settle the contests among the applicants. He will advise his constituents to hold elections and file the papers with the department. He will make no recommendations.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 18.

Headman Maxwell has descended from his altitudinous perch and is groveling before Representative Conn, of Elkhart. A couple of days ago it was related by a Journal special how Mr. Maxwell refused to respect the old custom of permitting the majority congressmen to name fourth-class postmasters in their districts without filing petitions from the patrons of the offices, and how Mr. Conn withdrew fifty-two of his recommendations and declared that rather than be held responsible for these appointments and not be allowed to name them himself he preferred to let the whole business rest with his constituents.

Late last night Mr. Maxwell called upon Mr. Conn. They were closeted for an hour or more. This morning Mr. Conn called at the post-office department. Smiles wreathed his cleanly shave face. "I have resubmitted all of my recommendations for appointments," said he, "and am assured that my recommendations will be respected. Mr. Maxwell assures me that he will hereafter follow the recommendations of democratic congressmen and hold them responsible for the appointments. I shall not now ask my constituents to hold elections and choose postmasters. I will name them."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 20.

Returns from Congressman Conn's fourth-class postmaster indorsements are coming in. His hand may be seen in the list for to-day in Indiana. All the appointments were made to supply vacancies caused by resignation, except at Sumption, where the vacancy came about through the death of the incumbent. The new postmasters are as follows:—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 27.

Representative Conn intends to go with Mr. O. M. Packard to Controller Eckles to-morrow, and talk about the Indiana bank examinership. Mr. Conn is confident that Mr. Packard will get the position, and soon. It may be determined this week, as pressure is being brought to secure early action.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 25.

[Packard got the place.]

Representative Conn, Col. Johnson and Editor Starr of the Goshen News leave for Indiana to-morrow. Mr. Conn says he is doing fairly well as regards post-office appointments for his district, still the changes are not being made as rapidly as he would like. There are four postmasters against whom he has filed charges who will be removed in a few days, he believes.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 25.

Representative Conn is another new member who has been active and successful. Two of the four removals to-day, were from his district, Plymouth and New Carlisle, in St. Joseph county.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 24.

COOPER'S.

The senate's confirmation of the appointment of Isaac Holton as postmaster at Plainfield has torn up the local democracy, because it was regarded as an unfortunate appointment and because it means that Congressman Cooper has a pull and his men are being located as fast as possible. The most bitter fight was waged against Holton. He has not lived in Plainfield long, his conduct has not, at all times, been approved by the people, and last Wednesday, on which day his name was sent to the senate, he was in Danville engaged in giving bond on five indictments charging him with allowing minors to play pool in the establishment which he formerly conducted in Plainfield.—Danville Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 18.

Congressman Cooper this morning had his grip packed for home, but the fifth district office-seekers here coaxed him to remain another week to help them out.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 19.

Congressman Cooper sent the following names for postmasters: J. A. Lewis, St. Louis (Crossing); J. M. Osborn, Petersburg; Bartholemew Hunter, Maysville, Putnam county; Charles Ballard, Monroe, Morgan county.—Indianapolis Sentinel, May 4.

Congressman Cooper has recommended Otis Henderson for postmaster at Stilesville, Hendricks county.—Columbus Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 14.

Congressman Cooper left for Indiana to-day after visiting the departments. Of 192 fourth-class postmasters in Mr. Cooper's district, all but ten republican incumbents have been succeeded by democrats. Of the presidential offices four out of nine are now in the hands of democrats.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 3.

The hostility to Joseph G. McPheeters, postmaster at this city, manifested by the vicious manner of his removal on charges of immorality, after the postmaster-general had declared the charges of offensive partisanship insufficient, is still felt by the greedy gang who, for place, are willing to become assassins of character. The furniture and equipment of the Bloomington post-office is the finest in southern Indiana, of offices of like grade. When the retiring postmaster found that the incoming administration contemplated the buying of other furniture, he made an offer of the entire equipment for less than half price. After the late election the threat was freely made on the streets that "McPheeters would have an office left on his hands," and the new postmaster made good the threat by contracting for another equipment Friday. All decent democrats in this place are outspoken in their condemnation of what they do not hesitate to call an "indecent proceeding." The petty political spite that would seek to smirch the character and then injure the outgoing administration is a degradation of the public service which every honorable man will condemn. The people of all parties believe that John R. East and his son Rufus have made a serious blunder in the beginning of their official life, and that before four years have gone by their defeat will be overwhelming and their mortification complete.—Bloomington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, May 2.

Two of the three democratic presidential postmasters were appointed to-day for Indiana to supersede republicans removed for cause. The republican postmasters of Bloomington and Bluffton had each three months longer to serve, but they are removed upon charges preferred against them of offensive partisanship. Postmaster McPheeters of Bloomington was charged with having destroyed political supplements to democratic papers during the campaign of 1890, and in the last election while making a tour of the county ostensibly to inspect country post-offices, he distributed republican campaign literature and put in most of his time organizing the g. o. p. He hung up in the post-offices, much to the disgust of self-respecting patrons, outlandish pictures of Cleveland with all sorts of ridiculous descriptions. Rufus H. East, the new postmaster, is a young man who has been deputy county clerk for two years, and is a son of John R. East, a well known lawyer. East was highly recommended by the business men and patrons generally. The editors of the two democratic papers, the Courier and World, united on East.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 20.

Mr. McPheeters' term of office would not have expired for almost a year, and it is the universal testimony of patrons of the office, regardless of party, that the office was conducted strictly on a business basis and according to law. But a compact had been made, as early as last Christmas, which, to be carried out, required that the Bloomington office be vacated at once. Senator Voorhees has a niece here who is one his special favorites, and the senator was anxious for her to have a position, and it was, therefore, agreed that if he would assist Congressman Cooper to get Edwin Corr in as assistant United States attorney, he, in return, would appoint R. H. East, postmaster, and he, in return, would make his favorite niece the assistant. To this end Cooper and Voorhees worked. They filed charges of offensive partisanship, one of them being that the republican postmaster had placed cartoons of Cleveland and his wife in the office, and other charges equally false. All these failed, however, and word comes from Washington that Voorhees finally demanded the removal on a charge of immorality, followed by the statement that the charges were of such a nature as to be unfit for publication. This is the grossest fabrication, as there is not a citizen of Bloomington but believes him to be a man of upright Christian character. All of this again shows the complete control of Voorhees in Indiana affairs, and his unscrupulous methods of dealing in political matters.—Bloomington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 25.

HAMMOND'S.

John J. Young was appointed a meat inspector at Hammond to-day. Salary, $1,000. He was recommended by Congressman Hammond.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 18.

Pursuant to notice given by the chairman of the democratic county central committee, a post-office election was held here yesterday. Of the 289 votes polled, John M. Turner received 288. Gustave Lowe, a wealthy cattle dealer, who recently moved to town, has the recommendation of Congressman Hammond for postmaster, and the election yesterday was an effort by his opponents to set aside the congressional choice. Lowe declined to enter the contest, claiming that such proceedings were not properly authorized. It is presumed that he feels secure in the recommendation of Congressman Hammond. On the other hand Mr. Turner is distantly related to Senator Turpie, besides which he is an intimate personal friend, and it is conjectured that this relationship may have brought about the election as a means by which to head off Lowe.—Monticello Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 17

John Turner, who was appointed by the President yesterday postmaster at Monticello, was not recommended by Representative Hammond, who represents that district. Mr. Hammond recommended A. Low and felt confident of success a week ago when assured that the senators would not interfere. The fight against Mr. Hammond's man was conducted by Judge Reynolds and ex United States Attorney Sellers. * * * This fight was precipitated by a county factional fight which originated in the repairs of the court-house, ordered by Judge Reynolds, the Monticello Democrat opposing the expenditure. Turner, the postmaster, is a nephew of Mr. Turpie.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 24.

The overruling of Congressman Hammond by Postmaster-General Bissell, in the matter of the appointment of a postmaster at Monticello, has created the greatest stir among democratic politicians in this congressional district that has been known since the election. Gustavus Lowe was a delegate to the convention that nominated Hammond. White county was the last county called, and one vote was all that was needed to nominate Hammond. Lowe gave it and Hammond was nominated. As a reward Lowe was recommended for postmaster at Monticello, but the announcement of the recommendation stirred up a great muss.—Delphi Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 27.

BROWN'S.

Jason Brown is very well pleased over the success he is having in turning the republican postmasters out, and appointing democrats to the vacancies in his district. Out of ten appointments for Indiana to-day Mr. Brown secured five for his district. The list of Indiana appointments is as follows:—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 25.

Mr. Walter B. Godfrey having resigned the post-office at New Albany, Ind., his resignation to take effect July 1, Congressman Jason B. Brown has recommended Charles W. Schindler to succeed him.—Washington Dispatch, May 4.

Representative Brown will leave for Indiana tomorrow. Since his return here he has decapitated nearly all the republican fourth-class postmasters in his district and reorganized the county medical boards. The presidential offices in his district are filled by republicans, good till January, although they have all been in office four years already. Mr. Brown is anxious to have them ousted to make room for good democrats.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 8.

The Hon. Jason Brown, congressman for the third district, was in the city yesterday. Mr. Brown was asked what he thought of the policy being pursued by the postmaster-general in the case of the Indianapolis office. He said:

"According to a letter which I received from Mr. Bissell I believe the present postmaster will hold until his commission expires. The postmasters at New Albany, Madison and Salem, three points in my district, were appointed during a vacation of congress in the summer of 1889, and were not commissioned until January of 1890. I wrote to the postmaster-general asking if these men were to be allowed to remain in office until their commissions were four years old or if they could not be removed when they had been four years in the office, and Mr. Bissell replied that unless some charges could be brought against the men they must remain four years from the date of their commissions. Since then, however, the Madison postmaster has held two or three alleged civil service examinations, in which he had a lot of republican clerks for judges, and which resulted in the appointment of republicans. I think I can make this the basis of a charge upon which he can be removed. The others, I suppose, will have to stay until January. I think the President ought to revoke this ruling, which was made by President Harrison after he had been defeated for re-election, which shows plainly that it was done simply to lengthen the official lives of a lot of republican office-holders."—Indianapolis Sentinel, May 30.

TAYLOR'S.

Representative Taylor visited the government printing office to-day for the first time. He came out with a commission for Miss Lucy Simmons of Boonville, Warrick county, who will have a nine-hundred dollar job during the next four years unless she gets married. There are half a dozen voters in her family, all democrats, and hers will be the first office held by a member of the family. Ex-Senator Fankner of Ripley county, who is now assisting Senator Voorhees in his department routine work, discovered the vacancy.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 4.

Congressman Taylor will leave for home tomorrow. He was before the civil service commission yesterday and secured a postponement of the civil service examination at Evansville until the 20th inst., when the commission will send representatives out to take charge. Representations had been made to Mr. Taylor that the republican officials in the Evansville office refused to supply blanks to democrats. Congressman Taylor also called at the department of justice and filed charges against Samuel Kercheval, of Rockport, inspector of United States courts. He requested, also, the appointment of Anthony Stevenson in his place.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 4.

The first victim singled out by Representative Taylor, of the first district, for the ax of headman Maxwell was W. F. Hudson of Patoka, Gibson county, a man who was mustered out of the Eightieth Indiana with broken health, and who has been an excellent postmaster. His successor is an able bodied young democrat.—Indianapolis Journal, May 11.

Representative Taylor is a new member. He will not take his seat until fall, but he has accomplished much. He came here in February, long before he was on the pay-roll, to prevent the confirmation of two republican postmasters at Cannelton and Tell City, which became presidential offices after the election. He succeeded, and two democrats were appointed as soon as President Cleveland returned to the White House. He remained here until he had the assurance that the Evansville and Rockport partisan postmasters were removed. Meantime, he cleaned out the fourth-class post-offices of republicans.

Congressman Taylor will leave for Evansville in a few days. He called on Attorney-General Olney this morning in the interest of Anthony Stevenson, of Rockport, who desires to succeed Samuel Kercheval as examiner of federal courts. Congressman Taylor believes Mr. Stevenson has a good show of appointment.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 3.

Nolan, however, did not receive the appointment on account of his services to the labor organizations—but for the simple reason that as a delegate to the congressional convention he threw a certain number of votes to A. H. Taylor, when the Posey county delegation deserted that gallant Union soldier, Col. A. D. Owen, and thus aided in securing the nomination for our accidental friend.—Mt. Vernon Democrat, May 26.

McNAGNY'S.

William Meyer, jr., this evening received a letter from Congressman McNagney of this district, stating that he had decided to recommend W. W. Rockhill, proprietor of the Fort Wayne Journal, for postmaster of this city. Mr. Meyer was a candidate for the position and the contest has been a bitter one between them.—Ft. Wayne Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 24.

A sensation was caused in political circles here this evening. Congressman McNagney some time ago recommended W. W. Rockhill for appointment as postmaster of Fort Wayne. Postmaster Higgins' commission does not expire until January, '94. He took the office, however, four years ago July 8.

Yesterday Mr. Rockhill called upon Higgins and asked him to resign, his resignation to take effect July 8, at which time he would have held the office four years. Rockhill told him that charges would be preferred. Higgins at once demanded that the charges be sent to Washington and that he be confronted with them, saying he had conducted the affairs of the office faithfully and well. To-night he wrote President Cleveland and Postmaster-General Bissell asking that he be confronted with the charges. The city democratic central committee prompted Mr. Rockhill to ask for the resignation. The president, secretary and five members have preferred charges of offensive partisanship against Higgins and will ask for his dismissal before July 8. Another charge is a criticism of the manner the last civil service examination was conducted in the post-office. The charges say the examining board was purely partisan and consisted of three republican employes of the post-office and was unjust, unfair and a violation of the fundamental principles of civil service reform.

Higgins has taken a firm stand and says he will act as postmaster till his commission expires in January, 1894, unless peremptorily dismissed by the President.—Pt. Wayne Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 19.

VOORHEES'S AND TURPIE'S.

Hughes East, formerly of Indiana, but now of South Dakota, has been appointed assistant custodian of the agricultural department at $1,600 a year. He was private secretary to Vice-President Hendricks, and after the latter's death was appointed receiver of the land office at Yankton, S. D. His appointment was requested by Senator Kyle and recommended by Senators Voorhees and Turpie.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 4.

William M. Moss, editor of the Bloomfield Democrat and member of the state committee, has applied for the office of superintendent of Indian schools. To-morrow he will have an interview with the President and Senators Voorhees and Turpie will be present to urge his appointment.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 18.

Senator Voorhees has been feeling badly for a few days and has not been able to get around much in quest of office for Hoosier friends.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 25.

It is now conceded that the Indiana bank examiner'ship is practically settled in favor of Orlando M. Packard of Plymouth. Indeed, he has no serious opposition save that caused by Congressman Holman's persistent advocacy of Pugh of Rushville, in spite of the generous treatment accorded the former by both Senators Voorhees and Turpie at Mr. Holman's urgent request, in permitting him to name Capt. Bracken for internal revenue collector of the sixth district. Bracken will have the naming of about one hundred and fifty subordinate officers from Holman's district. The latter expressed himself satisfied at the time, but soon began the fight for Pugh, claiming the bank examiner also for his district—all this in face of the fact that northern Indiana has not yet received a single important appointment, and that all the other local state appointments have gone elsewhere.

It is well understood here that Senators Voorhees and Turpie are not pleased regarding Mr. Holman's attitude in this matter. This morning Senator Voorhees, in spite of his severe rheumatic illness, accompanied by Senator Turpie, Representative Conn and Mr. Packard, had a satisfactory interview with Comptroller Eckles at the treasury department. Mr. Packard's claims for the position were eloquently pleaded by both senators and Mr. Conn on the ground of fitness and also for political and geographical reasons.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, April 28.

Orlando M. Packard, of Plymouth, Ind., was yesterday appointed national bank examiner for Indiana. Packard was elected as an out-and-out Cleveland delegate to Chicago last year after a hard fight.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 29.

There is considerable comment here among Indiana politicians who understand the inside workings of the Hoosier political machine, at the statement put forward by friends of the Indiana senators, that they are dissatisfied because Congressman Holman opposed the appointment of O. M. Packard, of Plymouth, as bank examiner. Senator Voorhees's friends make the claim that he conceded to Mr. Holman the nomination of Wm. Bracken, of Franklin county, as collector of internal revenue. As a matter of fact everybody conversant with the Indiana situation here knows that Congressman Holman, much against his own inclinations, was forced to support Bracken, and that in bringing this about Senator Voorhees played no small part. Congressman Holman was in favor of the appointment of Dr. Hunter, of Lawrenceburgh. Early in the fight Bracken's friends came to Washington and read the riot act to Mr. Holman. They told him that if he did not support Bracken for revenue collector, they would see that he was defeated for renomination for congress, and they even threatened to put Bracken forward as a candidate. Senator Voorhees seemed to enjoy the embarrassment of Congressman Holman and contributed to it. He invited him to his committee-room to a conference in presence of Bracken's friends, and then and there wrung from him an indorsement of Bracken. Congressman Holman found that he could either indorse Mr. Bracken as a matter of self-preservation politically, or put himself in the attitude of opposing a man from his own district who had the senatorial indorsements. Everybody conversant with the Indiana situation knows that Congressman Holman was brought reluctantly to the support of Bracken, who is the candidate of the slate-makers, and the statement that Bracken's appointment was conceded to Holman is very amusing. Up to date Congressman Holman has received nothing from the state machine, except his local medical examiners and postmasters.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 30.

The resignation of seventeen republican fourth-class postmasters in Indiana were received to-day, and as many democrats appointed to their places. The appointments were for the sixth and ninth congressional districts, and were made upon the recommendations of Senators Voorhees and Turpie. They were as follows:

Advance, Boone county, H. M. Coulter, vice J. H. Sublett; Atlanta, Hamilton county, J. N. Spidel, vice James LaFever; Cleero, Hamilton county, Albert Slack, vice J. A. Hall; Daleville, Delaware county, C. W. Fletcher, vice J. N. Barnard; Edna Mills, Clinton county, Jerome Shigley, vice Frederick Geiger; Gaston, Delaware county, J. W. Jones, vice J. W. Hannan; Harrisville, Randolph county, William Ackles, vice J. B. Fortenbaugh; Hobbs, Tipton county, C. Warne, vice M. M. Hobbs; Max, Boone county, G. E. Adams, vice Shelby Harrod; Oakford, Howard county, C. M. Raudolph, vice J. G. Martin; Oakville, Delaware county, C. A. Fleming, vice Mary A. Fleming; Rainsville, Warren county, Jacob Brown, vice F. M. Jones; Reed, Delaware county, C. M. Curtis, vice Rachel Newhouse; Royalton, Boone county, T. E. Sanders, vice E. M. Strawmeyer; Spiceland, Henry county, H. G. Yergin, vice E. C. Bogue; Straughn, Henry county, Dill Waddell, vice J. W. Haskett; Sycamore, Howard county, J. F. Saxon, vice O. P. Hollingsworth.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 30.

Several months ago a popular election was held by the democracy of Russiaville, looking to determining a choice for postmaster, and Samuel Hudson was chosen. L. M. McDaniel, John Gifford and C. W. Jones were the other candidates. Mr. Hart refused to submit his name to this election, and it developed that he builded better than his competitors, as he had the indorsement of both Voorhees and Turpie, and was a sure winner.—Indianapolis News, May 2.

Senator Voorhees walked proudly out of the treasury department this morning bearing "Charley" Hedges' official head aloft to the yelling delegates of the Hoosier democratic contingent.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 8.

Senator Voorhees called on Postmaster-general Bissell to-day in regard to the removal of Postmaster Thompson, of Indianapolis, but secured no definite promise of immediate action.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, May 10.

To-day Senators Voorhees and Turpie called upon Secretary Carlisle with Mr. Thomas, of Rushville, who wants to succeed General Rosecrans as register of the treasury. Thomas is a prominent farmer, and stumped Indiana for Cleveland.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 11.

Captain Allen, the newly-appointed state tax commissioner, arrived home yesterday from Washington, where he went, he says, to thank Senator Voorhees for the kindness shown him when recently an applicant for the place of pension agent for this state. "I asked the senator," said he yesterday, to a Journal reporter, "who would be appointed to this position. He said it would go to some man in the northern part of the state, and none other would be considered. He asked me why I did not stick to my first choice, and said that I could have had it; that he had promised it to me. I thanked him, of course, and told him I would reciprocate his favors whenever I could. I also saw Senator Turpie, and he told me he was staying in Washington to see that the post-office at this place was disposed of as he desired. He said that he would not come home until the appointment is made. That is all that keeps him in Washington now, and I take it that he means to see that a change is made in the Indianapolis post-office as soon as he can."—Indianapolis Journal, May 16.

James I. Parker, of Tipton, Ind., who was yesterday appointed law clerk in the interior department, was a member of the legislature that elected Senator Turpie in 1885. He was Turpie's first private secretary, then became law clerk of the land office during President Cleveland's first term. He was mayor of Tipton until the republicans captured that town.—Indianapolis News, May 19.

Indiana is a remarkable exception to the rule of the comparative modesty of the North and West. Senators Voorhees and Turpie have remained in the federal city since the adjournment of the senate's extraordinary session, and have been both faithful and zealous in pressing the multitudinous claims of their constituents. Representatives, Bynum, Cooper and Brookshire have returned and had frequent audiences with the President and members of the cabinet. Congressman Taylor is now on his way here, and will contribute his mite toward securing proper official recognition for Indiana.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 29.

The case of Bert Kelly, of Terre Haute, is very annoying to Senator Voorhees. This is the man who acquitted himself so discredibly at the end of the last administration, but he has been hanging on to the local politicians of Terre Haute, and is making things very unpleasant right now for Senator Voorhees by ringing the latter's door-bell at most unseasonable hours of the night and asking for political indorsements for various treasures that are inclosed in the Blue Book. A happy thought struck the senator a few days ago, and the Indiana politicians all concurred in it. It has been decided to offer Mr. Kelly a position outside of Indiana, where he can be of more use to the democratic party than at home. Kelly seems to concur, also, in the idea, and Senator Voorhees is now trying to convince the interior department that Mr. Kelly would make an excellent man to attach to one of the Indian bureaus.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 18.

Senator Turpie returned from Washington yesterday. He is in the best of health and spirits and talked to a Sentinel reporter on various interesting topics in his usual candid and cordial manner. Referring to the Indiana offices and office-seekers he said: "The time since the adjournment of congress has been largely occupied in preparing and presenting candidacies for various appointments. I believe that in cases pending the work has been fully done up to the point of decision and awaits now only the action of the appointing power. In cases not immediately pending much work has also been done, but as vacancies do not occur in these for many months, future attention will be given them. This work has been cheerfully done by all members of the democratic delegation in congress from Indiana. It has involved the examination of much correspondence, a mass of papers on file, numerous personal interviews and careful consideration. We have served all, but it is impossible that all can be appointed. We have tried to give every applicant a fair chance in the canvass for appointments. Some of the places will not be filled until the next session—or until the beginning of the next year—but when the roll is completed no section of the state will be found neglected."—Indianapolis Sentinel, June 1.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils, civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefit already gained through this instrumentality and the further usefulness it promises entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

LAST month we gave some facts relating to meat inspection at Indianapolis. As a friend of the CHRONICLE expressed it, "there is hardly a boy's work" here. A dispatch to the Indianapolis News of June 24th says:

Senators Voorhees and Turpie have recommended a large number of applicants for appointment as meat inspectors at Indianapolis under the bureau of animal industry, and have been complaining at the delay of Secretary Morton in appointing their candidates.

Here is another added to the ten thousand evidences of the swindling worthlessness of the men whom Indiana now has in congress. It was well known that there is, and has been, and, so far as can be seen, will be almost nothing to do in meat inspection here. The total cost of meat inspection at Indianapolis for the eleven months ending May 31, 1893, was $5,654.08, while the total meat exports were $2,264. Yet Voorhees and Turpie find fault because some more of their henchmen are not given places. Nothing could more plainly show the character of their public service. Nominally they are working for the interests of the people; but such facts as these show that they are reckless of the interests of the people. We renew our suggestion that inspection be paid for per hog. This would forthwith reduce the retinue at Indianapolis to one person, who would be his own tagger and microscopist, and he would have much time to spare.

It seems the four democratic congressmen from the northern part of Indiana, and of course some workers who have yet to work for a living, are dissatisfied with the division of spoil. Congressman Hammond, for instance, "has nothing to show except a string of meat inspectors and his postmasters." Congressman Conn "has not so much as a bureau chief put down to his credit." The CHRONICLE has given much space to the siege which Congressman Martin carried on to get Jerome Herff a consulship, "but Mr. Herff has received no recognition." It is the old story. These congressmen, utterly false to their party word, pay no attention to their duties as congressmen but spend their time in a scramble for spoil to give to followers who will set up primaries and conventions for them next year. Some other counterfeits, also going under the title of congressmen, have got the start of them. That is all there is of it. The people are not disturbed; they are always glad when a spoils-hunter is discomfited, and they are dissatisfied when one, like Voorhees, succeeds. No President ever has nor ever can divide patronage without stirring up quarrels and fights and weakening himself and his party. The wonder is that any more lessons should be needed to teach our Presidents that. In this complaint found in the Indianapolis News of July 1, it is said that Allen county has received from President Cleveland only its local spoil, while a formidable and correct list is given of the spoil allotted by President Harrison to that county. It includes a Mississippi river commissioner, a Utah commissioner, the consul to Leipsic, a special treasury agent and a dozen other like plums. Then follows this remarkable statement: "In Allen county, last fall, Mr. Cleveland ran three hundred votes ahead of his ticket." How much more evidence will it take, in view of the last three presidential elections, to convince our higher appointing officers that the complaint of a few politicians is not the complaint of the people, and that the man who divides the most spoil is the man who runs behind his ticket?

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Indianapolis News of June 22, says:

The Muncie board of pension examiners has at last been filled by the appointment of Drs. Edgar A. Shields and Henry N. Winans, of Muncie, and W. S. Brandox, of Daleville. This board was agreed upon in May, but a protest was made by certain Muncie democrats against the appointment of Dr. Edgar A. Shields, alleging that he was not an orthodox democrat. The senators made an investigation of Dr. Shield's democracy, and have found him fully equipped politically for the position.

Bringing a wholly unlawful element to be the controlling power in selections for office is the only capacity which our Indiana senators have ever developed. They, with men who masquerade as congressmen from this state, have thoroughly disgraced the state and made her an object of contempt and a by-word throughout the country. The purging of the pension list is the work most dangerous to itself which this administration has undertaken to do. What inconceivable stupidity to mock the country with pension boards selected upon such principles! How many times does a man have to be elected President before he learns that a congressman is wholly selfish—that the petty officers of his community working to continue him in place, he will make of such stress that he will bring it about if he wrecks every scheme of reform, however necessary and widespread? For no other object he wrecked Mr. Cleveland's first administration, and he has made a good start toward wrecking his second.

THE New York Times, of June 21, says of the self-debauchment of congressmen by patronage:

They tend to become double-faced, tricky, bullying on the one hand, sneaking and cowardly on the other. They are continually guilty of deception, of evasion, of chicane and intrigue, which in business life they would scorn. They come to have one standard of conduct in private life and another and much lower standard in politics. They do not hesitate to betray their trust as legislators and use their power to grant or withhold appropriations in order to influence the executive departments or to attempt to influence the President himself to advance their personal or factional interests. It is useless to point out that this is all unconstitutional. They know that perfectly well if they stop to think of it at all.

Two congressmen, Senator Butler, of South Carolina and Representative Everett, of Massachusetts, have asserted their manhood. Meanwhile, our Indiana congressmen fight at the trough, and in the columns of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE make voluminous, accessible and mortifying history, which their descendants, and perhaps in their old age some of themselves, would give a great deal to have blotted out.

AT THE recent meeting of the National League Mr. Frank M. Loomis, of the Buffalo association, vigorously denounced the state authorities of New York for disregarding and cheating the civil service law of that state. Mr. Loomis, who is a democrat, is for civil service reform without any humbug about it; which is in fact an established characteristic of the Buffalo association. He met with a good deal of opposition, some of it contemptuous. Particularly notable in the League meeting was the speech of a New York civil service commissioner, setting forth the glories and good faith of Governor Flower's administration. The result of the discussion was that June 28th, Mr. Loomis and others met in Albany and formed a state civil service reform league. This league was rapidly getting into position to try conclusions in the courts with Tammany civil service reform, but note the result: July 5th, Governor Flower calls upon the state commission to know whether any appointments have been made contrary to the law. On the same day the commission replies that it has discovered one hundred and fifty-four "seeming violations" of the law besides a number of other violations. It also says that it has reduced the one hundred and fifty-four to thirty-four, but it does not see how it can go any further. Perhaps a lesson or two from the very excellent courts of New York may show them a way.

THE Carlises, father and son, are briskly continuing their work of turning the "indispensables" out of the treasury service, "no matter what the mugwumps say." They recently went to Chicago, but just before starting they called for the resignations of five chiefs of divisions. One of these, Mr. Rathbone, has doubtless saved the country millions of dollars by his efficiency and his integrity, and his dismissal, like that of Mr. Stetson, of recent date, acts in direct aid of the claim agents and lobbyists of Washington. Secretary Carlisle evidently means to challenge the independent element of the country. Other men in high place have done that but, in the long run, it did not profit them; they suffered great humiliation, but the principles of the independents went marching on. Meanwhile the question is pertinent, if this is a civil service reform administration, as it promised to be in its platform and its campaign text-book, why are not the headships of divisions put under the civil service rules? Ten lines from the President would do it.

IN THE New York Times of June 28, Postmaster Dayton, of that city says:

"When I find a man that I do not want to continue in the service I shall remove him, and in filling the place a democrat will surely get the preference."

This remark probably refers to the 140 places, the most important in the office, which are not under the rules. But suppose such a remark should be made by Chauncey M. Depew regarding the service of the New York Central. The country would take it as proof of softening of the brain. Stockholders would apply for a receiver, to get rid of such a president until a new one could be elected. Every lawyer with an action for damages received under such a service would have what is known in the west as a "ground-hog case."

POLITICIANS who do not want good reasons for changes have always maintained that it was not practicable to make a record of them. A few officers like Postmaster Corse and Collector Saltonstall, of Boston, found it easy and profitable to keep such a public record. Secretary Lamont also has no difficulty, and his action has called forth the following deserved declaration of appreciation:

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM ASSOCIATION, }
56 WALL ST., NEW YORK, June 22, 1893. }

MY DEAR SIR: I am instructed by the executive committee of the Civil Service Reform Association of New York to express to you their hearty appreciation and approval of your action in filing and making public the reasons for the removals and alterations in grade in the clerical force in your department.

The members of the committee look upon this action as a forward step of the first importance.

Yours very respectfully,

WILLIAM POTTS, Secretary.

The Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR GORMAN, who did more than any other man, except Voorhees, to wreck Mr. Cleveland's first administration, is still "on deck." Sixty democrats from his state called upon him some weeks ago in regard to spoils and he stated Gormanism to them in the following concise manner:

It is my purpose, and the purpose of the whole Maryland delegation, to serve deserving democrats. It is only by such means that we have built up such a party organization in Maryland—an organization that is not surpassed by any state in the union, and which was begun here immediately after the war. The men who have contributed to the success the party has achieved are the men whom we wish to see rewarded, and none others need apply.

He omitted to state that in his party organization, murderers, thieves, and black-legs of all descriptions are favorites, but in general his statement is correct. Government, in Maryland, is Gorman with a gang of heelers who set up primaries and conventions for him and are paid out of the public treasury.

THE facts of the present onslaught upon the offices should not be lost sight of. The people of this country are not making it. There is a fringe of congressmen who are looking out for their own continuance in place, and are therefore buying with offices the support of a considerably larger fringe of vicious local politicians. This is the whole situation, and to this pressure the administration slowly yields. The only times so far that Mr. Cleveland has, in civil service matters, had the approbation of the country were such as when he defied the Tammany bosses, and when he "stood off" the office-hunting crowd before his inauguration, and at the times since when it seemed that he was going to overthrow the spoils system.

IT IS a humiliating sign of the deterioration of American public morals, that so many are indifferent to, or openly advocate the propriety of the suggestion that President Cleveland purchase with offices the votes of mercenary congressmen for the repeal of the silver-purchase act. The protest against this suggestion can not be too loud nor too earnest, and we are surprised that the pulpit and the religious press are silent. It can not be that they have to be told that the purchase of a congressman's vote with an office is not different from its purchase with the President's check upon the public fund, which is always at his disposal, and for which he is never called to account. It is very unfortunate that the impression has gone out, that the success of Voorhees in obtaining offices for his henchmen and relatives is due to a plan to buy his vote. We can not account for his success, but we refuse to believe that the President has, to put it mildly, departed from an honorable course. It does not matter whether or not this was necessary to secure the repeal, but in fact, it was wholly unnecessary. The financial situation has passed beyond discussion. The question whether the country will stay upon a gold basis or go upon a silver basis will not wait for a reply. And the country has made up its mind. It will stay upon a gold basis, and it is not in a mood to stand trifling from mercenary congressmen who want to be bought. The country is going to have the act under which it is compelled to buy and store the product of a private industry to keep up its price repealed, and that too without any ifs or ands about it. The seller who wants to sell and can not, the borrower who wants borrow and can not, the lender who dare not lend upon the best security, the carpenter without a house to build, the plasterer without plastering to do, the worker out of work with payments on his home coming due, every wage-earner without wages, the merchant with his diminished trade, and the man of every sort and condition, each has his eye on his congressman. Hard experience has taught the people, the least, as well as the most intelligent, what their congressmen were too busy dividing spoil to learn. They will now teach their congressmen. The latter will have to vote accordingly and that too without being bought. All the spoil under the control of the President could not change the result. The truth which the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has many times asserted again comes out plain to all the world. Whatever openly reaches into the pockets of the people, the people may be trusted to set right, but the spoils system eats its way silently until suddenly the bearings are lost. So blind are many to it that they would use it to correct an evil, which of itself makes every man smart until he turns to and helps cure it.

It is difficult to speak moderately of the situation relating to the newly classified post-offices. At Anderson, in this State, the postmaster is evidently in the course of a clean sweep. At Terre Haute, Donham who got his office after a movement disgraceful to every one who had anything to do with it, and who was himself guilty of insolent insubordination, has had his removal of a large number of employes, under the lying charge of insubordination to himself before he was postmaster, approved by the department. The President does not answer whether Donham is or is not to be removed. As the matter now stands it offers, in the hands of those who know how to use it, most effective campaign material against the administration.

At Topeka, the new postmaster, Frank S. Thomas, got the department to dismiss seventeen letter-carriers. When applied to for the reasons, First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones replied that the dismissals were made upon the recommendation of postmaster Thomas "for incompetency and violation of orders and instructions." Postmaster Thomas was then called upon to explain, and he replied that the removals "were solely for political reasons." The carriers seem to have been in every way first-class men; nine-tenths of the people of Topeka, without regard to politics, signed a statement to that effect. This lying and duplicity is one of the most noted characteristics of Russian administration. It only remains for the administration to stick to it that the Topeka carriers were removed for cause and the Russian system will be in its full perfection. These dismissals were completed before July 1st, on which date the civil service law took effect. The dismissed men were all republicans and the new appointees were all democrats.

The department has made removals in the newly classified offices generally whenever the postmasters wanted them, and in cases where it must have known that the object was to beat the civil service law. It would be interesting to know what it expects its friends to think of it for putting itself in such an indefensible position, and what excuse it expects them to make for it. Here were civil service examinations soon to be held. The result of these would be eligible lists from which appointments could be made. In the opinion of the President and of the Postmaster-General this is the best way to get employes for such vacancies. Yet postmasters are permitted to beat the best plan and give places to political heelers. A word would have prevented even an attempt of this kind, but it was not spoken. When the republicans did this four years ago it was called treachery to promises—what is it to be called now?

If the merit system were not a giant it would have been crushed long ago. After being racked through Mr. Cleveland's first administration by the Harritys and Edgertons, the law was made to include the railway mail service at a time which put the hardest possible strain upon it. The service had been filled with democrats and then the law was extended just in time to take effect and be enforced by republicans. No act could have made the law more unpopular, and the republicans in flat violation of their civil service reform promises viciously gave the merit system another wrench by turning more than two thousand men out of the service to make room for their partisans. The fair and right way would have been to have made the extension in the first year of the administration. Yet the merit system recovered from the shock and prospered. Again at the end of his term, after nearly four years of cynical indifference and hardly concealed enmity toward the reform, President Harrison, at a time which would again cause the hardest possible strain upon the law and the rules, and the reform, classified all of the free delivery offices. No act could have made the law more unpopular, for the offices classified had been filled with republicans. And now we have these offices not in the hands of friends of the merit system but of its Donhams and Thomases, who are repeating the treachery of four years ago. Yet the merit system will recover from this outrage, and will prosper while the disreputable politicians who are tricking it will soon be forgotten. Selections of employes by competition in all places except the highest is going to supplant every other system in state and national services. Nothing can stand against its democratic fairness. But is it not about time that the merit system had a fair chance? What other law is put in charge of its vicious and open enemies? How many tricks upon the customs law would be approved at Washington? For the future, the commonest principles of fair play call for the placing of the law in the hands of its friends, and for extensions to be made promptly so that they may be thoroughly established before another party comes in.

We have continued this month the course which the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has always aimed to follow. We have tried to accurately state the effect which the present line of management of the civil service produces, when judged by the standards by which ordinary business affairs are judged. To do this, an emphatic statement has been sometimes found necessary, as our columns show. But we use emphasis because the facts seem to require it, and not because we are seeking occasion for emphasis. We regret the necessity and we wish the facts were different, and we do not wish our position to be misunderstood. We believe this administration wants to do something else than merely serve party ends. We believe that the views of the President and the postmaster-general as to the final result which ought to be reached in the reform of the civil service do not differ materially from the views of the CHRONICLE. There, however, the resemblance ends. Judged by their acts, they believe that it is necessary to yield more or less to the buccaneers who prey upon the civil service. We do not; we take the ground that it is their duty to stand upon the constitution, the laws and their oath of office, and take the consequences. It is this yielding which makes necessary the unpleasant comments of the CHRONICLE, and which is causing to slip away Mr. Cleveland's last opportunity to become a great President. The treatment of the pension boards, of the newly classified offices, of the fourth-class post-offices, the failure to classify heads of divisions, the subsidizing of the press, the submission to Voorhees indicated by such appointments as Burke, Risely and Donham, and the submission to insolent bullying by congressmen are all sign-boards which can not be ignored, and which point in the direction of disaster and failure. Some friends of the CHRONICLE, to some extent, think that for the present criticism should be suspended, but others urged that all through Cleveland's first administration and all through Harrison's administration. Long experience has taught that suspension of criticism only lets the spoilmen get greater headway. The way to suspend criticism is to suspend the occurrence of the facts which call for it. Nothing, for instance, could more promote the attack upon the civil service than to keep silent about the Topeka post-office where seventeen men were dismissed upon a charge now known to be false, and yet the postmaster is left to enjoy his insolent and rascally triumph.

REFORM IN THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

We note the following dispatch in the Indianapolis News:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23.—As a result of the enormous pressure brought to bear upon the department of state, nearly one-third of the United States consuls abroad have been changed. There are about three hundred consuls in the service, but owing to the small compensation attached to a number of places, and the difficulty of securing competent persons who are willing to accept them, the number of really desirable posts, paying not less than $1,500 per annum, does not exceed 250, and of these Mr. Quincy has made changes up to June 15 in the cases of eighty-three consulates.

We looked forward to the operations of the department of state with interest and with a not unnatural expectation that here would appear the most perfect work of an administration entirely committed to the reform of the civil service. At the head of this department was Secretary Gresham who, with President Cleveland, it was said was to slough off the Voorhees-Gorman element and build up a new party out of safer elements, and who in this work would have been a host, but who as a looker-on, while Voorhees has his way, will be only one with a few unpaid ex-republican Indiana ward workers additional. The second place in the department was held by Mr. Josiah Quincy, of whom it was not possible to think as a divider of spoil, and than whom, in the line of thorough reform, which would cause consulships to cease to be subject to change at every election, Secretary Gresham could not seemingly have had a better assistant. The possibilities for future esteem for both secretary and assistant lay only in fighting the spoils system. Perhaps Judge Gresham's opportunity is not yet wholly lost. As a member of the cabinet there is yet a field in which he can put forth his well known powers against a system which, if left to go, would Mexicanize this country; but it will be long before he will recover the confidence he has lost in submitting to see the clutches of Voorhees fastened tighter upon us by such appointments as Risely and Burke, and by permitting Mr. Quincy to treat the consulships as Tammany Hall treats the offices of New York.

But Mr. Quincy has evidently burned the bridges and does not care for any other future than that which his present course will make for him. He was long, and is now, perhaps, a member of the National Civil Service Reform League and was a more or less frequent attendant upon its meetings. He had charge of the preparation and circulation of campaign literature for the national democratic committee in the campaign of 1892, and among other sagacious and useful acts he caused to be circulated 100,000 copies of the address of George W. Julian, devoted to the most severe and the most complete criticism of its violations of every phase of civil service reform which the Harrison administration ever received. We have also turned over Mr. Quincy's national democratic campaign text-book and we find there thirty-six out of three hundred and eight large and closely printed pages devoted to the subject of civil service reform. The non-extension of the classified service, the refusal to classify the employes of the census bureau, the refusal to punish the Baltimore assessment blackmailers, the use of the pension service as a political machine, the failure to repeal the four-year-term law, the removal of 50,000 fourth-class postmasters by Clarkson and other pertinent shortcomings are lashed up hill and down dale in a wholesome and refreshing manner.

Upon his appointment as assistant secretary of state, the least that Mr. Quincy could do was to move heaven and earth for the application of the wholesome system of appointment by competition to the consular service. He did not do this. He did not move for it at all; if he had, it would have been done. Instead of this, he announced in an interview printed in the New York Evening Post, that this would not be much of a civil service reform administration, after all. Then he went to work putting out consuls to make room for democrats as a reward for party service and to subsidize the press at a rate at which he will complete a clean sweep with its usual vicious accompaniments in less than a year. Mr. Quincy will find that it is easy to tarnish an honored name, but that he will make of himself only a local politician of the Clarkson stripe. It has often been wondered at by those who saw what could be done in Indiana by independent voting, that Massachusetts has not become, in national elections, a doubtful state. It is plain now. The independent voters of Massachusetts evidently know their men. They require that acts after election shall square with professions before election.

CHILDREN AND FOOLS—AND SMALL POLITICIANS—TELL THE TRUTH.

Its limited space has prevented the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE from giving those special notices which are due to fellow-workers in the journalistic field; but in Mr. Peter Pernot, until lately the special correspondent of the Indianapolis Sentinel, at Washington, an exception must be made. The CHRONICLE is heavily indebted to Mr. Pernot. Beginning with the first call of Voorhees and Turpie upon Mr. Cleveland, two days after the inauguration to demand what he was going to do about Indiana offices, and running through the long line of events such as the processions of from two to twenty led by Voorhees before the President, demanding chances at the public treasury, the triumphs of Voorhees over his fellow congressmen in the grab for loot, Congressman Conn's bullying the fourth assistant postmaster-general, Congressman Bynum's night and day work to find places for the ward workers who will help him to renomination next year, the sweeping out of worthless pension-board doctors and putting in others just as worthless, the sickness which made Voorhees for periods of hours back away from the trough, the trips of congressmen back and forth from Washington, "deciding" upon "claims" for offices, the conflicting "prerogatives" of senators, representatives, and defeated congressional candidates, the removals secured by Voorhees for "immorality," the mightiness of the offensive partisanship lever in the hands of democratic congressmen, and all the ups and downs, ins and outs, hopes and depressions of thousands of "aspirants" for chances to be quartered upon the public treasury, Mr. Pernot has innocently set forth the facts in his Sentinel dispatches with particularity and relish, seemingly unaware that he was proving our senators and representatives a contemptible set of humbugs, and that he was stripping the mantle of reform from an administration which went into office under the strongest promises not to do these very things.

These facts were promptly transferred to the columns of the CHRONICLE. We miss them now. Mr. Pernot has an office, and has left the service of the Sentinel. He has rejoiced at anything, honest or dishonest, that would give a democrat an office, and now he has his reward. It seems there are some intruders upon Cherokee lands whom the government is going to drive off, but rather paradoxically it is going to pay them for the land. Mr. Pernot is a "commissioner" to appraise this land and gets eight dollars a day and expenses. The appropriation will run out in a few months, but Mr. Pernot hopes that congress will make another. "There is enough work to keep us busy a good while," he says, which shows that he is a true commissioner. The CHRONICLE hopes no other appropriation will be made. It wants Mr. Pernot back with the Sentinel. But did Mr. S. E. Morss, now consul-general at Paris, the owner of the Sentinel, who got Mr. Pernot his place, want to get rid of him and so turned him over to the country? Did Mr. Morss feel that Mr. Pernot's facts, when put beside the last national platform, made for an exhibition of hypocrisy and phariseism, and that, as Mr. Pernot, like Voorhees, Bynum, Cooper and others had no comprehension of any other facts connected with government, to get rid of publishing the facts, he must get rid of the correspondent? Perhaps this question will never be answered.

Henry F. Libbey, postmaster at Pittsfield, Me., was first appointed in 1887, continued through the republican administration and just reappointed by President Cleveland.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

The interference of senators and representatives with nominations and minor appointments in the civil service is not only without constitutional warrant, but it is an indecent and dangerous confusion of two functions which the constitution carefully keeps distinct. The senator or representative who makes himself an office broker, to pay his own parasites from the public purse, should stand well exposed in the pillory of public contempt, and by reason of such interference should forfeit the respect of the country and the confidence and support of his constituency.—George William Curtis.

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of these United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional demands as the rule by which my official conditions must be guided.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us constrain me to remind those with whom I am to co-operate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused, and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

The total number of changes made in fourth-class post-offices in Indiana from March 4, 1893, to June 27, was 603, less than one-third the total number in the state, distributed among the congressional districts as follows:

Districts.	No. of Offices.	No. of Changes.
1.....	146	42
2.....	176	78
3.....	210	66
4.....	190	47
5.....	189	79
6.....	129	24
7.....	78	42
8.....	176	80
9.....	175	34
10.....	173	29
11.....	178	46
12.....	129	16
13.....	115	20

The number of post-offices above stated was taken from the postal guide issued January, 1893, and, therefore, does not include the changes, in the way of establishments and abolitions, since that date, but the number given in each congressional district is approximately accurate. The number of changes in postmasters was taken from the official records in the department.

The race between Congressman Bretz of the second, Cooper of the fifth, and Brookshire of the eighth, is an exceedingly close one—Cooper having secured one more appointment than Bretz, while Brookshire heads the list with one more than Cooper. Congressman Bynum leads the delegation in the highest per cent. of changes, having secured more than half the offices in the seventh district for his partisans. The sixth and ninth districts are looked after by Senators Voorhees and Turpie, while the three new members, Congressmen Hammond, McNagney and Conn, represent the tenth, twelfth and thirteenth. The older members, being well acquainted in their districts, were, no doubt, prepared to make recommendations early after the 4th of March, and were thereby enabled to secure a greater number of appointments. The number of offices in Indiana is about one-thirtieth of the total number in the whole country. The total number of changes, provided removals have been made in the same ratio in other states, has been about 18,000, which would have required the removal of about 200 per day. The changes have not averaged more than 125 per day; it is, therefore, apparent that Indiana democrats have fared better than those of other states.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 30.

TURPIE AND VOORHEES.

The Indiana democrats fared to-day at the national pie counter. Ole consul and two special examiners of the pension office were appointed and two Indiana republicans were removed. W. H. Jacks, who receives the London (Ont.) consularship, is a Logansport man, whose appointment was asked for by Senator Turpie.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 9.

Captain Jacks belongs to the labor wing of the democratic party, and during the last campaign made numerous speeches throughout the state. The agency pays a salary of $1,500 per annum.—Indianapolis News, June 8.

G. C. Williams, of Muncie, visited the capital a few days ago and made application to the Indiana senators for appointment as cashier of the government mint at New Orleans.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 5.

The appointment of Postmaster Carter, at Arcadia, Ind., has been revoked by the postmaster-general. The reasons were purely political, the indorsements of Mr. Carter having been unauthorized by the senators of Indiana, who are the post-office referees in the republican districts.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 3.

"Judge" Chester J. Faulkner, of Ripley county, and the trusted clerk of Senator Voorhees, who was slated for chief of the record division of the pension office, has shifted, and will be appointed on the staff of Col. "Dick" Bright, now sergeant-at-arms of the senate.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, May 11.

Senator Voorhees will probably secure the appointment also of Clark Creelius, of Crawford county, for chief of division in the pension office. This office is worth $2,000. Creelius has been county treasurer three terms, and was a member of the house in 1885.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 11.

William Merrill, chairman of the democratic committee of his county, will be the postmaster at Connersville. The Indiana senators have been wrestling with this postmaster problem for some time, but settled it Tuesday by deciding to recommend Mr. Merrill. Editor Higgs, of the Connersville Examiner, who was postmaster under a former democratic administration, was the most formidable rival Mr. Merrill had. Mr. Merrill left for home Tuesday night.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, April 20.

DAN VOORHEES.

[It remains to be seen whether the people of Indiana have spirit enough to drive this dishonorable blatherskite out of public life.—Civil Service Chronicle.]

Strong language this; but is it aught too strong
To paint a man who willfully is wrong,
And when he thinks the crooked course will pay
Will swear that blackest night is brightest day?
He cursed the soldiers with rascalion tongue,
And in our hearts was as a traitor hung.
But now he blusters as the soldier's friend,
And wags that same old tongue (which has no end)
To plead for pensions for "A. Lincoln's dogs,"
And vows a love—this prince of demagogues—
So keen for any man who wore the blue (Who vote he wants) that, though they never knew

The clash of arms, the country shall be "just"
To those whose war cry was "the rear or bust!"

Well, Dan was whipped. Our honor then at stake,
And Daniel, then as ever on the make,
Declared that when you'd said your debts you'd pay

You'd paid them! By this short and easy way
He'd lift the burden from our aching backs.
Honor? Damn honor when it means a tax!
Those same greenbacks whose issue he had fought Became in his enraptured eyes "blood-bought;"
And, having bought them once (with blood), 'twas clear

Again to buy them would be paying dear!
Beaten again! We paid our little notes;
Once more the Sycamore must root for votes.

To tax ourselves to save the Nation's life
Imperiled in a most tremendous strife;
To tax ourselves to keep a spotless name
And free our honor from a speck of shame—
This is outrageous! But of course we will Now tax ourselves to run our neighbor's mill!
Protection's creed he then begins to screech;
Visits Atlanta; makes a crazy speech;
Of our vast industries he sagely prates,
And, in this rot, McKinley antedates!
At last, at last! He's safely up the spout?
Ah, no! Sad day! For Cleveland pulls him out!

Recurring then to his old greenback days,
See him infected with the silver craze!
If rags get value from the nation's stamp
(Whoever thought they did save fool or scamp?)
Why not a silver coin? Why not, indeed?
Shall we not satisfy Bill Stewart's greed?
A slip of paper is a dollar, hence
Why not a dollar made of sixty cents?
O, wondrous triumph! Muses aid my song!
Dan's logical! But logically wrong!
But see him now his last conclusion shirk,
Give up his silver dear, to win with Burke.
What does the man believe in? Who can tell?
Whate'er's on top—hence disbelieves in hell!
Your conscience-killer always cries to blink
The yawning pit, though crouching on its brink!
The "poor man's money" left to take its chance,
The "poor man's friend" now leads the devil's dance
Through White House and departments! Everywhere

You hear the yells of joy or of despair
As these Apaches wildly clutch their loot
Or (rarely) feel the presidential boot.
Where is our gush-beslobbered workingman?
At home, of course, for sympathetic Dan,
Who's poured forth floods of tears for honest toil,
Can't use him in distributing the spoil!
The only man who stands the slightest show
Is he who on his belly best can go;
And as the workingman goes head erect,
What but contempt from Dan can he expect?
Merit counts nothing, manhood's a disgrace,
The potent pull procures the sought-for place;
The unknown worthy man must stand aside,
While into power the creeping creatures slide.
Democracy? Tom Jefferson awakes;
"Democracy's for men, and not for snakes!"
But Burke, who's labor's foe and Daniel's price,
Gets, thanks to Daniel, a substantial slice!

Is he a blatherskite? What do you say?
Will such a record bear the light of day?
And yet he's been consistent in one thing:
A traitor always—else conscience is not king.
—From The Indianapolis News.

James P. Voorhees has been appointed by his father, Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, clerk of the finance committee, at a salary of $2,500. There is nothing like keeping easy jobs in the family.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Henry Mellen, of Spencer county, Indiana, who has been on the waiting list for several weeks, is remaining here on the strength of a promise of Senator Voorhees that he should be cared for. Mr. Mellen will probably get a clerkship in one of the departments.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 5.

Senator Voorhees landed another place to-day, when ex-Sheriff William Hargrave, of Princeton, Gibson county, was appointed Indian agent at the Western Shoshone agency, Nevada. Hargrave came here just after the inauguration, made a strong play to be United States marshal for Indiana, but Mr. Voorhees had Hosea Hawkins for that place, so he calmly dropped Mr. Hargrave overboard. To-day he landed him at the Shoshone agency, which officially pays $1,600 per year, but which is not without opportunities. Senator Voorhees extends his usefulness in placing old-time friends outside the limits of the Hoosier state. Not long ago he persuaded Hoke Smith to appoint his old friend Col. John Lane to be a special agent of the land office at $2,000. Col. Lane lives in Oregon and has never benefited the Hoosier democracy, but then he is the son of old Lane of Breckinridge and Lane history, and was a rebel colonel during the war. So, for that score, Mr. Voorhees had him appointed.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, June 20.

E. N. Bowman, of Covington, Ind., will be appointed deputy third auditor at a salary of $2,250 a year. The appointment will be made on the recommendation of Senator Voorhees.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 28.

Senator Voorhees, who has been devoting his time ever since the 4th of March, endeavoring, with varying success, to secure positions for his constituents, leaves early next week for White Sulphur Springs, Va.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 30.

Senators Voorhees and Harris belong to the credit of changing President Cleveland's obstinate determination not to call a session before September. Mr. Voorhees is chairman of the finance committee, the committee in whose hands will rest the fate of the silver bill. He has hitherto always been regarded as an out-and-out free silver man. Accordingly, Mr. Cleveland has lavished upon him many of the choicest plums of federal patronage. Almost every wish of his has been granted, from foreign ministers to the humblest lines of patronage. As a fitting conclusion to this unprecedented recognition Elliott Bowman, an old classmate and the senator's "best man," was made a deputy auditor of the treasury at the senator's request. This appears to have completed Mr. Voorhees' conversion, for he went to the White House at once for the purpose of advising the President to call an early session, and to assure Mr. Cleveland that he would vote for an unconditional repeal of the Sherman act, and that he believed the senate would pass the repeal bill. He failed to see the President, but he and Senator Harris called on Secretary Lamont, and to him they confided the duty of laying before the President their views. They believe there will be enough democrats in the senate to join the republican senators and pass the bill. Voorhees authorized Mr. Lamont to assure Mr. Cleveland and the cabinet that, as chairman of the finance committee, he would pledge himself to use all his influence and authority to facilitate the progress of the bill in the senate. Mr. Lamont's report to the cabinet gave the assurance for which Mr. Cleveland has been waiting, and without which he believed it would have been useless to call an extra session. In partial explanation of his sudden and unexpected change of heart, Senator Voorhees said: "I think the President has acted wisely, and I have no doubt that as soon as congress gets to work it will repeal the Sherman act. I voted against the bill when it came up, on the yea and nay vote when it passed, and told the silver men who supported it that it was not the legislation needed for silver, and that they would live to regret the day they supported it. That day has come. I, for one, shall vote for its repeal. It must not be understood, however, that I abate a single jot or tittle of my adherence to the coinage and the use of silver as money under proper regulations for its parity with gold."—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, July 5.

Senator Voorhees is at the Sulphur Springs of Virginia. He is utterly worn out, and was too fatigued to return to Washington to-day to attend the funeral of Mr. Frank E. Banby, his son's brother-in-law, who was run over by a Baltimore & Ohio train last night and killed. Mr. Banby was a native of Detroit, but had been living for ten years in this city. Three years ago Senator Voorhees had him appointed to a small office under the District government.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, July 11.

BROWN.

The Hon. J. B. Brown returned to the city yesterday and will remain until the first of July. He is probably watching the New Albany post-office.

Con Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, has returned to press his candidacy for a consulship. Cunningham filed an application for the position at Belfast, when that was filled he changed it to another. When that went he named five others, either of which would be acceptable, and returned home to await his appointment. Recently the President filled three of the positions named by him, and he hastened back to make another effort before the other two were disposed of.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 15.

Congressman Jason Brown has been laboring faithfully for two weeks to secure the removal of the postmaster at New Albany and the appointment of C. W. Schindler. Up to this time he has not succeeded, but Mr. Schindler will probably secure the plum when it falls. He is in the city waiting for the event.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 21.

The man who will succeed Major Luke as postmaster of Jeffersonville is Patrick C. Donovan. At the time of Mr. Cleveland's election Congressman Brown tendered the position, which pays $2,500 per annum, to Mr. Donovan, but not until yesterday did he signify his acceptance. His commission will likely be issued in November, when the term of Mr. Luke expires. Mr. Donovan retires from the office of sheriff of Clark county August 22. Twice was he chosen for that position by a majority which was overwhelming.—Jeffersonville Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 30.

Representative Brown has fixed this (Wednesday) evening as the time of his departure for home. He realizes that but little can be accomplished in the way of securing full-grown plums during the President's absence, and the fact that Postmaster-General Bissell and Secretary Smith are both taking vacations, removes the possibility of even gathering in a few unimportant places for the faithful among his personal friends.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, July 5.

A wholesale slaughter of the rank and file employed at the Jeffersonville depot of army supplies is on, and the heads of ten of the faithful layeth in the basket, thereby giving a chance for a corresponding number of good democrats to take their places. This decapitation only commenced last Friday, and if the good work keeps going on with the same rapidity in the future, every republican employed at that institution will be deposed within a fortnight. Democrats are greatly pleased over Congressman Brown's unerring labor in the interest of his constituents regarding these removals, and on his next visit to this city he will be given an ovation. Those who have been dismissed are Capt. James Meyers, clerk; John Flynn, assistant engineer; J. A. Sage, saddler; William Wilson, watchman; Joseph Searcey, A. N. Joslyn, James Reed and two others, packers. It is said that Capt. T. A. Mann, inspector, will be removed, and that Nathan Sharks, a prominent dry goods merchant of this city, will be given his place.—Jeffersonville Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, July 11.

BROOKSHIRE.

Representative Brookshire is naming a good many federal officers for his district these days. He has recommended the appointment of the following postmasters in his district, and his recommendation is equivalent to appointment in offices of the classes named: Covington, James Simmerman; Attica, Henry G. Schlosser; Veedersburg, J. B. Dunkle.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, April 26.

The B. & O. Southwest limited brought in the city to-day Indiana Representatives Taylor of the first, Bretz of the second, Brookshire of the eighth, and McNagney of the twelfth. Mr. Cooper arrived yesterday. With Bretz came Eph Inman of Martin county. Inman is an applicant for internal revenue agent. Mr. McNagney within two hours after his arrival secured the appointment of Thomas Mannix for mail transfer agent at Fort Wayne at ninety dollars per month. He held the same place under the first Cleveland administration.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 25.

Congressman Brookshire is still here keeping a close watch on the revenue collectorship for the seventh district.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 21.

An impression has prevailed here that Representative Brookshire was of the opinion that neither Josiah Jump nor Walter Hulit would be appointed collector of the seventh district, but that a dark horse would come in winner. Mr. Brookshire is indorsing Hulit and is working for his candidate tooth and nail. He to-day filed a number of additional strong indorsements, and is of the opinion that his man will be appointed. Josiah Jump is backed by Senator Voorhees.

Mr. Brookshire leaves to-morrow. During the past few days he has been getting in some good work for his constituents. E. B. Miller, of Brazil, has through his influence, received the appointment of deputy consul and clerk at Bordeaux. This position pays about $1,500 a year. Thomas B. Eaton, an ex-Union soldier, of Sullivan, has been appointed a messenger in the Pension office. Wm. A. Huff, of Shannondale, will be appointed a member of the treasury watch. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 30.

The appearance in Washington of County Treasurer Couzman as an applicant for the collectorship of internal revenue puts a new phase to the contest between Senator Voorhees and Congressman Brookshire for the control of this bit of patronage. The senator has been insisting on the appointment of ex-Judge Jump, the law partner of the senator's protege, ex-Congressman Lamb. Congressman Brookshire had been contending that this appointment falls to the congressman, and has recommended Hulet, of Crawfordsville, the congressman's home city. For some time it has been understood that Brookshire did not expect to have Hulet appointed, and the selection of Couzman is a compromise effort to thwart the Voorhees-Lamb people, who so far have controlled patronage in this district. The Brookshire following counts on the scandal arising from the controversy over Postmaster Donham's attempt to evade the civil service law to help overcome the senator's prestige with the President. — Terre Haute Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, June 8.

E. V. Brookshire, congressman, was in this city to-day and held a consultation with the democrats in regard to the post-office in this city. The eight or ten candidates for the place were present and a long private discussion was held. It was finally decided that Mr. Brookshire should recommend Ed Voris for the place. — Crawfordsville Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, July 8.

M McNAGNEY.

Congressman McNagney won a victory to-day by the appointment of W. W. Rockhill as postmaster at Ft. Wayne to succeed Higgins, removed. Some time ago Mr. Higgins was asked by the Democratic managers to resign, so that they would not have to resort to the painful necessity of preparing charges against him. He replied that he wanted the salary until his term closed, which was in January next. Charges were preferred, some of which were sworn to by the chairman of the republican committee of Ft. Wayne. The charges alleged that Postmaster Higgins levied campaign assessments on post-office employes, and that he compelled his clerks in the office to work on a campaign poll-list during office hours. Higgins' successor is one of the publishers of the Fort Wayne Journal. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 28.

Congressman McNagney has recommended W. H. McEwen, a young man, for postmaster at Albion. There were five candidates, four of whom were ex-soldiers. — Indianapolis News, June 28.

Alexander Orr was recommended for postmaster at Kendallville by his congressman. — Indianapolis Sentinel, June 24.

The unexpected call for an extra session has caused the few congressmen in the city to think about making final preparations for a long sojourn in Washington, and, incidentally, to learn the wishes of their constituents in regard to the monetary situation. Representative McNagney, of the twelfth district, boarded a west-bound train Monday night for his home in Columbia City. He felt happy over his victory in the Fort Wayne post-office fight, and said that no important changes were impending in his bailiwick except some dozen fourth-class postmasters and a few minor appointments. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, July 5.

Congressman McNagney, of Columbia City, was in the city last night to make one more plea for the appointment of his law partner, Thomas Marshall, to the vacancy on the supreme bench. Mr. McNagney will spend a few days at home, and will then go to Washington to remain during the special session of congress. He says he is happy now that he has secured the removal of Postmaster Higgins, of Ft. Wayne. — Indianapolis News, July 7.

BYNUM.

Senator R. Y. Stewart came into Washington to-day quietly; so very quietly that he forgot to register at Willard's, where he is stopping. He immediately started off for Mr. Bynum, and when he found him talked very earnestly about the Indianapolis post-office, and Indianapolis surveyorship. Mr. Stewart does not seem to be altogether satisfied at the delay in filling those offices. Bynum wants Rail to be surveyor, and will probably get him. During the afternoon Messrs. Bynum and Holman called on the President, and talked surveyor and postmaster to him. Mr. Bynum believes that the post-office change will be made before the President goes away on his holiday. Democrats here blame the Terre Haute post-office scandal and Mr. Sahm's recent interview, in which he admitted Mr. Thompson's efficiency, as the reason for the delay. All the charges that have been filed against Mr. Thompson are still at the post-office department. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, June 21.

It is conceded on all hands that Congressman Bynum will name the surveyor of the port of Indianapolis. The contest seems to have narrowed down to two men, John Rail and John A. Reaume. It is asserted that Mr. Bynum has already decided upon the man he will name, and the guessing is about even as between Rail and Reaume. Mr. Bynum is reported to have said that he believed Rail would secure the appointment. The man whom Mr. Bynum recommends will probably be appointed. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, July 5.

HOLMAN.

Dr. Woollen, of Switzerland county, returned home to-day after being assured that the office of medical referee for the pension office could not go to Indiana for the reason that the three Indiana applicants for the place lived in the same district, and were all indorsed by Representative Holman. They were Woollen of Switzerland, Henry and Bront of Dearborn. The office will go to New York. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, May 24.

It is reported that there is already an organization to defeat the renomination of Congressman Holman. It grew out of the contest for revenue collectorship in the sixth district. Dr. Hunter, who is a candidate for the position, claims to have been misled by Mr. Holman, and Hunter's son-in-law, Editor O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, who is a clever politician, threatens to make trouble for Mr. Holman. At the same time there are a number of complaints coming from the northern part of the sixth district against the appointment of Bracken as collector, because the revenue collector under the former Cleveland administration came from Holman's district. Congressman Holman is in Washington looking after some minor appointments. He will be here about two weeks. He thinks there is no doubt of Bracken's appointment. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Sentinel, June 13.

Representative Holman left to-day for Indiana. Just before going he had a long conference with Controller of the Currency Eckels, and urged upon the latter official the necessity of appointing a second bank examiner for Indiana at once. The controller of the currency contemplates such action soon, and Mr. Holman hopes to secure the appointment for Cashier Pugh, of the Rush county national bank, at Rushville, Ind. Mr. Pugh was Holman's candidate for the bank examinership when O. M. Packard, of Plymouth was appointed, and Mr. Holman claims that Pugh passed a better examination than Mr. Packard, but failed for want of a political pull. There seems to be a disposition among the Indiana delegation to concede the bank examinership to

Mr. Pugh when the new district is created. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis News, June 21.

Congressman Taylor has secured the appointment of Anthony Stevenson, of Rockport, a cousin of Vice-President Stevenson, to be inspector of federal courts for southern Indiana, to succeed Samuel Kerecheval. — Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, June 19.

Congressman Martin announced, February 25, his postmasters as follows: Hawkins at Marion, Editor Timmonds at Portland, W. A. Gutelius at Bluffton, W. H. Campbell at Fairmount. Timmonds and Campbell were the last to be appointed—June 13.

WANTON REMOVALS.

I believe, with reason, that we are to have a civil service reform administration of the best in every sense of the word. Mr. Cleveland was nominated by no politician; he was elected by no party; no one state was pivotal in determining the result; the people called for him and he answered the call. I do not believe that he will betray them. I have heard him in conversation deplore the patronage system, and the trials and cares imposed upon the President in administering it. I have heard him quote the ominous warning of Senator Pendleton, "that unless the government destroyed the spoils system, the spoils system would destroy the government." No President is omniscient or omnipresent; but I believe that, if you will hold up his hands, criticising where criticism is deserved, praising where praise is due, you will see in the next four years the best civil service reform administration since the days of Washington, Adams and Jefferson. — Charles Theodore Russell, Jr., of the Massachusetts Board of Civil Service Commissioners, March, 1893.

Logan Carlisle, it is said, has declared to his father that they are "in for a fight now with the newspapers, and must not weaken." It is but frank to say that they would have had this fight precipitated a good while ago if it had not been for the general desire of the newspapers not to throw obstacles in the way of the newcomers till they had had time to look about them and get their bearings. Under the late administration, Secretary Foster was loudly praised everywhere, by both friends and foes, for his refusal to permit the practice of nepotism by two of his subordinates who wanted to give their sons employment under the government; and when he finally weakly yielded, he received an equal measure of blame. President Cleveland has been credited with an intense dislike of having his own secretary of the treasury appoint a relative, and the nearest of relatives at that, to office. He is understood to have consented to overlook the act because of some peculiar circumstances which seemed to afford an apology for it; but it is hard upon him now to find his many professions belied, and his administration scandalized with the public, by the very young man whose appointment had been so offensive to him on general principles. — Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, May 11.

It is urged by some of the defenders of the course things are now taking in the treasury, that the secretary put his son in charge of his present post because he wanted there a young man of "nerve," who would not allow himself to be swayed by any consideration in cutting right or left. That he has got what he was looking for is evident from a scene which occurred in the chief clerk's room a few days ago. A poor-looking man, evidently a laborer in the department, was observed on the outskirts of the crowd of office-beggars who were swarming around Mr. Carlisle, jr. When it came the turn of this visitor to speak, he advanced hesitatingly, and held out his notice of discharge with a trembling hand.

"Well, what is it?" inquired Mr. Carlisle, who likes to do business briskly.

"I wanted to ask, sir," faltered the workingman, "if I could have a little more time on my notice to quit. I have just lost my wife, and her sickness and funeral were expensive, and I am in debt, which it will take me a little while to work off."

"Oh, bless your soul," answered Mr. Carlisle, with a merry chuckle, "the fellow who wants your place is just as badly off as you are." And with that he passed on to the next caller.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, May 13.

Another case which illustrates the way things are going in the treasury department is that of Capt. A. F. McMillan, who has resigned under compulsion his place as deputy first auditor. He has been in the treasury department and in the first auditor's office continuously for more than twenty-seven years. Every one, regardless of politics, who has served with him speaks well of his work. His industry may be judged by the fact that he has been absent only sixteen days in the last seven years. He has a gift for dispatching business. A democratic office-holder occupying a highly responsible position, and himself one of the brightest men in the service, said to-day to your correspondent:

"I have known McMillan and worked with him for years, and it is my honest conviction that he has earned three times over every dollar he has drawn out of the United States treasury in salary."

Mr. McMillan is no longer a young man. He served from the very outbreak of the civil war till the hour of its close, entering the union army as a private in the volunteers and quitting it a captain by successive promotions in the field. Some months afterward he came to Washington from his home in Michigan as a temporary clerk, at a time when the treasury was swamped by the multitude of accumulated accounts to be audited and settled. He expected to stay two years and then go home. He doubtless wishes now that he had adhered to his original programme; but he probably did not look forward to a day when the rule at the treasury department would be that long and faithful service was a disqualification for further continuance in office.

Mr. McMillan is a republican in his sympathies. In the years that have intervened since his arrival in Washington he has had no political backing, because he became a citizen of the District of Columbia and stuck at his work instead of going home to vote. Nevertheless he has received promotion after promotion, till the last Cleveland administration, on coming into control at the treasury, found him a chief of division. Secretary Manning asked for his resignation and received it; but the democratic first auditor, a party man of the most ultra variety, put in so vigorous a protest against the removal of an invaluable assistant that the resignation was given back. When the Harrison administration came in, he was raised from chief of division to deputy auditor, and this was recognized as one of the good things done in the line of civil service reform. Now he goes out, a poor man, to begin life anew at a time when most men in private occupations are beginning to think about closing up their active affairs and enjoying themselves on their incomes.

The work of the first auditor's office is of no trifling importance. It is there that all accounts accruing in the treasury department, except those arising under the internal revenue laws, are examined and certified to the first comptroller or to the commissioner of customs. The customs division deals with the fines, emoluments, forfeitures, debentures, and drawbacks of the customs service, the marine hospital service, and the revenue marine. The judiciary division deals with the fees of district attorneys, marshals, commissioners, and clerks, rent of court-houses, support of prisoners, etc. The public debt division deals with the redemption of the public debt, including principal, premium and interest, payment of interest, redemption of certificates of deposit, notes destroyed, etc. The ware-house division deals with ware-house and bond accounts received from custom-houses. Besides these, there is a miscellaneous division which handles the accounts of mints and assay-offices, the territorial accounts, the coast survey, salaries and contingent expenses of the legislative, executive and judicial branches of the government, the construction, repair and preservation of public buildings, and the general receipts and expenditures passing through the office of the United States treasurer.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, May 24.

Secretary Carlisle called for the resignation of James R. O'Beirne, assistant commissioner of immigration at the port of New York some time ago. He waited for the resignation until to-day when, as it had not arrived he issued an order removing Mr. O'Beirne from the service and appointing Edward F. McSweeney of Boston, Mass., to succeed him. Mr. McSweeney is a personal friend of Assistant Secretary of State Josiah Quincy, and it is understood owes his appointment to Mr. Quincy's recommendations.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, July 1.

Before leaving for Philadelphia this afternoon, Secretary Carlisle set the guillotine at work and the official head of St. Julien A. Dapray, the chief of the law division, supervising architect's office, rolled in to the basket. Mr. Dapray has been employed in that bureau for the last twenty years, is a most competent official and a veritable encyclopedia on all questions relating to public buildings throughout the country. His retention was asked for by about fifty senators, regardless of party, but the secretary wanted his place for a party-worker and he got it.—Washington Dispatch to Buffalo Express, June 21.

Secretary Carlisle has appointed John W. Kinsey, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, superintendent of construction of the post office building at Washington, D. C., vice Thomas C. Stewart, removed. He was backed by the united Ohio democratic congressional delegation.—Washington Dispatch, June 21.

Secretary Carlisle, before starting on his westward trip, gave orders that resignations should be called for as follows: M. J. Hall, Thomas Rathbone, and Thomas S. Parks, chiefs of division in the second auditor's office; W. A. Rogers, a chief of division in the third auditor's office, and L. K. Brown, a chief in the fourth auditor's office. The case in this group which excites most indignant comment is that of Mr. Rathbone. He is another veteran, like Mr. Stetson who was removed some days ago, of more than a quarter century's service. He belongs to a small company of genuine watch dogs of the treasury—not the show sort, but the kind that do the hardest and most intelligent work. As a citizen of the District of Columbia, he has no senator or representative to appeal to for aid, and his extreme deafness, while not interfering in the least with his work in auditing claims against the treasury, is likely to be a serious obstacle in the way of his getting certain kinds of employment outside. He has remained a poor man in spite of opportunities to grow rich by winking at doubtful claims, and has doubtless saved the government many millions of dollars by his absolute integrity and his thorough knowledge of his business. Such an adept had he become that, like Mr. Stetson, he could scent the fraud in a claim on account as soon as it came before him, no matter how smooth its exterior. All his expert knowledge, however, goes for nothing because his place is wanted for a democrat.

It is fortunate for Secretary Carlisle that his own reputation for honesty is so high. A man with a less honorable and scrupulous record would be suspected of conspiracy with the claim agents and lobbyists who infest Washington. All the disreputable members of this crowd are chuckling and rubbing their hands over the fact that they have a secretary now in office who, without being purchasable in any way himself, is playing straight into their hands. They have long been struggling to get rid of Stetson and Rathbone, who knew too much to be swindled by them. The next men who come in will be untrained and therefore easier to handle; and the precedent established by Mr. Carlisle, if literally interpreted, makes it plain that it is not worth while to study the government's interests any more. The moment a man becomes so proficient in his work that he is promoted to a place where he can direct the work of others in the same line, he will be marked for summary dismissal. William A. Day, who was second auditor during Cleveland's former administration, and one of the most efficient heads that office has ever had, not only retained Mr. Rathbone, but made no secret of regarding him as a highly valuable subordinate.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Times, July 7.

Secretary Carlisle's last lot of dismissals included, besides Mr. Rathbone, whose case was treated in these dispatches yesterday, George H. French, chief of the navy division in the second comptroller's office. This division has jurisdiction of disbursements by navy paymasters for pay and rations, by paymasters at navy-yards, for navy pensions at foreign stations, by the financial agent in London, and by and for the marine corps. Mr. French came up to his present position from the ranks by diligence and good work. He lacks one arm, lost in the union army during the civil war. He was retained all through the former Cleveland administration. Another victim was L. K. Brown, chief of the paymasters' division in the fourth auditor's office. This division had charge of the accounts of navy paymasters, including mechanics' rolls—work in which there is a vast amount of detail, requiring the keenest accuracy. Mr. Brown was reduced from chief of division to a $1,800 clerkship during Cleveland's former administration, but remained actually in charge of the division, its nominal head being an untrained man, and no untrained man being able to handle it. How much Brown's services were appreciated then is shown by the fact that Gen. Shelley, the democratic fourth auditor under whom he served then, was instrumental in procuring his restoration to the chiefship, from which he was deposed temporarily for partisan reasons. Brown has only one leg. The other he left on a union battlefield.—Washington Dispatch to New York Evening Post, June 9.

"A BRIEF REWARD OF PARTY ZEAL."

Lewis Baker, editor of the St. Paul Globe, the chairman of the state democratic committee during the last campaign, appointed minister to Nicaragua.

Louis C. Hughes, who becomes governor of Arizona, is one of the political powers in that territory and is a newspaper man, editing a paper at Phoenix. He is about fifty-four years of age and was a delegate to the Chicago convention.

James E. Neal was appointed consul to Liverpool as a personal compliment to ex-Governor Campbell, of Ohio. He is chairman of the democratic committee of Ohio. Ex-Governor Campbell asked special recognition for two of his political proteges—Neal for Liverpool, and Claude Meeker for Glasgow. Mr. Neal got Liverpool; but, owing to a defect of memory, President Cleveland appointed another man to Glasgow, yet recognized Meeker afterward by giving him the Bradford consulship, one of the best in England in the way of fees.—Indianapolis News, April 4.

Q. O. Eckford, of Mississippi, who succeeds Dr. Dent, private secretary to the late Secretary Blaine, as consul at Kingston, Jamaica, is a leading lawyer of Aberdeen, Miss., and has been an active spirit in state politics, being chairman of the democratic state executive committee last year.

Theodore M. Stephan, appointed consul at Anna-berg, Germany, is a Lutheran minister at Austin, Ill. In the campaign of 1892 he was chairman of the campaign committee of the Lutheran churches of Illinois, and as such was brought into intimate relations with ex-Representative Cable, upon whose recommendation his appointment was made.

Jeremiah W. Coveney, postmaster at Boston, is chairman of the democratic state central committee.

Frank H. Jones, appointed first assistant postmaster-general, is the president of the league of democratic clubs of Illinois and was a delegate to the last democratic national convention.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has never done anything more to be commended than his separation of himself from congress after calling it together and delivering to it his message. There his duty ended. It was no more his business to stay and interfere with legislation and seek to influence congressmen than it is the business of congressmen to interfere with the appointment of fourth-class postmasters. He deliberately cut the patronage tie between himself and congressmen in a manner more marked than it has been done before in sixty years. There is little doubt but that congressmen went to Washington expecting to sell him their votes for patronage; but the President has put congress into the breach where the constitution intended it to go and has left it to get along as best it can. It will have to fry in its own grease. It will have to do something and that without any certainty of receiving pay in patronage. It is in the full blaze of the eye of the country and although it may writhe and squirm it will have to act.

IN the Boston Herald of July 31, Mr. Josiah Quincy, assistant secretary of state, occupies three columns in explanation of his loot of the consular service. We do not recall anything like it since the days of the doctrine of local option in the execution of the civil service law. Mr. Quincy has been going at a rate at which a clean sweep will be completed in the consular service within a year. He says that this is faster than the rate under other administrations. That is true. He says he believes that he has secured a better class of men than those he caused to be dismissed. Every boss who ever divides spoil among henchmen says that. Mr. Quincy says that it was impossible to deal with the service upon "a purely non-political basis." He has not dealt with it upon a non-political basis at all, purely or otherwise. He has not made the least attempt to deal with it upon a non-political basis. So far as this clean sweep has gone, it has been a division of spoil made in the usual manner and upon the usual spoils principles. Congressmen have exercised their usual control. Newspaper editors and other party-workers have shared as usual; and along with this have gone aggravating cases of unjust and unbusiness-like dismissals which would not have occurred under any attempt to apply any sort of reform principles. The question most important to himself, Mr. Quincy ignores. He has been for years a member of a civil service reform association, and has attended its meetings. Did he, when he had the opportunity, attempt to establish the principles of civil service reform in the consular service, or, in treacherous recreancy to his professed principles, has he been a mere divider of spoil? The facts seem to be against Mr. Quincy.

SINCE the comments upon Secretary Carlisle, to be found elsewhere in this paper were written, another case has been published which shows again the corrupt and diseased nature of his view of the reason of existence of clerkships as well as of his duty as the head of a great department. In 1884 Eugene Gaddis, by competitive examination, secured a place in the treasury. He served with credit through the successive administrations of Cleveland and Harrison and received several promotions. March 1, this year, he was detailed as an examiner under the civil service commission and the commission, therefore, has, since Carlisle became secretary, been the only proper superior to judge how Gaddis has performed his duties; yet, without a word to or from the commission or Gaddis, the latter has been dismissed. When asked by the correspondent of the New York Evening Post as to any cause of complaint, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"On the contrary, we found him a very satisfactory clerk—so much so that when we learned of his dismissal, we were as astonished as he was, and one member of the commission went up to the treasury at once to find out what the trouble was, but was given no information by the department. I then wrote myself, on the 7th of August to Assistant Secretary Curtis, saying that the commission was wholly in the dark as to any reason why Mr. Gaddis should be dismissed, and thought there must have been some mistake in the matter. To this letter I received on August 9 a response from Acting Secretary Hamlin, which simply stated that the department had 'good and sufficient reasons' for the removal of Mr. Gaddis. On the 10th I wrote to Mr. Hamlin, going into the case at some length and showing that there was no possibility of the department's knowing anything about Mr. Gaddis's services for the last five months, during the time the present administration has been in power, except through the commission. To this letter I received no answer. Accordingly, after waiting until the 16th, I sent to the secretary of the treasury a long letter, giving a full statement of the case, and saying in conclusion:

Whether the reasons for his dismissal are or are not "good and sufficient" (and with the facts as given above it is very difficult to believe they are), I would, with all deference and respect, but with all earnestness, state that it seems hardly possible that there can be any "good and sufficient reason" for refusing to state to Mr. Gaddis or to the commission under which he has been serving the cause of his dismissal. It is hardly necessary to point out the demoralizing effects upon the commission's force of detailed men of letting it be understood that faithful service rendered to the government while with this commission affords no guarantee against sudden removals for reasons unknown to the man himself and unknown to the only body which has any knowledge or can have any knowledge of how he is performing his official duties; while it certainly seems that the commission should itself be informed if any of its employees are guilty of misconduct of which it has no knowledge.

"Has Secretary Carlisle answered you yet?" Mr. Roosevelt was asked.

"No. I have waited now nine days, but have heard nothing."

The reasons which were "good and sufficient" to Secretary Carlisle, probably were that he has taken upon himself the task of attempting to block civil service reform. His insulting neglect to answer Mr. Roosevelt's letter can only mean that he intends to openly show his contempt for the reform and for every officer and person connected with it or advocating it. He will find that reformers will not shrink from this contest. They have had like contests with officers fully the equal of Mr. Carlisle and they have no reason to be dissatisfied with the results.

A LETTER from Vincennes, which we publish, illustrates a condition which will continue to exist and will breed deceit and falsehood and hypocrisy and will bring contempt upon every administration so long as we pursue the practice of going into the street and picking up local politicians and making them postmasters, as was done at Vincennes. Such men have heard of the civil service law, but they know nothing of its provisions, and they hate it, and they start out not with the intention of giving it a fair enforcement, but of beating it if they can. The result is a series of tricks of about the grade of an ordinary bunco game. This has gone on under the present administration until the postmaster-general is thoroughly compromised. We do not yet regard it as hopeless that he will in the near future relieve his department of this odium.

WHAT politics can do for the public service is well illustrated by the fire-alarm telegraph service of this city. In June, 1891, the new charter having then recently gone into effect, the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE had the following:

The fire-alarm telegraph of the city has a superintendent in George Holderman, a republican, who had an assistant named George White, and a sub-assistant named Findling. The new board dismissed White and Findling, and their combined monthly salaries, less twenty dollars, were given to Ex-Alderman James Riley, a democrat, who was appointed as Holderman's assistant. Riley's friends claimed that he was sooner or later to have Holderman's place. Now if President Holt's board intended to seize this place as party spoil, this is the exact course it would have pursued. So far as the duties of his position are concerned Riley is an ignoramus, and it is ridiculous to say that the fire service is benefited by turning out a trained assistant and putting in an ignoramus at an increased salary. Holderman thinks he sees the point and refuses to accept Riley as an assistant, or to teach him the business, and at the last accounts Riley was sitting around the fire headquarters doing nothing and drawing sixty dollars a month. Open competition for the places in fire department would destroy the board's usefulness in humbugging the people in this manner. Why does not the mayor require it?

In August, 1893, the Indianapolis News says:

There has been complaint for weeks about the condition of the fire alarm telegraph service, and the department has been put to a great deal of annoyance. Not only this, but there was danger of a great destruction of property at any time, for the alarms came in irregularly and incorrectly. Not a little criticism has been indulged in concerning Superintendent of Telegraph Fanning. This morning the board of public safety sent for him. Instead of making the affair public, the members of the board took him into a room with curtained doors and windows and talked to him. The complaints and the condition of the alarm service was explained to him, and he was requested to deliver the key to the repeater at headquarters to his assistant, George Holderman. He did not object, but handed over the key at once. Members of the board say that Fanning will continue to act as superintendent but will have nothing to do with the repeater at headquarters, "which is an intricate piece of mechanism and needs careful attention."

We do not know what became of Riley, nor by what particular pull one, Fanning, became superintendent of the fire alarm service. The one thing that is plain is that George Holderman, the only man who appears to have been thoroughly competent, was reduced to a subordinate position and for the sake of politics the city was left at the mercy of an incompetent superintendent. Probably he was in "sympathy" with his superiors.

THE silver-purchase crisis is one of the questions which the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has always pointed out as arising now and then with a demand for solution so imperative and even terrifying that it paralyzes the average congressman in the pursuit of his ordinary avocation as a spoil hunter. In the presence of a nation suffering the keenest commercial distress, congressmen are ashamed to publicly demand places for their henchmen. It is very distasteful to them to have to drop office-seeking and turn to legislation, but the President has brought them to it at last. They have spent all of their time since the election of Mr. Cleveland in turning employes out of their places and putting in workers who will fix the primaries and conventions for them next year, and they are forced to legislate upon financial questions without having given any thought to such questions except in the most shallow and cursory manner. It must be said that they are sobered by the situation, and that a portion of them have had a real clarification of views. But how easy it would have been to have known the subject years ago and to have avoided the great loss and misery which has come upon the country. The people may set down this panic and all of its consequences to the ignorance of congressmen arising from the fact that they do not study public questions but spend their time mostly in getting federal offices for their personal followers. The present grave interruption of their occupation will not cure them, but after this urgency is over, their onslaught upon the civil service will be the more ferocious for the interruption.

THE committee of the National League of which Mr. C. W. Watson is chairman, and which has charge of civil service reform literature, issued sometime since an attractive pamphlet, setting forth the advantages of the merit system to working men. The pamphlet under various subjects does this in a simple and straightforward manner. It all comes to what is known as the Boston Labor System in which it should be remembered there is no examination, but in which the selection of laborers upon public work is freed from personal and partisan favoritism. We repeat what we have said many times, that no part of the reform movement has in actual practice met with such unqualified approval from all quarters as has this method of hiring public labor; and this approval is the most earnest when it comes from the superior officers who have been the nearest to it. Such examples as Mayor O'Brien and Mayor Matthews, of Boston, and Governor Russell, of Massachusetts, and many others may be given. Charles Theodore Russell, one of the Massachusetts civil service commissioners, says of the results:

"The advantage to the laborer is manifest. Instead of loitering around the corridor of the city hall to importune his alderman or councilman, and promise personal and political support, in return for the right to labor at the public expense, he can now go to that labor upon his manhood and merit, with full knowledge that he is to be judged by the character of his work, and not by the complexion of his politics; that the only credential needed is the certificate of work well performed, not of a caucus cunningly manipulated.

The committee met with a curious difficulty in the distribution of its pamphlet. Having been read for instance by a labor leader, it received his enthusiastic endorsement, and he set about devising plans for its distribution among workingmen. In the midst of this he suddenly became silent and inactive. The reason was that the politicians of his organization had interfered. This system would prevent them from getting jobs by favoritism and almost every labor organization has a sprinkling of such men. They are loud mouthed and have influence and each one has his eye upon some political job which he hopes to get by the favor of some higher boss. This personal selfishness leads them to do what they can to smother a movement which would be of incalculable benefit to the great body of workingmen. The object which the civil service reform movement has for working men is to make the distribution of public employment impartial and to make the employment as permanent and as stable as it is in the best private employment. It is one of the strongest phenomena of the human mind that workingmen will go upon a strike to prevent a private employer from dismissing a man without cause; yet they look on with indifference while thousands upon thousands are dismissed from public employment by political bosses without any cause whatever. The fact is that an immense amount of labor is removed from the field of the genuine workingman; street cleaning in cities is an instance. This department is given up to heelers and shirks and it is so conducted that, as a means of subsistence, it is of little advantage to the real laborers of the country.

THE New York Evening Post gives an interesting account of the recent debate in the house of commons relating to the Irish civil service. The members of this service obtained their places by competition and under a long and harsh tory rule, executed tory measures. Then came Mr. Morley under a liberal administration. Now if ever the argument that the head of a civil service must choose his subordinates "in order to carry out his policy," was worth anything, this was such a case. But in this debate Mr. Morley tells the commons:

"I have received from all members of that service with whom I have had dealings treatment of the utmost consideration, though to many of them the policy with which I was associated was not altogether welcome. They have shown a government with which they are only partially in sympathy the same loyalty and fidelity which they have shown to other governments."

With the situation in Ireland amounting to tragedy an honorable and capable governor-general has no difficulty nor embarrassment in carrying out a radically changed policy without a vestige of a clean sweep. When we place this situation by the side of the meanness and hypocrisy of Secretary Carlisle in dismissing clerks because he wants democrats to keep books in the treasury and of Assistant Secretary of State Quincy dismissing the consul at Dublin after eleven years of service because he wants a democrat to verify invoices and of hundreds of postmasters dismissing employes because they want democrats to handle the mails and of all the other official changes now going on in this quiet and peaceful country, where the duties are not republican duties nor democratic duties but simply business duties, the comparison is very humiliating.

This, however, is not all. The time is near when Ireland will control its own civil service. Then again if ever the arguments that subordinates must have the same political belief that the government has, in order to keep books and handle mails and count money would if ever come into play. In this country Secretary Carlisle's son, Logan, wherever he hears of an employe whose long service and natural and acquired skill has rendered him in the ordinary acceptance of the term indispensable, dismisses him with brutal levity provided his political opinions do not suit young Mr. Carlisle. The contemptible littleness of the American practice can only be brought out by quoting Mr. Gladstone in the above debate, reported in the London Times, as follows:

"He had never meant to say that there might not be persons whom a new Irish government would desire to dismiss, but he thought he had limited himself properly when he suggested that they would probably be confined to two or three persons. He could not ascribe to the new Irish government such fatuity, such gross and wicked injustice as the intention, or the possibility of the intention, of its rushing into such a course of wholesale dismissal as had been suggested."

Mr. Gladstone is the greatest of living statesmen and his opinion will stand against the petty acts of the men now making or tolerating the American clean sweep. With a narrow majority and without a postoffice to give, he is accomplishing the most important political work now being done in the world, and civil service reformers may freely invite a contrast between the triumphant sweep of his reform and the greedy, mercenary and sullen higgling which has led up to the scene now being enacted at Washington.

THE evidence that Secretary Carlisle is less of a statesman and more of a Covington politician than was supposed daily becomes stronger. He is of some prominence in the legitimate line of his duties, but yet, in the presence of the greatest financial crisis, he is chiefly conspicuous for an incessant activity in reducing employes to a lower grade or in dismissing them entirely from the service, in order to give the vacated places to democrats. There is not even a claim that the service is improved. Another interesting step of his is a new rule directing that a promotion fairly earned by competition under the regulations of the department shall not take place unless it is approved by a board of three, one of whom is his private secretary and personal friend, and another is his son Logan Carlisle. The Carlises seem likely to occupy themselves indefinitely in this business. They are callous to the misery they inflict, to their violation of platform pledges, to the disgrace they are bringing upon the administration, and to the odium which they incur. These acts will weigh heavily against the administration when the reckoning is taken at the end of the four years.

SENATOR LODGE has introduced into the senate the measure, brought forward by him last year in the house, to provide for taking the fourth-class post-offices out of politics. The present use of these offices is to secure watch-dogs for the individual interests of congressmen at every cross-roads and have them paid by the people. The present administration is allowing that process to go on at nearly the Clarksonian rate of thirty thousand a year. President Cleveland missed a golden opportunity to do a great act when he would not refuse to dismiss fourth-class postmasters until congress should pass some such measure as the Lodge bill. This would have been real statemanship, and the people would have been solid behind Mr. Cleveland to-day. The opportunity will never return to him. He has yet, however, great opportunities to benefit the civil service. He can stop short the vicious division of spoil which is going on, and if legislation is needed he can insist that mere lack of legislation is no excuse for the continuance of a corrupt use of the civil service.

ELSEWHERE will be found an editorial from Harper's Weekly relating to removals upon charges, with particular reference to the postal service. We urge its careful reading. It is difficult to believe that a practice so hostile to official honor and personal honesty and to the principles of free government has been established in this country, but there it is. This is true, that no cabinet officer in former administrations has tolerated this system and retained the respect of the American people, and no such officer need expect to do so under the present administration. It is an infamous system.

WE print in this number the address by Sherman S. Rogers and a large part of the address by Seth Low before the civil service reform congress, held August 8th, at Chicago, under the auspices of the World's Fair management. We have omitted the address by Mr. Foulke because it is printed in full in the August number of Good Government and will be read there by the majority of our readers.

PENSION REFORM.

Congressman Bretz to-day secured the reinstatement of Capt. James H. Shank, of Vincennes, to the position of special pension examiner.—Indianapolis News, August 15.

Mr. Crampton, a veteran editor of Delphi, is in town. Mr. Crampton's son was recently appointed on the Delphi pension board, but he could not qualify, having been a practitioner less than five years, the time required by the commissioner of pensions. The father came to have that requirement waived in the case of his son, and he has succeeded. To-day Senator Voorhees accompanied Mr. Crampton to the pension office, and the order for young Dr. Crampton's appointment was finally carried out in full. Mr. A. B. Crampton, who had this rule abrogated, was chairman of the democratic committee in this congressional district a number of years ago, was postmaster here under Cleveland four years ago, and is now editing a democratic paper.—Washington Dispatch to Indianapolis Journal, August 1.

The pension management continues to be an interesting study. Some six thousand pensions in all have been suspended on account of wrong rulings or defective evidence on file, but a part of these will doubtless be restored. This is a mere drop in the bucket when it is remembered that the size of the pension list is about 900,000. No taxpayer likes to pay $160,000,000 a year for pensions. That we pay that amount is perhaps the most astounding fact that ever occurred in the government of an orderly community. Until the contrary is proved, it will seem that there must be something radically wrong about it. THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE believes that the size of our pension list is primarily due to the individual corruption of congressmen. They have secured the distribution of pensions in order to catch votes for themselves or their party. Congressmen have dogged the pension department, have secured extravagant rulings, and acted as attorneys for applicants whom, and the friends and relatives of whom, they thus sought to make henchmen. They have controlled the local pension boards and have had all the influence which such control has had in all generations. If the natural consequences have followed, then the pension list is crowded with pensioners who ought not to be drawing pensions. The only just way to determine this fact is by a re-examination by boards with whose appointment politics shall have had nothing to do, and who shall be as independent of congressmen as army and navy boards are. And in this re-examination every kind of meddling individual congressmen should be absolutely cut off. Such boards, and only such, would have the confidence of the country. There are now no such boards. The local boards are composed of democratic political doctors appointed by congressmen because they were democrats and were or are to be their followers, and in whose fairness and freedom from improper influences no one has any confidence. Congressmen are already meddling. Indiana congressmen are beginning their pressure in Washington with the complaint that it seems as though every one dropped was a democrat. These partisan boards were chosen in disregard of protest and warning, and this patronage takes $1,700,000 a year from the treasury. Of course, purging the pension lists with such boards is impossible.

MIXED CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

The Terre Haute Gazette has a recent article upon civil service reform which deserves notice as coming from one of the leading papers of the state. The editor has been, in a general way, a civil service reformer, but he now clearly labors under the embarrassment of being the brother-in-law of Postmaster Donham. The editorial, with much that is right, is alloyed with attempts to make civil service reform fit the Terre Haute situation. Referring to Harrison's extension of the rules, it says that Harrison "sought to fasten in office thousands of his political appointees who had not won their places by civil service examinations." The Gazette knows better than that. It knows that Harrison's order was but a mere beginning, at the very last moment, of the fulfillment of promises made years before, and that the step had been urged upon him incessantly, and that it was approved by the country and by the people of Terre Haute. The Gazette knows further that there would never have been any trouble at Terre Haute if those political soldiers of fortune, Voorhees and Lamb, had not put in a mere political tool as postmaster and then tried their usual game of "controlling" the office. Happily, they fell into the ditch in a most humiliating manner, and all of the henchmen they had sought to quarter upon the people fell with them. We do not say that Donham, if he is willing to be a knave, can not yet beat the civil service law. The Indianapolis postmaster beat it steadily from 1885 to 1889, but we submit that the result was not well for his party, nor for the administration, nor for his own reputation.

The Gazette declares squarely for filling places in the civil service by open competition. It also declares that appointments should be made from the eligible list in the order of the rating—a doctrine that can not be thundered too loudly into the ears of appointing officers. But the Gazette says no person should hold his place more than eight years, and brings up the long-exploded office-holding class, life tenure and pension bugbears. The Gazette would smile at a proposal to apply this plan to its own business. It would be ashamed at the absurdity of its calling upon the Vandalia to dismiss all trackmen who had been in its employ eight years; it is equally absurd to dismiss a letter-carrier for that reason. As to life tenure, a letter-carrier should have a life tenure in the same sense in which a boiler-maker in any Terre Haute shop has it, and in no other sense.

The Gazette completely overthrows itself as an advocate of the recently attempted clean sweep when it looks forward to the time when Donham is succeeded by a republican who will find the office under the civil service rules, and the Gazette adds: "He can not make changes, and the business of the office will proceed without friction or jar, with regularity and precision, and to the great advantage of the people who use the mails, and whose great and only concern is that their mail matter shall be promptly and properly attended to." The men Donham found in the post-office and whom he tried to put out to make room for partisans with one or two exceptions entirely unfamiliar with the work of the office, were trained men, and could have made the business of the office proceed "with regularity and precision."

The Gazette urges President Cleveland to make his extensions of the rules now. This, with some other good things, makes the shortcomings of its article more bearable. As the Chronicle has already said, extensions at the close of a President's term put an unfair strain upon the law. They lead to official dishonesty and trickery and to attacks which it takes reformers half the period of the next administration to beat off.

BAFFLED PLACE-HUNTERS.

Senator Voorhees recently introduced into the senate a petition from Cass county, Ind., for the repeal of "the civil service system." The action is undoubtedly one of party workers who, after being paid in cash out of the campaign fund for more work than they did, now want double pay by being quartered upon the people. They will not abide the democratic method of competition, but they want the places allotted to them by the Voorheeses as by barons to henchmen for "plowing the lord's land or making his hedge or carrying out his dung." Voorhees also wants the repeal. He too hates the democratic method of competition for public employment, and likes the monarchical and feudalistic method of distribution by gift to faithful favorites.

There is reason to believe that this petition is the result of a movement of ward-workers attempted to be started in Evansville in this state. Last month the democratic city central committee of Evansville adopted the following resolutions:

Resolutions passed by the democratic central committee of Evansville, Indiana, regarding the order issued by ex-President Harrison, extending civil service rules to all free delivery post-offices:

WHEREAS, The order issued by ex-President Harrison in February last, extending the civil service classification to all free delivery post-offices was done for the obvious purpose of preventing the appointment of democrats and the removal of republicans from positions in which custom had prepared the people to look for and expect changes as heretofore, and

WHEREAS, The present incumbents are permitted to remain in their respective positions without examination as to their fitness therefor, which examination is required of applicants, thus showing that the said order of ex-President Harrison was directly contrary to the spirit of civil service reform, and was a partisan measure of the most radical character, and

WHEREAS, The civil service commission ordered a special examination for applicants for positions in post-offices of the class above referred to nearly three months prior to the time set for the regular examinations, the effect of which has been to embarrass newly appointed postmasters in recommending for their subordinates persons who are friendly to and in sympathy with them, therefore be it

Resolved, That the chairmen of the democratic central committee where free delivery post-offices are situated be requested to co-operate with us, with a view to secure the repeal or suspension of said order issued by ex-President Harrison, until all applicants and incumbents are at least placed on an equal footing.

Resolved, That C. J. Kehr be delegated by this committee to conduct the work necessary to bring about said co-operation.

Mr. Kehr set about his work, and the following letter of his was forwarded to us from Central New York:—

DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF EVANSVILLE, IND.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 25, 1893.

Chairman Democratic Central Committee,

DEAR SIR—I enclose herewith a copy of resolutions passed at a meeting of our democratic city central committee which explain themselves, also a copy of some of the questions asked in the civil service examination of applicants for the position of letter carrier, and a statement of Mr. Cleveland's order of 1888, regarding railway postal clerks.

The partisan nature of Mr. Harrison's order extending the civil service classification to all free delivery post offices, becomes only too apparent when we consider that the order was issued only a few days before the end of his term, and when we further consider that the time of holding examinations for applicants was changed from August to May of this year.

Our committee, being desirous of bringing about a repeal or suspension of Mr. Harrison's order, have requested me to enter into correspondence with the chairmen of the democratic central committees (nearly 500 in number) affected by this order, with a view of securing concerted action.

It seems that endorsement by central committees of resolutions similar in character to those we have adopted here, and petitions to your U. S. senators and congressmen, when of your political faith, would be the simplest way of interesting those whose influence might accomplish our purpose.

As there will be a special session of congress in August, it is of the utmost importance that action be taken at once, and I would therefore be pleased to have your views in this matter as early as possible.

Yours respectfully,
C. J. KEHR.

The questions referred to in Kehr's letter were stated as follows:—

Among the questions asked of applicants for the position of letter-carrier at the examination held in May last in this city were the following:—

An exercise in copying from dictation, in which spelling, use of capitals, punctuation and all mistakes and omissions of whatever nature are taken into consideration in percentages.

The addition of an absurdly large and almost impracticable combination of numbers.

Add the following: $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{1}{5}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{2}{6}$, $\frac{5}{8}$.

From $\frac{8}{9}$ of 318,465 subtract $\frac{3}{5}$ of 264,890.

The number of pieces of mail collected by a carrier on his trip was $\frac{2}{5}$ of the number delivered, and together they amounted to 497. How many did he collect, and how many deliver?

A carrier bought a house and lot for \$2,200. He spent $\frac{1}{4}$ as much more in repairs. The house was then destroyed by fire, being insured for $\frac{2}{5}$ of the costs of the house and lot and repairs. The carrier sold the lot for \$750. How much did he gain or lose?

A carrier walked on an average 185 feet in the delivery of every three pieces of mail. His route consisted of 56 squares of 370 feet each. How many pieces of mail did he deliver on the trip?

Is there a design in asking such questions of applicants for the position of letter carrier when we consider the nature of the work required of them?

The questions seem simple enough and well adapted to test the rudiments of a common school education. They are probably not adapted to the Mikes and Jakes who have been setting up primaries and conventions and voting floaters in Evansville. The friends of civil service reform need not fear this "movement," and the Evansville committee will only waste postage. Doubtless a party organization could get up a good many petitions like this one by asking only disappointed place-hunters to sign; but the order will not be rescinded. The merit system is marching forward, not backward, and it is going to prevail over all opposition in national, state and municipal service. Referring to this particular case, the Indianapolis Sentinel of August 20, marks the advance thus:

Civil service reformers need not be in the least alarmed by the utterances of Senator Voorhees the other day or the circular issued by the Evansville city democratic committee. Neither of them speaks on this point for any considerable number of democrats in Indiana or elsewhere. The democratic party is pledged to a reform of the civil service, and that reform was advanced more during the previous administration of President Cleveland than during any other period since the spoils system was inaugurated. President Cleveland may be relied upon to carry out the party pledges and his own declarations regardless of the wishes of the spoilsmen in his or any other party.

THE PURIFICATION OF POLITICS IS NOT AN IRRIDESCENT DREAM.*

In the year 1881 the total number of employes in the civil service of the United States of America was 124,640—a vast army. Ten years later the number had swelled to 183,488—another great army added to that of 1881 at the rate of nearly 6,000 each year. The increase in the number during the decade was over thirty-nine per cent.—a much faster growth than that of the population in the same time. If the same ratio of increase shall prevail during the balance of the waning century the year 1900 will find the civil service of the United States not less than 240,000. So that if the monstrous system which prevailed in this country so many years almost without opposition, whose motto was "to the victor belong the spoils," could have full swing in the presidential election of 1900, and the harvest year following, and there should be a political overturn, not less than 225,000 people—men and women, old and young, and most of them poor—would probably have to vacate their places and give room to the "hungry and thirsty" crowd which, with its bosses at its head, its generals and colonels and captains and officers of low degree, had fought the great campaign of 1900 for the spoils! It must be confessed that here would be much to console those statesmen who believe that "the purification of politics is an iridescent dream."

In the hearts of presidents and cabinet officers and heads of bureaus ever since the reform law began to assert itself there has been undoubtedly a growing sense of gratitude that in the wild storm and tumult quadrennially evoked by the office-scekers they have been able now and then to take refuge in the civil service reform ark. More than this, to drop the figure, with reference to the overwhelming mass of offices not included in the classified service, they have been able to show now and then some independence of spirit because they knew that among the great mass of the people the principle of the civil service reform was obtaining favor, and that if they occasionally repudiated the orthodox standards of the spoilsmen they would not certainly be visited with condign and immitigable punishment.

The law for the improvement of the civil service went into effect in July, 1883—about 14,500 employes being then included within its provisions, while in that year the total number of employes in the service of the United States in round numbers was 131,000. In 1891, the classified service, i. e., the places filled by competitive examinations, were about 34,000 in all, while the entire public service included in the neighborhood of 183,000. The gratifying fact that they disclose is this, namely, that while the growth of the public service has been much faster than the increase in population, the classified service has been increased in a much greater proportion, so that whereas only about eleven per cent. of the public service was removed from party politics in 1891, nearly nineteen per cent. has been rescued from them in 1893.

The chief contributions to this increase of the classified service were by Mr. Cleveland, just before the end of his first term, of about 4,000 offices in the railway postal service, and by President Harrison (at a period in his term nearly corresponding), of all the post-offices not previously classified having free deliveries.

From these facts we are fairly authorized to infer not only both these distinguished and patriotic presidents were sincere believers in the reform system, but that their belief exercised its most strenuous and effective influence after its possessor had been definitely beaten in his candidacy for re-election. Also, that if Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Harrison should continue for the remainder of the century to lead their respective parties in the presidential contest, we might reasonably expect that each time just after the incumbent was beaten, as he probably would be, in his effort to secure a re-election, he would make a substantial increase of the classified service. However this may be, the time has come when no matter at what period in his term any president may add to the classified service, the great body of the good citizens of both parties will heartily applaud him.

The reform in the civil service, though not in terms an amendment to the constitution of the United States, is such in its substance and effect. It seeks to supply the grievous defect which the fathers left in that sublime instrument of government and to write in the heart and mind of every American citizen this mandate: Political spoils shall not be made of the people's offices. If this commandment is obeyed the purification of politics will not prove an "iridescent dream." Political controversies will become, more and more, contests over principles and policies, and not mere struggles for power and scrambles for office. Office seeking will become honorable in the lowest and the highest, and office holders will find themselves entitled to their own self-respect. They will gain place by their merits and will have a just pride in the achievement. Does this seem an optimistic dream? Is the grotesque and horrible nightmare of the spoils system preferable? Reduce, if you will, the rainbow hues of our dream enough to suit the sober fancy, and then say whether you prefer the latter.

Part company with all figures of speech and look soberly and earnestly at the political situation in the cities of the United States to-day and say what it is that makes possible the vile and brutal sway of the party bosses and their bands of unscrupulous followers; what but the power of the public plunder? What packs our jury list with men who have no regard for their oaths in a political case? What makes our sheriffs' offices asylums for criminals? What emasculates our prosecuting officers and bates the breath of our judges but the power of public plunder? What makes of men of the commonest clay party bosses and public leaders and bars the way to all entrance to public life by superior men who value their self-respect above the attractions of place? What corrupts the young men, degrading their ideals and leading them to believe that success vindicates itself no matter by what means attained, but the power of public plunder? These are questions which bring a blush to the patriot's cheek, but they have to be asked and they must be answered. Will it help the situation to say that the hope to reform it is an iridescent dream? I seem to hear a calm voice from the land of shadows: "Civil service reform is but another successive step in the development of liberty under law."

Fred W. Smith, postmaster at Adams, Mass. was first appointed clerk by the democratic postmaster during Mr. Cleveland's first term, was continued by Mr. Harrison's appointee and now has been promoted as an efficient clerk should be.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

From the Point of View of City Government.

If civil service reform, like the tariff, is a national question, it is, also, like the tariff, a local question. Wherever the civil service is numerous, the problem presents itself in some form. Everywhere, in a certain sense, the problem is the product of the multiplication table. I have in my mind a small place in New Hampshire, where the post-office has remained, through all recent changes of administration, in the same store. The store is conducted by a firm of which the senior partner is a democrat and the junior partner a republican. Under democratic administration the senior partner is the postmaster; under republican administration, the junior partner. The store remains in the same place; the post-office does not change its location; the community is in no way inconvenienced by a change of postmaster; and in the meanwhile every one's sense of party triumph is gratified by the change of commission. Naturally, in a place like this, it is hard to carry the conviction that civil service reform is a national question of far-reaching importance.

On the other hand, in the same place, the problem of the water supply is solved by the digging of a well for each house. But this same problem of water supply, transferred to the city of New York, calls for the exercise of the best engineering talent to be had, and for the expenditure of many millions of dollars. It is precisely so with civil service reform. What is no problem at all on a very small scale, becomes a problem of the first magnitude by the process of enlargement. As it concerns cities, I imagine that the necessity for the regulation of the civil service by proper legislation is important precisely in proportion to the size of the civil list. Doubtless something is desirable even in small cities, because there the tendencies begin that in large cities do such palpable mischief; but in large cities there can be no question that an evil exists that must be remedied. It will be borne in mind that my own observation of the matter has been had in a large city.

In the city of Brooklyn there is an institution known as the Truant Home. It is a place to which boys who are habitual truants from the public schools may be committed by a magistrate. It is intended to exert a reformatory influence. Necessarily it is called upon to provide for all the necessities of the boys while they remain in its care. By an anomaly in the city charter all appointments in the Truant Home were made, in my day, by the board of aldermen. The majority of that board held a caucus and divided the patronage of the Truant Home among the members of the majority by lot or by some other process equally satisfactory. The board of aldermen then officially confirmed the selection of the different members of the majority.

[From an address by Seth Low, president of Columbia College, before the Civil Service Reform Congress at Chicago, August 8, 1893.]

On one occasion a hatter was appointed the farmer of the Truant Home. He resigned with indignation when he learned that the farmer was expected to milk the cow and to raise potatoes. In other words, the needs of the public service were never thought of. It was simply so much patronage incidental to the position of an alderman to be enjoyed, if he was fortunate enough to belong to the majority of the board. This single incident illustrates, as well as many could, the evils with which civil service reform has to cope in the large cities.

* * * * *

There is no more striking figure in connection with the political life of our large cities during the last twenty-five years than the city boss. He has been at once so permanent and so universal that one hardly knows whether to look upon him as a necessity of the situation, or as its natural flower. Whichever he may be, he can not be other than an unlovely figure to those who love liberty and honor manhood. Americans hesitate to give large powers even to elected officials. They carry their fear not unfrequently to the point of depriving their officials even of powers that they ought to have to enable them to serve the people to the best advantage. But Americans have permitted a political system, more especially a system of nomination, to be developed in their midst, whereby individuals not in office and in no sense responsible to the people become so powerful as even to exercise almost arbitrary control over the officers and legislative bodies elected by the people. At this writing there is scarcely a large city in the land where one man, not in office, is not so powerful as to be practically the dictator of the city. Those who wish action at the hands of the city confer with him. The officers of the people, in many cases, scarcely preserve the appearance of being free agents. The immediate source of the boss's power lies in his control of nomination. That in turn depends largely, if not wholly, upon his control of patronage. Thus we discover a most powerful motive for insisting upon civil service reform, such a reform as will make it impossible in cities for a man not in office to manipulate the patronage of the city to increase his own power.

* * * * *

I have referred already to that frequent loss of manhood incident to the spoils system, whereby men desiring to be candidates barter away the appointing power of their offices in the event of election in return for the nomination. But that is only one form of the demoralization of men that is incident to the system. I suppose that no class of men in the country enjoy so little of the fundamental privilege of American citizenship as the subordinates in the public service where the spoils system prevails. Such men experience all the ills of those who hang on princes' favors, and their prince is often a pretty mean sort of a prince. The right to vote as you please, and the right to say what you please, as to public questions, appear to be very nearly fundamental rights according to our American conceptions. But let a subordinate in the public employ vote contrary to the wish of his superior, or for those who think for his superior, or let him utter sentiments that are unwelcome, and he will speedily find that the exercise of his privilege has cost him his place. A man so circumstanced is not the servant of the people; he is the slave of a master. He is not really a free man. As our people realize this more and more they will recognize that in this aspect of the case civil service reform is verily a new declaration of independence.

REMOVALS ON CHARGES.

The postmaster-general, Mr. Bissell, is, among the chiefs of the great patronage departments of the national government, probably the sincerest friend of reform. The manner in which he treats the clerical force of his department is characterized by more justice, more sincere regard for the interests of the service, and less partisan spirit than we observe in the conduct of either the interior department or the treasury. He has recently made some praiseworthy promotions in distinct defiance of the spoils politician's displeasure. So much more is it to be regretted that in other directions he should so recklessly jeopard the character and usefulness of the administration. We have already discussed the scandalous circumventions of the civil service law of which some of the newly appointed postmasters have made themselves guilty, so far with impunity, as well as the slowly but surely progressing clean sweep of the fourth-class postmasters. We referred to the fact that fourth-class postmasters who had not yet served four years were removed only on charges of official misconduct, while postmasters who had been in office four years or more are removed without any charges being preferred, merely because they belong to the other party, and have in addition rendered themselves guilty of having acquired four years' experience in the discharge of their duties. (This, our readers will remember is a rule not invented in a lunatic asylum, but followed by the post department of the United States.) Now, how are charges made against postmasters not yet guilty of four years' experience acted upon?

If such charges of misconduct are required at all to justify a removal, it must be because the postmaster-general would regard the removal of a postmaster as yet innocent of having been four years in office, who has performed his duties well, improper and unjustifiable. It would follow that the postmaster-general, unwilling, as an honorable man should be, to inflict unjustly upon any one the indignity of removal, would take good care to have the justice of the charges well ascertained before taking action. For, being no baby in politics, he must be aware that such charges are frequently, if not in most cases, made by interested parties, such as candidates for the office, or their friends who want to get the incumbent out of the way, or congressmen or party committees who want places for their henchmen and workers, and that such charges made by such men for such a purpose have naturally a strong flavor of untrustworthiness about them. The postmaster-general would therefore, as a matter of course, permit the accused official to know what the charges against him are, and give him an opportunity to say something in his justification. This, one would think, were the least that could be done in a civilized country to protect a public servant against gross wrong, and also to preserve the self-respect of the high officials presiding over such a system.

The unsophisticated citizen who believes in fair dealing will be surprised to learn that the charges are treated as secrets to be known only to those who made them. An assistant postmaster-general, Mr. Jones, recently said to a journalist asking permission to inspect certain files that papers containing charges were to be shown only to the person making or filing them. "If a member of congress wants to inspect the papers which he has filed against a postmaster and in favor of a candidate—in order, for example, to be sure that his chain is complete—he is permitted to see his own papers, but those of nobody else. The postmaster-general was obliged to make a rule of that kind in order to guard against the abuse of any greater freedom of inspection, and to give all persons sufficient confidence of privacy to encourage them to make complaints frankly if they know of any reason why the retention of any postmaster is not for the good of the service." In other words, the accuser, be he the candidate for the office of the person accused, or the congressman who wants the place vacated for one of his henchmen, or a local boss who wants the place for one of his heelers, is permitted to see the charges again in order to strengthen them, to "complete the chain," if the case as first presented should not be sufficient to cause a removal. But the accused is not to see the charges, nor anybody in his behalf. The accuser is to be protected by secrecy; he can lie and slander to his heart's content without the least danger of being held responsible, for the postmaster-general stands guard over his safety. The postmaster-general even wishes to "encourage," by this assurance of "privacy," everybody who wishes to have somebody removed to make room for somebody else to do his very best in getting up "charges." While thus the accuser is amply protected and encouraged, the accused has "no rights that a white man is bound to respect." He has simply to hold still until he is removed from office, because somebody whom he does not know has accused him of something which he does not know. And such a rule is followed at a time when the hot chase for office is going on, and when what President Cleveland called "the demoralizing madness for spoils" has notoriously, as to the making of charges, relaxed the human conscience to the utmost.

It is not too much to say that by such rules the postmaster-general invites false accusations; he encourages calumny. And by removing public servants upon charges so made, without any regard for the rights of the accused—for it will not be pretended, when postmasters are removed upon charges day after day by scores, that the charges have been decently investigated—he commits a gross outrage upon his fellow-citizens. This matter of charges means something or it means nothing. If it means something, then a removal of a public officer on charges implies a serious reflection upon his character or his ability. It affects his good name; and nobody should forget that the meanest fourth-class postmaster in the land has as clear a right to his good name as the postmaster-general has to his. If the postmaster-general blackens the good name of his subordinates without well-ascertained cause, he does a thing which done in private life would exclude him from the company of gentlemen. If he should say, in justification, that it would be impossible carefully to investigate such a multitude of charges, he would only be taking advantage of his own wrong; for there would not be such a multitude of charges were they not encouraged and invited by the assurance of secrecy and by the levity with which removals are made according to them. There would be far less were the accuser held to a sense of responsibility; and the service would surely not suffer from it. As the practice now appears, it is a disgrace to our public morals and our civilization. But if the matter of charges really means nothing, if it is a mere disguise for a partisan clean sweep, if it is to be understood that the officer ostensibly removed on charges was really removed because he did not belong to the dominant party, then it must be called a mockery, an unmitigated fraud, which gentlemen of self-respect will scorn to be connected with.

We are always glad to praise the postmaster-general for any good thing he does. But those are not his true friends who fail to tell him that in the conduct of the most conspicuous part of his business he is in a very dangerous way. If at the close of President Cleveland's term it should be the verdict of public opinion that his administration as to the reform of the civil service was a sad failure, the postmaster-general, unless he speedily changes his course of action, will be held principally responsible for it. The plea of good intentions will hardly modify the judgment of history. —Harper's Weekly, August 5.

THE RUSSIAN SYSTEM.

Frank S. Thomas, the new postmaster at Topeka, Kan., has on file at the post-office department a full set of specific charges against the republican letter-carriers whose removal he procured about a month ago. His general charge, which is the only one that the department is willing to make public, is: "Incompetency and violation of orders and instructions." To the carriers' own faces he pretended that he had no fault to find with them, and the form of dismissal which he used was a placard posted in the post-office saying that "the postmaster general at Washington, D. C., under date of June 13, 1893, removed the following named persons," etc., etc. * *

In view of Postmaster Thomas's double-faced performance, your correspondent asked Acting Postmaster General Jones to-day for permission to look at the specific charges made against the carriers at Topeka. The request was denied on the ground that Postmaster General Bissell had made a very strict rule concerning the inspection of charges filed against anybody. "He will show them," Mr. Jones said, "only to the person making or filing them. If a member of congress wants to inspect the papers which he has filed against a postmaster and in favor of a candidate—in order, for example, to be sure that his chain is complete—he is permitted to see his own papers, but those of nobody else. The postmaster general was obliged to make a rule of that kind in order to guard against the abuse of any greater freedom of inspection, and to give all persons sufficient confidence of privacy to encourage them to make complaints frankly if they know of any reason why the retention of a postmaster is not for the good of the service."

"Does this rule apply, in your judgment, to the case of a postmaster who has told an untruth, either to the government or to the old employes of his office?"

"It applies universally, I believe." * * * —Washington Dispatch to the New York Evening Post, July 12.

A REFORMER IN OFFICE.

"Whatever may be said as to the superiority of a consular service from which political considerations are excluded, such as that of the leading nations of Europe, it is certainly impossible, under existing conditions, to deal with the matter upon a purely non-political basis. * * *

It is true that senators and representatives have taken a lively interest in the applications of some of their constituents for consular appointments, as has always been the case in the past. * * *

* * * It is impossible, under present conditions and with due regard to the claims of the different states for a fair share of the consular offices, to make altogether ideal appointments, or even to avoid some mistakes. —From Mr. Quincy's Defense in the Boston Herald, July 31, 1893.

Mr. Piatt was appointed consul to Queenstown in 1882, and after serving there some years was promoted to Dublin. His services at the latter post have been very acceptable to the government, and both he and his wife have become very popular among the Irish people. The testimonial referred to was probably called out by a recent announcement that President Cleveland had selected Mr. Piatt's successor, and that he would soon be removed. It is addressed to the President. The petitioners say:

"During his career at Queenstown the services rendered by Mr. Consul Piatt to the Irish people have been such that the mayors of Cork, Limerick and Waterford, together with many members of parliament and representative men of the entire province, made special acknowledgment thereof, and, on two several occasions, addressed the American government to continue him as its representative. To which memorial their excellencies President Harrison and President Cleveland most courteously assented.

"Now, remembering the services so rendered to our countrymen; bearing in mind the exceptional recommendations of the great corporate cities of the south; and desirous also, and especially, that the Irish metropolis should have the advantage of the presence of a gentleman skilled not alone in matters commercial and industrial, but highly distinguished in literature, we do hereby express our desire and hope that his excellency the President may be good enough to continue Mr. Consul Piatt in the position he at present occupies, as representative of the United States at the capital of Ireland."

The signatures to this testimonial constitute its most remarkable feature, including the names of the lord mayor of Dublin, the high sheriff, members of the board of aldermen, leading members of the bar, forty-seven Irish members of Parliament, the provost, the vice-provost, and twenty-two professors and tutors in Trinity College, and some of the most prominent business firms of Dublin. It is doubtful if any American representative abroad ever had as strong an appeal as this made by representative foreigners for his retention in office.—Indianapolis Journal. [Mr. Piatt has since been removed.]

Mr. Quincy is singularly silent, too, as to certain specific instances of rank partisanship which have aroused the indignation of civil service reformers throughout the country. Was it "to improve the service" that the administration summarily removed Consul General Adamson of Panama, an official of conspicuous integrity and discretion, whose original commission bore the name of Abraham Lincoln? Was it "to improve the service" that Consul General Sutton of Mexico was dismissed, in spite of his ability, long experience and thorough training? Was it "to improve the service" that Mr. John J. Piatt was deprived of the Dublin consulate, after a brilliant career which reflected honor, not only upon himself, but upon his government?—Boston Journal.

I. THE PROMISES.

* * To remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

* * That the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men nor the instrument of their ambition * * and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these * * abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government.—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of these United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional demands as the rule by which my official conditions must be guided.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us constrain me to remind those with whom I am to operate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused, and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.—President Cleveland's Inaugural.

II.

THE PERFORMANCE.

Wm. F. Harrity, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the national democratic committee, and Attorney General Hensel, of Pennsylvania, were among the first to enter the President's apartments. They had come in response to invitations, and they remained some time. The object of their visit was to discuss the question of the Pennsylvania appointments. Both gentlemen are non-communicative to-night concerning the result of their visit, but those who understand the political situation in Pennsylvania say there is little doubt that they made satisfactory arrangements for patronage for Pennsylvania democrats.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 21.

The visitors declined to reveal anything concerning their conversations with Mr. Cleveland and his assistants, but those to whom they talked have not proved so reticent. In the first place it was absolutely determined that the political patronage of Pennsylvania should be disposed of upon the recommendations of Mr. Harrity and his friends in the state administration. No man will be appointed to office in the Keystone commonwealth who is objectionable to those gentlemen. To such an extent will this be carried that Postmaster General Bissell is credited with having presented Messrs. Harrity and Hensel to Assistant Postmaster General Maxwell, the "headsman"—as he is humorously known in Washington—with the remark: "These are the friends whose counsel we will follow in Pennsylvania." That decision determines the selection of over 4,000 postmasters.—Washington Dispatch to New York Times, March 22.

Most of the men who ran the engines and the elevators and watched the doors were democrats who had been retained by his republican predecessor on the ground that they were faithful and competent. When asked by a reporter for a democratic newspaper the meaning of the changes, the collector answered:

"These employes received their notice of dismissal last November. They have only held on since the people demanded a change at the polls, because I had to look around and find the best material with which to replace them."

"It is a mistake to say that there are any good democrats among them. Every one of them held office under a republican administration, and that wipes out all the democracy they ever possessed. Why, if I had found my own brother here when I came, and he had been drawing a salary under a republican administration for one day, I would have fired him at once."

"That's the kind of a democrat I am! The people demanded a change last November—not only a change in the heads of the government and departments, but a change clear down to the charwomen, and that is the kind of a change it is my sacred duty to give them, as far as is in my power. Some of the discharged employes are good people, I know, but they are not good democrats."—Interview with Kearns, Collector of Internal Revenue at Pittsburgh, Pa., July, 1893.

VINCENNES, IND., Aug. 22, 1893.

To the Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

I respectfully inform you that I was yesterday removed by Postmaster Royal E. Purcell from the position of letter carrier. When I returned Saturday morning from my first trip, about 9:30 A. M., I was informed by the postmaster that Mr. James Hall (one week a substitute) had been appointed my successor. I demanded of him what charges he had against me for removal. His answer was that it was not necessary to state any, and that he had simply done as his predecessor, Allen Tindolph, had done four years ago—"Choose his man and send in his name." He also stated that there was nothing dishonorable about the discharge, as it was the same as had been done four years ago. Now, what I want to know is, can I not be reinstated, as I think this is a political removal, as there had been no charge preferred against me. He also stated that it would only be a question of time until he would make other changes, as he wanted men of his own selection. Have been referred to you, and should be glad to hear from you with any consolation you may be able to hold out. I was appointed regular carrier March 1, after serving almost four years as a substitute. Awaiting your answer, I am, Respectfully yours,

EDW. L. TOWNSLEY,
Ex-Carrier No. 3.

[As stated in this letter, the facts show that Postmaster Purcell has, without any cause, deprived of his place an employe who had learned his duties in a long apprenticeship, and who could perform them better and was more useful to the people than any new man. The dismissal was purely wanton, in the sense in which Mr. Madison used that term. The act, of course, is a corrupt one, and is entirely against the intention of the civil service law and the postal regulations. No officer who desires the most efficient service ever dismisses a man because he happens to take the notion, and no superior officer with a like desire ever sanctions or permits such a dismissal. There are always practical difficulties in the way of the correction of such evils. No civil service reformer is in favor of limiting the power of dismissal; in the interest of discipline and efficiency that power must be left in the executive. The only restraint that reformers ask is that there shall be a written public record of the reasons for dismissal, and that the president and heads of departments shall not allow the power to be abused. Any dismissal in which politics or favoritism, or any other motive except the efficiency of the service plays any part, is an abuse of this power. According to this letter this dismissal was such an abuse. The only question left is whether the postmaster-general will correct it. If he will not, he will not perform the duties he has sworn to perform, but there is no help for it except punishment by public opinion. He has the physical power in his hands. Mr. Townsley and the citizens of Vincennes should make the proper representations to Postmaster-General Bissell, and should, above all, make their protest public.—[EDITOR CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.]

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE index to the first volume of the Chronicle is nearly completed. It is the work of Mr. Charles Allen Lewis (Harvard, '90), of Indianapolis, who has given to it a great deal of time and care. To speak more definitely, many weeks of intelligent labor have been freely given by Mr. Lewis in the belief that the cause of reform would be proportionately benefited by making the facts in the CHRONICLE accessible. As we have before said the volume is the only work of its kind relating to the spoils system. The index will only be sent to those who request it; as by reason of the cost no more numbers will be printed than are actually needed. It is requested that applications be forwarded without delay.

IN the House, September 23, Representative Bretz of Indiana had a letter read, addressed to him by John Hasenour, the fourth class postmaster at Celestine, in Bretz's district in which Hasenour offers Bretz $15 if the latter will let him keep the post-office. Bretz went on to say that with this letter he demanded of Maxwell the removal of Hasenour. But the latter could not or did not act instantly. With flaming cheeks and flashing eyes Bretz said, "in my official capacity my character and reputation has been assailed. * * I underscored the offer of $15 with a lead pencil mark. * * The only reason that is assigned to me why I shall be held up in scorn and contempt before a part of my constituents, and before the country in a cause of this kind, is because, perhaps, I have received a greater per cent. of changes of postmasters in my district than any other member of congress. I have availed myself of this opportunity to vindicate myself as well as to inform the House and the country that the responsibility of retaining corrupt men in office does not rest on my shoulders as it appeared to do in the past."

His charges had been filed seven days. It takes an opportunity of this kind for the average of the present congressional delegation from this state to show his knavish political propensities. Bretz does not feel sensitive because a man offered him money for an office. He has steadily been selling offices ever since last March, not for $15 cash, but for work. There is no difference and he need not pose with flaming cheeks and flashing eyes with the expectation that the House and the country will do anything but laugh at him. Everybody recognizes that so far as moral ends are concerned he might just as well take $15 apiece for his fourth class post-offices as to take weeks of work setting up primaries and conventions for his renomination. Hasenour recognized this. Bretz's real animus was anger at the post-office department for a slight delay in obeying his orders.

CONGRESSMAN BYNUM works along the same line in his repeated visits to the President and Carlisle to see about changes in his district. The good of the public service does not require changes but the canvass for Mr. Bynum's renomination sharply demands it. There is no difference in principle between his getting $500 for the collectorship of customs here and getting the services of the new collector and his deputies for a couple of months to help his renomination. In some respects it would be even less detrimental to public morals. The cash sale would leave the people free to choose a nominee; but a sale for work results in preventing an untrammelled choice. Congressmen Holman is now working along the same line. He is not only selling the offices for services, but to an astonishing extent he has gone into the business of engineering private bills. We give a partial list of these elsewhere. Holman is threatened with overthrow in his district, and there could be no happier expedient to raise up workers for himself in every ward and township than to raise the hope that Smith may be put upon the pension list or that a bill may be got through for the relief of Brown.

THE descent from Pearson through Van Cott to Dayton as postmaster of New York is sufficiently striking. Dayton says: "I always give the places to democrats and mostly to Tammany Hall men." Tammany is the most corrupt, powerful and dangerous political organization that ever existed in this country. It has become a household word that the city of New York does not govern itself but is governed absolutely by this political Mafia. It is the duty of every citizen to fight this organization at every point and at all times. It must be broken up. Yet here is Postmaster Dayton joining hands with it and using the public treasury to keep it alive. This ought not to have to be pointed out to the President and the postmaster-general. If they ignore it they will find at the end that this is one of the many things now being done by the democrats to the up-building of the republican party. We do not overestimate the character and danger of Tammany Hall. No Roman governor ever returned from his province in greater glory than Croker now enjoys. A glance at the extracts taken almost at random from different sources and published in another part of this paper are enough to convince anyone that government by the people has practically ceased to exist in New York, and for that matter in Brooklyn. Even amusements are furnished with the same object and along the same line that they were furnished to the Roman rabble.

ONE Jones, a deputy in the office of the United States Marshal for this district, has resigned, and makes charges reflecting on the honest conduct of the office. The chief deputy, Foley, says that—

Jones has been a peace disturber ever since he came into the office. Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Foley says, had decided to discharge him, and would have done so in a few days if he had not resigned. "All this talk by Jones is simply for the purpose of injuring the reputation of the office," said Mr. Foley. "Mr. Jones says that one of the first things he learned when he came up here was to steal. Now it seems that he would have been perfectly willing to have remained in the office for $125 per month, but he wouldn't remain at $75 per month. Mr. Foley says that the office is conducted precisely as it was under Marshal Dunlap. "Everything we know about the office we learned from Mr. Dunlap and his deputies," said he, "and I do not believe they would mislead us in any way."

We may dismiss the charge of "stealing" with the remark that the office is what is politely called a political office which means that it is intended to yield to the party at the time owning it the utmost pay possible in patronage and money, and that no doubt Marshal Dunlap, in a matter of this sort, realized that there was no distinction of party and gave freely all the fruits of his experience.

But what we especially wish to dwell upon is the statement that Jones had been a "peace disturber." How did Hawkins happen to select an employe of this sort? Have not spoilsmen for years been solemnly asseverating that since they were responsible for their office they must choose their own men and that this was one of their sincere objections to choice by the merit system? Now note the facts regarding Peace Disturber Jones. He was Voorhees's man, a farmer from Posey county, and was appointed at Voorhees's dictation. Thus, in divers ways, Voorhees rewards his henchman, and this sort may be classified as his secondary patronage.

A YOUNG man who had lately been appointed a messenger in one of the great departments was seen the other day strolling through the main corridor puffing vigorously on a cigarette. One of the chiefs of division, in passing, ventured to suggest to him that he was violating a rule of etiquette, if nothing more, but was cut short in the middle of a sentence with the sharp retort:

"I guess you don't know who I am? I was put here by William F. Harrity!"

The chief did not swoon at the announcement, as he was evidently expected to. Neither did he carry the matter to the head of the department, as was doubtless his duty. Being a prudent man and an officer of long experience, and having a great deal of work to do at his desk, he simply ignored the incident; and the messenger, for all that is known to the contrary, may still be filling the corridor with the smoke of cheap cigarettes during business hours.—Good Government, September, 1893.

The way is clear enough in this matter, the head of the department will have to approach Harrity, not too abruptly, and get permission to administer a rebuke. That is all there is of it. The messenger is Harrity's man, quartered upon the people for Harrity's benefit, and can not have his sauntering elbow jogged without Harrity's permission. And what Mr. Harrity is in the Republic in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-three and in the midst of Columbian festivals, the New York Times succinctly shows as follows:

Mr. Harrity, secretary of the commonwealth, chairman of the democratic national committee, and dispenser of Mr. Cleveland's patronage among the democrats of the Keystone State, has as heavy a hand on the democratic organization as Mr. Quay ever laid upon the republican machine. The result is a unanimity of sentiment among the delegates, a promise of harmony altogether unusual in a democratic convention.—September 19.

THE secretary of agriculture has found a way out of a corner. With a great flourish he discharged part of his force of meat inspectors throughout the country for the very good reason that there was nothing for them to do. Then he discharged the remaining men because they were republicans, and the remaining women because their fathers were or had been, when living, republicans. Into these places he put democrats and women whose fathers were or had been democrats. This half division of spoil, however, did not suit bosses of the Voorhees and Turpie stripe. They did not want less places in the service, but more, and it suddenly developed that it would be a good thing to have meat for home consumption inspected, too, and the announcement comes that the force of inspectors is to be largely increased. If this is a genuine measure to benefit the public the secretary will reappoint the experienced employes he dismissed for reasons so disgraceful to himself. If he lets political bosses fill the places, no stronger proof will be needed to show that the measure was simply taken to make places for favorites to use up an appropriation.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL BISSELL has given out a table showing the proportion of correct to incorrect placing of mail matter by clerks in the railway mail service for various years. The table is as follows:

Year.	Proportion Correct.	Year.	Proportion Correct.
1885.....	5,575 to 1.	1890.....	2,834 to 1.
1886.....	4,228 to 1.	1891.....	4,261 to 1.
1887.....	3,364 to 1.	1892.....	5,564 to 1.
1888.....	3,698 to 1.	1893.....	7,144 to 1.
1889.....	3,954 to 1.

These figures tell a plain story. The loot of the railway mail service during Mr. Cleveland's first administration under the guise of "dismissals for the good of the service" ran the service down, and there was but partial recovery. Then, in 1889, Harrison and Wanamaker looted it again under the guise of "improving the service," and its efficiency ran to the lowest point ever reached. Then the merit system took it and to-day its magnificent triumph is marked by the figures for 1893.

THE majority by which Mr. Gladstone carried his home rule bill through the Commons was in all stages narrow. It, however, was sufficient, because it was steady and unflinching. The victory was a remarkable triumph of popular government. It was such because it was gained solely by argument. England was changed from a position of hostility to the opposite, because it was urged that this was the right thing to do. No clerkship nor post-office nor hope of reward or preferment of any kind helped to bring about this remarkable result. When the bill went to the House of Lords no member was under obligation to the government for patronage, and there had been and was no attempt to influence the action of any member by giving him control of appointments. There was no member with a political conscience so corrupt that he would not have resented an attempt to "work" his vote in such a manner, and the offer of a single place, however indirectly made and however insignificant, with even a surmisable connection with such an object, would have set England ablaze in an hour.

ANECDOTES OF A LIFE OFFICE-HOLDER.

It seems that "Judge" Chester R. Faulkner no longer represents Indiana. This perpetual office-holder can no longer be confined within the narrow bounds of state lines. He has, as it were, joined the regular political army. In April, 1891, the CHRONICLE, under the head of "Anecdotes of a Chronic Office-holder," gave an extended account of Mr. Faulkner, which, in order to refresh the memory of our readers, we reproduce:

Chester R. Faulkner was a member of the lower house of the late general assembly. He attracted attention on account of his opposition to appropriations which seemed to average people necessary to the ordinary efficiency of the state government. For instance, to the proposition to relieve the supreme court by additional judges or by a new court, Faulkner said: "Let them judges take down them spring beds and go to work." This referred to certain beds which the out of town judges have in their chambers at the capitol. It is not to be inferred that rope beds and feather ticks were to be substituted, but that the judges were to be cut off from all chance of sleeping in their chambers. When the question of salary for the state librarian came up it was proposed to make it $1,500, but Faulkner stood stubbornly for $1,000. Such Spartan virtue led wicked and envious people to look into Faulkner's past to see what meat he had fed on to produce such a development. It seems that under the late administration, Senator Voorhees kept Faulkner steadily under government pay. His first position was that of clerk of the committee on additional appropriations to the library of congress at six dollars a day. This committee had one bill referred to it in seven years. Then he became chief of the records division of the pension office at $2,000 a year. While in this position he asked the superintendent of the railway mail service to transfer a clerk so that he could work and vote in Indiana at an approaching election. Being refused, he wrote an impertinent letter derogatory of the administration, for which Secretary Vilas demanded his resignation. Faulkner refused to resign until he had seen Congressman Voorhees, who appointed him, and the latter forthwith bullied Vilas into backing down.

It is claimed that Faulkner's sole performance of duty in this last position consisted in tapping his bell three times at noon and again at night. The first tap was for the clerks to put away pens; the second, to rise, and the third, to march out. One other duty performed, however, is related of Faulkner. His young men and women clerks were apt to converse in the corridors at noon, and to meet this emergency he prepared and hung up a large placard having upon it the notice, "No Lofeing in the Corduroys." Harrison's administration dispensed with his services and then Voorhees seems to have quartered him upon the senate again, as until some months ago he was on the congressional pay-roll as folder in the senate document room.

We do not know when Senator Voorhees, from inability "to place" this henchman anywhere else, felt compelled to make him his private secretary; but it has been apparent ever since the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland that perhaps the weightiest problem upon Voorhees's mind was how to get Faulkner into a good berth. Perhaps there were grammatical reasons for urgency. Faulkner seemed at one time dangerously near becoming again chief of the records division of the pension department, but some other henchman got something else which would make this, if carried out, an uneven division of spoils. Voorhees has, however, finally landed his man. A Washington dispatch of August 8th says:

Judge Chester R. Faulkner, of Ripley county, private secretary to Senator Voorhees, was appointed superintendent of the Maltby building to-day, at a salary of $1,800. He was appointed from the country at large, and hence will not be charged to Indiana.

MR. QUINCY, AGAIN.

Mr. Josiah Quincy has resigned his place as assistant secretary of state to resume his chairmanship of the Massachusetts state democratic committee. Before Mr. Quincy went to Washington, his political career had been a promising one for reform politics. He was regarded as a democrat, whose intellectual astuteness had mastered the apparently simple problem that the great masses of the American people desire courageous and bold reforms in political matters, and more yet, as a man whose conscience would compel him to courageous and lofty patriotism, calmly abiding the consequences. Of all places in the public service, there was none so plainly in the line of "practical" reform as the consular service. In that service there is no dispute, but that educational qualifications are desirable. There is no doubt either that if the places were not used for "rewards" and "gifts," there are many men of especial fitness who for one reason or another would like the places and would be glad to submit to a competitive test. Did Mr. Quincy show any signs of courageous or lofty patriotism? Not in the least. Pitifully feeble, ineffectual and timid, he says, "it is certainly impossible, under existing conditions to deal with the matter upon a purely non-political basis. It is true that senators and representatives have taken a lively interest in the application of some of their constituents for consular appointments as has been the case in the past." How silly all this will sound when some man says the consular service shall now be a merit service, and proceeds forthwith to make it a merit service by excluding from it everything pertaining to political or personal reward.

Mr. Quincy's future will now be a curious and interesting thing to watch. In practice when tested he has been no better than our own Indiana spoilsmen. He has used the consular service about as Voorhees would. In externals his use has not been perhaps so coarse and noisy, but he has been a bona fide spoilsman with bona fide spoils methods. In spite of all explanations we believe that more and more he will feel that he has disappointed those whose lowered opinion is a distinct loss to him. We shall see whether even the politicians and the spoilsmen with whom he is to come into close relations do not show the contempt that even low grade men have for one who has failed to maintain a standard that they expected to be maintained in spite of their own efforts to break it down.

THE ABSORBING OCCUPATION OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY DURING A GREAT FINANCIAL CRISIS.

Secretary Carlisle intends to weed out the inefficient clerks in the treasury department. He began operations yesterday by dropping six clerks from the rolls. Others will be dropped from time to time as they are reported from the chiefs of the divisions. These vacancies will be filled through the civil service commission, and in doing so it is the secretary's intention, everything else being equal, to give preference to democrats.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, July 26.

It is said that Secretary Carlisle will give his attention soon to a number of Indiana republicans who are still ensconced in places in the treasury department.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, July 27.

Senator Voorhees arrived this morning and saw Secretary Carlisle. The result of the interview was that Mr. Carlisle sent to Mr. John O. Cravens, collector of internal revenue for the sixth Indiana district (at Terre Haute), a request for his resignation.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, August 27.

There is to be a "shaking up" in the bureau of engraving and printing. Chief Johnson, who recently took charge, has made an earnest study of the bureau and its needs and has prepared plans for its improvement which he submitted to Secretary Carlisle this afternoon. Mr. Carlisle assured him of his active co-operation. The overhauling will proceed rapidly.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, July 27.

Collector of Internal Revenue, John C. Quinn, on Wednesday was asked for his resignation. In answer, Collector Quinn, yesterday, sent the following reply: My term of office as internal revenue collector will expire next March, although at that time I will have held the office but three years, one year of the term being held by my deceased predecessor. There is a popular impression that resignation implies a desire on the part of an official to avoid the disclosure of something unpleasant in the administration of his office. Knowing that I have performed the duties of my position as internal revenue collector with the acknowledged approval of my superiors, I must decline to give grounds for ill-natured criticism by a resignation which in future might put me upon explanation.—San Francisco dispatch, New York Times, August 18.

There are at present between twenty-five and thirty vacancies in the position of internal revenue collector. These vacancies have been occasioned by the collectors' resignations being asked for. It is not yet known what action will be taken by the President in the matter of filling these places. It has been understood that no new appointments, unless the good of the public service urgently demanded it, would be made until the financial legislation now pending in congress should be out of the way. This view of the situation is evidently not entertained by many senators and congressmen, who, knowing of the President's return, crowded the rooms of Secretary Carlisle and Commissioner Miller this morning, urging them to recommend to the President their candidates for internal revenue collectorships.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 2.

William B. Donovan, whose services as clerk to the superintendent of government buildings were discontinued August 28, and in whose place Dexter P. Wager was appointed, this morning received a telegram from Secretary Carlisle stating that the order removing him had been revoked. Donovan is an "anti-snapper" and Wager was the candidate of the "snapper" faction.—Troy dispatch, New York Times, September 3.

Secretary Carlisle has issued new regulations, "directing the conduct of official business relating to the personnel of the public service under the treasury department." Some of the new heads of bureaus, it is said, have been, to use a western word, somewhat "brash" in preparing and laying before the secretary for approval lists of promotions, removals and appointments, and it has happened once or twice that in the hurry of business the secretary has signed these lists without very close examination.

The result has been that he has, in several instances had, to revoke his action. To obviate this necessity the secretary now directs that all such recommendations shall be first sent to the appointment division. To correct another bad practice into which some of the new appointees have fallen, the secretary further mentions in emphatic italics that "recommendation by officers of the department of persons not in the service is not in accordance with the rules and regulations."—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 3.

The plums around the treasury department are ready to fall. Secretary Carlisle insists that the fruit is ripe and that the President must shake the trees. Representatives, therefore, are hustling for their constituents, and several more patriots soon will be made happy. Within a very few days, in fact, at some time during the present week, Secretary Carlisle will hold an extended conference with the President on the subject of filling the existing Presidential vacancies in the treasury branch. This conference was to have been held long ago, but the absence of President Cleveland from the city and the importance of other matters side-tracked the question of appointments for a period. There are a number of vacancies in the treasury service to be filled at once. There are thirty internal revenue districts in which vacancies exist, and these will be first considered. At present there is no deputy second comptroller.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, September 7.

* * *

Secretary Carlisle was at the White House for a time last evening for the purpose of discussing some treasury appointments, but found Senator Mills of Texas in private consultation with the President, and only had a short talk with the President himself.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 9.

* * *

A Washington dispatch to-day says that the secretary of the treasury has asked for the resignation of Philip M. Hildebrand, surveyor of customs here. No intimation of this action had been received at Mr. Hildebrand's office. His term of office does not expire till January 30, 1894. He was commissioned for four years. The office belongs to the class where from custom the stipulated tenure is supposed to protect the incumbent, though he is removable with or without cause. Thomas Madden is supposed to have the inside track in the race for Mr. Hildebrand's position, though other candidates are numerous—including John Reaume, Maurice Donnelly, John Rail, Thomas Steele and Smith Myers.—Indianapolis News, September 11.

* * *

Congressman Bynum was closeted to-day with Secretary Carlisle, but the nature of their conference is unknown. It may have had something to do with the request of the secretary made later for the resignation of Mr. Hildebrand, surveyor of customs at Indianapolis. It is also quite probable that the internal revenue collectorship of the sixth district came up for consideration. This appointment may be looked for at any time now.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 12.

* * *

Secretary Carlisle has requested the resignation of J. Wehh Flanagan, collector of customs at El Paso, Tex.—Washington dispatch, August 18.

[Flanagan, as a delegate to a national convention, inquired what they were there for, if not the offices. President Harrison evidently took Flanagan's view and gave him an office. Secretary Carlisle, with the sympathy of a fellow spoilsman, lets him hold on six months.]

* * *

Secretary Carlisle has appointed T. Aubrey Byrne, of Boston, special agent of the treasury department, with headquarters at Boston.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 13.

[Files of the New York Evening Post, in Mr. Cleveland's former administration, show the discreditable part played by Byrne in his efforts to work out of the service employes of high character.]

HOLMAN IN THE FINANCIAL CRISIS.

The many friends of Frank J. Hall, the popular democratic attorney of Rushville, are grooming him for the congressional race against the Hon. William S. Holman.

Holman, who, for over thirty years, has held the democrats of the fourth district under complete control is losing his influence, and open denunciation of his course in regard to the present distribution of offices may be heard on every hand. He has made a terrible muddle of the collectorship, and in this instance alone has lost the influence of the Lawrenceburg Register, a paper that has manfully stood by him through good and evil report for many years. In Rush county the squabble over the post-office has cost him scores of staunch supporters, while in this county his action in regard to the patronage and the pension board appointed upon his recommendation has made a breach among his followers that may never be healed. In Franklin, Shelby and Ripley counties the same conditions exist, and it is safe to say, that never in his political career has Holman been brought face to face with such widespread dissatisfaction as exists to day.—Greensburg Dispatch to Indianapolis News, August 18.

* * *

Editor William O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, will, according to advices received here, be a candidate against Mr. Holman for the congressional nomination. Mr. O'Brien is one of the cleverest politicians according to reports that southern Indiana contains. He is said to have been disappointed because his father-in-law, Dr. Hunter, failed to get Mr. Holman's support against Bracken for collector of internal revenue. In his displeasure over the alleged political inconstancy of Mr. Holman, he found consolation from Senator Voorhees and other Indiana politicians. They expect him to be a candidate for Congress, and believe he will make things decidedly lively for Mr. Holman.—Indianapolis News, August 29.

* * *

A long letter from the Hon. W. S. Holman was received here recently in which he declares his intention to recommend Prof. Will S. Meredith for postmaster of this city. He intimates that while this may not be his own personal choice, that after a careful examination of all the recommendations of the various applicants, it appears that Mr. Meredith has the strongest indorsements and that he feels that duty warrants this action in favor of Meredith, which is final as to him.—Rushville dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 12.

* * *

The news which reached Rushville that Congressman Holman would recommend W. S. Meredith for postmaster of that city is causing considerable friction in democratic ranks. The friends of J. A. Spurrier, D. P. Shawhan and Douglass Morris are still pushing the claims of these gentlemen for recognition.—Indianapolis News, September 15.

* * *

Mr. Holman has interested himself in W. A. Posey, of Rushville, and it is understood that he has the promise of Secretary Hoke Smith that the young man shall be appointed either as clerk in an Indian agency or a special agent of the land office.—Indianapolis News, September 6.

* * *

Congressman Holman secured an appointment in the interior department to-day for W. A. Posey, Rushville.—Indianapolis Sentinel, September 16.

* * *

Congressman Holman is not frightened at the outlook for his renomination. The News correspondent is informed by one of Mr. Holman's close friends that the congressman does not expect any serious opposition. He doubts the report that William O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, is a candidate. Mr. Holman's friends say that he secured the appointment of Dr. Hunter as internal revenue collector under President Cleveland's last administration, and that his attitude toward the doctor in the fight was strictly fair and honorable. Mr. Holman does not believe that Dr. Hunter's friends are antagonizing him or that the doctor's son-in-law, William O'Brien, will be a candidate.—Indianapolis News, September 8.

[WHY HE IS NOT AFRAID.]

Congressman Holman has introduced a large number of bills of a private character, intended for the relief of his constituents. They are as follows: A bill for the relief of Herman Schrover; a bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary H. Premire; a bill for the relief of Julia LeClerc, widow of John LeClerc; a bill for the relief of Theodore Walker; a bill for the relief of Albert Munson; a bill to correct the military record of Alonzo Carter; a bill to correct the military record of John C. Partlow; a bill to correct the military record of Myron H. McMullen; a bill for the relief of Wm. T. Rominger; a bill for the relief of Nancy Loslyu; a bill for the relief of Mrs. Hulda F. Stone; a bill for the relief of John Maholm; a bill for the relief of Mrs. S. O. N. Pleasants; a bill for the relief of Nancy A. Fuller, mother of Samuel Phipps; a bill granting a pension to Laura M. Cheek; a bill granting a pension to James Theodore Walker; a bill for the relief of Wm. F. Poe; a bill for the relief of Samuel Brown; a bill for the relief of F. W. Zeickendrath; a bill granting a pension to Selinda E. Smith; a bill granting a pension to Matilda Weed; a bill granting a pension to Samuel Maguire; a bill granting a pension to Joseph M. Ward; a bill for the relief of Henry J. Bischoff; a bill granting a pension to John W. Wright; a bill granting a pension to Esther Todd; a bill for the relief of the surviving partners of J. and O. P. Cobb, of Aurora, for value of the barge Moule, taken by the United States; a bill to correct the military record of Patrick Sweeney; a bill for the relief of Mrs. Nannie Shaffer and children of James M. Alley; a bill for the relief of John F. Williams; a bill for the relief of Jacob L. Tudor; a bill for the relief of John Gray; a bill to correct the military record of W. S. Fox; a bill granting a pension to Margaret Withers; a bill to correct the military record of Wm. E. Burns; a bill granting a pension to Jefferson Jordan; a bill increasing pension of Moses Crawford; a bill for the relief of the widow and heirs of Martin A. Barnett, deceased; a bill to relieve Elisha Lunsford from the charge of desertion; a bill granting a pension to Johanna Knab; a bill granting a pension to Anna T. Unger; a bill for the relief of Isaac M. Bower, of Lawrenceburg; a bill for the relief of Isaac H. Wheat; a bill granting a pension to Nancy Altizer, of Ripley county; a bill granting a pension to Hester A. Bonnell; a bill granting a pension to Anna H. Anderson, of Decatur county; a bill for the relief of Charlotte Rarison; a bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Kennedy; a bill to remove the charges of desertions against Frank Wempe; a bill granting a pension to Bernard Brunner; a bill granting a pension to Clara I. Worttell;

a bill to extend to Wm. M. Snyder the benefit of the arrears of pension act; a bill granting a pension to George Pulskamp; a bill for the relief of Charlotte H. Fenton; a bill for the relief of George F. Roberts and others; a bill granting a pension to Maria Thomas, of Union county; a bill for the relief of Thomas W. Johnson, of Ripley county; a bill granting a pension to Theodore Eck, of St. Paul; a bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Jennison; a bill granting a pension to Elizabeth P. Mullin; a bill to restore the name of Drusilla Fowler, of Switzerland county, to the pension roll; a bill granting a pension to Ardenia Dillon; a bill to correct the military record of John Dickson; a bill for the relief of Julia A. Wolf; a bill to correct the military record of John Faust; a bill to correct the military record of Wm. Barnes; a bill for the relief of John Colter; a bill for the relief of Samuel Trester; a bill for the relief of Benjamin A. Waybright; a bill to increase the pension of Simeon P. Bell.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 16.

INDIANA CONGRESSMEN IN THE FINANCIAL CRISIS.

Congressman Bynum will call on President Cleveland as soon as the latter returns from Gray Gables, and hopes to be able to learn something definite in regard to Indianapolis appointments.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 29.

* * *

Congressman Bynum waited an hour at the White House this morning to see the President, but there were so many appointments ahead of him that he left the White House without securing an interview. Mr. Bynum called to discuss the Indianapolis patronage.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 9.

* * *

Congressman Bynum says the surveyor of the port at Indianapolis will not be appointed for some time yet.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 15.

* * *

Samuel R. Meyers, of Rockport, Ind., will probably be appointed chief of the reimbursement division of the treasury soon. Congressman Taylor is working seemingly for Mr. Meyer's appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 14.

* * *

Mr. Hammond, like his colleagues from northern Indiana, complains that the administration has been too slow making political removals in his district.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 4.

* * *

Ex-Congressman Patton, of the lake district, who was an applicant for superintendent of immigration, and failed of the appointment, has applied for the receivership of the land office at Cherokee Outlet. The Indiana delegation will try to secure the place for him.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 16.

* * *

The nomination of ex-congressman Patton, of Remington, Ind., as register of the land office of the eastern district of the Cherokee Outlet, has already been sent to Buzzard's Bay by Secretary Smith for President Cleveland's approval. Congressman Hammond was chiefly instrumental in securing the appointment of Mr. Patton.—Washington dispatch to Indianapolis News, August 18.

Mo., had been appointed by the officials at Washington to a position as copyist at the depot. As there are two republicans holding the position it is not definitely known whom Mr. Hurlburt will succeed. In any event one will go for the present, and it is not unlikely that the other fellow will make room for some good democrat in a few days. This morning Capt. T. T. Thompson, a democrat in every sense of the term, was given a place at the depot, vice Albert Burnett, removed for political cause. This makes twelve changes within five days. There are applications from all parts of the state, Ohio and Illinois for positions. Of course, there will be many disappointed, because places can not be procured for all. It is safe to say that a clean sweep is one of the possibilities, and that, too, very soon.—Jeffersonville dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, July 14.

* * *

There is much partisan rejoicing at Jeffersonville, over the rumor that Quartermaster-General Hodges, of the government depot, is to be replaced by Lieutenant Colonel A. G. Robinson, now stationed at Ft. Vancouver, Wash. The grievance against Colonel Hodges is that he refuses to interest himself in the removal of republicans so that democrats can take their places. Colonel Robinson, on the other hand, is quoted with being a democrat who believes in the Jacksonian doctrine. "To the victors belongs the spoils."—Indianapolis News, August 30.

* * *

Word comes from Crawfordsville that there is some uneasiness shown among the local democrats over the delay in the appointment of a postmaster. A letter was received this week complaining that Hulit, who is a candidate for deputy internal revenue collector, was having the appointment delayed so that in case he failed to land the collectorship in the seventh district he could apply for the Crawfordsville post-office. The term of the postmaster at Crawfordsville has expired, and as the collector of internal revenue will not be appointed until November, complaint is made in a certain quarter that the post office appointment should not be delayed so long. Indications point to a very lively fight between Hulit and Jump for the collectorship, the former being backed by Congressman Brookshire and the latter by Senator Voorhees.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, July 31.

* * *

Congressmen Cooper and Brookshire called at the White House this morning and saw the President. Mr. Brookshire is interested in the appointment of a postmaster at Crawfordsville. He has recommended Mr. Voorhis for the appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 7.

* * *

Congressman Cooper has three presidential offices yet to fill. Besides Edinburg, there are the Danville and Greencastle offices, terms of both of which expire in January. Congressman Bretz has three presidential offices yet to fill, all of which expire in January—Bedford, Washington and Worthington.

Representative Cooper has secured quite an important office for one of his constituents of Greencastle. William B. Vestal has been appointed special agent of the treasury, and he is ordered to report here for duty at once. Mr. Vestal is ex-sheriff of Putnam county.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 2.

* * *

Chester R. Faulkner, of Ripley county, custodian of the Maltby Building and Senator Voorhees's political lieutenant, has just performed a philanthropic deed in securing the appointment of Mrs. Margaret Lemon as postmistress at Holten, Ripley county, vice a republican summarily bounced.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 16.

* * *

The fourth-class post-office question is still a lively one in Indiana. The Hon. J. M. Fippen, of Tipton, has been here several days trying to settle the Arcadia post-office question, while numerous letters have been received from the Hon. Robert Bell, of Fort Wayne, on the same subject.

James Briscoe, a prominent politician of Lynn, Ind., is also here, to correct an alleged error in the appointment of a post-master in his town. He claims Senator Turpie secured the appointment of a man as postmaster who did not reside in the community.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 10.

* * *

Indiana office-seeking politicians, whose staying qualities failed them many months ago, and who went home after a fruitless search for office unsatiated, may well contemplate the case of the Hon. "Con" Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, and take courage. Mr. Cunningham is a merchant of Crawfordsville, who amassed a small fortune by a successful business career, and who now has an ambition to go to Scotland as a consul. He came here shortly before the inauguration, and has been here since, except for a few short intermissions. He has made many warm friends, and does not seem to be discouraged because of the outlook for appointment nor awed by the hotel bills of Washington. Mr. Cunningham is taking the world easy, and declares that Washington is a nice place to stop over, and says his chances are brighter to-day than they were in March.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 8.

* * *

Senator Voorhees chaperoned C. W. Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, to the department of state this morning. Mr. Cunningham hopes that when the assistant secretary rounds up the consulships in the next few days, before leaving the department, that he will get one.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 14.

Office seekers are pouring into Washington just now from every part of the country. Just why they should invade the capital at the particular time is a matter hard to explain. There is always a large number of them about the town, but the corporals guard on hand in the latter part of August has been swelled into an army. These men and women are very much in evidence in the capital in the morning hours, and are particularly numerous when the house fails to meet as it has done during the past three days. The absence of the speaker gives them a fair whack at the members, and they do not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity. Over at the senate end of the big building, after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, they keep the pages busy carrying in cards. After adjournment the male part of them throng the lobbies of every hotel on the avenue. The ladies go to the theater. The return of the President is supposed to have something to do with this sudden expansion of the ranks of the unemployed, though as they can't see him, just what good his presence can do them is unexplained.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 6.

A MODERN ROME.

Hugh McLaughlin, more than any other one man in Brooklyn to-day, controls the political destinies of a great city. Called the "Boss," there is no one who dare dispute the title with him. He is boss and master of the third largest city on the American Continent. He can make and unmake the fortunes of men at will.

Hugh McLaughlin is not a hard master to those who acknowledge him as their "boss." He is faithful to his friends, rigid in those principles in which he believes, and steadfast to a degree of obstinacy. Politics is the meat this Caesar feeds upon, and upon which he has waxed so great.

This man, whom everybody in Kings county knows either personally, by sight, or by hearsay, is a man of but few words. The "boss" is a man of simple habits, seldom indulging in the frivolities of life, and never venturing into the giddy swirl of society. Mr. McLaughlin was once in very moderate circumstances. He is now in extraordinarily easy circumstances. Times have changed since he was a young man, and, although his tastes are just as simple, and his habits just as unassuming now as then, his position has changed. He now lives in a magnificent brownstone front house, the handsomest on the block, on the very exclusive Remison street, Brooklyn.—New York Times, July 16.

When the daughter of Hugh McLaughlin, the Brooklyn boss, was married recently, wedding presents to the value of $750,000 was given her by friends and her father's henchmen. The bride has had built for their safe keeping, a fire and burglar-proof vault under the sidewalk in front of her new home.

* * *

United States District Attorney Jesse Johnson of Brooklyn, tendered his resignation to President Cleveland last July, but his successor has not yet been appointed. So quiet was the affair kept that it was not known until yesterday that the resignation has been tendered. It is believed Mr. Cleveland will not appoint his successor until an agreement between the administration and the McLaughlin machine is reached.—New York Times, September 18.

* * *

A rumor floated from Willoughby street, Brooklyn, yesterday that "Boss" McLaughlin had written to President Cleveland urging the reappointment of Internal Revenue Collector Nathan, whose term expires shortly. Mr. Nathan is a leading republican, and Mr. McLaughlin's action was in some quarters regarded as sinister. When asked whether the report was correct, the Willoughby street sphinx said he would neither affirm nor deny it. Mr. Nathan was equally non-communicative. Those who know the men, say it would be only natural for Mr. McLaughlin to exert himself for Mr. Nathan. They are warm friends, and either would stretch a political point to help the other.—New York Times, September 8.

Events have blazoned themselves on the tablets of the "boss's" memory like the legend that burned upon the wall of Belshazzar. To be at once attended to and "fixed," no matter at what cost, the following sinister array of facts awaits and confronts him, each a gaping crevice in the fortifications of the "machine."

First. The Columbian celebration scandal; the preposterous bills illegally audited; the lavish "jamboree" of his Alderman and Supervisors, and all the other offenses against statute law and public morals which made the commemoration of the discovery of the continent an immortal infamy in Brooklyn.

Second. The desperate plight of his Mayor, Boody, saved only from indictment by the equally desperate strategy of his District Attorney, Ridgeway.

Third. The abominable false burials of living veterans at the public's expense by this Board of Supervisors in order that the pecuniary fruit of such sacrilegious knavery might be seized by some of its members.

Fourth. The ghastly failure of the Commercial Bank in the hands of the favored contractor, Keeney; the outrageous deception and defiance of the law charged and proved against its officers; the spreading of the cancer of "ring" affiliations with the hitherto unpolluted regions of finance.

Fifth. The several profitable franchises and contracts lavishly distributed among his satellites and correlatives of the "regular" centre.

Sixth. The disgraceful epidemic of brawling and personal encounters which has taken possession of the functionaries of the county and city governments.

Seventh. The insolent rejoinders and lawless contempt showered by his Board of Health on portesting citizens.

Eighth. The previous scandals that have come to a head, in which his system of garbage contracts now looms up as fresh regions of chicanery, and robbery, and incompetence.

Ninth. The amazing effrontery of his Board of Supervisors in selecting a time of national distress and economy in which to raise the salaries of their underworked and overpaid employes.

Tenth. The alarming increase by his fiscal officials of the city tax rate.

Eleventh. The abandonment of all public improvements by his various representatives and the distress and depression consequently resultant to the deluded workmen of the city, now denied the employment to which they are entitled.—New York Times, September.

"Alderman McGrath was seen at his saloon, North Seventh street and Bedford avenue, by an Eagle reporter," says a local article on the first page of the Brooklyn Eagle of last evening. In another local article on the same page we read that "Mrs. Elizabeth C. Volckening, the wife of Alderman Charles J. Volckening, was at police headquarters this morning," that she "called the attention of the Eagle reporter to her face, which was bruised and discolored;" that she "explained that the alderman had given her a brutal beating last night," and that the alderman keeps a saloon on Fulton street near Buffalo avenue.—New York Evening Post, September 7.

Additional indications of the value to Richard Croker of his position as the chief of Tammany Hall was furnished to-day by the announcement of his purchase of the one-half interest in the famous Belle Meade Stud in Tennessee, for $250,000. Besides this amount, it is known that he spent at least $69,000 in the purchase of race horses in training last fall. The source of the wealth which is necessary to acquire and keep such a stable as he is preparing has always been a subject of conjecture. He has never followed any regular business except that of office-holding in this city. Mr. Croker began his political life as a clerk in a district court at a small salary, and then was elected alderman, which office he held at a salary of $2,000 for about two years, going out of it at the time of the upset of the Tweed ring. He got back into office again in 1874, and until 1887 held the position of coroner at a salary of $5,000 a year. He was elected alderman in 1873, but did not take his seat, as he was appointed fire commissioner by Mayor Edson in 1874, and was reappointed by Mayor Hewitt, the salary being $5,000 a year. He was made city chamberlain in 1890 by Mayor Grant, at a salary of $25,000, resigning a year later; and he has not held public office since, nor has he been engaged in other business, so far as is known, until this year, when it was announced that he entered into partnership in a real estate firm. Since 1868, therefore, or in the last twenty-five years, Mr. Croker's receipts from the various offices which he has held have been $86,000, and as he has been in no other business, as far as is known, this new evidence of great wealth is a subject of thought by those who have watched his career.—New York Evening Post, March 16.

Perhaps Richard Croker's new house, No. 5 East Seventy-fourth street, would have been finished, furnished and occupied without attracting public attention if it had not been for the strike of the workmen who were completing in the house that feature in which rich men are so prone to delight—elaborate wood carving. It was designed by James E. Ware, and gives its owner the pleasant consciousness of living in a renaissance mansion modified by artistic touches borrowed from the Spanish. The front of the house is built of brown stone from the Longmeadow quarries. It is called brown stone, but it is a very light shade of brown, and almost pinkish. The front steps ascend, first, parallel with the wall of the house, then turn towards the front door—an arrangement permitting greater architectural effect, and Mr. Ware has improved the opportunity. The doorway has a round arch, and above that the treatment is such as to give the entire doorway a square castellated appearance, which yields a rich effect, both from outline and plenteous carving. The architect has again tried himself on the fourth story, where a rich decorative scheme is carried from the bottom of the windows to the roof.

* * *

But it is the interior of Mr. Croker's house which is to gratify his desire for luxury. For the decorations and furnishings Mr. Croker has employed a Fifth avenue firm which makes a specialty of "high art" in their line and whose services command such sums that only the wealthy can afford to engage them. The schemes of decoration in Mr. Croker's house have just, after repeated conferences between the firm and their rich patron, been finally decided upon. Mr. Croker proved fastidious and the firm were put upon their mettle to please him. The wood carving, the frescoing, the painting, and all that having been settled, the firm is now trying to please Mr. Croker in the matter of furniture. Their artists are at work making special designs which are to be submitted to Mr. Croker. He will not make a final decision from descriptions merely; he insists upon seeing a graphic representation of the article of furniture before concluding that it will do. If it does not suit, the artist must make other designs. The furniture of his new house, therefore, is all to be specially manufactured from special designs. Electric light delivered in many artistic shapes is to be the illumination of Mr. Croker's house, and inasmuch as the very large extension before mentioned is to be the dining room—where the lights are to be especially numerous—further confirmation is afforded of the belief that Mr. Croker intends being a generous entertainer.—New York Evening Post, August 5.

Richard Croker called on Collector Kilbreth yesterday. His visit, which lasted half an hour, caused a stir in the custom house.—New York Times, August 25.

Collector Kilbreth says in an interview in the New York Mail that Tammany will be recognized when the New York Custom House is reorganized. —Buffalo Express, September 20.

* * *

Richard Croker has returned to his farm at Richfield Springs. Before going he had a conference with Postmaster Charles W. Dayton at Tammany Hall, and the politicians say that the distribution of post-office patronage among Tammany men was discussed. —New York Times, August 11.

* * *

D. P. Nevins has been appointed in the newspaper, periodical and postage department of the post-office in place of James H. Marr, and Joseph W. Kerrigan has been made stamp clerk in place of B. Foster. Both appointees are Tammany Hall men. —New York Evening Post, September 9.

* * *

The Tammany men are naturally very well pleased with the appointments Postmaster Charles W. Dayton is making. Yesterday he appointed William E. McDonald, for several years a clerk in the city court, chambers, cashier in the money order department of the post-office, at a salary of $2,500 a year, the appointment to take effect October 1. Mr. McDonald is a member of the general Committee of Tammany Hall in the Twenty-eighth Assembly district, where William E. Stillings is the leader. —New York Times, September 19.

* * *

Meanwhile postmaster Charles W. Dayton had taken a seat upon the platform. Sachem Nelson Smith quietly took off his collar like badge and slipped it over Mr. Dayton's head.

"You've got the Tammany collar on now," said one of the congressmen.

Mr. Dayton smiled, and wore it for some time. He did not wear it however, when making his speech.

The introduction of postmaster Dayton was a surprise. Mayor Gilroy brought him forward just after representative Robert E. De Forest had finished. The audience gave him a splendid ovation. His presence on the platform, it was argued, showed that he was an "organization man," and that means a great deal to a Tammany man. —New York Times, July 5.

* * *

Concerning the principle of his appointments, Mr. Dayton said:

"I have acted in accordance with recommendations from Tammany leaders, whenever they sent me men fit for the places named. They have sent me people utterly unable to do the duties of the offices to be filled, and I have refused to accept them. I recognize the organization and give members of it preference, but I let the leaders know that their nominees must be thoroughly fit, and I do not hesitate to remove them if I find they can not do the work."

"You have made no such removals of Tammany men?"

"No; there was none here—in the 'excepted places.' Those I have appointed are able men. Indeed, I think I have a very competent force. At any rate I shall be able to do the work of this office, and at the holiday season I want you to come in here and see how the large mails are handled. That will enable you to compare the efficiency of my force with that of a year ago."

Mr. Dayton then spoke of the changes he had made at some of the stations, referring in particular to Stations L and O. He said he had given men who were in places above their capabilities other lesser posts, and he had found that they did very well in them.

"Do you always put in Tammany Hall men?" was asked.

"I always give the places to democrats, yes, and mostly to Tammany Hall men," replied Mr. Dayton. In some cases I have advanced Tammany men from lower to higher positions. Thus, Tuunison, whom I put in charge of station L, I found in this office, with a good record. He has justified his advancement."

"Have you made any appointments on other than Tammany recommendations?"

"Yes; Mr. Abram S. Hewitt suggested a man for a place, and I appointed him stamp clerk. Mr. E. Ellery Anderson asked for a place for one of his friends, and I gave it. Mr. C. C. Baldwin, Mr. R. G. Woodward, and others not usually classed as Tammany men, have asked to have appointments made, and I have granted their requests." —New York Evening Post, September 19.

Alderman Rogers succeeded in having an interview with Commissioner Andrews at three o'clock yesterday afternoon. The commissioner had just returned from a tour of inspection of the city. Alderman Rogers had been waiting for two hours. Both were warm when they met, Commissioner Andrews because of physical exercise, Alderman Rogers on account of mental irritation. The latter wanted a certain discharged sweeper reinstated.

"He's a good, hard-working man," remarked the alderman, "although, perhaps, a little slow."

"I'll look into the case. If I find the sweeper has been unjustly reported I will reinstate him and discharge the foreman," said Mr. Andrews.

"But the foreman's all right. He's willing to take back this sweeper," returned the alderman.

"That's the very reason he isn't all right," retorted Mr. Andrews. "He reported the sweeper as inefficient. If the sweeper is inefficient the foreman should not wish to take him back. If what you say about the sweeper is true I will discharge the foreman."

Both gentlemen were excited. The commissioner had arisen and was pale. The alderman's ruddy countenance was several shades redder than usual.

This is the explanation of the affair: The discharged sweeper and the foreman who discharged him are both in Alderman Rogers' district. The alderman would like to have the sweeper reinstated, but is not willing to sacrifice the foreman, for the latter's political influence is to the sweeper's as $1,000 per annum is to $600 per annum. —New York Herald, August 16.

At the meeting of the board of city record to-day, the resignation of David N. Ryan, assistant supervisor of the city record, was accepted, and Edward H. Hayes was appointed in his place. Hayes is a clerk in the office of the commissioners of accounts, and is one of "Barney" Martin's trusted lieutenants in the eighth assembly district. He did not have to pass an examination for the place, as it was taken out of the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Board last week by the board of aldermen by a trick which was explained in the Evening Post at the time, namely, by making the assistant supervisorship a bonded office. The appointment is regarded as another indication that the mayor is trying to conciliate the Martin brothers, who were not on friendly terms with him before "Barney" was appointed a police justice. —New York Evening Post, June 26.

Despite the very severe storm of last evening, seventy-one members of the City Club went to the club's house, No. 677 Fifth avenue, to attend the special meeting of the club called to hear the report of the committee on the appointments of John J. Scannell as fire commissioner and Joseph Koch as police justice by Mayor Gilroy, and to take some action respecting the appointments. W. Bayard Cutting presided in the absence of the president, James C. Carter. The reading of the report of the committee was listened to with the closest attention and at its close was adopted with unanimous voice. The committee were William C. Gulliver, John Jay Chapman, J. Noble Hayes, William B. Hornblower, Henry E. Howland, W. Harris Roome, and R. W. G. Welling. The report was in part as follows: The members of which this committee is composed have given much time and attention to the collection of historical statements embodied in this report and to the avoidance of inaccuracies therein. All allegations founded on mere rumor have been rigorously excluded, and although much might with propriety be added concerning the character and reputation of Messrs. Scannell and

Koch, it was thought better to keep strictly within the limits of historical record. We believe the following statements to be conservative and just. On the third of December, 1869, a riot occurred in the liquor saloon of Thomas Donohue, No. 378 Second avenue, corner Twenty-third street. The official account of the shooting states that "Florence Scannell was shot in the spine, Thomas Donohue in the right arm, George Johnson was shot in the neck, and John Martin was clubbed on the head." John Scannell was arrested for shooting Donohue and Donohue for shooting Scannell. Upon being searched in the station-house a seven-barreled revolver with six chambers discharged, was found in the possession of John Scannell, also a large bowie knife. During the summer of 1870 Scannell made his first attempt on Donohue's life in front of the stable of Forbes Holland, in Fourth avenue, corner Eighteenth street. He made a second attempt on Donohue's life September 19, 1870, on the southwest corner of Seventeenth street and Third avenue. On this occasion he shot Donohue, but Donohue recovered. He had disguised himself, but Donohue recognized him. Hiram B. Ferguson, a witness for Donohue on his second trial testified, on cross-examination, as follows:

"Soon after O'Brien was elected sheriff, Scannell was appointed deputy; about two or three months after his appointment, I acted for Scannell by taking charge of the business assigned to him; his processes were stopped in the latter part of 1870. I mean by stopping his processes that the sheriff didn't assign him any work in the office; that was, I think, before October 1, 1870. I know of John going out of the city for about ten days after his processes were stopped; I think he was in the sheriff's office a portion of two years. His processes were stopped at the time Donohue was shot in Third avenue; subsequent to that time he lived in Willett street. He gave me as a reason that there was a warrant out for him and he didn't want to be arrested; he lived at my house before he went to Willett street; he came to my house the second day after the shooting of Donohue; he came about nine o'clock in the evening; he said there was a warrant out for him; I don't remember if he said what the warrant was out for; he said he didn't want to be arrested for the reason he thought Donohue was in the Tammany ring and would have him railroaded without giving him a chance to prove his innocence."

Scannell at last succeeded in killing Donohue on the 2d of November, 1872; on this occasion Richard Murphy, Francis H. Hamilton and John F. Barrett testified to the coolness of Scannell prior to and during the act of assassination.

Scannell has ever denied that he was the man who fired the five shots; over a dozen witnesses identified him.

The first trial of Scannell took place on Monday, February 17, 1873. He was tried a second time November 17, 1875. Nothing new was elicited upon this trial, and on this occasion the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty on the ground of emotional insanity. He was admitted to the Utica asylum on December 4, 1875, and was discharged from there as not insane on February 24, 1876, less than three months from the date of his admission.

Ex-Mayor Hewitt has stated to this club that he was urged while mayor to appoint Scannell to municipal office, and that after having examined into his qualifications therefore he refused to make the appointment. It has been stated, and not contradicted by the press, that ex-Mayor Grant had received a similar request and responded to it by a similar refusal.

Your committee, after careful investigation, adds that Mr. Scannell is known to the public and to this committee only as the hero of the scandals already detailed in this report, as a victim of a dangerous homicidal mania, and as a rejected aspirant for office under Mayors Hewitt and Grant. —New York Evening Post, February 18.

John J. Scannell, the fire commissioner, whose appointment by Mayor Gilroy was the subject of special investigation by the City Club, declined today to make any statement concerning the practical dismissal by him of Dr. Samuel Johnson, who for twelve years has held the post of vice-medical officer of the fire department in this city. Dr. Johnson told a reporter for the Evening Post that the account of the matter published this morning was accurate.

"A week ago," he said, "I was asked to appear before Commissioner Scannell, who said bluntly: 'Doctor, I want your resignation.' 'Why?' I asked. 'Because you are a republican, and we want the place for political reasons.' 'When do you want it?' 'Now.' 'When is it to take effect?' 'Immediately.' Commissioner Scannell added by way of explanation: 'Understand, Doctor, there has been no fault found with the way in which you have performed your duties. Your services in the department have been satisfactory in every way, but your place is wanted for a member of the Tammany Hall organization, and so I ask for your resignation.'"

—New York Evening Post, April 19.

I do not assert too much when I declare that the position of a police justice is more important to the community than that of a judge of the court of appeals. The latter finally settles the law, but the former applies it in the first instance in nearly all cases affecting the life, liberty, and property of the citizen. He has, in minor cases, the power of pardon, and often after judgment revokes the sentence and releases the offender. The exercise of this power, in order to oblige political friends, gives to the justice an influence which is as dangerous as it is indefensible.—From Mayor Hewitt's Message of 1888.

The trial of Dr. Robert W. Buchanan was in progress in Part III of General Sessions, and the court-room was crowded. A dozen people in the corridor were trying to get into the room. Policeman Brown was on duty outside the door, and Charles Wundt, a court officer, stood by it in the court room. Two young men, one a big fellow, stood near Wundt. One of them, the taller, got up on a railing running across the room, and was in the way of several other spectators. The officer asked the man to get down, but he refused to do it. The obstreperous man's companion went into the hall with him and the two then tried to bulldoze and browbeat Wundt. The taller one showed a big gold shield of the street cleaning department, and said: "Say, young fellow, don't you know who you're talking to? I'm superintendent in the street cleaning department, and I'll get you into trouble." The other fellow also told in loud tones what would happen to Wundt. The young man told what influence his father had and how he would salt the court officer. Wundt told them to go away, but they refused to do so, and kept up their noisy threats. Finally Wundt asked Policeman Brown to arrest the two. One of them was Michael Padden, a district superintendent in the street cleaning department. The policeman and the court officer took the two men to the city hall police station, and Wundt charged them with disorderly conduct. The prisoners were immediately taken to the Tombs police court. They went into Police Justice Ryan's private room, and in a brief space were free. Young Divver was arrested in October charged with bribing a man to register illegally. The man swore that Divver had paid him to register in several election districts, and Divver was indicted by the federal grand jury. At this trial, however, the complainant said he had forgotten all about the circumstances. Divver openly paid him money in court after the jury had acquitted him.—New York Tribune, about April 28. [Young Divver is the son of police judge Divver.]

The vulgar exhibitions of newly-acquired wealth which the leaders of Tammany hall and their families are making seem to be creating an impression which is likely to affect the public mind. Newspapers are beginning to point out this phase of life in New York City, and the thoughtful citizen puts this and that together. It may be that along this line will come the awakening that is necessary as a preliminary to reform in the local government of our chief city, whose people are quite too indifferent to the plain drift of things. The New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Press writes:

This display this summer has been quite as offensive, vulgar and persistent as it was in the days when Tweed was in his glory. We do not see so much of it in the city, because the opportunities for display here are not so great, but in the country resorts, and especially at Saratoga, it has been so pronounced as to drive away scores of persons who have been in the habit of making yearly visits to that resort. For instance, a Tammany official who only a few years ago was glad to lunch at a 10-cent restaurant, and whose early training was amid the most humble and menial surroundings, has taken a fine cottage at Saratoga. No man could live as he does who is not in receipt of a handsome income. His family is gorgeously, conspicuously and most fashionably gowned. Their diamonds represent small fortunes, and in the glare of the electric lights of the dining-room and parlors flash with superb brilliancy.

Men who not longer ago than the time when Mr. Hewitt was mayor of the city were humble Tammany henchmen, earning three or four dollars a day, strut the piazzas of the great hotels there, dressed conspicuously and in costly raiment, sporting jewels and jewelry, going forth each day to the racetrack with great wads of money in their pockets and going forth every night to the gambling-house, which is run with open doors, staking their money at the tables. I went up to the Windsor hotel, perhaps the most expensive resort in the United States, and I was told that Mr. Croker had been spending a season there, living in magnificent luxury. It was only a few years since the utmost income of Mr. Croker was $5,000 a year, and he has had no ostensible business except politics since that time, unless he calls his racing stable a business.—Springfield Republican, August 20.

When Isidor Dreyfuss, a court reporter at Essex Market, went to Alderman "Silver Dollar" Smith, about two years ago, and asked him for the hand of his daughter "Tillie" in marriage, "Silver Dollar" gave for an answer, "Well, Issie, she's talk'n about you all the time, and I've no objection, but don't have the wedding until I say so."

That was enough encouragement for Mr. Dreyfuss; he regarded it as settled that he was to have Miss Smith for his wife. In the meantime Papa Smith determined that when his daughter should take a husband, the marriage ceremony and the attendant feast should be something out of the ordinary, to stir "de old ate," now the third assembly district, in the political weal of which Mr. Smith, whose saloon and dollar tiled floor is not unknown, has a word to say.

After the wedding dinner there were speeches by Congressman Campbell, Judges Ehrlich, Newburger and Hogan, a number of the lawyers present, and some other guests. Then came general jubilation and merry making, with dancing, which was kept up until this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Dreyfuss will make a trip to Washington and Niagara Falls, and then settle down in a very pretty home in East Sixty-ninth street.

The presents sent to the newly wedded pair were numerous enough, as "Silver Dollar" Smith said, to start in any business. The father estimated their worth at $27,000 last night. Among them was a big case of silverware from John Y. McKane, an ivory fan from Congressman Campbell, a carving set from Judge Newburger, silverware from Barney Rourke, a diuner service from Edward J. Sparenberg, rugs and tapestries from Timothy D. Sullivan, and a sugar bowl and spoon from Inspector McLaughlin. There was enough in all to fill two trucks.—New York Times, December 23, 1892.

Excise commissioner Dalton marshaled the Mutual Association of the fifteenth assembly district, New York to Donnelley's boulevard park, College Point, to-day. They came on the steamer Crystal Stream. After breakfast, and while waiting for their second annual clam bake, they held athletic games, which proved interesting as well as unique.—Flushing Dispatch, New York Times, September 10.

All the politics of the district radiate from Abingdon Square. It is the hub of the ninth's political wheel. All the political headquarters in the district face upon it—the big Tammany headquarters, the republican headquarters, the Jefferson Club, the Lincoln League, and the headquarters of the Voorhis democracy are all there practically in a bunch. The "square" has from time immemorial been the forum of the ninth district in all political matters. This season the old square has seen a new departure in political work—nothing more or less than a band of music. Queer as it may seem, music is now made to play its part in keeping the voters in good humor. The district had never had free band concerts until this season, when James W. Boyle, the Tammany leader of the district, went down and urged upon the park commissioners the wisdom of providing free concerts for Abingdon Square. The commissioners assented, and made arrangements with the old Guard band to give a series of eight concerts in the square. On the night of the first of this series of concerts, the Tammany headquarters was brilliantly illuminated, and fireworks were set off by the committee. The republican Lincoln League rooms, just beside the Tammany quarters, were not illuminated at all, and the Tammany folks impressed it upon the voters that it was to their efforts that the concerts were due, and the efforts were no doubt appreciated.

On concert nights now, all the club-houses, including the Lincoln League, are illuminated and decorated, and they are gala nights in the district. The Tammany committee always displays fireworks as a prelude to the concerts.—New York Times.

The Tammany general committee of the Ninth Assembly district met last night at its headquarters in Abingdon Square. W. H. Dobbs, who presided at the meeting, announced that Mr. Boyle had secured 120 places for the Tammany men in his district from the various departments of the city government since he was selected as leader.—New York Times, May 12.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

IF all who desire the index to the first volume of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE will send a request to that effect, it will save the expense of printing more than are needed.

Missing numbers have been supplied to such an extent that it is now possible to complete several more volumes.

THIS paper made an effort during the administration of President Harrison to ascertain the names and offices given to those connected with newspapers, and found that the facts were apparently deliberately concealed as far as possible. The facts are even more difficult to learn under the present administration. It is earnestly requested that all readers of the CHRONICLE will lend assistance to make the list as complete as possible. Another set of facts equally significant would be the list of the delegates and the leaders of the party organizations paid by offices.

ONE of the most righteous victories ever gained in an election was gained in the Indianapolis city election on the tenth of this month. With fairly decent conduct the democrats would have been sustained by the people, but they seem to have gone mad. As the time for election approached, they created useless offices like the office of "weed inspector," to provide for workers who always have to have "a place." They allowed Sim Coy to again become a party leader. They tried to buy votes by hiring three times the usual number of men as street-cleaners. For weeks they let the saloons openly ignore the law requiring them to close at eleven at night and on Sundays. For weeks they let the gambling-rooms be run as openly as the drug stores. They made the gamblers pay a large part of their campaign expenses. Finally one of their members of the police board publicly declared the doctrine that gambling-rooms could not be closed, but only "regulated." These things were the culmination, but back of this was, in many of the departments, a long course of manipulating the affairs and money of the city for personal and party benefit by means of pulls of party bosses. All this is called having a genuine party administration with no mugwumpery, and is laid down as necessary to party success. Now note the result: Two years ago Mayor Sullivan was elected by 2,700 majority; but after this completed type of genuine party administration he is defeated by about 3,000 majority. Truly the independent voter multiplies and grows strong. This great victory is largely due to the Indianapolis News.

THE republicans now have complete control of the city government, with the executive power entirely centered in the new mayor, Caleb S. Denny. The new boards appointed by Mayor Denny will doubtless manage well unless they try to run the city business with a view to benefiting the republican party. If they set their minds to that it is only a question of time when the republicans will be turned out. It will be much easier to turn them out than it was the democrats.

The new officers talk well. So far as they have spoken, there has been no such foolish declaration as "this is going to be a republican administration," but on every hand it is declared that the merit system must be introduced. The charter lays an ample foundation for this, and there is really nothing to do but for the mayor and his assembled heads of departments to adopt rules for the labor service and for competition in the other departments. Our late experience has again demonstrated the utter humbug of the "non-partisan board" as a reform agency. Cheap politicians are nearly always appointed upon these boards and the result is double-headed partisanship of the most ordinary kind. What civil service reformers want is open competition, with honorable men upon the boards who will impartially enforce the law and the rules and with whom a trick is impossible, and it does not matter what their politics are.

Since the above was written, the new board of public works has appointed a street commissioner who has appointed foremen, and is apparently about to hire street laborers on the favoritism plan. The foremen are the vital part of the system and if reform were intended, they would only be chosen by competitive examination.

MR. WILLIAM W. WIGHT, chairman of the Milwaukee board of fire and police commissioners, read an interesting paper describing the Milwaukee fire department before a convention of fire chiefs in that city in August. We should like to publish it in full, but the narrow space of the CHRONICLE renders it impossible. The Milwaukee fire force was put under the merit system in 1885. All citizens of Milwaukee not under five feet seven inches, of average weight, and between twenty-four and thirty-five years of age may compete. The tests are mental and physical. Mr Wight very pertinently says:

No fireman is expected to be an astronomer, a botanist or a rhetorician, but he is expected to be able to read and write with fair fluency; to cipher through the fundamental rules; to know, in a general way, the geography of this city and of the United States and the form and history of the American government. It is believed, for instance, that a grown man who never heard of Washington, or Lincoln, or Grant, who can not locate New York city or the Mississippi river, who does not know the capital of his own state, is too deficient in general intelligence to be a fireman in Milwaukee. So also is it affirmed, that an adult individual who can not add, subtract, multiply or divide simple numbers, who has not learned the chief buildings of the city and their location, and who is not familiar, in a general way, with the duties required of a fireman, is mentally incompetent for the situation to which he aspires.

The physical examination is by an expert gymnast, and the tests are in lifting, jumping, climbing, running, and other well-known and accurate tests for determining physical capabilities. Then follows a medical examination, with the result that thirty out of every one hundred applicants are rejected. Upon a vacancy in a certain rank it is filled by competition from among those below. Politics are absolutely eliminated. Only two officers, the chief and the first assistant, may be appointed without competition. The system is thoroughly liked and believed in by the people of Milwaukee. But it should be borne in mind that their fire board is made up of men who believe in it and who are too honorable to try to cheat it.

THE confirmation of Van Alen by the senate brings a movement politically stupid and vicious to an unfortunately successful conclusion. He had literally never been heard of. Ex-Secretary Whitney got him to give $50,000 to the democratic campaign fund. After the election Whitney, calling the President's attention to the fact that this was his only "approach" on the matter of spoils, asked the President to appoint Van Alen ambassador to Italy. Van Alen has no claims whatever to education, scholarship, cultivation or statesmanship. He is of the Ward McAllister type; he can dispute successfully about the essentials of a good entree, and knows what, in his limited circle, constitutes "good form." If he had not given the $50,000 he would never have been mentioned for this place. The President, before naming him, was fully informed of all the facts, and the nomination has been almost universally condemned. Yet the President, with a stolid persistence indicating an opinion of personal infallibility, and which so many other times in his career has hurt him with the whole people, refused to hear the most disinterested advice not to allow this purchase and sale of an office to be carried out. That the senate majority, composed of Quays, Gormans and Voorheeses, confirmed Van Alen, in no manner relieves the President of the lasting disgrace which permeates this whole transaction.

THE reports from Washington appear to be authentic that the President has turned over to his cabinet and the heads of departments the appointments to the civil service. This is a grave matter. There has not, so far as we now recall, been a conspicuous movement for reform made by any of these officers. The postmaster-general has been called a friend of reform; just why, is not clear. The course of the secretaries of the treasury and of the interior could not be worse. It does not matter whether the President has shirked his great duty from indifference or weakness. He has lost the opportunity offered to but few men in a country's history. Although he has delayed and hindered the destruction of the spoils system, civil service reformers need not be discouraged. The day of reckoning can not be delayed nor hindered. We do not believe that any party can succeed itself which has been occupied with distributing spoil as Mr. Cleveland did in 1884, as Mr. Harrison did in 1888, and as Mr. Cleveland is now doing. The blow to reform is serious, and it was needless, and it is only temporary; but the humiliating failure of Mr. Cleveland is sickening. There is no more pitiable sight than to see a man, believed to be a great man, and posing as a courageous man, who, in spite of all the efforts of his friends to shield him, willfully displays himself in all the nakedness of a common politician.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Indianapolis News, dated October 23, says:

On Saturday, the last medical board in Mr. Holman's district was recommended for appointment. The district at Shelbyville has been the subject of a very hard and bitter fight for some time, and it was with difficulty that Judge Holman saw his way clear to the appointment of men who would be reliable and satisfactory to any considerable degree to his constituents at that place. He recommended Dr. Wolf, of Morristown; Dr. Samuel Kennedy, of Shelbyville, and Dr. Morris Drake, of the same place. Dr. Wolf is an old man and a well known doctor in that part of the country, but the other two are young aspirants for glory with not a great deal of experience as yet. They were nominated in accordance with the line of policy outlined by Secretary Hoke Smith at the beginning of this administration, that in the medical boards young doctors should be given a chance, and "mossbacks," as a rule, should be given a back seat. Dr. Wolf was placed on the board, or rather nominated for the position, in order to keep the younger members in the proper path. The appointment of this board is looked for daily at the pension office, and there seems to be no doubt in any quarter but that they will be appointed.

This is a fair sample of the pension "reform" which has been going on under this administration. Throughout the country congressmen, after more or less bitter fights, have filled up these boards with political doctors, and we pay these selected henchmen $1,700,000 a year. The object aimed at is not the good of the service, but to enable congressmen to quarter upon the people followers who will be easy toward applicants for pensions favored by congressmen and who will help set up the primaries and conventions next year. President Cleveland has allowed this swindling operation to go on in the face of the plainest warning and protest made directly to him. Purging the pension list under this administration is going to be a dismal failure, and all because the President chose to continue the boards as tools of congressmen rather than make them independent.

IT IS TIME TO SPEAK OUT.

Reform papers have been disposed to be slow of criticism in deference to the supposed occupation of the administration with the silver question. But it has become apparent that while ostensibly on account of this pre-occupation, civil service reform has been suspended, the distribution of spoil has not been suspended. The clean sweep of the fourth-class postmasters goes on at the Clarkson rate of 30,000 a year. The loot of the consulships continues. The ambassadorship to Italy was sold. Congressman Bynum is daily expecting to "name" a collector for this port, and everywhere congressmen are appointing their henchmen to offices of all kinds and grades. There seems every prospect that the Voorhees appointments of Burke, Risely and Donham, bad of themselves, but infamous because they seem the purchase-price of Voorhees's support, are to be crowned by the appointment of Voorhees's man, the distillers' attorney, Joshua Jump, as collector of internal revenue at Terre Haute. The silver crisis seems a good cover for evil doing, but not at all an incentive to well doing. The rules of promotion in the departments at Washington are ignored by the secretaries. In every office in the country heads of divisions could have been put under the rules, but in no case has this been done. No extension of the rules have been made, although it is entirely feasible to make them cover many classes of employes like those in pension agencies, and in the internal revenue service. The civil service commission is crippled by the President's leaving upon it a hide-bound partisan in Commissioner Johnston. The bunco tricks of Carlisle and his son Logan, we have many times called attention to. Attorney-general Olney remains director of a road it may be his duty to prosecute.

The time has come for reformers to speak out. The democratic platform covers the entire subject of civil service reform, and the present course of the administration is in flat violation of its promises. Even at this early day the overthrow of the democratic party at the next national election forces itself for consideration. This administration was not chosen to treat us to another revel in spoil. If it means to do anything else, it is time it began to show signs of it. The administration had better study the recent Indianapolis election. It is pretty good evidence that, in Indiana at least, there are many quiet people who will not stand everything.

"THE EXISTING POLITICAL CONDITIONS."

We give this month some ten columns in small type concerning the quest for two petty federal offices in the state of Indiana. It has extended over one year. What is printed in the CHRONICLE has been greatly condensed and is perhaps a fourth of what has been printed in the three leading papers of Indianapolis. What has found its way to the surface of these papers is a hint only of the low intrigue, the political blackmailing and the desperate struggle for personal supremacy that has actually gone on.

We ask every person in whom yet survives the belief in democratic government to read this account of sales of offices, of trickery, of bargains and deals and dickers and broils and then consider that the persons involved are the President of this republic, his secretary of the treasury, two venerable senators, some seven congressmen, and that for twelve months they have given no one knows how much time to this contemptible business. These two places, which have engaged the respectful and solicitous attention of the President, the eager activity of the secretary of the treasury and the plotting and fighting of several hundred henchmen, should be filled by the promotion of two competent men familiar with the duties, and the subordinates should be selected by competitive tests. This picture of a network of cabals, involving the high and the low, recently euphemistically called by Mr. Josiah Quincy "the existing political conditions," and which he says it is no more possible to stop than it is to stop the blowing of the winds, represents an infinitesimal fraction of the sort of thing that has actually engaged the administration since last March. No president who falters at the disruption of his party, if disruption is necessary, to end forever the disgrace of legislation by patronage on the one hand and an oligarchy of barons and henchmen on the other, can command the respect of the American people. A dry rot appears to have undermined the courage, the morals and the intellect of certain members of this administration, as well as of others that have preceded it, so soon they got fixed in Washington; but the sound integrity of the American people has not been undermined, and the time has come that no administration can remain in power which is indifferent to this evil or helpless to crush it.

"A CRAVEN HUNG ALONG THE BATTLE'S EDGE."

Elsewhere is the speech of Moorfield Story before the Reform Club, of Boston, calling Josiah Quincy, the late assistant secretary of state, to the bar of his fellow-citizens to answer why, as a professing civil service reformer, he had been acting as a common spoilsman. Nowhere else, perhaps, is so felt the force of moral pressure to make defense as to one's actions as in Boston. It is right and it is a pleasure to do homage to such public sensitiveness for right conduct.

Mr. Quincy's reply is worth notice only because he yet claims to be a civil service reformer. A spoils foundation with a thin stucco of civil service reform is dangerous only because it is deceptive. A reform professor practising unreform acts unblinkingly, with solemn asseverations that he is a practical reformer, exercises undue influence upon the timid and the party bigot reformers; therefore it is worth while to examine what Mr. Quincy says.

First. Civil service reform is urgent; it is practicable; it is chiefly to be advanced, however, by extending the law [when, he fails to mention], and by the strict enforcement of the law. We are getting on. Between 1884 and 1888 the practical reformer told us that to insist upon the rigid enforcement of the law was impossible; there was a great deal then written that looks silly to-day about local option in the enforcement of the law.

Second. Mr. Quincy says: "I do not recall at the moment anything in the last democrat platform or in the utterances of President Cleveland during the campaign or since which can be called a pledge that he would carry out what has been called, as I say, the spirit and purpose of civil service reform, outside of the operation of the civil service rules and the civil service law."

Mr. Quincy, upon re-reading the democratic platform, his own campaign text-book and the President's acceptance and inaugural, will hardly maintain that the votes of civil service reformers were not solicited upon something more than a statement to "support civil service reform and to continue it and carry it farther than it has yet been carried." For one thing, the President very solemnly swore to obey the constitution, and congressional patronage is in deadly and irreconcilable conflict with the constitution.

Mr. Quincy says that it is desirable and practicable to put the consular service under the merit system; but he then goes on to say that "it is practically politically impossible for any President to apply a purely civil service system to the service as it now stands."

* * Under the operation of our system of government at Washington, no administration can cut loose from the influence of congressmen without imperiling its success and the accomplishment of the purposes for which the people elected it."

What the peculiar feature of our government is that we must continue to buy Dan Voorhees with patronage to clear his financial vision, Mr. Quincy is careful not to specify.

An Indiana statesman might claim that congressional patronage is inseparable from party government, but Mr. Quincy, of Massachusetts, in the face of the Irish reform bill, will not. That Mr. Quincy, one of the young and reform democracy, did not dare urge so small a reform as to put the consular service out of reach of the demoralizing madness for spoils speaks ill for his courage and for his opinion of his party. In 1888, Theodore Roosevelt was put, as a professing civil service reformer, face to face with the spoils system as was Mr. Quincy in 1892, and we beg to quote to Mr. Quincy and his excusers these lines as showing why one has served his country and his party and why the other has lamentably failed in both:

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream;
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain,
And underneath the cloud or in it raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords Shocked upon swords and shields. A Prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes,

A craven hung along the battle's edge
And thought: "Had I a sword of keener steel!—
That blue blade that the King's son bears—but this Blunt thing!"—he snapt and flung it from his hand,
And, cowering, crept away and left the field.
Then came the King's son, wounded, sore, beset
And weaponless, and saw the broken sword
Hilt buried in the dry and trodden sand,
And ran and snatched it, and with battle shout,
Lifted afresh, he hewed his enemy down
And saved a great cause on that heroic day.

But later in Mr. Quincy's defense we can not even offer the justification that he has been timid and irresolute and lost his great opportunity for he says with an outburst of unmistakable fervor: "His [the President's] power to deal with all the offices is of more importance because of the influence and control which it gives him in the settlement of these great vital questions which affect us all so closely than it is in any other respect."

If this means anything it means that it is right for the President to coerce legislation good or bad, through the cupidity and dishonesty of congressmen by the giving or withholding of patronage.

As a mere indication of the far-reaching, the interminable corruption, and the utter annihilation of the power of the people to express their will in the choice of their representatives, we refer to the facts elsewhere regarding two small Indiana appointments. It is fair to suppose that Mr. Quincy, having lived in the midst of this for nine months, knows that this is a hint only of what has actually been going on. These are things that ought not only to shock "a consistent reformer of the more advanced and radical type," but a man of very ordinary, commonplace views of honesty, manliness and fair play. Has Mr. Quincy become calloused?

He will remember those lines quoted with so much effect in a memorable campaign of another brilliant young reformer from Massachusetts who at the critical moment appeared to Mr. Quincy and others to falter:

The path of duty is the way to glory,
He that walks it, only thirsting
For the right, and learns to deaden
Love of self, before his journey closes
He shall find the stubborn thistle bursting
Into glossy purples, which outred
All voluptuous garden roses.

At its last annual meeting the Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association resolved that it would prosecute all officers or persons of Buffalo or of Erie county who are in any way concerned in political assessments upon public employes. The New York State League is also getting into thorough working condition, with Matthew Hale as president and George McAneny as Secretary. It has before it one of the most formidable tasks that ever came to an association. The state civil service law of New York has been broken down by the state democratic machine, headed by Governor Flower. To put it upon its feet again will be a great work, but it can and will be done.

THERE is a continuing inconceivability that a great government should lend itself to the business of reducing men and women from higher to lower positions because they are republicans and promoting into the vacancies thus made other men and women solely because they are democrats. This has been done repeatedly under this administration in Washington, and yet each time it seems impossible that the government should be the active agent in this superlative littleness. The Buffalo Express has a Washington dispatch of October 23, giving the following account of this low business:

On Saturday the following changes were made in the dead-letter office: Reductions—Ward Burlingame, from class 4 to class 2; Thomas D. Taylor, from class 3 to class 2; Charles M. Dalsell, from class 3 to class 1; J. E. W. Thompson, from class 2 to class 1; Miss H. H. Webber, from class 2 to class D; Miss A. R. Thurlow, from class 2 to class D, and Peter B. Cook, from class 1 to class D. Promotions—Walter F. Aycock, from $1,400 to $1,800; Caleb B. Bourue, from $1,400 to $1,600; Charles Hardin, from $1,200 to $1,600; L. C. Woodson, from $1,200 to $1,400; Thomas G. Allen, from $1,000 to $1,400; Robert L. Baines, from $1,200 to $1,400; Mrs. M. F. Horyon, from $900 to $1,200; Miss Minnie F. Dennis, from $1,000 to $1,200; Miss Lizzie J. Mazie, from $900 to $1,000, and James C. Lyon, from $900 to $1,000.

The Express correspondent was informed to-day that everyone of those reduced were republicans, and everyone promoted was a democrat. One of the worst acts of injustice in this list was in the case of Miss H. H. Webber. She has been a competent employe in the bureau for twenty-five years, and was the chief of division of women clerks at $1,400 a year. She has been reduced to $900 per annum to make place for a young democrat, and has now been detailed to instruct him in his new duties.

THE BRUTAL SPOILS SYSTEM.

Among the victims of the disaster was the son of John A. Daly, an ex-soldier from Pennsylvania, employed as a watchman in the interior department. Mr. Daly was discharged some days ago, and when Secretary Smith learned that young Daly had been killed in the theater wreck, and that the family might suffer by reason of the father's dismissal, he immediately ordered his reinstatement.—Washington dispatch, to the Indianapolis Sentinel, June 17.

December.—The Hon. W. H. Bracken is in the race for collector of internal revenue. He was an elector-at-large candidate. Bracken has congressional aspirations, and if disappointed in his present quest, he may contest for the congressional nomination two years hence.—Indianapolis News.

February 17-24.—See February CHRONICLE for numerous extracts of the Voorhees-Lamb combination.

March 6, 1893.—The Indiana office-hunting contingent and the democratic leaders are still hanging on. Several of the important appointments of the state have been practically settled within the last two or three days. Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, will in all probability be collector of internal revenue in the seventh district, and William Bracken in the sixth. There seems to be a combination this morning that looks to the appointment of Jump as revenue collector in the seventh district and of Hargrove as marshal.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

March 7.—The fight for collector of the Terre Haute district is creating some bad blood. Voorhees is for Jump, John Lamb's law partner, and Brookside is pushing Hulet, of Crawfordsville, for the same place. Col. Hoskins, of Clay, member of the state commission, entered the field upon the understanding that he would receive the support of Voorhees and John Lamb. He says Voorhees is for him at heart, but that Lamb has bulldozed Voorhees into supporting Jump. Hoskins claims that it was he who elected Lamb a delegate to Chicago, and feels the opposition of Lamb keenly. However, he says he will fight it out to the last. He has been asked to apply for the pension agency, but he says he will have nothing else. Editor Moss, of the Bloomfield Democrat, also a member of the state central committee, is in the ring with Congressman Bretz for backer and a majority of the state committee indorsing him. Sam Ralston, of Lebanon, has been suggested as a compromise candidate. Ralston was among the first to fight for Cleveland's nomination. At the same time he is a friend of both Voorhees and Turpie, having always stood by them. For collector in the Lawrenceburg district, Bracken, of Franklin county, and Hunter, of Lawrenceburg, are the only ones in the field. Bracken has the advantage, from the fact that Cleveland has declared his intention of not reappointing men who served in his first administration. Bracken gained his prominence from being an elector-at-large. Editor O'Brien, of the Lawrenceburg Register, a son-in-law of Hunter, as a member of the committee on organization of the last state convention, made a big fight in the committee to have Bracken made an elector-at-large, little knowing that he was putting a club in the hands of a man to knock out his father-in-law.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

March 8.—In the last few days the opposition to William Bracken, of Franklin county, for the internal revenue collectorship seems to have disappeared, and the latter's appointment seems to be certain. For a time there was much talk of smashing the Bracken slate, and a number of the leading politicians in the sixth district were appealed to to allow their names to be used for the position in an effort to knock out Mr. Bracken. While Mr. Holman has entertained a warm feeling for Dr. Hunter, of Lawrenceburg, who was a candidate for the place, and was desirous early in the fight to have him appointed, he much prefers to see Mr. Bracken secure the place to any candidate outside of his congressional district.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

March 8.—It was given out by the Marion county democrats to-day that the nominations of John W. Kern to be district attorney; ex-Sheriff Hawkins, of Sullivan county, to be marshal; Joseph Jump, of Terre Haute, and Captain Bracken or Roscoe Griffith, of Muncie, to be the two collectors of internal revenue, would be made this week. Mr. Griffith left for his home this afternoon. He believes he will be appointed. He says he would not accept the deputy collectorship if he never got an office—that it must be the collectorship or nothing. Mr. Griffith has some strings upon the appointing power and looks as though he would wrest it from Captain Bracken, of Brookville, who is his only contestant now.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

March 8.—The distribution of the Indiana patronage will begin with the United States district-attorneyship. The applications will be filed to-morrow. The fight for the marshalship has overshadowed everything else. Hawkins, who seems to have had the best of it yesterday, is only a possibility to-day. Geographical location is against him. His chief backer is Voorhees, and as Hawkins's appointment would jeopardize Jump's chances for collector of internal revenue, Hawkins can not obtain the proper pressure to reach the place. Hawkins resides in Sullivan and Jump in Vigo, adjoining counties in the same district. Brookshire is pressing Voorhees hard with Hulet of Montgomery, and will make the fight of his life for his man. The marshalship will be disposed of first, and Voorhees can not afford to weaken his position in his fight with Brookshire.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

* * *

March 14.—Mr. Holman declares that he has not yet determined whom he will recommend for collector in the eastern district, although Bracken claims the place. The collectors will not be appointed for some months yet.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

March 16.—The contest over the collectorship of internal revenue for the western district of Indiana, which was believed to be finally and permanently closed in favor of Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, has been reopened with some fury. There were many protests filed against the appointment of Jump. It was alleged that Jump is too friendly with certain distillers, although his personal character was in no wise assailed, and then it was alleged that his appointment would be viewed as a Lamb victory, so Representative Brookshire comes forward again with one of his constituents, and Representative Taylor has brought forth Mr. Dixon, of Evansville. Samuel Ralston, of Lebanon, is on the ground hard after the place. There will not be a change in the office until some months, and the prospects are that after all Jump will get the place. He has the power at the throne.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

March 17.—Among President Cleveland's callers this morning was Congressman Bynum, who was accompanied by S. M. Ralston and S. T. Tyre, of Lebanon. Mr. Tyre is chairman of the democratic county committee, and Mr. Ralston is the man who hopes to disarrange the present slate for federal appointments in Indiana and secure the internal revenue collectorship that has been assigned to Joshua Jump. Mr. Ralston puts forth a geographical argument, and claims that the appointment of the marshal and revenue collector, both from the Terre Haute congressional district, is not good politics. Boone county, which Mr. Ralston represents, is in Mr. Vaughn's republican district, and Mr. Ralston argues that his appointment as revenue collector in that district would strengthen the minority. Mr. Ralston was an original Cleveland man.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

March 17.—Governor Matthews's mission here was divulged this morning when he called upon the President to urge the appointment of Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, for collector of internal revenue; W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, for district attorney, and Jerome Herff, of Peru, for consul to Havana. He left for Baltimore this afternoon, but will not return here. Joshua Jump was present at the interview with the President and so was Senator Voorhees. However, the collector will not be appointed till September.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

* * *

March 19.—Senator Voorhees said to-day that there would be no change in either of the revenue collectorships before August at the earliest. Meanwhile the opponents of Joshua Jump are trying to consolidate the field against him, and are making some headway. Of his rivals, Samuel Ralston seems to be the most active. His personal "pull" on Cleveland is worrying the friends of Jump. Ralston patiently waits about the corridors, smiles on everybody he meets, and says the collectorship in the seventh district is far from settled yet. Hon. John E. Lamb, who was appealed to by Jump's friends to come on and add his influence to that of Governor Matthews in favor of Jump, was expected here before this, but if here he was not visible to the naked eye of the hosts of waiting democrats who want to tie on to his tow-line.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

March 30.—It is given out here on what is considered good authority that Will H. O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, will be the next collector for this district. Mr. O'Brien is the son-in-law and business partner of Dr. Hunter, who was collector under Cleveland's first administration, and who is a candidate for reappointment against Captain W. H. Bracken, of Brookville. The President's rule relative to reappointments was considered as settling Hunter's chances and enhancing Bracken's, but it only called for renewed effort on part of the Hunter men. O'Brien went to Washington for the third time, in response to a "hurry call," and it is claimed that on this last trip it was arranged that he should receive the appointment. If this selection is made, it gives the collectorship to the Hunter family again, and at the same time it affords the President an opportunity to strengthen his declaration that no ex-officeholder will be recognized by this administration. Mr. O'Brien is the member of the democratic state central committee for this district and also mayor of Lawrenceburg, part owner and associate editor of the Lawrenceburg Register, wealthy and one of the shrewdest politicians and hardest workers in the fourth congressional district. He was always a Cleveland man.—Greensburgh (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

March 30.—While this contest in the sixth internal revenue district is exciting attention, there appears to be quite as interesting a contest brewing in the seventh district, where Congressman Voorhees Brookshire is making a fight against his namesake, the senior senator, with a view to knocking out Joshua Jump. It is said that this little fight between the senator and his congressional protege involves indirectly the latter's seat in congress. The immense patronage of the seventh district is a great political factor. Mr. Brookshire is said to realize this fact and is anxious to keep it out of the hands of Joshua Jump, who, he avers, will use it in the interest of his law partner, John E. Lamb, who is suspected of having designs on Congressman Brookshire's seat in the House of Representatives. Mr. Brookshire's candidate is the deputy auditor of Montgomery county, who is said to have rendered some clever political service to the Cleveland faction of the Indiana democracy in Mr. Brookshire's congressional district last winter.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

April 1.—Ex-Pension Agent Zollinger, of Fort Wayne, is the latest aspirant for the honor which was some weeks ago set aside for Capt. William Bracken, of Brookville. Zollinger, being sidetracked for the pension agency by the "anti-ex" rule, is here, and believes that he is going to be the compromise candidate for the collectorship of internal revenue. A strong protest has been made against giving the place to the southern part of the state, and Representative McNagney is pushing Zollinger for it, and it is believed that he will be indorsed by the other member of the House from the northern part of Indiana. Editor W. W. Rockhill, of the Fort Wayne Journal, who has been here some days seeking the postmastership of Fort Wayne, and has gone home, has, it is stated, refused the internal revenue collectorship of the eastern district. It is said that at least one, if not both, of the Indiana senators, and two or three of the democratic congressmen from the northern part of the state joined in urging Editor Rockhill to accept the collectorship, but he steadfastly refused, preferring from pride and other reasons to be postmaster. This incident would also indicate that Captain Bracken is likely to be defeated for the collectorship.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

April 19.—The Hon. John E. Lamb, Senator Voorhees and Judge Hench made a tour of the departments to-day. It is believed that the latter will be appointed solicitor of internal revenue. Mr. Lamb is here to look after the interests of Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, who is slated for the collectorship of internal revenue. Incidentally he is looking after some other friends who want places, but Jump is his primary object.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

April 21.—Congressman Brookshire, in his fight for Hulet, of Montgomery, for collector of internal revenue, is putting Senator Voorhees and Mr. Lamb slightly at a disadvantage. Early in the struggle Mr. Brookshire agreed to concede the naming of the postmaster to Senator Voorhees, but since the latter is suspected by Brookshire of trying to ignore him in the collectorship matter and other appointments, the congressman threatens to make war on Donham, who is the senator's choice for postmaster at Terre Haute.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

April 22.—The arrival, almost simultaneously, of Deputy Auditor Hulet, of Montgomery county, who is a candidate for internal revenue collector of the seventh district, and the Hon. John E. Lamb, who is sponsor for Joshua Jump's boom for the same office, has revived the interest in this war for office. As was stated before, the important stake in this contest is the congressional nomination a year hence. Congressman Brookshire desires to be renominated, and as a part of his program wants Mr. Hulet made revenue collector. Mr. Lamb would like the nomination for congress also, and believes that it will be a point in his favor to have Jump made collector. The lines seem to be drawn between the Cleveland and Gray elements, as they have been on most of the other choice federal offices in Indiana. Lamb and Jump train with the Gray democracy, while Mr. Hulet did the work of organizing the congressional district in favor of President Cleveland's renomination. Congressman Brookshire relies upon the fact that Mr. Hulet was an original Cleveland man to aid in securing the appointment for him. The fight is very warm and both factions seem confident. Jump, of course, is the candidate of the slate-makers and seems to have all the indorsements that would be necessary, ordinarily, to secure the place.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

April 25.—Walter N. Hulet and his friends are somewhat put out at the announcement that is being circulated throughout the country to the effect that he is no longer an applicant for the collectorship of internal revenue in the eighth district. He is yet in the ring, and his prospects of success seem as bright as when his name was first presented. He has just returned from Washington, where he thoroughly investigated his chances of success, and it is noticeable that he has been very contented since his return. His friends are inclined to think that the story going the rounds about Hulet withdrawing is intended to injure his chances of success and benefit the candidacy of Judge Jump. It is reported that Congressman Brookshire is more than ever of the determination that the place shall be given to Hulet. A great many democrats here are anxious for this matter to be settled, as with Hulet provided for as collector of internal revenue, it will take the most formidable candidate for the postmastership out of the way.—Crawfordsville (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

April 30.—As a matter of fact everybody conversant with the Indiana situation here knows that Congressman Holman, much against his own inclinations, was forced to support Bracken, and that in bringing this about Senator Voorhees played no small part. Congressman Holman was in favor of the appointment of Dr. Hunter, of Lawrenceburg. Early in the fight Bracken's friends came to Washington and read the riot act to Mr. Holman. They told him that if he did not support Bracken for revenue collector, they would see that he was defeated for renomination for congress, and they even threatened to put Bracken forward as a candidate. Senator Voorhees seemed to enjoy the embarrassment of Congressman Holman and contributed to it. He invited him to his committee-room to a conference in presence of Bracken's friends, and then and there wrung from him an indorsement of Bracken. Congressman Holman found that he could either indorse Mr. Bracken as a matter of self-preservation politically, or put himself in the attitude of opposing a man from his own district who had the senatorial indorsements.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

May 5.—It may be stated upon the very best of authority that the two revenue collectors for Indiana will be appointed about July 1. There seems to be no longer any doubt that Bracken, of Franklin county, will be named for the sixth district, and Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, has the lead in the seventh, although there has been considerable opposition to him of late, and his chances can hardly be said to be as good as those of Bracken.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

July 31.—The request of Secretary Carlisle for the resignation of the internal revenue collector of the sixth district of Indiana does not imply an appointment at once. There seems to be no doubt that Bracken will secure the appointment. It was said at the treasury department Saturday that in calling for the resignation the secretary merely meant to have it ready for the President in case he felt disposed to act on the case, when he returned. The secretary does not look for the appointment for several weeks yet. There is a marked coincidence in the fact that Senator Voorhees returned from Warm Springs, Va., one day and the resignation was called for the next. The senator is ready to move on all Indiana republican office-holders not protected by civil service as soon as the President returns, and is making up his list of intended victims already.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

August 9.—The Indiana revenue collectorships will probably be filled by September 1. In the sixth district William Bracken, of Franklin county, seems to be in the lead, and there is not much doubt that he will be appointed. Some of the opponents of Bracken have thought that Judge Holman's position in favor of free coinage might weaken the chances of his candidate. Congressman McNagney called on Secretary Carlisle in the interest of Wm. Meyers, of Fort Wayne, a few days ago. Meyers is probably the strongest candidate in the field against Bracken, but the latter has the senatorial backing, and enough representatives, it would seem, to secure his appointment. His name was put on the slate among the earliest, and it is a significant fact that the program on the slate has been carried out to the letter up to this time. There may be a departure in the case of Joshua Jump of the Terre Haute district, who is the choice of Senator Voorhees and the other big wigs of Indiana politics. Congressman Brookshire has been making a strong personal fight for W. B. Hulet, of Crawfordsville, and has predicted the latter's appointment. He has the backing of several of the original Cleveland men of Indiana, who believe that the appointment of Jump means a war against Brookshire for renomination. Even if Hulet is not appointed the fight may become so warm against Jump that some compromise candidate like Treasurer Conzmau, of Vigo county, may be selected.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

August 14.—It was expected that a change of internal revenue collectors would be made in the sixth district this month, but this may be deferred till the President's return. It is generally supposed that Bracken will be appointed. This is the star appointment in the internal service in Indiana, so far as the patronage that goes with the office is concerned. Collector Bracken, when he qualifies, will have some rather juicy plums to distribute. He will have under him, the appointment of which will be practically within his control, fifteen deputy collectors, with salaries ranging from $300 to $2,000 per year; one clerk at $1,000; fifteen storekeepers at $4 per day; seven storekeepers and gaugers at from $2 to $3.50 per day, and eleven gaugers at $5 per day. This constitutes a field of very fair pickings for some of the faithful. There has been some talk, it may be said a good deal of talk, in certain republican newspapers about an alleged fight for the collectorship in the seventh internal revenue district. These reports are purely imaginary and are without a shadow of foundation. There is no fight for that collectorship and there has been none. The President and Secretary Carlisle have not even considered the matter, and, of course, they will not reach it, under existing conditions, for some time.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

August 16.—Mr. Brookshire is making a hard fight against John E. Lamb, of Terre Haute, to secure renomination. Those who are anxious about Mr. Brookshire's financial views say that he has a large business constituency and many moneyed interests in his district, and that these may not take kindly to his free coinage views. Another point, which is of vital importance to Congressman Brookshire, is the selection of internal revenue collector for the seventh district. Up to this time Mr. Brookshire has had an unbroken record as a Cleveland man. For him to part company now with the President's views on the important question of finance, which President Cleveland has so much at heart, would be equivalent, some of his anxious friends think, to throwing away the revenue collectorship. There is the impression here that President Cleveland will "keep tab" on the democratic representatives who do not act in accord with the administration's financial policy, and will not confer any favors upon those who stand out against the administration's views. This may be an uncharitable view to take of Mr. Cleveland's position, but it seems to be the impression that obtains with most of the party leaders. John E. Lamb was here this week and carefully looked into the revenue collectorship fight in the seventh district. The Indiana democrats make no concealment of the fact that there is a fight on to the finish between Lamb and Brookshire for the congressional nomination next year. The preliminary skirmish will be for the collectorship.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

September 13.—The appointment of William Bracken, of Franklin county, as collector of internal revenue for the sixth Indiana district seems now to be the consideration of but few days. This has been a case of nomination long deferred, not hopelessly, however, and Mr. Holman has been the victim of sacred promises, which seem to have required ages for execution. Congressman Holman claims to have had a distinct understanding with the treasury department that this appointment was dated for June 27 last.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

September 22.—The appointment of William Bracken, of Brookville, as collector of internal revenue for the sixth Indiana district, disposes of the last important federal appointment in Indiana except two. The collectorship in the seventh district will not be settled before the latter part of October. Unless something unforeseen happens, Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, will be appointed. Bracken's appointment was accepted with fortitude by the friends of other candidates. There has been some mild criticism from the north end of the state over the fact that southern Indiana has received nearly all the appointments, and this is about the only point upon which Bracken's nomination is criticised. It is conceded, however, even by those who would like to have seen the appointment go to northern Indiana, that everything will turn out well providing the new collector gives the northern congressmen a say in the selection of his employees.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

September 26.—Just at present the Indiana representatives are quietly discussing their chances of renomination and re-election. In a number of districts it is already apparent that there will be a close fight for the nomination. The greatest interest perhaps is shown in the outcome in Congressman Brookshire's district. Mr. Brookshire is a candidate for renomination. He will probably find ex-Congressman John E. Lamb, of Terre Haute, as chief opponent for the nomination. The fight will be a test of strength between the old Cleveland and Gray factions that divided Indiana prior to the last presidential convention. John E. Lamb is identified with the Gray element, which seems to have secured most of the federal offices in Indiana. Mr. Lamb is now greatly interested in the appointment of his law partner, Joshua Jump, as internal revenue collector. If he succeeds, the immense patronage of the collector's office will probably be directed toward securing Mr. Lamb's nomination to succeed Congressman Brookshire. It looks now as if Jump would be appointed. Mr. Brookshire naturally opposes the appointment because he realizes that it will materially lessen his chances for renomination. Another strong factor in favor of Lamb's nomination is Crawford Fairbank, head of the big distilling interests of Terre Haute. Senator Voorhees will quietly lend whatever assistance he can to Mr. Lamb.

Considerable interest is manifested in Congressman Holman's race for renomination. "I have not given the subject of renomination a moment's thought," said Mr. Holman to The New's correspondent, last night. "I suppose, if my people want me again, they will renominate me. It is a curious fact, not known to many people, that no representative has served to exceed fifteen terms in the house." Mr. Holman will have served that number of terms when his present term ends. Mr. Holman said this with a decided wink, which might have indicated that the precedent would be broken or that it might not. He has been playing some clever politics, whether he is giving much thought to renomination or not. It is the common belief here that he removed the principal opposition to his renomination when he appointed Capt. Wm. Bracken, of Brookville, as collector of internal revenue. Bracken would have undoubtedly been a candidate for congress had he not secured the appointment. His friends had determined to take the step. The opposition to Mr. Holman centers in Lawrenceburg. The Lawrenceburg Register, which is conducted by Dr. Hunter, ex-revenue collector, and his son-in-law, Will O'Brien, is now saying some unpleasant things about Holman. Dr. Hunter posed for many years as Mr. Holman's political mainstay in the congressional district. His friends claim that he has quelled a number of political revolutions against Mr. Holman, and cleared the pathway for his successful re-entry into congress. Whatever merit may lie in his claim the fact remains that Dr. Hunter wanted to be revenue collector again, and was very much disappointed when he failed to secure it. The "ex" rule which President Cleveland announced early in his administration was quoted by Holman against Dr. Hunter, when he applied for the collectorship. The doctor then conceived the clever plan of having the office conferred on his son-in-law, and Mr. O'Brien came on to Washington for the purpose of getting it. Failing, he went back to Lawrenceburg feeling very sore at Mr. Holman, and since that time the Lawrenceburg Register has been suggesting the desirability of retiring Congressman Holman without pay.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

September 27.—Numerous democratic applicants are making pilgrimage to Franklin county every day to see the new collector. Twelve hundred and fourteen have applied to him for positions, with several out townships to hear from. He has the appointment of thirty-eight officers.—Greensburgh (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

October.—The Hammond News says that the appointment of W. H. Bracken as revenue collector for the sixth district insures the selection of M. F. Pierce, of Hammond, as chief deputy for the fourth division, Mr. Bracken having repeatedly pledged Mr. Pierce to that effect.—Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 5.—There is considerable complaint already over the appointments under the internal revenue collector at the sixth district. The northern counties have served notice on Collector Bracken that they will demand a fair share of the places under him, but up to date there are about three applications from the southern counties to one from the northern tier, according to reports received here. This has caused some uneasiness on the part of the representatives from the northern counties, who fear that they will be left out in the allotment of places. Mr. Holman is now at home giving Collector Bracken a few pointers on the selection of his force.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

October 9.—Representative William S. Holman has been in a disturbed frame of mind ever since his recent visit to his home at Aurora. He now fully realizes that the opposition to his renomination is as persistent as it is bitter, and as formidable as it is personal. A new trouble entered Judge Holman's political household to-day. When he visited his home the other day he was called upon by a number of constituents, who solicited his assistance in securing positions under Internal Revenue Collector Bracken. When Judge Holman returned to Washington information came here to Representative Cooper and others that Holman had been home for the purpose of disarming the opposition to his renomination by having the most of his opponents appointed to minor places under Revenue Collector Bracken, and that he had apportioned out nearly all of the forty-eight or fifty offices which the Brookville citizen has at his disposal. The judge had played sneak upon his colleagues, it was reported. Not only was Representative Cooper, but Representatives Martin, Hammond and McNagney, of the northern part of the state, soon up in arms. Before Bracken was agreed upon for appointment these men were assured by Holman that they should have the lion's share of the offices under the collector. It will be remembered that Holman was buncoced into the indorsement of Bracken much against his will, and that the real credit of Bracken's appointment is due to Senator Voorhees. For several weeks Holman had been unable to screw his courage to a point where he was willing to discriminate in favor of or against any of the many aspirants for the place in his district. Finally Senators Voorhees and Turpie sent for him. The former insisted that Holman should name his man then and there. After a long hesitation, Senator Voorhees says he would name the man, and that Holman might take the responsibility and the credit. He then announced to Holman that he would recommend Bracken. It immediately became a case of Holman indorsing Bracken and receiving the credit or permitting the appointment to go outside of the fourth congressional district and to Voorhees. The three or four representatives from the northern districts of the state had been making a demand for the collectorship, and when they were called off they were assured by Holman that they might have the minor places under the collector. So the discovery that Holman was about to appropriate a large share of the places under Bracken for the purpose of allaying opposition to his renomination put the four democratic representatives named upon the war-path to-day, and they have severely "sat down" upon the venerable representative of the fourth district, and have left him leaning so far backwards that they believe his nerve for claiming even his own will not return again. Judge Holman says there are about thirty-five positions under Bracken which are free and may go to any of the counties in the collection district. There are twelve or thirteen local officers which must come from certain places, like one or two to Indianapolis, one to Madison, two to Fort Wayne, and one to Hammond. Representative Cooper said to-day that the result would be an equitable distribution of the offices by congressional districts, and that nearly all of the counties in the collection district would get a place. He did not take into calculation the distribution of as much of the minor patronage to the fourth congressional district as would go to the others, because the collector was located in that district. It looks as though the entire democratic delegation from Indiana was "dead onto" the antiquated objector, and that his troubles never end so long as he remains in political life.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

October 9.—Senator Voorhees has taken a hand in the matter and will insist that Collector Bracken divide the places equally between the districts. There will probably be a clash between Senator Voorhees and Congressman Holman over the distribution of the offices, and it remains to be seen whether Collector Bracken will follow the advice of Senator Voorhees and make an equal division of the spoils or whether he will allow Congressman Holman to divert a large portion of it toward the re-election of himself to congress.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

October 9.—Senator Voorhees was at the treasury department this morning in the interest of some of his office-seeking constituents. After he left the department Secretary Carlisle directed that the resignation of Joseph P. Throop, of Terre Haute, collector of internal revenue for that district, be called for, the same to take effect upon its receipt. Joshua Jump, who was some months ago recommended for the position, is to be appointed.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

October 10.—It is expected that the appointment of an internal revenue collector for the western district of Indiana, to succeed E. H. Throop, of Terre Haute, who will resign or be removed, will be made within a few days; surely next week. Representative Brookshire is significantly confident that his candidate, Walter F. Hulet, of Crawfordsville, will get the appointment, in spite of the fact that Senator Voorhees is standing firmly by Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute. There is a great deal of opposition from Vigo and Montgomery counties to Jump's appointment, and the intimation has been made in high official circles that he will not get the place even though he is backed by the potent influence of Senator Voorhees. Mr. Brookshire occupies a very influential position in the house of representatives, being one of the most active members of the committee on appropriations, a position almost as important to the President and Secretary Carlisle as that held by Mr. Voorhees in the senate. There is no objection to Hulet. The contest between Voorhees and Brookshire has attracted attention at the national capital. This evening's Washington News says: "The request for the resignation of the collector of internal revenue for the Terre Haute district has quite a history. The sequel will be the appointment of Joshua Jump to that office. Mr. Jump is recommended by Mr. Voorhees. Many years ago when the 'Tall Sycamore of the Wabash' was first running for congress, he stopped over night at the house of Mr. Brookshire. So pleasant did he make himself to that gentleman that Mr. Brookshire became charmed with his guest, and the acquaintance ripened. When a son was born to Mr. Brookshire he was named Voorhees in honor of the brilliant Hoosier. Voorhees Brookshire is now a member of congress from Indiana. Mr. Brookshire has a candidate for the collectorship, in the person of W. B. Hulet, of Crawfordsville. There has been, and is yet, a bitter fight between Voorhees and Brookshire, upon the outcome of which will depend the success of the latter in his next congressional campaign. The law partner of Joshua Jump is ex-Congressman John E. Lamb, and it is expected that when he obtains the office Jump will turn the large amount of patronage connected with the same over to Mr. Lamb, in order to help the latter along in his fight for congress against Mr. Brookshire. What makes the friends of the young congressman particularly 'sore' is the fact that Brookshire was an original Cleveland man in Indiana and helped defeat Governor Gray for the nomination, while ex-Congressman Lamb was a staunch adherent of Uncle Isaac. The appointment of Jump to the collectorship is as near a certainty as anything political can well be.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

October 12.—The next ten days will see some lively skirmishing among the Indiana politicians. Congressman Brookshire and Senator Voorhees are playing for a big political stake—the revenue collectorship of the seventh Indiana district. The appointment is now being considered at the treasury department and at the White House. While every indication points to the appointment of Joshua Jump, who is indorsed by Voorhees, Turpie and all the representatives in congress from that revenue district except Taylor and Brookshire, there is still a strong opinion among the opponents of Jump that he will not be able to win over the protest of Brookshire. President Cleveland is averse to giving encouragement to any political faction as against another, and it is believed by Brookshire's friends that he will not lend his aid to the movement to defeat Brookshire for reuomination. He would certainly do so if he appointed Jump and gave Lamb the control of all the patronage and put him in touch, in an official way, with the big distilling interests of Terre Haute, which are political factors not to be overlooked.

"Joshua Jump will be appointed internal revenue collector in the seventh district beyond a question of doubt. I give you permission to quote me as saying so." It was Congressman Cooper who made this apparently official announcement to The News correspondent, confirming what has been stated in these dispatches as a probability.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

October 13.—Congressman Holman stated in an interview, printed in The News Monday, that he had not asked for any appointments under Collector Bracken. Some of Mr. Holman's political rivals charge that they have seen his name attached to a number of indorsements for places under Collector Bracken.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 13.—President Cleveland gave an audience yesterday to Congressman Taylor. Although the impression prevails that Jump, of Terre Haute, will be appointed, this fact did not deter Congressman Taylor from making a strong plea in favor of Mr. Dixon, the Evansville merchant, as the business men's candidate. President Cleveland listened very attentively while Mr. Taylor recited the strong business qualifications of his candidate, his high business and social standing and many deeds of local philanthropy which had endeared him to the hearts of the people of Evansville and vicinity. Congressman Taylor does not believe that the fight is entirely lost yet, and with a fight on between Senator Voorhees and Congressman Brookshire, that has become very bitter already, he thinks it is possible that the President may decide to take a compromise candidate, and in that case Mr. Dixon will be an available man.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 15.—Representative Holman has capitulated on the internal revenue spoils fight. He has thrown up his hands, and there is to be a distribution this week extending all over Collector Bracken's district by counties, and Holman's district is to get the least of all. If Jump, of Terre Haute, is made collector for the western district it is understood Mr. Brookshire's Crawfordsville candidate for the collectorship, W. B. Hulet, will be Jump's principal deputy. A demand has been made that Roscoe Griffith, of Muncie, be selected as Bracken's first deputy.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 16.—It looks as if Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, is to be appointed revenue collector of his district very soon. This morning Secretary Carlisle received the resignation of the republican incumbent, G. H. Throop, also of Terre Haute. It is understood, however, that the appointment may not be made until after the silver question is disposed of.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

* * *

October 17.—Secretary Carlisle to-day, in talking about internal revenue appointments for another state, remarked that the President had put his foot down upon all Presidential appointments, and that there would be a cessation of that kind of business until after the silver question was acted upon by the senate.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 17.—Capt. William H. Bracken is kept very busy these days examining the many applications for office in the sixth revenue district. He now has applications to the number of fifteen hundred, and when it is remembered that there are only about forty-five places to be filled, it is seen that his task is a difficult one. It is said that W. J. Zacharias, of this city, will be traveling deputy.—Brookville (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

October 20.—Some of the aspiring democrats in this county who are seeking appointment under Captain Bracken, the new collector, are very indignant. It has come to their knowledge that Governor Matthews has asked Collector Bracken, as a personal favor, to appoint Abel Ewing, of this city, to a position under him. In this recommendation may be seen the fine work of ex-Senator Ewing, who is a son of Abel Ewing, and a son-in-law of Governor Matthews.—Greensburg (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

MOORFIELD STOREY TO JOSIAH QUINCY.

[Before the Massachusetts Reform Club, October 7, 1893.]

In taking the stand I do in the discussion this evening I feel that I am transgressing a rule, than which none is better established in my experience, to never play a game you don't understand against a professional. But it is right that at this table Mr. Quincy and the administration with which he has been so closely identified should hear frankly and freely from men who strongly supported Mr. Cleveland, who thoroughly believed in his character and his honesty, and who have not been satisfied with his performance in regard to civil service reform.

This is a question of principles, not of persons. Mr. Quincy's interview published in the Herald in regard to this subject contains what I understand to be his position as stated by himself. He begins by saying:

"It is true that changes in the consular service have been made more rapidly than under the preceding administration. The only difference has been that this administration has proceeded upon the theory that it was better for the service, as well as for other reasons, that inevitable changes should be made with reasonable promptness, instead of after a long period of delay and uncertainty; that such changes should coincide as nearly as possible with changes in administrations rather than be made near the middle or end of an administration. This gives the new appointees an assurance of a continuance in office for at least four years, if they perform their duties with efficiency, while the service of a political appointee of a former administration, who necessarily feels that he may be displaced at any moment, is not likely to be of much value to the government. Whatever may be said as to the superiority of a consular service, from which political considerations are excluded, such as that of the leading nations of Europe, it is certainly impossible, under existing conditions, to deal with the matter upon a purely non-political basis. This administration did not find such a consular service when it came into power. It found, on the contrary, very many important consulships filled by appointments of a purely partisan and political character."

Whatever may be the merits of a consular service organized upon business principles, Mr. Quincy tells us it is practically impossible to have such a service in the United States under existing political conditions. Now, when the gentleman, who many years ago enlisted with us an active member of the Boston civil service reform association, which took the ground that men should be retained in office as long as they did their work well, and that offices should not be used for partisan purposes, tells us, as the first who is called upon to administer the service upon those principles, that it is practically impossible to do so, a very grave question is presented. If he is right, we have for many years been very wrong. Under his leadership and under the leadership of Mr. Cleveland we denounced the republican party very strongly, because they filled the consular service on that principle. If it is practically impossible to do otherwise I owe President Harrison an abject apology.

The democratic party, in platform after platform, in speech after speech, have urged us to turn the republican party out of power and to put them in, because, among other things, the republican party has used the offices as spoils.

We who supported President Cleveland, believing as we did in his courage and honesty, knew perfectly well that on the questions of tariff reform, currency and federal election bills, he was powerless, that he could do nothing of his own motion. With every purpose in the world to reform the Sherman act we see how powerless he is to bring about the consummation which the whole country desires, and, if he can not bring the senate to a vote on the silver bill, how likely it is that they will be brought to a vote on the tariff bill, federal elections bill or any other bill, which not only a small minority, representing a number of rotten boroughs, are inclined to oppose, but which the republican party, representing a large section of the voters of this country, are bitterly opposed to?

There was one thing which he was able to deal with alone. Congress had given him power to bring the public service under civil service reform rules, and I am informed that Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt has prepared, and had before Mr. Cleveland came into office prepared, a scheme by which the consular service should be brought within those rules; and it was entirely within the power of the President, of his own motion, to apply that system, or certainly if the system itself was not matured it was in his power as each individual case rose to consider only the good service and not the partisan qualifications of the applicant in the past.

Now, Mr. Quincy and the whole administration have for something like eight months lived in the perverted atmosphere of Washington, exposed to the constant importunities of men who do not so much care how the public business is done or how public questions are settled, provided they are supplied with offices, and he now comes to meet a body of men who represent, I think, all but a very inconsiderable fragment of his fellow-citizens all over the country who do not so much care who fills the offices as they do how the public business is done and how public questions are settled.

I agree cordially with Mr. Quincy that he did not find a non-partisan, non-political consular service. He found undoubtedly a very bad service filled with republican politicians, republican newspaper editors, men who were selected without the least reference to the duties of the place which they were asked to fill, simply as a reward for partisan service, and while I believe a great many of the removals were imperatively demanded, in order that the business of the country may be done well, and that, so far as that has been done, the administration has done the country a good service, the difficulty arises in connection with the filling of the vacancies. When the same considerations are urged in order to persuade the appointing power to appoint a democratic politician or newspaper editor in place of the republican politician or newspaper editor who has been removed, then and there the same offense against public morals is committed with which we charged the administration of President Harrison, and of which he was condemned.

Why is it impossible or impracticable in filling the places which are left vacant by proper removals to select new men with reference to their fitness for the offices? Why is it necessary to ask for the indorsement of the democratic congressman from the state in which the applicant belongs, or for the indorsement of town or city committees? Why is it necessary that all the political machinery which exists throughout the land should be brought to bear for the purpose of placing a man who has distinguished himself as a partisan only in a place where partisanship is not called for?

Mr. Quincy said, with great propriety in the interview I have just read, that political consuls, men who identify themselves with the fortunes of the party in power, and who feel that it may be in the interest of their party to have statistics in favor of protection or against it, are bound to collect statistics one way or the other, and he points out that that has been the case. It is perfectly obvious that consuls of that sort are bad, but are they any better when they come from one party than when they come from the other? If one set of consuls is misrepresenting the facts in favor of protection, another set may be misrepresenting the facts in favor of the other side.

What we want to do is to select men who are familiar with the business. I found when I looked up this matter that some 23 or 24 newspaper editors were appointed to consulships, and some six or seven to foreign missions, out of a total number of 117 changes, I believe, up to that time. And when I found Mr. Vandever Polk, a gentleman whom Mr. Quincy describes as a person of varied and valuable attainments, removed from the editorship of the Nashville American and placed as consul-general at Calcutta, I intended to ask what his experience in Nashville had been which fitted him to take charge of that important consulate.

And it is not that instance alone, but there are other offices all over the country in connection with our federal system where vacancies have been filled by editors and newspaper men. As long as such positions are filled in that way, presumably on account of support by the papers during the campaign, it will be impossible to apply business principles to the consular service.

There never has been in the presidential chair a man so absolutely independent as Grover Cleveland. Placed in the office by the largest electoral majority we have seen since Grant beat Greeley, almost unprecedented in the history of the country, in the nature of things not likely to be a candidate for reelection, as strong as courageous, as powerful as a human being can be, having had an experience of four years and having made the most distinct promises, what is to prevent him from saying: "I appoint that man to Calcutta because he is fit; I appoint that man to Liverpool because he is fit?" The whole country is behind him, and if platforms mean anything the whole democratic party is behind him, because there can not be a more distinct pledge than the democratic party has made in its platform, year after year, in favor of civil service reform. If Grover Cleveland can not carry out those promises, this country is never going to see a man who can.

If a gentleman, high in the councils of the party before the election, said to the editor of the National American or the National Times, "If this party gets in, we are going to appoint you to such and such an office," that promise would be religiously kept, and I think it is time that the gentlemen who are charged with the conduct of this government understood that promises made to all the people of the United States are just as binding as promises made to a single individual; that promises to do right are just as sacred as promises to do wrong.

These congressmen, these supporters or "heelers" of theirs whom they put in office, are not the people of the United States. They are the merest froth upon the surface, and sometime or other a man will rise brave and wise enough to know that he can perfectly well afford to set those men at defiance, and the whole people will uphold his hands in so doing.

Benjamin Lanthier, of Massachusetts, who is named as consul to Sherbrooke, was a factor in the late campaign in that state. He edits two French newspapers, and so he was made the medium by which the democratic party was enabled to appeal effectually to the large and increasing French Canadian population of the state for their support in the campaign.

James E. Neal, of Hamilton, Ohio, was nominated for consul at Liverpool at the personal request of ex-Governor Campbell, reinforced by Senator Brice. He is one of the leading democrats of Ohio, and early in the seventies, while a young man, was speaker of the house of representatives of the general assembly. He has always been an active democrat, and was chairman of the state committee during the campaign which resulted in Mr. Campbell's election.—New York Times, April 8.

Secretary Carlisle has appointed Herman Van Senden, editor of the Paducah (Ky.) Standard, his private secretary. Mr. Van Senden is thirty years of age, a native of Kentucky and was appointed upon the recommendation of Congressman Stone.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great satisfaction afforded by the result of the late elections, the fact should not be lost sight of that while we have driven out one nefarious crowd, to a greater or less extent the way has been opened to let in another crowd of the same nature. The republicans of New York show signs of leaning again upon Platt and Jake Patterson. At the prospect of success in Indiana next year, the same republicans that looted the offices under Harrison gathered here in a swarm the other day. To put out the democratic machine anywhere means letting in an equally bad republican machine. Party machines will continue to be corrupt and utterly untrustworthy until the progress of reform shall have completely deprived them of the offices as a means of support. Until that time comes, events since 1884 have made it plain that there is no way to make progress except by upsetting first one and then the other. The average citizen stands no chance in the primary, but if he controls his own vote on election day he can be a terror to those who manipulate in politics for what there is in it. A defeat makes the sick devil a saint for the time being and reform takes a forward step.

A GOOD instance of bringing back the "same old crowd" is shown in the appointment of "Pres" Trusler as comptroller of this city. He was the one man who more than all others brought the republicans to disastrous defeat here when they went out of office some years ago. His absorbing occupation was to secure the removal of democrats to make places for republicans, which culminated in turning out the chief of the fire department because the latter would not obey his orders and remove democrats, Trusler being a member of the city council. This went on until the people thoroughly detested him. He seems to have learned nothing, for he now declares that in the late city election "the people voted for a change and they ought to have it," and he takes up his old occupation of working henchmen into places, one of his efforts being to secure the removal before the end of his term of the present efficient and highly satisfactory superintendent of the city hospital. Trusler hardly comprehends the situation. The people did not vote for a change which would bring back the Truslers; he could not, if he were a candidate for an office, get a fourth of the votes of his own party. The people did not vote for any division of offices as spoil; they have passed beyond that relic of feudalism. They did not vote for any such change in offices as has been made, and, as we said last month, the same voters who gave the republicans this chance will turn them out unless they show a substantial, permanent progress in municipal administration. This can only be brought about by the introduction of the merit system, and that without any party string to it; nor will it be well to go on with the division of places, and in the meantime give out that the mayor has secured some civil service rules from Boston, and is determining whether there is anything in them suitable for Indianapolis.

REPORTS from Washington say that November 4, upon the heels of the passage of the repeal bill, "Senator Voorhees and several democratic congressmen went up to the White House to call upon the President." What about? Now anybody in the world who had ever heard of these worthies could have answered at once, "About office." There were a "number of Hoosier democrats on the anxious seat." Con. Cunningham "still hangs on" for a consulship. Jerome Herff "was told two weeks ago by Senator Voorhees that if he only lingered in the city until the repeal bill was disposed of his appointment would come promptly." Mellow and calm and feeling that all the world (of patronage) was his, Voorhees went up to demand the "immediate appointment of Mr. Herff." But the President had gone squirrel shooting. Then Voorhees and his suite of congressmen called upon Secretary Gresham. But Gresham had gone squirrel shooting too. Thus our senior senator and a considerable number of our representatives were baffled for the time in their main occupation and were compelled to pass an idle day. It must not be supposed that they were careless or indifferent to the gravity of the situation. "The air of disappointment in Hoosier circles became so dense that you could have easily carved it." Voorhees "wore a countenance that told plainer than words that the lines of senatorial duty did not lie in pleasant places about him." The report further says that "he did not mince words in expressing his disgust to his Indiana friends." Judging by the past, this will produce results. Voorhees has been notorious in Indiana for the names he has called the President, and for each epithet he seems to have been awarded another office. It is reasonable to expect that the President will hold back a while and then yield.

THE CHRONICLE, for July, gave some account of the exploits of Mr. Cleveland's postmaster, Frank H. Thomas, at Topeka, Kansas. Thomas dismissed seventeen letter carriers and reported to the department the cause to be "incompetency and violation of orders and instructions." But to the men themselves in Topeka, Thomas said that the removals "were solely for political reasons." The President has just removed Postmaster Thomas and appointed a new postmaster. Let us hope that this is the beginning of a new era and not be critical because it took the administration from July to November to punish this impudent liar. Donham's time ought to come soon. Half a dozen such examples would end all attempts to beat the civil service law under this administration.

FROM Good Government we learn that Secretary Carlisle's brother Pole has been made postmaster at Covington, five months before the expiration of the term of the present postmaster, an efficient man and a one armed veteran, who, moreover, has a letter from the Secretary promising to allow him to serve out his term.

President Cleveland has written copiously and weightily concerning various evils, among them nepotism, but he sits in stolid helplessness, or indifference, apparently impervious to the personal disgrace resulting from Carlisle nepotism. The discomfort and depression arising from such scandalous violations of what is due to the people who elected Mr. Cleveland make one wish to have the myopia of President Eliot, who happy and enthusiastic in the face of these things, is stated to have aroused his audience before the late elections to wild applause by quoting again of President Cleveland that so long as the helm of state is entrusted to his hands should the storm come, with Seneca's pilot he will say: "O, Neptune, you may save me if you will; you may sink me if you will; but whatever happen, I shall keep my rudder true."

ONE of the most unnecessary and uncalled for trials to which the merit system is made to submit is the advent of provincial politicians. They come from all sorts of places in the party machine, and get into all sorts of offices. They have heard of the civil service law, but know nothing of its provisions and workings. If any part of the classified service comes under their superintendence they start out in the belief that they are pioneer explorers to find some way to beat or break down the law. When they have determined upon a way they are much puffed up by their supposed discovery, and regard themselves as having undermined the merit system. They usually succeed in doing some injury, but meet an opposition which surprises them, and in the end they get a reputation more or less unsavory. This has been true through all grades, from Carlisle to Donham.

The last of these provincial politicians to bring himself into notoriety is Mr. Cleveland's new commissioner of Indian affairs. He has "discovered" that it is not well to have the fitness of Indian school superintendents, who have given bond for the safe keeping of the chairs, desks, tables, and other property committed to their care, "gauged by their rank in a pedagogical examination." It is not worth while to discuss this objection upon its merits for it has no merits. It is simply the act of a political sneak who got into office upon a platform promising to do away with the use of offices as spoil, and who is now trying to bring back into the spoils system places which had already been removed from it. He has no object except to divide offices among his partisans. Mr. Herbert Welsh, in the New York Evening Post, of November 10th, entirely exposes the falsity of the claim that it is necessary for the good of the service to turn these places back to the spoilsmen, and Mr. Welsh is the best authority in the country. During his former administration no one thing did more to bring political ruin to Mr. Cleveland than the debauchment of the Indian service. Experience does not seem to have taught its lesson. There is not the least excuse for having a common spoilsman for Indian commissioner. Five minutes conversation would have developed the fact that he was the enemy of a great body of literature found in Democratic platforms, and in President Cleveland's writings in favor of the merit system. What is to be done about it? The President will, doubtless, refuse the commissioner's suggestion. When is a reform, acknowledged by the President to be of the greatest desirability, to be taken out of the hands of its enemies, where it is cheated at every turn, and put into the hands of officers friendly to it?

THE general verdict is that the spoils system is largely responsible for the murder of Mayor Harrison. Among the papers that have made editorial comment to this effect are the Philadelphia Record, New York Times, New York Evening Post, Chicago Tribune, Indianapolis News, Buffalo Express, Cleveland Leader, New York Morning Advertiser, Brooklyn Eagle, Springfield Republican, Oil City Derrick, Jamestown News, Grand Rapids Herald, Boston Transcript and Baltimore Sun.

Immediately after the murder Prendergast, in an interview, replied emphatically to the question:

"What was your reason for killing the mayor?"

"I was to have had the position of corporation counsel, but he played false to me, and I only did right in killing him."

And again on November 19 he repeated his reason with the same emphasis:

"They propose to enter a plea of insanity. I shall object to that. I want to acknowledge the commission of the crime and plead and prove justification."

"In what way will you prove justification?"

"The broken promise to make me corporation counsel. And then there are other things. But it will all come out at the trial."

Everyone acquainted with spoils ethics knows that it is not considered conduct unbecoming a spoils gentleman to promise an office to one in order to obtain the leisure and peace of mind necessary to give the place to another. If all the great officials and honorable representatives who have been occupied since last March with the distribution of places were to be murdered for the lies they have told their victims, the result would be a most startling and bloody object lesson; not, however, of the number of lies told, because the guilty person could be murdered but once.

The dreadful fear arises: Would Indiana, for instance, have any feudal chiefs surviving for the distribution of the small portion of spoil still undivided? The two appointments of Jump and Bracken alone must have required a colossal number of lies, from various persons; lies large and lies small, lies direct and lies indirect, and from the indications in the present CHRONICLE likely to continue indefinitely.

THE executive committee of the National League at its late meeting in New York reappointed the committee of investigation, headed by Mr. Foulke, and which so thoroughly kept before the country the civil service shortcomings of the Harrison administration. The committee will find plenty of work to do, and we are sure it will do it without any regard as to who is hurt. It would do well to begin with the Carlises, and the sooner the committee can reach Hoke Smith the better.

AFTER the adjournment of the fifty-first congress, in 1890, the senators claim to have kept at work, for sixty days, sixty-five personal and committee clerks. When congress met again, the house refused to allow a bill of $22,000 for this alleged employment. The other day, when congress was about to adjourn, the house appropriated $200,000 to pay the clerks of members for services during the repeal session. The senate promptly tacked on the old item of $22,000, and a wrangle between the two houses followed as persistent, absorbing and petty as any family quarrel. In the midst of this the time fixed for adjournment came and the session ended. It is interesting to note some of the families who will be more or less inconvenienced by the failure of the rider, and to see how near "home" it came to posing patriots and statesmen:

Among the clerks who were to have six dollars a day for sixty days are T. Blodgett, son of ex-Senator Blodgett of New Jersey; L. L. Carlisle, son of ex-Senator Carlisle; L. W. George, son of Senator George; N. K. Jones, son of Senator Jones of Arkansas; C. B. Power, son of Senator Power of Montana; H. L. Pugh, son of Senator Pugh of Alabama; Mrs. M. F. Reagan, wife of ex-Senator Reagan of Texas; L. P. Sanders, son of ex-Senator Sanders of Montana; Ewing Coekrell, son of Senator Coekrell of Missouri; R. R. Quay, son of Senator Quay of Pennsylvania; C. N. Vance, son of Senator Vance of North Carolina; G. W. Morgan, son of Senator Morgan of Alabama, and J. P. Voorhees, son of Senator Voorhees of Indiana.

A VOORHEES TRIUMPH.

The appointment of Joshua Jump to be collector of internal revenue of the Terre Haute district closes one of the most disheartening and disgraceful chapters in the civil service. If, upon his second inauguration, Mr. Cleveland was not after all the great statesman he was represented to be and could not manage the civil service without a system of distributing offices which required the advice of local politicians, it was not to be supposed that he would make Voorhees his chief adviser in Indiana. Before his last nomination, Voorhees and his crowd were the enemies of Mr. Cleveland. They scarcely spoke of him except with foul-mouthed epithets. They worked night and day to cause him to fail of nomination. They did not like him and did not want him because they did not believe that his politics was of their kind, and their kind is, and always has been, well known to be of the lowest and most vicious. Mr. Cleveland knew this; he knew that they had wrecked him in Indiana during his first administration because he had allowed them their vicious way. The majority of Mr. Cleveland's party in Indiana in 1892 were not of the Voorhees stripe. They were at least on a clean plane of politics and followed such leaders as Mr. Morss, of the Indianapolis Sentinel, and Mr. Shanklin, of the Evansville Courier. These leaders stood immovable against the attempt of Voorhees and his followers to carry the Indiana delegates over to Hill, or some fellow like him, and by their stand alone, they finally cowed down Voorhees and secured the votes of the delegation for Cleveland. After the election the people of Indiana supposed that Voorhees, the sympathizer with secession and the champion of the Union soldier, the free-trader and protectionist, the anything and everything of finance, the man whose one unvaried pursuit was the loot of offices, had come to the end of his career. But it was not so. Mr. Shanklin's advice was openly disregarded, and Mr. Morss was quietly shelved by being given a consulship. Then Voorheesism spread over Indiana with all its blighting effects upon political morals. Risley, Burke, and Donham, followed in quick succession, and it was demonstrated that no one could stand with the President against Voorhees. The people of Indiana remembering the circumstances under which the Indiana delegates were brought to Mr. Cleveland at Chicago, regard the President as having licked the hand that smote him. When this had reached a certain point, and Voorhees was asked what course he would take in the matter of the suspension of the purchase of silver, he replied that the President had granted him so many favors that he could not refuse him anything he might ask. This lofty declaration of principles was followed by the action of Voorhees in the repeal matter and this in turn by the appointment of Jump, who was Voorhees's pet candidate, and whose appointment he apparently at the last moment bullied the President into making. There is only one possible excuse which the President can put forward and that is that he wanted to buy Voorhees's vote upon a measure in congress. The President's friends make this excuse for him, but if they think it was an honorable act, they are beyond the reach of argument.

In view of the final and complete triumph of Voorhees, it is well to recall an extract from the Indianapolis News of March 22, setting forth the nature of the Voorhees following in Indiana, remembering that the Burke referred to is now

United States District Attorney Burke, and the Joshua Jump referred to is now United States Collector Joshua Jump:

"It is recalled that immediately after the adjournment of the Indiana general assembly, two years ago, there was great rejoicing over the defeat of the co-employees bill, and of other bills in which the railroads were interested, particularly the Pennsylvania and Vandalia railroads. The Vandalia railroad company placed at the disposal of Mr. Burke, who had fought so hard for the railroad companies, John E. Lamb, who had been an industrious lobbyist of the railroads, and other democrats, a private car in which they traveled to Hot Springs in elegant style. Champagne was the cheapest drink aboard. At Hot Springs there was a gathering in which were Senator Voorhees, Lamb, Burke, Crawford Fairbanks, the Terre Haute distiller, Joshua Jump, and other democrats of that character. It was during the stay of that party at Hot Springs, that, according to Senator Voorhees, the United States attorneyship was promised to Burke."

LESSON OF THE ELECTION.

The voting at the election of November 8 took place under circumstances devoid of enthusiasm for the democratic party or for Mr. Cleveland's administration. The President's course since his inauguration had been such as to put the independent sentiment of the country in an attitude of hardly suppressed hostility, or, at least, of suspicion. The loot of the consulships, the open disregard by the cabinet officers of the established rules for promotion, the peculiar and brutal viciousness of Carlisle in his treatment of treasury employes, the apparent entire lack of notice from the President to his cabinet that in the management of the civil service the principles of the democratic platform must be observed, the open and wholesale removal of officers upon secret charges, the placing of inefficient ward politicians at the head of divisions in the departments at Washington, thus depriving subordinate employes of a chance for promotion, the general practice of placing men who are the bitter enemies of the merit system at the head of offices within the classified service, the failure to make any extension whatever of the civil service rules, the failure to punish officers who tricked the civil service law, the removal of fourth-class postmasters at the rate of 30,000 a year, the clean sweep at once inaugurated without hindrance by newly appointed officers, such as collectors of internal revenue, the universal permission to congressmen to manipulate the federal offices, with a view to their own renomination, the bogus attempt to reform the pension boards with congressmen's democratic doctors, the Voorhees domination, the Van Allen sale and the general, impudent and overbearing prevalence of the feudal system made it impossible for anyone except President Eliot, of Harvard college, and Colonel Codman, of Boston, to be enthusiastic for the President or his party. Independents, therefore, turned themselves to teaching wholesome home lessons. The city of Indianapolis led off by changing a democratic majority of 2,700 two years ago to 3,000 the other way. The people of Brooklyn changed a 25,000 majority for Cleveland in 1892 to 25,000 the other way for a reform mayor, and the great democratic majority in the state of New York last year was changed to 89,000 against Maynard. In New Jersey a similar revolution took place, and Massachusetts sent Quincyism to the wall by 30,000 majority. The people were tired of being ruled by bosses, whose only means of living is in the parcelling of offices among henchmen. The division of the federal offices as spoils was a part and parcel of the general division which caused the dissatisfaction. The result of the elections is a great cause for rejoicing, and the chief element in that cause is the fact that now at every election many thousand voters join the ranks of those who refuse to be bound or ruled by a party machine.

MORE SWINISH SPOIL.

In THE CHRONICLE for June, 1893, under the heading "Swinish Spoil," we gave some account of the federal inspection of hogs in this city. At that time the republican superintendent of inspection and his two republican taggers and the six women whose fathers were or had been republicans, had been turned out because under a democratic administration they could not conduct an unbiased search for worms in pork. Their places had been taken by one Dr. Stucky, "a good, sound democrat," and two democratic taggers, and Mary Lucid and Nora Toomey, whose male relatives were democrats. Stucky received $1,400 a year, the taggers $720 each, and the others $600 each. They had literally "a soft snap." No pork has been exported from this point since July and they had after that date nothing whatever to do. November 1 the secretary of agriculture, with a great newspaper flourish in which he had his joke at the "bureau of animal indolence," "suspended" this inspection bureau and all pay was stopped at that date.

There was an appropriation, however, for meat inspection. For Bynum, particularly, it was a golden opportunity to put under government pay some additional hustlers for his renomination next year. Another bureau of inspection was invented. This was to inspect hogs intended for home consumption while foreigners were to take their chances. At the head of this bureau appears Dr. Pritchard, a veterinary surgeon, with a salary of $1,800, $400 more than Stucky received. The two aforesaid taggers, John Clegg and Martin Quinn, were transferred to him at their former pay. He has also under him the following additional hog inspectors, Jacob Fox, William Wampner, and William Peggs, each receiving $900 a year. This bureau is to inspect the hogs on foot as well as after slaughter—alive, and dead. This requires a very considerable degree of expert knowledge. We have made some examination of the appointees. William Peggs from 1886 to 1893 appears in the city directory as a laborer, a teamster, a driver, and again a teamster. William Wampner appears from 1886 to 1893, as a carpenter, a driver and a teamster. Jacob Fox has a more varied history, running into public and private life. He was originally a shoemaker. In 1885, when the late Postmaster Jones turned the four women mail bag menders out of their places in the post-office here, Jacob Fox was given a place and mended mail bags during Mr. Cleveland's first administration. Then he seems to have drifted temporarily into shoe-making again, but in 1891 he became a policeman, from which position as a sort of finishing education, he goes to the inspection of hogs. Stucky with his bureau is hoping and expecting re-instatement for the inspection of hogs "for abroad."

It is interesting to note the "practical" principles which have governed this whole transaction. Stucky and his subordinates were "appointed" by Bynum and Turpie. Pritchard and his subordinates were "appointed" by Bynum. Each member of both crowds is for Bynum for renomination. Next spring Pritchard and Stucky and Clegg and Quinn and Fox and Wampner and Peggs and the male relatives of Miss Lucid and Miss Twoomey will show what men can do in the way of setting up primaries for a congressman, when the congressman pays them out of the public treasury. This is "practical politics." This is Quincy's "existing political conditions." This is party administration having its hogs inspected by its "friends."

"The Existing Political Conditions."—

II.

JOSHUA JUMP.

October 31.—Ex-Congressman John E. Lamb, of Terre Haute, is here in the interest of his friends who want office.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

November 1.—Hon. John E. Lamb sent an important telegram to Joshua Jump, at Terre Haute, to-day, respecting the appointment of a collector of internal revenue for that district. There is considerable anxiety among the friends of Representative Brookshire as to the contents of the message. Senator Voorhees's followers believe the message informed Jump that he would be appointed collector this week. Mr. Brookshire's followers contend that it either indicated doubt as to whether the appointment would go to Terre Haute or Crawfordsville, or informed Jump that his appointment would not be made until after the adjournment of congress.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

November 1.—Reliable information from Washington to-night states that to-morrow or day after Joshua Jump of this city will be appointed internal revenue collector of this district. This will be a victory for Senator Voorhees, as Congressman

November 2.—President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle are considering the Terre Haute internal revenue collectorship along with several other treasury offices at Woodley to-day. Joshua Jump will be appointed.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

November 3.—It is believed that the appointment of Joshua Jump as collector of the Seventh Indiana revenue district will be announced in a few days. There is little doubt that he will be the successful candidate, and great effort was made by Senator Voorhees to have the appointment confirmed before adjournment was taken. Secretary Carlisle has been closeted with the President at Woodley for two or three days, and announces that as soon as the election is over quite a batch of appointments will be made public.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel.

November 4.—Mr. Voorhees confidently expects the appointment of Joshua Jump to be collector of internal revenue the first of next week, but when Jump's name was mentioned to Representative Brookshire to-day, the Crawfordsville statesman inquired what assurance has been received by Senator Voorhees that Mr. Jump would be appointed, and who had given the assurance. A friend of Mr. Brookshire said to-day, after talking with that gentleman, that the Terre Haute man was not sure to get the place; that it might yet go to W. B. Hulet, of Crawfordsville, and that Mr. Brookshire was evidently in possession of some secret information from the President which led him to reasonably doubt the success of Jump. It is stated that all of Jump's business ramifications, including his partnership with John E. Lamb, his warm friendship for Distiller Fairbanks, and various other matters relating to the Terre Haute ring, have all been carefully explained to the President, and that the latter was deeply impressed by them.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

November 6.—Joshua Jump's commission as collector of internal revenue was forwarded to him at Terre Haute to-day. As stated in the dispatches Saturday the nomination was agreed upon last week, but it was decided not to make the formal announcement until to-day. Congressman Brookshire has been opposing Jump's appointment. He called at the White House this morning and made an effort to see Mr. Cleveland, but the President was not receiving. When informed by the News correspondent that the appointment was settled and Jump's commission had been forwarded to him, Mr. Brookshire looked amazed, and started for the Treasury Department to verify the news. The nomination of Jump is a triumph for Senator Voorhees and John E. Lamb, although Jump was indorsed by every Democratic congressman in the revenue district except Taylor and Brookshire.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

November 8.—A congressman who called to see Senator Voorhees to-day says he found the distinguished Hoosier statesman in a frame of mind. It appears that the Senator expected to leave the city for Indiana this afternoon, with Senator Turpie and Representative Cooper, who departed for their homes, but he did not want to leave till he knew the appointment of Joshua Jump to be collector of internal revenue was so fully determined that his appointment papers were in the mails. When he called at the Treasury Department he learned that the appointment was made out yesterday and sent to the White House for the signature of the President, but that it had not been sent back to the Treasury Department for the mails; furthermore it was intimated that "there was a hen on," or words to that effect, as the President had not indicated that he would surely sign the appointment. The Senator could not get an audience with the President, although the latter was at the White House to-day, and attended a cabinet meeting.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

November 9.—Rain poured down continuously until nightfall. The water fairly piled up on the asphalt streets and ran in torrents through the gutters. It was a dismal journey, indeed, under such conditions, that Senator Daniel Woolsey Voorhees set out upon about 9 o'clock this morning. Alone in a covered carriage he started toward the country-seat of President Cleveland, situated five or six miles west of the White House. What might have been his thoughts and his opinion of the chief magistrate of the nation, as the senator from Indiana sat in his hired vehicle and peered out of its windows upon the down-pour can only be imagined from the condition of his mind.

Being refused an audience by the President at the White House yesterday, Senator Voorhees determined to visit that personage in the quiet recesses of his woodland home this morning, and to learn why one Joshua Jump, of Terre Haute, had not been officially informed of his appointment as collector of internal revenue; or why, to be technically correct, the commission of Jump, which was sent to the White House four days ago, and had not received the President's signature. The fact that Senator Voorhees was in a frame of mind during all of that part of yesterday following his rebuff at the White House was reported by your correspondent yesterday. The senator did not find himself in a more comfortable condition this morning. He told his friend before his lonely journey through the rain that he intended to go to Woodley and see the President or know why he could not see him, and learn why Jump had not been appointed, even if it resulted in his ultimate return to the practice of law in Indiana. He thought he would just as leave hang up his shingle again in Terre Haute and expound Blackstone as stay longer in the senate if he was to have a continuation of the treatment which had, during the past few days, been accorded him at the hand of the administration. A number of the senator's Hoosier friends lingered about his committee-room at the capitol and in the room in the Maltby Buildings, just north of the capitol grounds, where Chester R. Faulkner, the faithful private secretary to the senator, conducts the personal and political end of the senator's interests. They anxiously awaited a report upon Daniel's desperate move. About noon a closed carriage drove under the porte cochere of the White House, and a minute later a doorkeeper handed the occupant a message in writing. The vehicle then disappeared. A short time afterwards official announcement was made that "Joshua Jump, of Indiana, had been appointed collector of internal revenue." It is stated that Senator Voorhees brought the message himself, or caused it to be brought by a messenger, and that it was not forthcoming with ease.

It is now stated that the mind of the President was many weeks ago filled with direct charges and vague insinuations against Joshua Jump. These charges led him to believe that while Jump might in himself be capable and honest he would be surrounded as an official with influences which should not be for the good of the service. It is probable that these charges will be laid before the committee on finance when nomination goes to that body next month for action preliminary to confirmation, but inasmuch as Senator Voorhees is chairman of the committee it is not likely that any move to defeat confirmation will succeed.

The appointment of Joshua Jump as collector of internal revenue is an important event in the political career of Hon. Elijah Voorhees Brookshire, of Crawfordsville, representative of the eighth district. It is stated by one of that gentleman's most intimate friends, that it means Mr. Brookshire's retirement from congress. The appointment is the consummation of a general deal by which John E. Lamb, of Terre Haute, law partner of Jump, is to be returned to congress. Mr. Brookshire will not discuss the subject for publication, but he is quoted as having in private conversation acknowledged that he understood the details of the deal, and that Lamb would be his opponent for the nomination next spring. With Jump in charge of the powerful machinery of the internal revenue office and Distiller Fairbanks in the saddle, not only will the interests of Senator Voorhees be taken care of, but John E. Lamb will be boomed for political honors.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

BRACKEN.

October 25.—Representative McNagney is on the warpath against Internal Revenue Collector Bracken. The trouble is over the appointment of a deputy collector. Mr. McNagney says that the office belongs to the Fort Wayne district; that it has been given to that district for many years past, and that it is as much entitled to it as it is to any other office, and he has, upon this assumption, recommended Charles Reese for the position. Mr. Reese is a prominent German Lutheran, of Fort Wayne, and, proceeding under the belief that the office would go to that district, he has secured a large number of indorsements. Captain Bracken has, in some manner, indicated to the people of Fort Wayne, that he does not intend to give the deputyship to that district. He does not indicate where he will place the office, but a belief prevails in some quarters here that it may go to Roscoe Griffith, of Muncie, who was strongly indorsed for the collectorship. At any rate, the information that the place will not go to Fort Wayne has struck Mr. McNagney broadsides and almost taken him off his feet. He naturally feels very much cut up about it, and intends to strike back.

There is good ground for the Fort Wayne democrats to protest against the determination of Bracken to place his deputyship outside of their district. The Fort Wayne democrats have, unquestionably, been treated shabbily by this administration, and the representative from that district is not slow to openly denounce their treatment. He says that President Harrison did a great deal more for the district than President Cleveland has done or intends doing. The democrats fully expected to fill the Leipsic consulship, but when the incumbent was removed the place went to another state, and now it has been stated that the Mississippi-river commissionership, held by Judge Taylor, has been offered to another section.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

October 25.—A lively "kick" has come up from Fort Wayne over the choice of a deputy collector of internal revenue in the sixth district. Collector Bracken has served notice on the politicians of Allen county that he will depart from the time-honored custom of taking the deputy internal revenue collector from the Twelfth congressional district. The Twelfth district has submitted the name of Charles Reese, a leading German Lutheran, of Fort Wayne, for deputy collector. He was heavily indorsed, and by Congressman McNagney and others.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

* * *

October 26.—The official announcement that William Zacharias has been appointed traveling deputy and Louis Federmann stamp clerk by Collector Bracken has caused quite a flurry among the local applicants for places in the revenue service. Zacharias and Federmann both belong to Franklin county, the home of the collector, and the boys say that this is all the patronage that county is entitled to. Here there are about forty applicants, with four places to be filled.—Greensburg (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis News.

October 28.—"I guess we have made a mistake in this man." This is what Senator Voorhees is, upon reliable authority, quoted to have said in a private conversation the other day, referring to the appointment of Capt. William H. Bracken, of Brookville, to be collector of internal revenue for the eastern Indiana district.

The senator had been writing and wiring Collector Bracken in reference to the appointment of two or three deputy collectors and had been unable to obtain a reply to his requests. The senator, in a moment of despair, remarked that he had probably made a mistake in securing the appointment of Bracken, as it was evident that the latter did not intend to give him any patronage. Subsequently, it is stated, the senator succeeded in securing an answer and a promise. But Bracken's delay left an impression upon the senator.

It is stated by a prominent Indiana democrat here that the reason Collector Bracken did not reply to the requests of Senator Voorhees was that he had communicated them to Judge Holman, and was awaiting instructions from the latter. In point of fact Captain Bracken owes his appointment to the influence of Daniel W. Voorhees, but he insists upon recognizing William S. Holman as his sponsor. As has been explained by the Journal correspondent, Judge Holman was buncoed into the indorsement of Bracken, much against his will.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

October.—Representative Cooper is another one of the Indiana democrats who is deeply disgusted at Bracken. Mr. Cooper confidently expected to secure a number of positions under Collector Bracken, and he lays his failure, as does Senator Voorhees, to secure places to the interference of Judge Holman.

Meanwhile, every democratic member of congress in Collector Bracken's district is railing at Holman. The three members from the northern part of the state, who were confident that the chief deputyship would be given to McNagney, have no language adequate to the occasion. They are unable to express their indignation toward Holman, whom they hold responsible for the distribution of the internal revenue offices, and whom they charge with not only having turned Bracken against them, but with attempting to "play the pork" and gobble up all the positions, with a view to quelling the opposition against him in his district. The situation is interesting. There is a general row over Bracken's patronage, and two or three of the democratic members of the house directly interested threaten to rise in their places one of these fair days and make some observations decidedly personal to Holman and Bracken.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal.

* * *

November 7.—William H. Bracken, the new internal revenue collector for this district, spent Sunday in the city. Mr. Bracken said that all the places would be filled by the end of the week. The collector has re-commissioned all the old deputies and he will continue them in office until the new men familiarize themselves with the duties.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

* * *

There is a prospect of a break between Senator Voorhees and Collector of Internal Revenue Bracken, of Brookville, if the latter don't keep his promises and make a few appointments for the Senator. One bone of contention at present is the appointment of a deputy collector in Ripley county. Before his appointment Captain Bracken promised to appoint Luther Cox, of Holton, deputy, in case Mr. Bracken landed the collectorship. Luther Cox is one of the fiery, young Jacksonian element, who resigned a place in the railway mail service when President Harrison was elected because he declined to serve under a Republican president. This dramatic move commended Cox particularly to Senator Voorhees. As soon as Bracken was appointed Voorhees sent him a telegram requesting Cox's appointment at once. It did not come. The senator failed to get a reply, and has been trying to hurry Bracken ever since. One of Luther Cox's relatives, George W. Cox, wants the place, and Representative Holman, although he indorsed Luther Cox, now claims that he did so under a misapprehension. Bracken wants to name George W. Cox to serve half the term, with a promise to Cox No. 2 (Luther) he shall serve out the remaining half. Senator Voorhees is very wrathful over this attempt of Bracken to "do the sneak act" on his promise, and proposes to make the political waters of Indiana turbulent if Bracken don't come to time.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, November 19.

CAUSES OF THE LANDSLIDE.

"I am entirely unfamiliar with the duties of the office and the workings of the custom-house, what offices I shall be called upon to fill, and what the demands of the service are. I believe in making haste slowly, and am not in favor of revolutionizing things in hot haste."—Interview with Judge Kilbreth, on his appointment as collector, in New York Times, July 29.

W. F. Harrity ran over from Philadelphia to-night to look after some fourth-class post-offices in Pennsylvania in which he is interested. He found Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell and escorted him to his room at the Arlington, where the subject was discussed. Mr. Harrity will return home to-morrow, and the chances are that in a day or two his recommendations will be carried out.—Washington Dispatch, New York Times, October 5.

Preparatory to leaving for the west to-day, Senator Palmer made the rounds of the departments and saw the President for the purpose of settling up some of the important Illinois appointments.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, November 6.

Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt this morning, in discussing the wholesale reduction of competent republican clerks in the departments in order to give democrats the better positions and salaries, said: "Unfortunately the commission is powerless to stop those outrages. It has no authority to interfere. Under the last administration I vainly endeavored to have the control of promotions in the departments placed with the commission, but unfortunately President Harrison could not be persuaded that there was even a possibility of a change in administration. Frequent complaints have been made to the commission about the acts of Secretaries Carlisle and Smith on this line, but this is the first case against the post-office department under Mr. Bissell, and I must confess my surprise. Mr. Bissell always has been perfectly frank and honest with me."—Washington Dispatch, Buffalo Express, October 25.

Surprising to both the friends and enemies of true civil reform is the act of Secretary Hoke Smith in abolishing the board of promotions in the interior department. To the enemies of an honest public service the surprise must be most gratifying, but to those who believe that government business should be transacted in accordance with business principles this official declaration of hostility is far from welcome.—Washington Star, July 15.

This plan provides for reducing the republican clerks holding positions of the higher grade to the lower ones, and promoting good democratic clerks to the vacancy. The records and pension division of the war department was the scene of the first operations of this plan. During the summer months over one hundred clerks were reduced and a hundred promoted to the higher places. Secretary Lamont, on the plea that he did not wish to embarrass the clerks by having the truth known that they were reduced on the ground of inefficiency, suppressed all their names from the newspapers, and the victims, desiring to hold their place even at reduced salaries, kept quiet and submitted to the reduction.

In Secretary Carlisle's department no secrecy has been observed. All actions of this kind have been announced, and it was no trouble to learn that politics, pure and simple, governed this change of places. In the second auditor's bureau, which is provided over by T. Stobbo Farrow, of South Carolina, on the 10th of this month, sixty clerks were compelled to change places. In some instances the reduction in salary and promotion accordingly amounted to $400 per annum. From a source that is entirely trustworthy the Express correspondent learns that every one of the thirty clerks that were reduced were republicans and every one of those promoted were democrats or had strong democratic influence. It is also asserted that those reduced had splendid records and far exceeded in ability those who take their places.

In the first comptroller's office, however, the changes have almost been unanimous. This bureau is presided over by Robert B. Bowler, of Ohio. When he took charge of his bureau he found therein sixty-one employes, of whom thirty-five were republicans. He has been in office only about four months, but during that period seven of the republicans have been dismissed, while twenty-seven of the others were compelled to change places and salaries with democrats. This official also has announced that if he is left alone he will make a clean sweep, giving all the higher class places to democrats and forcing the republicans down to the lower grades.

In the second comptroller's office an order was issued the other day making eighteen of these political changes. In the sixth auditor's office twenty-nine changes have been made so far.

Another place where this plan has been worked very successfully for the democrats is in the pension office. During the past two weeks over one hundred of these political changes have been made. An investigation shows that of those promoted not more than eight or ten were republicans.—Washington Dispatch, Buffalo Express, September 25.

Secretary Hoke Smith came to Atlanta yesterday ostensibly to see his family, but in reality to settle the postmastership fight, and, unless all signs fail, he did settle it. The fight was a three-cornered one between J. M. Couper, backed by Senator Gordon; Dr. Ames Fox, backed by Senator Colquitt and Congressman Livingstone, and Anton Kontz, who has strong local backing. But none of these will win. The lucky man is ex-Postmaster Renroe, who was postmaster under Mr. Cleveland's first administration. The appointment will not be an especially popular one, but the people will be glad to see the controversy settled.—Atlanta (Ga.) Dispatch, New York Times, September 19.

Secretary Smith's handling of everything connected with the civil service in his department is fantastic in the extreme. His latest performances in the census office include some dismissals which are beyond explanation by any ordinary rules. One of these cases is that of Josiah C. Stoddard, of New York, late disbursing clerk. Mr. Stoddard was formerly disbursing clerk in the department of labor, having been placed there by Commissioner Carroll D. Wright, who has just been placed in charge of the census office also. Mr. Stoddard left the department of labor to go over to the census office because they need a particularly careful officer there. Census accounts are curious things, involving all kinds of out-of-the-way items. The disbursing clerk, therefore, requires to have a keen intelligence to enable him to discriminate between what can properly be paid and what can not. A former disbursing officer of the census office, through no intentional wrong-doing of his own, succeeded in laying up against himself a mass of charges which were disallowed at the treasury department, aggregating some $12,000, and his bondsmen had finally to go to Congress for relief. Mr. Stoddard, however, has handled his business with such care and precaution that some $9,000,000 have passed through his hands without a single disallowance, so far as can be ascertained. On the very eve of Commissioner Wright's taking charge of the census office, this man whom he had selected once for his own department on account of his exceptional abilities is turned adrift.

Another instance in point is that of John D. Leland, of New York, who was chief of the population division in the tenth census, was very highly thought of by General Walker, was retained by Superintendent Porter through all his administration because of his experience and his record for usefulness, and who is withal, it is understood, an out-and-out democrat. The fact, however, that he was a northern man and came over from the last administration was probably argument enough to enable somebody who has the ear of Secretary Smith to procure his dismissal.—Washington Dispatch, New York Evening Post, October 7.

A REPUBLICAN DISTRICT ATTORNEY PROSECUTES REPUBLICAN LAW-BREAKERS.

The fourth and most important of the series of prosecutions begun this year in Kentucky under the federal law prohibiting political assessments, resulted, on the 25th of October, in the conviction of Walter P. Shaw in the United States district court. A brief review of the facts brought out can not fail to interest your readers.

Shortly after Albert Scott was appointed collector of this, the fifth district of Kentucky, there was organized among the storekeepers and gaugers of the district what was termed a "revenue circle." Shaw, who was at the time a clerk in the collector's office, visited the various distilleries in the district where the revenue officers were assigned to duty, and organized the society; he administered an oath to the officers and explained the object of the organization. It was in substance that they were to secretly contribute two per cent. of their salaries each month to be used for political purposes and for the maintenance of themselves and the collector in office. It has been impossible to ascertain precisely the amount of money collected by the "circle," but it probably amounted to three or four thousand dollars. This "circle" was dissolved June, 1890, and another organization was got up, fixing the monthly assessments at five per cent. from the beginning of each officer's service, crediting those who had paid the "circle" with the two per cent., and this five per cent. was collected until the 1st of December, 1892. A complete list of the clerks, employes and officers in the internal revenue service in this district, together with the amounts of the salary drawn by them, and the amount due by them—that is, five per cent. on the whole amount of the salaries, less any payments that had been made—was furnished monthly to a man, first C. R. Barnes, and afterward F. M. Heinig, whose duty it was to send to the persons whose names appeared on the list a card requesting them to pay the amount or remit it to him. The person who collected these assessments made a list at the end of the month, giving the name and the amount paid by each officer, and then made a check to one Niman, who is a brother-in-law of the chief deputy, William E. Riley. Niman would cash the check, and, after deducting two per cent., take the money and the list to one Wade Sheltman, who had formerly been a business partner of Riley's. Sheltman deposited a good deal of the money in bank; it appeared that he had paid out to various political committees about $11,700.

The total amount collected was something like $40,000. About $25,000 has been traced, by the evidence of bankers, into the hands of Sheltman, but other large collections have been made by him, the amount of which it has been impossible to ascertain. It is estimated that there was something like $20,000 or $25,000 paid to ex-Collector Scott and Riley. What disposition was made by them of this large sum of money is not yet known.

Barnes and Heinig deducted two or three per cent. for their services for making the collections, Niman two per cent., and Sheltman various amounts at different times, amounting to two or three per cent.

The list that was prepared by Barnes and Heinig of each month's collections was delivered to Sheltman, who delivered it at the end of each month to Riley or to Scott. The persons who failed to pay their assessments were not assigned to duty until the assessments were paid. There never was any committee of any sort to examine the accounts of any of these parties. Besides this, the collector and his chief deputy often had the store-keepers and gaugers going to ward meetings and to political conventions to aid them in their factional controversies, and were allowed by Scott to make up claims against the government for services which were never rendered, and these claims were approved by the collector. It is doubtful, in short, whether there ever existed anywhere more gross abuses than have been discovered in this district under ex-Collector Scott and his chief deputy Riley.

The prosecutions now on foot resulted from investigations made by the grand juries, pursuant to a request of the United States Civil Service Commission. The commission transmitted to George W. Jolly, the United States district attorney, a number of affidavits and letters received by them in Washington about a year ago, charging that the civil service law had been violated in the second collection district and in the fifth collection district. Six indictments were returned by the grand jury at Owensboro; three have been tried, and two out of the three defendants tried have been convicted. Three indictments were returned at Louisville, one of which has just been tried with the result of convicting Shaw. The cases of Scott and Riley will be tried on the 27th of November, and, if they have been worked up with the same admirable thoroughness which has distinguished Mr. Jolly's work in the other cases he has tried, there is good reason to look for conviction in both instances. Every patriotic Kentuckian is prouder of his state for this month's record.—November Good Government.

THE PLEDGES.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

"Public office is a public trust. We reaffirm the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, [Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot-box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition] and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President, as in the recent republican convention by delegatious composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which federal office-holders usurp control of party conventions in the states, and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government."—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT.

One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office, and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils, civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefits already gained through this instrumentality, and the further usefulness it promises, entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods. * * *

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional commands as the rule by which my official conduct must be guided. I shall, to the best of my ability and within my sphere of duty, preserve the constitution by loyally protecting every grant of federal power it contains, by defending all its restraints when attacked by impatience and restlessness, and by enforcing its limitations and reservations in favor of the states and the people.

Fully impressed with the gravity of the duties that confront me, and mindful of my weakness, I should be appalled if it were my lot to bear unaided the responsibilities that await me. I am, however, saved from discouragement when I remember that I shall have the support and the counsel and co-operation of wise and patriotic men, who will stand at my side in cabinet places, or will represent the people in their legislative halls. I find also much comfort in remembering that my countrymen are just and generous, and in the assurance that they will not condemn those who, by sincere devotion to their service, deserve their forbearance and approval.

Above all, I know there is a Supreme Being who rules the affairs of men, and whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people; and I know He will not turn from us now if we humbly and reverently seek His powerful aid.—From the President's Inaugural Address.

A REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRATIC PAPER.

So, on the subject of civil service reform, President Cleveland speaks in language which none can misunderstand. There is no hedging because now the spoils happen to be within the reach of those of his own party. President Cleveland is just as much in favor of putting the civil service on a business basis as ever was Candidate Cleveland. Not only does he promise faithful observance of the law as it stands, but he expresses the desire that its scope be extended. A politician would have spoken otherwise. But Mr. Cleveland is a statesman.—Indianapolis Sentinel, March 6.

THE PERFORMANCE.

AN OVERBEARING FEUDAL SYSTEM.

Ex-Sheriff Wicks, of Vigo county, has been here several weeks looking for a chiefship of a bureau in the treasury department. Senator Voorhees has assumed the responsibility of providing for Wicks, but is having some difficulty in securing a place for him, as the Indiana quota was filled some time ago.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, November 3.

* * *

Michael Burke, of Michigau City, has been appointed to a place in the government printing office through Senator Voorhees.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, October 21.

* * *

Miss Virgluia Kaiser, of Richmond, Ind., lately arrived in Washington, has been appointed to a position in the bludery department of the government printing office. This is another case of the philanthropic spirit of Judge Chester Faulkner, of Ripley county. Miss Kaiser came here recently in search of employment, and failing to secure it was soon reduced to comparatively destitute circumstances. The case was brought to the attention of Judge Faulkner, private secretary to Senator Voorhees. He sought the public printer and stated the case, and in less than two hours had secured an appointment for Miss Kaiser.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 25.

* * *

Senator Voorhees arrived in this city yesterday on his way from Washington to his home in Terre Haute. He did not stop off, however, but met several of his friends at the union station while waiting for his train. He stated that he would return to this city in a few days, when there would be a general consideration of the political patronage which he has been instrumental in dispensing. There are a great many dissatisfied persons who will have to be placated before Mr. Voorhees will have any real rest or peace of mind. He was accompanied to Terre Haute by John E. Lamb.—Indianapolis Sentinel, November 16.

* * *

A few days ago Peter Staff and Zeb Smith, two Terre Haute soldiers, were dropped from the pension rolls. They were drawing pensions under the general law, and not under the act of 1890. They applied to Senator Voorhees, and both have been restored to the rolls with increased pensions.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 16.

* * *

Three written questions were handed the senator. They were:

"Did you take a hand in the appointment of George G. Tanner as surveyor of customs here?"

"Have you been asked to assist in getting Edward P. Thompson, postmaster here, out of office?"

"When will Pension Agent Ensley's successor be appointed?"

The senator read them over carefully, and then said: "Now, I do not care to talk about these things. I will tell you why. I never interfere with appointments that belong to other men. The appointments in Indianapolis are under the control of Congressman Bynum and Senator Turpie. Mr. Bynum and Mr. Turpie both live here. It would be wrong for me to interfere with appointments at their home. I have said to congressmen all along: 'You go ahead in all matters in your district; if I can be of any service to you I shall be glad to help you.' I never take the lead in these cases. Take the case of Mr. Tanner. If I should sign his recommendation it would be because the congressman had asked me to do so. I control the appointments in the city in which I live. I was able to secure the appointment of a democratic postmaster at Terre Haute and a democratic collector of internal revenue in that district. I say this all by way of explanation. You can readily see that I ought not to discuss appointments that belong to Senator Turpie and Congressman Bynum." He said in reference to the appointment of Joshua Jump, as collector of internal revenue, that when he decided to recommend the appointment of Jump he felt that he was recommending a man against whom no objection could be raised. He said he did not believe there were more than two or three persons objecting to the appointment. In reference to the Indianapolis post-office, the senator said: "Of course Mr. Thompson ought to be removed. He ought to be removed at once. He was not fit timber for postmaster in the first place. He was not appointed in the regular way; he came in to serve out the term of another man. Of course he ought to go; he ought to go at once."—Indianapolis News' Interview with Senator Voorhees, November 23.

Congressman Hammond's private secretary, D. H. Fenton, is candidate for chief of a bureau in the treasury department. Mr. Hammond will use his influence to secure the appointment of his protegee. Mr. Hammond scored quite a victory in securing the appointment of his predecessor, Dr. Patton, as receiver of a land office in the Cherokee strip. It is believed that he made the way easy for his own re-nomination also by so doing.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 28.

Congressman Cooper is given credit for the appointment yesterday of Luther F. Short as consul-general to Constantinople. Mr. Short is editor of the Franklin (Ind.) Democrat and secretary of the Democratic Editorial Association of Indiana. Mr. Short was one of the earliest consular applicants from Indiana, having applied for a place before the inauguration. In the fight before the democratic national convention he was a steadfast Cleveland man. The consul-generalship at Constantinople is worth probably $5,000 a year.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 22.

Dr. G. W. Buckner, colored, of Evansville, will probably be appointed assistant supervising surgeon of the Freedmen's Hospital in Washington at a salary of $1,800 a year. Congressman Taylor has been making a fight for Dr. Buckner for the first place; but that has been settled on another colored man. Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 4.

The laugh just now is on editor William M. Moss, of the Bloomfield Democrat. Mr. Moss has caused to be printed in his own printing office a circular letter signed by the chairman and secretary of the democratic committee of his county and addressed to Senators Voorhees and Turpie, expounding his many virtues and arguing to the point that he should be appointed collector of internal revenue for the district he resides in. The circular has been placed in the hands of certain independent democrats here, but Mr. Moss's friends, seeing the impropriety of it, are trying to suppress the document. The circular relates among other things that Mr. Moss was born in a log house; that he printed at his own cost the democratic tickets in the campaign of 1884 and charged nothing for the work; that he published two democratic newspapers, and that he is now superintendent of the Bloomfield schools, member of the state committee and leader of the affairs of his town. Mr. Moss is now seeking after the position of superintendent of Indian schools, with fair prospects of success.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, April 21.

[Moss got an Indian inspectorship a few days ago.]

The fight for the position of collector of the Indianapolis custom-house has become acrimonious in its nature. It is a three-sided fight between Maurice Donnelly, John Rail and Smith Myers. There are other applicants for the place, but they do not appear to figure in it to any great extent. Word was received here a few days ago that Congressman Bynum had said that the appointment would probably be made Saturday (to-morrow), and that the appointee would be John Rail. This stirred up Donnelly's friends to a white heat, and a lot of charges against Rail was sent on to Washington; one bundle for Mr. Bynum, another for President Cleveland, and a third for Secretary Carlisle.

One of Mr. Rail's strongest supporters is Martin J. Murphy, president of the city council. A friend met Mr. Murphy on the street and said to him, "If John Rail gets that place, there will be hell to pay."

"Yes," said Murphy, "and if he don't get it there will be two kinds of hell to pay."

There was some talk this morning that the democracy would unite on some other candidate and telegraph Bynum to drop Rail and Donnelly in the interests of harmony. Rail's friends, however, say that this will not be done; that the place has been promised to him and he must have it.

There is another story going around to the effect that persons receiving the appointment to office are required to obligate themselves to pay in a certain portion of their salary for campaign funds. This could not be traced to any person who had been requested to make such contributions, and Chairman Taggart says that it is a falsehood.—Indianapolis News, May 5.

Congressman Bynum, of Indiana, was one of about twenty congressmen to call on Secretary Carlisle this morning before 10:30 o'clock. This is one of the secretary's regular reception days, and he has been very strict in allowing no office-seekers to call on him at other than reception days. His office this morning was crowded with applicants and their congressional representatives. Mr. Bynum was alone, but came to see the secretary about having the surveyor of the port at Indianapolis appointed within a short time.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 19.

Representative Bynum called at the treasury department this morning to make known his recommendation for the surveyor of the port at Indianapolis. Secretary Carlisle, however, has commenced to feel the strain of the silver fight and was confined to his house, weak and indisposed. Mr. Bynum was compelled to postpone his recommendation until the secretary could be seen at his office. He said this morning that he had made up his mind some months ago whom he would recommend, but would not make known the name until the appointment was made.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 23.

* * *

Congressman Bynum called on Secretary Carlisle and again indicated his readiness to spring the name of the new surveyor of the port at Indianapolis whenever the secretary was prepared to hear it. Secretary Carlisle said to-day that he would take up appointments probably next week. This conclusion is undoubtedly based on the belief that the silver question will be out of the way by that time. The surveyor will probably not be named before next week. It is reported that an entirely new name has been secured by Mr. Bynum. "Charley" Bridges, of Indianapolis, who was here several days last week, made an attempt to land the office, so it is claimed, but men who are closest to Bynum do not believe Bridges will succeed.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 25.

* * *

Representative Bynum is said to be having about as much agony over the surveyorship of customs at Indianapolis as Representative Holman had at one time recently over choosing a collector of internal revenue. Neither wanted to name a man from among the many aspirants; neither wanted to discriminate, and each would have been happy with either dear charmer aspirant away. Mr. Bynum's action just at this time is a mystery at the treasury department, where officials say they are unable to learn who the Indianapolis congressman wants given the place, which is regarded as a fat plum. Mr. Bynum refuses to tell even his most intimate friends in congress whom he wants appointed. He says he has no choice, and yet he is quoted as having said that the man who will be appointed has not been publicly named for the position, and that the appointment will create surprise. Secretary Carlisle is reported to be in Mr. Bynum's confidence and to have the name of his choice. A high treasury official said to-day that the secret of Mr. Bynum's mysteriousness and secrecy was due to the fact that he had "queered" himself at the White House over an appointment some months ago. It is already anticipated by Indiana democrats in congress that a great deal of dissatisfaction will follow the appointment, which Secretary Carlisle hinted to-day would be made next week. It will surely be made within a couple of days after the silver bill is passed by the senate.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, October 26.

* * *

Representative Bynum has cut the gordian knot in the matter of the surveyorship of the port of Indianapolis. The fight for the place has been so bitter and there have been so many candidates that Mr. Bynum deemed it best to select some one for the place who had not been a candidate, and therefore in no way mixed up in any factional quarrel. Mr. Bynum and Senators Voorhees and Turpie picked out the man and got his consent to accept and then joined in his recommendation to the President. The name was satisfactory to the latter and the appointment will probably be made by him to-morrow. The new surveyor will be Mr. George G. Tanner.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, November 7.

* * *

The appointment of Mr. Tanner ends a contest for office that has been annoying to Congressman Bynum. Soon after the election of President Cleveland many candidates for the place announced themselves. It was the understanding that the appointment would be made on the recommendation of Mr. Bynum, and he was besieged early and late by the applicants. The original candidates for the place were Smith H. Myers, Maurice Donnelly, James M. Healy, Thomas Madden, John A. Reaume, John Rail and Edward St. George Rogers. Several of the candidates and their friends spent much time in Washington immediately after the inauguration. Each candidate professed to believe at some time during the long wait that he would be appointed. Local Democrats have charged that Congressman Bynum played "hot and cold" with the candidates. It is averred that at one time he told the friends of Smith H. Myers that Mr. Myers would be appointed, and that at other times he said the same thing with reference to other candidates. Along in the summer it was announced from Washington that John Rail, the superintendent of the water company, would be appointed. This announcement brought forth a protest from some Democrats, who declared that Rail was not qualified for the position. The protest was forwarded to Washington, and Rail's commission did not come. Still later it was declared that either Thomas Madden or J. A. Reaume would be appointed, and later still some of the local Democrats seemed to think that W. T. Steele, ex-superintendent of the Citizens' Street Railroad Company, would be the man. The fight all the way through was marked with bitterness, and friends of the various candidates have threatened to "get even" with Bynum unless their particular candidate was appointed. Congressman Bynum has maintained all the way through the contest that he was not guilty of double dealing, and that he was not making definite promises to candidates, as was alleged.—Indianapolis News, November 7.

* * *

Senator Voorhees, Congressmen Martin, Cooper and Bynum were at the White House this morning, before the cabinet meeting, hoping to see the President in the interest of several applications for office. The President sent word out that he would be occupied with executive business until the cabinet meeting, and could not see his callers. This was considerable of a disappointment to the Indiana men. Senator Voorhees intends to leave for Indiana to-morrow. President Cleveland gave out word through his private secretary this morning that no new appointment cases would be considered until congress met. A number of new appointments have been considered and practically settled. These will be announced, but no new cases will be taken up. One of the appointments settled is understood to be the Indiana pension agent. Mayor Zollinger, of Fort Wayne, will be appointed.

"When will the Indianapolis postmaster be appointed?" Congressman Bynum was asked to-day.

"I don't know; ask Senator Turpie. He is looking after that."—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, November 10.

Congressman W. D. Bynum has about concluded all satisfactory arrangements for the appointment of George G. Tanner, of Indianapolis, as collector of customs for that port.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, November 13.

Yesterday Capt. Thomas Hanlon, chairman of the Floyd county democratic central committee, received from Senator Voorhees a letter in regard to the appointment of the postmaster of this city to succeed W. B. Godfrey that showed in the most unmistakable manner the position of the distinguished statesman, and caused the friends of C. W. Schindler considerable elation, with a corresponding depressing effect on the other aspirants for the place and their friends. In the letter Mr. Voorhees states that he had indorsed the recommendation of Mr. Schindler for the place at the request of the Hon. Jason B. Brown, congressman from the New Albany district, and that he could see no reason for withdrawing his indorsement. The appointment of the postmasters, the letter recited, rested with the congressman from the various districts when they were in accord with the administration having the appointing power, and that in this case he could see no reason why Mr. Brown should be deprived of that privilege.—New Albany Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, July 14.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE President's message is noted for its vigorous support of civil service reform, and in this respect it is in line with all of his writings. It is noticeable also that he particularly mentions cabinet officers who express an opinion in favor of reform, or who have done anything to carry it out in their departments. An example of this notice is in his calling attention to the fact that Secretary Morton has not made spoil of his chiefs of division. This is a severe censure upon such cabinet officers as Carlisle and Hoke Smith. But why has the President been so timid? Why did he not long ago tell Carlisle and Smith that he would have none of their spoils methods?

THE President has also this month done another vigorous act which makes for righteousness in the removal of Johnston from the civil service commission, and in the appointment of Mr. John R. Proctor to the vacancy. It is to be hoped that we again have a useful commission. Johnston was strangely out of place. He was in favor of an extension of the merit system but dissented from naming particular places for it. He was always unhappy over the classification of the free delivery post-offices, and at last criticised this to President Cleveland because it was done after Harrison's defeat, not thinking that he was with equal severity criticising his own superior. He was sleepless in his vigilance for democratic partisans. He thought no man entitled to know the cause of his removal until it came to the request for his own resignation. He went about Washington with a pistol in his hip pocket, shaking his fists when he felt his honor was touched, and threatening to "slap" the faces of those who criticised him. The editor of the CHRONICLE has been specially mentioned for this last attention.

THE President, in his message, said some things about civil service reformers which would have been better omitted. Still, a man who has turned out a civil service commissioner and the Topeka postmaster in the same month for blocking or tricking the civil service law, may claim some room for his temper. It is well known that Mr. Cleveland has never liked to hear unpalatable truth, and reformers do not lay it up against him that he calls them "querulous" and "self-constituted guardians of the law," and their theories "sublimated," and so on. It does not hurt them; it makes him feel better, and it eases the rage of the crowd of looters whom he allows chiefly to have his ear.

It can not be expected, however, that the "self-constituted guardians of reform" will be silent. One of their sublimated theories has been that it was unmanly and unjust to dismiss officers upon charges which only the congressmen were allowed to see, and they have "querulously" insisted that the President ought not to buy Voorhees's vote, nor in the name of pension reform fill up the pension boards with congressmen's political doctors to whom we pay $1,700,000 a year; nor should the offices under the civil service law be put in charge of those who would be glad to see that law broken down. They will not stop talking about these and other things like them, for they have found that if they do, the ideas which at once come to the front exclusively are not the ideas in the fervid writings of Mr. Cleveland in favor of civil service reform, but they are the ideas of the Carlises and the Hoke Smiths. The "self-constituted guardians" began advocating this reform in 1867, and they have always been used to such little pleasantries as the President now treats them to, and from all kinds of politicians, from the President to the ward-heeler. Against this they have brought this reform to its present rugged and healthy state, and they propose to carry it to completion.

THE report from Washington that Voorhees wants to be the democratic candidate for President in 1896, seems to have a foundation. It would be a bitter commentary upon Mr. Cleveland's statesmanship, should it result that "placating" this humbug, who would be comic if he were not so dangerous, with spoil gave him such importance as to make him the presidential candidate of his party. If it should turn out that the democrats deserve defeat in 1896 it is to be hoped that they will nominate Voorhees. Let them shoulder all that is bad in politics and in public life and blunder into a defeat in comparison with which Maynard's defeat will seem a victory.

IN other columns we give the usual detailed account of the labors of Indiana congressmen in Washington during the month. Congressman Cooper is trying to get a place for "Dick" Johnson. Bynum has worked William Warmack, colored, into a porter's place in the railway mail service, and has revived here what Secretary Morton called the "Bureau of Animal Indolence," and Dr. Stucky and his assistants have been again restored to full pay. The only concern which exports meat from this place has had an order from Germany, and it is likely that this bureau will have several days' work to do before the holidays. Congressman Martin has caused Collector Bracken to appoint "the Hon. William H. Harkins, of Portland, a deputy collector." Martin is also the hero of a bill to repeal the civil service law. Congressman Hammond "is giving some attention to presidential postmasters." Bretz is trying to have John Johnson, editor of the Democrat, made postmaster at Bedford, and John W. McCarty at Washington, and one Wilson at Worthington. Jason Brown expects "a sweep-out of the republican employes at the Jeffersonville army depot about the first of January." Congressman Conn very boldly refused the postmaster-general to get up a petition to support his man for the postmastership at Notre Dame. Congressman Taylor is trying hard to get his man in as inspector of steamboats at Evansville, against Poet Hays, Congressman Caruth's man. He expects to "name" an Alaska commissioner, a surgeon of the freedmen's hospital, and an assistant attorney-general. Congressman Holman "is sweating purple moisture" over the fight for the Shelbyville post-office. Congressman Voorhees has called upon Logan Carlisle to give "Charles E. Brown, a colored democrat," a place, and has designated three men, any one of whom may be turned out for his man.

THE Indian Rights Association has recently issued a pamphlet under the title, "The Appointment of a First-rate Indian Agent by the New Administration." It was written out of the fullness of heart to do all possible justice, and not, as a foreigner unfamiliar with the American civil service system would suppose, to lampoon the administration. In natural surprise he might be pardoned the exclamation,

"Great Heavens, in this land of the free, is it such an epoch, so unusual a circumstance, that they issue a bulletin to announce that a first-rate Indian agent has been appointed! What sort of men is it their custom to put over these helpless wards of the nation? What a land is this! I shall next read of the jailer who is humane and competent, of the manager of the orphan asylum who does not beat and starve the orphans, and of a gentleman who does not lie and cheat."

If he is a philosophical foreigner he will read that the grossly incompetent agent removed was Senator Pettigrew's man, and he will then come upon the astounding fact that in this country these places are parcelled out, after months of broils and fights, among senators and congressmen who use them largely as private perquisites. Upon further investigation he will find that the principle of appointment has not been changed, but the new Indian agent was chosen by favoritism, as Pettigrew's man was, only the former turns out to be a good man.

Secretary Carlisle has made another of those changes which have so often disarmed the would-be defenders of this administration. A. O. Latham, chief of the diplomatic and consular division of fifth auditor's office, whose resignation has been called for, is a veteran treasury officer, with an excellent record for character, skill, and ability. There are no visible reasons for his removal except the fact that he has attended too honestly to his duties to take the sort of interest in politics which is a passport to the secretary's favor. He will have to step out and make room for a raw recruit who has proved his democracy by his works. The management of the diplomatic and consular division requires expert knowledge in order to protect the government thoroughly well and to save time and friction for all concerned. To take out a man who has the work of the office at his fingers' ends, whose acquaintance with the precedents is so full as to save searching in nine cases out of ten, and to put in his place one who will require twenty years' practice to reach the same point of excellence, can have only one effect: it must cripple the service and add to the labors of everybody in the office or having business with it.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, November 21.

As is well understood, the President allows the members of his cabinet entire freedom to act as spoilsmen or not. Each man is free to run his department according to his individual taste, and most of them prefer to act in opposition to the democratic platform and to the President's repeated utterances. Yet he seems annoyed to have their acts brought to his notice, and he has turned a deaf ear to all requests to him to interfere. He has always vigorously disapproved of nepotism. It has been suggested that there were family reasons why the secretary of the treasury needed his son. Whatever the reason, the president gave way and Logan Carlisle was appointed. Month after month this youth has visited an unmerciful proscription upon old and faithful employes, and his father has acquiesced and the President has acquiesced. Has not the time come for a public protest from the various civil service reform associations against these acts, and especially against the pernicious principle adopted by the President of non-interference? Doubtless the committee, of which Mr. Foulke is chairman, will look into the civil service of the treasury, and it may be well to wait for their report.

THE Civil Service Reform Association of Pennsylvania has issued a bulletin under date of October, 1893, which contains a feature that could be copied by other associations with great profit. It prints clippings from the daily press regarding appointments and removals in the various offices. Elsewhere will be found some interesting illustrations regarding the Philadelphia post-office and the class of men whom Postmaster Carr has chosen to fill the places of the republican incumbents, out of "duty to the government, and to the patrons of this office, having regard to the duty I owe myself as an official not only under oath but also under heavy security." Mr. Carr should free his mind of cant and imitate the brutal frankness of Harrity's internal revenue collector, who decapitated his subordinates with the explanation that to the victor belong the spoils.

To the Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

In your resume of the results of the election you omitted all notice of the fact that the republican ticket in this state was elected on a direct civil service reform issue; on a platform which distinctly pledges the party to reform existing abuses in the civil service, and, best of all, that the comptroller-elect has not only pledged himself, but is going to keep his pledge, to refuse warrants for the payment of salaries to persons whom we show have been illegally appointed. I think that there never has been a state election in which civil service reform was made so direct and positive an issue, nor which has been more productive of results. Mr. McAneny's communication to the last issue of Good Government, if anything, understates the case, but it was written in ignorance of the fact that Comptroller-elect Roberts had personally renewed to me his anti-election pledges, and by his earnest and diligent inquiry into the detail of the matters involved in our civil service reform crusade, has given the very best evidence of his sincerity.

Very truly, etc., FRANK W. LOOMIS.

Buffalo, New York, November 29.

The canvass of the election returns since the above letter was written shows that James A. Roberts led all other candidates, and bears out Mr. Loomis's statement of the weight of the reform question in the campaign. The reform structure in New York had been nearly racked to pieces by Hill, Flower and Tammany. And to the Buffalo Association, which is now the most efficient in the country, must be given the credit of leading in the movement to right it up. This association spends time and money and knows no party or individual. To its incentive, more than to anything else, will be due the coming final overthrow of Plattism, Hillism, and Tammanyism in that state.

ONE of the most powerful causes of the republican defeat in 1888 was Plattism. In the recent election in New York Hillism, which is the same thing, brought defeat to the democrats by 100,000 against Maynard. It would be the height of absurdity to say that this defeat indicated that the people wanted Plattism back. Yet in the republican primaries in New York December 12, the old crowd headed by Platt's man, Jake Patterson, were overwhelmingly victorious. This again shows what the CHRONICLE has always maintained, that the primary is impracticable as a place for ridding the public of a corrupt and incorrigible party machine. Not a tenth of the members of a party go to the primary, and if they did the life-politicians would "down" them. The only practicable means in sight of dealing with Plattism and Hillism is for voters to refuse utterly to be bound by the action of any party caucus or convention.

FIVE or six years ago Croker, the chief boss of Tammany, declared under oath that he was a poor man. Later he became the head of Tammany Hall. He has recently invested a half million in a stock farm and has bought and maintains a stable of race horses, and has now purchased an eighty thousand dollar house on Fifth avenue, and he lives as a very rich man. Five years ago Mayor Gilroy, another Tammany leader, was only a deputy county clerk and was poor. He has never had any occupation but politics. He is now a very rich man. The same condition of wealth, perhaps in a less extent, is true of other Tammany leaders who were poor men, and who, while becoming rich, have engaged in no business except politics in connection with Tammany Hall. The money they have can come from no other source than from receipts which come into their hands as Tammany bosses. This shows what an amount of money can be made out of political pulls when the spoils system reaches its full perfection as it has in Tammany Hall. No books are kept by this organization. But no man can be appointed to an office until he has made a contribution to Tammany. No man, from judge to constable, can be a candidate unless he buys the privilege by a contribution. The periodical assessments upon the wages of public employes are as relentless and irresistible as public taxation is. Contractors are obliged to pay for their contracts and for the privilege of carrying them out unmolested and for having their bills allowed after their work is done. The great corporations and business interests of New York city pay blackmail to be let alone in the exercise of their ordinary rights. They also pay blackmail to prevent blackmailing legislation. The business interests of New York city do not dare to make an open contribution to any object unfriendly to Tammany. No business man in New York dares publicly to say anything against Tammany. Small tradesmen are forced to join Tammany and contribute to its funds to save their business from being destroyed. Saloons and houses of ill-fame are constant objects of enormous blackmail. As a high authority says, this condition of things is such that there is nothing in Russia that approaches it, nor in Turkey that can surpass it.

THE late assistant secretary of state expressed the opinion that however excellent the management of their consular service by foreign countries might be, it was not feasible for us. Just why was not then plain and it is still less so upon reading the London letter to the New York Evening Post, under date of November 24, regarding the English consular system, and printed elsewhere. There is a record of promotions and longer service whilst our latest barbarity was the removal of Mr. Studer, our consul at Singapore. He writes to a friend:

"Health permitting, I may see you next spring in New York (the doctors don't want me to leave here for the north in autumn). I am not at all ashamed to tell you that, after twenty-two years of service as consul (undermined health from climatic causes and hard work), I not long ago was notified by the department of state that the President had appointed my successor to be consul general at this port. I expect him to arrive shortly."

In the face of this apparently wanton brutality it is encouraging to note the plain speaking of Mr. Quincy's fellow-citizens, the Boston Merchants' Association, a non-partisan organization. They also appear to think that there is no difficulty in organizing the consular service purely on the merit system. It is safe to say that Mr. Cleveland's successor will have learned wisdom by his experience, and that the consular service will not again be used as spoil to reward editors, and the secretaries and presidents and chairmen of political committees nor other importunate and blatant party hacks.

ONE OF the hopeful signs is the increasing tendency among civil service reformers to have the same standard of judgment for the acts of a republican President and of a democratic President in his management of the civil service. It marked an epoch in reform when a republican like Henry C. Lea addressed a letter of bitter and humiliating truth to a republican President, and the following resolution marks an even greater gain for reform because it is the utterance of those whose personal devotion to President Cleveland has been such that to disassociate his acts and to judge them absolutely without bias required a high grade of citizenship.

The following resolution, bearing the signatures of Charles Eliot Norton, president, and Philip S. Abbot, secretary, has been adopted by the executive committee of the Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association:

"Resolved, That the executive committee of the Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association deeply regret President Cleveland has thus far in his second administration failed to carry out the pledges of the democratic party and his own utterances in regard to the reform of the civil service, and they further regret that under his administration a large proportion of the appointments to office has been made for partisan services. They regret this the more deeply because they believe that President Cleveland had an unparalleled opportunity to promote the principles of reform in the civil service, and that his dereliction in respect to appointments has rendered further steps of reform more arduous."

LOST OPPORTUNITIES.

Harper's Weekly of December 9th has a just and conclusive editorial upon Mr. Bissell as postmaster-general. He has incurred the hatred of the spoilsmen. They are angry at him as "not a good democrat." He has brought this upon himself by refusing to wantonly remove division chiefs, by refusing to promote democrats and reduce republicans, by causing the removal of the Topeka postmaster, by insisting that the civil service law shall be enforced, by requiring charges before he will remove fourth-class postmasters who have not been in office four years, and by other acts in the same line. Nevertheless, all these things together do not make the beginning of a great career. Yet, as the Weekly says, Mr. Bissell has encountered nearly all of the enmity and opposition that he would have met had he set out to accomplish a fundamental reform. This would have been to secure the transfer of the chiefs of divisions in Washington and throughout the country to the classified service, and to establish rules for promotion under the civil service commission, to apply the Boston labor service system to his department. But the one great work before him was the overthrow of the abuse of the fourth-class post-offices. He has not done that; instead he has retrograded. He has made a rule that a four-year tenure shall of itself be a cause for removal. Granted that congressmen are to continue to put in their favorites, reform could not be set back more than by such a rule. He has allowed congressmen to come with charges which are kept secret, but upon which these postmasters have been removed wholesale, so that his rule is in great measure a shadow, and the removals have been full of outrageous injustice. Witness the Irvington post-office, in this county. Congressmen never put in their watch-dogs more freely than they do now. Yet they are angry because they have to get up charges, knowing that it is a mere form, and therefore holding it in contempt. On the other hand, Mr. Bissell has not gained the people, for the country views the practice with grave disapproval. This is neither statesmanship nor practical politics. Mr. Bissell has missed his opportunity. It lay in grasping and acting upon the fact that the right system for the appointment of fourth-class postmasters, when it is adopted, will cast out every personal or party consideration, and will absolutely remove the influence of congressmen from these appointments. This last is the sine qua non to any reform.

The same is true of President Cleveland in his larger field. He came into office this time absolutely free to follow any course he might choose. The country was ready for the fullest measure of reform in his dealing with the civil service. His own utterances for years, his party platform, and the party campaign text-book, were a complete barrier against the onslaught of the spoilsmen. He, too, lost his opportunity. This seems the more unbearable, for it came back to him after he had lost it once before. It will never come again. He chose to make of first importance matters of minor importance. The silver crisis could have had no other result than it did have. Property and labor were aroused, and Voorhees did not need to be "placated." It was of no greater moment than the greenback crisis in the seventies, nor than any other of the economic questions which have, from time to time in the history of our government, become acute. In dealing with them, no President does more than his routine duty, and no acts of any President in connection with them have made him great. The tariff revision, if carried through, can not claim to rank above the revision of 1846; yet President Polk has and deserves no high place in the country's history.

These unfortunate mistakes of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Bissell can only come from shortsightedness. They must believe that the pressure upon them for places is the pressure of the nation. In reality, it is solely and only the pressure of a would-be oligarchy made up of congressmen and their followers scattered throughout the country, noisy and persistent, but in reality comprising but a small fraction of the people. The people do not want this degrading seizure of the public offices to continue. They would have gathered around President Cleveland in any struggle, however radical, he chose to make to overthrow the practice.

THE TENTH REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Everyone should send for the tenth annual report of the civil service commission, which contains information to be found nowhere else, and in a gratifying manner makes clear the triumphant progress of civil service reform. The civil service law now embraces about 44,000 places, and that it is to be enforced is rapidly coming to be an accepted fact. The cost to the government of carrying out the act is about a dollar a place, or $42,000. In addition to those in these places there are about 150,000 more persons in the civil service, 69,000 of these being postmasters and 25,000 being laborers. The balance is largely composed of places which can be transferred to the classified service by presidential order, and this is only a matter of time. A like presidential order can classify the 25,000 laborers. This leaves the 69,000 postmasters to be taken away from the spoilsmen by the Lodge bill and by a system of promotion and permanence of tenure which shall cause postmasters in the larger offices to disappear as local political manipulators as the higher officers in the railway mail have so disappeared.

The report treats at length of the classification of the free delivery offices, and gives lively examples of the notions of public business which have prevailed in this country. At one office where the postmaster made a clean sweep before the order went into effect each new letter carrier paid thirty-five dollars down and five dollars a day to his predecessor to teach him how to do his work. The warfare against postmasters who tricked the law goes on steadily but not satisfactorily for lack of sufficient power in the commission for a complete investigation.

The commission attacks the absurdity of the number of excepted places which both in Washington and throughout the country are used to quarter upon the treasury in superior positions mere politicians ignorant of the duties. Here, again, the same queer notions of business crop out. In dismissing the incumbent of one of the excepted places, the postmaster said to him in writing:

Your conduct as chief register clerk while under my charge as postmaster, calls from me an expression that is well merited. The place you occupied being an excepted place, and one that I am necessarily compelled to fill with one of my own party, makes it necessary for us to part; no cause of complaint in regard to your official acts, as I have found you an efficient officer, besides your gentlemanly treatment of myself, prompts me to write you this letter, and I recommend you as an honorable and capable man, and any one would do well to have such men as yourself in their employ.

In another office and on like occasion the postmaster said:

I assure you that it is with feelings akin to pain that circumstances over which I have no control make it necessary that I should fill the offices under my control with gentlemen of my own party affiliations. Your gentlemanly and courteous treatment, and your business qualifications are such that I feel warranted in recommending you to any position to which you aspire. Since you have been associated with me you have proved by your works that nothing I could say in your behalf would be amiss. In parting with you I part with a man who is not only capable, but honest, and in every sense a gentleman; and I can truthfully say that our party differences is the only reason of our severing the pleasant business relations that have existed between us.

The commission has made an extremely valuable investigation of the civil service of different nations and publishes the results in full. In brief, the systems vary from Morocco where the theory and practice is that public officers should, by bribery and in every other way, make as much money as possible out of the offices, to the democratic government of Switzerland where appointment and tenure are for merit and open to all without favoritism. The difference is the difference between barbarism and the highest civilization. In our civil service law, with its democratic competition open to all, without life tenure, but with the same tenure that prevails in all great business institutions, we have the inauguration of the system which goes with high civilization. In our treatment of the fourth class post-offices and of the excepted places and of the 150,000 places in the unclassified service generally, we are on a par with Russia, Turkey and Morocco.

THE VAN ALLEN CASE.

[From the Indianapolis News, December 7.]

In response to a request for his own views and those of the civil service reformers in regard to the refusal of J. J. Van Alen to accept the Italian ambassadorship, Lucius B. Swift said to-day:

"The facts in the Van Alen case are not in any manner changed. It will always be true that his sole distinction was in being a society man, moving in a limited circle, and that ordinarily the President would never have heard of him, to say nothing of making him an American ambassador. Van Alen's denial does not make it any the less true that he received the office solely because Whitney got it for him for having made a large contribution to the Democratic campaign fund. It is one of the healthiest signs that public opinion made a stand against this gross misuse of a public trust. We have many very rich men who with their families would like to shine socially in foreign capitals, and if contributions of $30,000 or $40,000 to campaign funds would secure ambassadorships, plenty of them would pay the money, and we have plenty of Whitneys who would see that the offices were handed over in return. The danger of this practice does not seem to have been overestimated either by the 'decent' or the 'malignant' critics of the Van Alen appointment. It is not probable that Van Alen was moved to refuse by American criticism. He would care very little for that, but he had reason to fear for his social standing in England, where public offices are not used to pay private individuals for anything. He doubtless also keenly realized that at the Italian court and in the streets of Rome he would feel that he was always being pointed out as the man who bought his place with a money contribution to a party committee."

[From the Indianapolis Sentinel, December 9.]

We regret to observe that Mr. Lucius B. Swift is still "chewing the rag" in the Van Alen matter. We have a great deal of respect for Mr. Swift because we believe him to be one of the few civil service reformers who are thoroughly in earnest and quite disinterested. Although he carries the logic of his hobby to an extent that makes his ideas utterly impracticable, he is usually fair in his statements, but we do not think he is at all fair in the following:

The facts in the Van Alen case are not in any manner changed. It will always be true that his sole distinction was in being a society man, moving in a limited circle, and that ordinarily the president would never have heard of him, to say nothing of making him an American ambassador. Van Alen's denial does not make it any less true that he received the office solely because Whitney got it for him for having made a large contribution to the democratic campaign fund. It is one of the healthiest signs that public opinion made a stand against this gross misuse of a public trust.

There are comparatively few men appointed to office of whom the President would ever have heard if they had not been recommended to him by some one. That is one of the necessities of any administration of government. It is absolutely immaterial whether the President ever heard of him before the appointment was recommended to him or not. Neither is it material that an applicant should have attained any "distinction," nor is it any detriment that he is "a society man," or that he moves in "a limited circle." The only question is whether he is "fit" for the position. That is Mr. Swift's own standard for appointment. That is what is urged by all civil service reformers everywhere as the proper standard. President Cleveland says he investigated the matter and was thoroughly satisfied of his fitness, and until some evidence can be shown to the contrary the opinion must stand. The President is the head civil service examiner, and he has passed this man with the highest mark that could be given. The only further evidence before the public, of which we have knowledge, is Van Alen's letter, and that certainly confirms the opinion of the President.

We do not understand on what grounds Mr. Swift asserts positively, in the face of the denial of Van Alen and of the President, that it is "true that he received the office solely because Whitney got it for him for having made a large contribution to the democratic campaign fund." This is not only a gratuitous assumption, but it is an assumption in the face of evidence. What does Mr. Swift know about the relations of Whitney and Van Alen? How does he know that this contribution is the only link that binds them? How does he know that Mr. Whitney did not know the "fitness" which the President ascertained, and which the public now generally concede? And even if that were Whitney's only motive, what right has Mr. Swift to say that it was the President's motive? If Mr. Swift has any evidence to submit on these points we should be pleased to have him produce it.

[From the Indianapolis Sentinel, December 15.]

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel:

In the Sentinel of December 9 you ask what evidence I have, as against the President's judgment that Van Alen was fitted for the Italian ambassadorship and after Van Alen's denial that he received the place because he made a large contribution to the democratic campaign fund, that he did receive the place for that reason.

Mr. Van Alen was a man whose sole distinction was along society lines—dinners at Newport in the summer and a hunting stud in England during the hunting season. He had been entirely unknown in the political history of the country. Last year, as Mr. Whitney says, "when friends were few and calls were great," Van Alen paid something over $30,000 into the democratic campaign fund. Then he expressed a wish for and was appointed to the place of ambassador to Italy.

Mr. John Wanamaker was a Philadelphia shopkeeper, and was distinguished in no other manner, except in the field of religion. In 1888, by solicitation, he raised some $400,000 for the republican campaign fund. Then he applied for and was appointed to the place of postmaster-general.

Turning to the index of the National Democratic Campaign Text-Book of 1892, under the title of "Wanamaker, Postmaster-General," we find "Purchase of a Cabinet Seat, 189." Turning to the page referred to, the text-book says: "Perhaps the most disgraceful act committed by President Harrison was the appointment of Mr. Wanamaker as postmaster-general. Wanamaker was a man who had been entirely unknown in the political history of the country. * * * When the election had elevated Mr. Wanamaker's candidate to the presidency, Mr. Wanamaker by virtue of his services became an applicant for a cabinet position. Mr. Harrison generously responded, and Mr. Wanamaker was made postmaster-general." Notwithstanding the fact that President Harrison and Mr. Wanamaker always said that the latter was appointed solely for fitness, I have never thought that the text-book over-stated the case, and I do not hesitate to say, with the text-book, that Mr. Wanamaker received his place solely by virtue of his services. If he had not raised the fund he would not have been thought of for the appointment and would not have received it.

The Wanamaker case, as annotated by the text-book, throws a bright light on the Van Alen case. It is difficult to find any difference, except that another ox is now being gored. If

Mr. Van Alen had not made the heavy contribution, he would not have been thought of for the place, and he would not have been "backed" by Whitney's coercive statement to the President, "This, you know, is the first time you have been approached by me on the subject of appointments," and the President would not have felt compelled to appoint him. Letter writing by Mr. Van Alen and the President can not change the facts. The victory gained by public opinion will make future appointing officers and political managers reluctant to repeat this dangerous example.

LUCIUS B. SWIFT.

Indianapolis, December 12, 1893.

(The Sentinel of the same date comments editorially upon the above letter. After stating that no evidence is produced as requested and after re-stating its argument as to Van Alen's fitness it concludes as follows:)

"Mr. Swift's citation of Wanamaker is unfortunate for his theory. No comparison could more clearly show the high character of Mr. Van Alen. Wanamaker was known everywhere as a man who did everything on the business principle of getting what he paid for. He not only contributed largely, but acted as a soliciting agent for the worst gang of corruptionists the country ever knew—the Pennsylvania crowd that Mr. Swift aided in fighting. When the office was obtained for him he took it in the face of a clamor greater than that raised in the Van Alen case. He had paid and he wanted his goods. Very different was Mr. Van Alen. When the clamor was raised in his case, he waited until the confirmation by the senate had shown that there was no objection to him as a man. Then he said, in effect: 'I have bought no office, and I will not accept one under circumstances that are claimed to indicate that I did. I do not wish even the tarnish of suspicion on my good name.' Mr. Cleveland urged him to accept, but he preferred this conclusive evidence that he was not an office-purchaser—that he was not a Wanamaker. Surely Mr. Van Alen is entitled to his good name. That is all he asks."

Removals and appointments made out of "duty to the government, and to the patrons of this office, having regard to the duty I owe myself as an official not only under oath, but also under heavy security."—Postmaster Carr.

Postmaster Carr yesterday discharged fourteen republicans from the post-office and appointed democrats to succeed them. All of the republicans discharged were outside the civil service rules and regulations.

* * *

Postmaster Carr yesterday made half a dozen appointments of postal station superintendents and clerks. All the appointees had been backed by democratic organizations of their respective wards.

At Station B, Thirty-eighth street, below Market, Hart Sterr, republican, is succeeded as superintendent by William H. Schembs, secretary of the Twenty-fourth ward democratic executive committee.

George Malone, president of the Keystone Democratic Club, of the twenty-ninth ward, and brother of the vice-president of the National Association of Letter-carriers, becomes superintendent of Columbia Station, Twentieth street and Columbia avenue, in place of Frank P. Goodwin, republican. The salary is $1,200. Mr. Malone resides in the same division with National Chairman Harrity.

John Osborne, who has had a news stand in Germantown and has been prominently active in politics there, is made clerk in charge of the Upsal station, succeeding Charles A. Unruh, resigned.

F. Antoine Stieber is a candidate for superintendent of the Bridesburg station. The salary is $800. Mr. Stieber is supported by Democratic City Committeeman Charles J. Young and the ward committeemen.

Postmaster Carr yesterday notified Charles B. Hall, superintendent of the registry division of the post-office, that Lehman P. Ashmead had been appointed to become his successor on the 16th inst. Mr. Hall is a co-laborer with Magistrate Durham and Select Councilman Houseman in Seventh ward republican politics, and was appointed registry superintendent by Postmaster Field.

The numerous candidates for his $2,100 a year place, in addition to Mr. Ashmead, included Benjamin F. Gilbert, of the twenty-second ward, ex-superintendent of the stamp division, who was backed by ex-City Treasurer W. Redwood Wright and the ward organization; Walter Warner, of the Sixteenth ward, formerly cashier of the money order department; John D. Ruoff, of the twentieth ward, ex-Assistant Custodian of the Post-office Building, and City Committeeman Richard C. Gorman, of the thirty-seventh ward, and ex-clerk of the registry department. All of these candidates were supported by the democratic organizations of their respective neighborhoods.

Mr. Ashmead's appointment was recommended by many prominent democrats, among whom were Governor Pattison, William F. Harrity, Justice Samuel Gustine Thompson, Henry Flanders, Judge Arnold, John R. Read, ex-Mayor King, David W. Sellers, ex-Sheriff Wright, Health Officer Veale, ex-Sheriff Krumbhaar, City Chairman Wilhere, John M. Campbell, Joseph I. Doran and John Huggard. Among other citizens by whom Mr. Ashmead's competency for the position was attested were: George W. Childs, L. Clarke Davis, Charles E. Warburton, J. J. Sullivan, John M. Gest, A. Warren Kelsey and James F. Sullivan.—Philadelphia Record, September 9.

DEPUTY PRESIDENT VORHEES.

Secretary Hoke Smith scored a point on Senator Voorhees a few days ago. The relations that have existed between the administration's representative in the Senate and the secretary of the interior have been strained for some time past. Senator Voorhees has had a rod in pickle for Secretary Smith for several months. He went out of his way to apply it mildly on the pension question in his repeal speech. The trouble between the two statesmen originated several months ago over the subject of office. Secretary Smith made his point on the senator a few days ago by refusing to appoint the latter's son, Charles P. Voorhees, of Washington State, as one of the commissioners to treat with the Puget Sound Indians. There was a strong demand from the Washington democrats for Mr. Voorhees's appointment. There are three members of the commission, and such commissions are generally constituted of two members of one political party and one from the other.

Congressman John L. Wilson, of Washington, went to Secretary Smith and asked him to waive the usual courtesy to the minority party and give the place reserved for a republican to Mr. Voorhees. Congressman Wilson is a republican and a former Hoosier, and made this plea for Senator Voorhees's son in return for a favor which the senator showed him several years ago, by securing his appointment from President Arthur as receiver of the land office in Washington Territory. Congressman Wilson claims that the appointment which Senator Voorhees secured for him gave him his first start in the west, from which he has risen to his present position in politics. Naturally he desired to contribute to the success of the senator's son. But Secretary Smith declined to appoint Senator Voorhees's son, but gave the position to a republican instead.—Washington Dispatch Indianapolis News, November 9.

There is no admiration between Senator Voorhees and Secretary Smith. They disagreed over patronage shortly after the inauguration, and the Senator has asked no favor of Secretary Smith since When the secretary refused to appoint the senator's son as a member of the Puyllup Indian commission in the state of Washington a few days ago, he touched the senator again on a tender spot. Senator Voorhees did not ask the appointment, but he feels that the blow was aimed at him personally.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, November 10.

* * *

This morning word was brought to Senator Voorhees that Secretary Smith had declined to recognize any further indorsements of the senator in making appointments, and that the senator's appointees would be discharged. It was reported that two had been displaced already. "I wish he would discharge some of the men whose appointments I secured," was the senator's comment this morning. Senator Voorhees is not disturbed over the rumor. Secretary Smith is in Georgia.—Washington Dispatch Indianapolis News, November 13.

* * *

It may be of interest to Indiana democrats to know that there is already a movement on foot to instruct the next Indiana delegation to the democratic national convention for Senator Daniel W. Voorhees for president. Some of the senator's friends here believe that the time has come when his name should be brought to the front for the presidency. Never, they say, was the organization in Indiana in better shape for securing instructions to the national convention than at the present time. The senator will have his enemies in his own party, as usual. But it is believed that the distribution of federal patronage in that state has been carried on so successfully that the Voorhees machine is invincible. The News's correspondent has the very highest authority for stating that already some of the plans have been laid for securing a Voorhees delegation to the next national convention.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 13.

* * *

Senator Voorhees, who reached Washington yesterday afternoon, came up to his office in the Maltby building this morning and resumed work. Several Indiana office-seekers were waiting for him. The Senator is in excellent health.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 1.

* * *

Senator Voorhees has asked Chief Clerk Logan Carlisle, of the Treasury Department, to reappoint Charles E. Brown, a colored democrat, of Richmond, Ind., to his old place as clerk in the third auditor's office. Brown was in the employ of the late ex-Senator McDonald for thirteen years, and was appointed to office on Mr. McDonald's recommendation under President Cleveland's last administration. Senator Voorhees has designated three Indiana colored republicans, Thomas Evans, Harry Williams and William Thompson, now holding office under the third auditor, and asks that one of them be removed to make way for Senator McDonald's protege. The claim is made that Mayor Denny, of Indianapolis, made a special trip to Washington, as soon as President Harrison was inaugurated, to have Brown removed.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 8.

The disappointed 375 applicants for positions under Joshua Jump, the new internal revenue collector, are mad enough to-day to be talking about holding an indignation meeting. Their complaint is that the twenty-five men appointed are not entitled to the places. The chief deputy, Lindeman, has been a democrat but four years, and Scott, the second deputy, not much longer. One of the new gaugers has been keeping a saloon and club-house. The selections are all of Lamb's make. The Scott appointment has caused quite a sensation by reason of the discovery that he was dismissed as a gauger when General Manson was collector four years ago last August, and his dismissal was on the recommendation of special agent Somerville. The charge is understood to have been that in gauging spirits he gave the distillers the benefit of all doubts. As second deputy he will have supervision of the gaugers and their deputies. It will be recalled that soon after Mr. Cleveland took office in March the Indianapolis Sentinel printed a series of Washington specials in which it was alleged in positive terms that the appointment of Jump was in the interest of a conspiracy of distillers. Fairbanks, the great distiller and brewer, who is Jump's relative and John Lamb's "side partner," has been holding various conferences with the gang since the facts about Scott came to the surface. The Sentinel specials are also printed in the Gazette, the democratic organ here. Moreover, the editor of the Gazette wrote a personal letter to Mr. Cleveland making the point against Jump's appointment that it would be in the interest of Fairbanks, who, according to the talk heard on every hand now, "owns the town."

So strong was the pressure for places that Postmaster Donham was called upon to again perform his familiar part as a wielder of Lamb's ax. Superintendent of Carriers Adams was much surprised to find in the daily paper the announcement that he had been removed and Mike Brophy, former secretary of the democratic committee, appointed in his place. Adams had served in his position for ten years continuously, and on Donham's assurance that he could remain through his term he declined a business offer. At that time the Gazette praised Donham for adhering to "genuine civil-service reform" by the retention of Adams and two others, one of whom has since been removed and the other is retained for personal reasons.

The Journal correspondent met Mr. Fairbanks this morning and asked him if he had known of the cause for Scott's dismissal from the service when a gauger. He pretended to take the question as applying to the dismissal in the first instance, when Scott was a gauger under Collector Minshall, and when he was a republican. Fairbanks said Scott had then helped a democratic candidate for the council and was dismissed for that.

"Well you believe in that doctrine; ought not he to have been dismissed?"

"Certainly."

"You are a spoils man, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"And you also believe in the 'machine?'"

"Certainly."

Fairbanks declined to discuss the dismissal of Scott under Collector Manson, democrat.—Terre Haute dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, November 26.

* * *

Mr. John E. Lamb is saying that the statement printed in the Journal to the effect that Scott, whom he (Lamb) had appointed second deputy of the internal revenue office, had been dismissed for cause as a gauger under Collector Manson (Dem.), is a lie. Collector Jump has been trying to learn where the Journal correspondent obtained his information, but so far as known he has not made any effort to learn if the statement is true. Lamb and Jump can easily ascertain the truth of this statement also: That Scott has been dismissed three times from the service. He was dismissed under Collector White for gauging spirits to the benefit of the distillery, but was restored later. Collector Minshall dismissed him. Mr. Minshall is in Terre Haute. Either Lamb or Jump can learn the facts from him. The third time was the instance when he was a gauger under Collector Manson, and when his dismissal was ordered by telegraph from the department at Washington.—Terre Haute dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 7.

* * *

Senator Voorhees and members of the Indiana delegation expect to call on the President tomorrow in the interest of Col. Zollinger for pension agent.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 11.

DEPUTY PRESIDENT HOLMAN.

The President on Saturday ended a bitter and earnest fight by the appointment of Robert J. Gardiner as postmaster at Aurora, Ind. The office pays $1,700 a year, and has been the bone of contention of four of the leading citizens of that town, or rather of three citizens and one woman. Gardiner was backed by Judge Holman, and therefore there was but a slim chance of the other candidates even getting within speaking distance of the office. The fight was all made before the judge.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 23.

* * *

The appointment of John M. Turner as postmaster at Monticello, White county, Ind., ends a contest which has lasted for over five months, in which the post-office department declined to act on the nomination of Congressman Hammond. Mr. Turner was appointed on the 24th of May last, but before his commission was forwarded Congressman Hammond intercepted it, and filed a protest against the appointment. The Indiana congressman did not urge any personal objections to Mr. Turner, who is well recommended, but protested against the nomination of a man whom he had not recommended. Mr. Hammond's strong fight for Mr. Low is explained on the ground of his desire to discharge a political debt of gratitude. In the congressional convention in which Mr. Hammond was nominated Low was a member of the White county delegation, and his vote alone decided the contest in favor of Hammond. Low was the only member of the White county delegation who voted for Mr. Hammond, and he did so against the strong resistance from every other member of the delegation, which was committed to Valentine Zimmerman, of Rochester, who had been the congressional candidate in 1888.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, November 7.

[Turner was Holman's "man."]

There is considerable buzz in Washington over the Shelbyville post-office, and a goodly number of politicians from that little Indiana city are here in the interests of their candidates. The two chief contestants, Alfred Major and William Buxton came in early this morning. Also came Isa M. Wray, who is another applicant. Judge L. C. Hackett and Mr. Briggs brought up the rear, but they are inclined to reticence as to the purpose of their visit. Mr. Major is a book-keeper for Scott Wray, editor of the Shelbyville Democrat, while Buxton is Wray's brother-in-law and ex-chairman of the democratic committee of Shelby county. So interesting has this contest for the post-office honors become that it is now thought best to call a primary election to decide which of the candidates should receive the appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 1.

* * *

It would seem that William S. Holman's official troubles will never end. The Shelbyville post-office worm is just now gnawing at his vitals. The Rays and Wrays are after him. Isom Wray called on Holman to-day and asked for the place for Bruxton, ex-chairman of the county committee. There is another prominent candidate in the person of Majors, who is Editor W. Scott Ray's book-keeper. Isom Wray is Bruxton's brother-in-law. It looks to one upon the ground here as though the Rays and Wrays were locking arms in the contest with some bitterness—Isom striving for Bruxton and Scott laboring for Majors. Judge Holman listened to Isom to-day, and then said he guessed he would just order an election to determine the contest, and so the ballot is to finally settle the dispute. The judge is sweating purple moisture over the fight and feels that he is sure to come out at the little end of the horn, for the man who wins at the election will not feel, of course, that he owes his place to Holman, and the one that loses will certainly lay his loss to the congressman of the district. Judge Holman would like to please Editor Ray in the matter, but he fears to "take sides." W. Scott Ray, it will be remembered, bitterly denounced the idea of renominating Cleveland at Chicago last year.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 1.

The announcement in the Washington dispatches this morning that Representative Holman would order an election for postmaster here was received with approval. The underhand fight between certain rival candidates has been particularly bitter and much bad blood exhibited. The local leaders are about evenly divided in their support. Edward Ames Major, city clerk and book-keeper for W. Scott Ray, was supposed to have a sure call on the position, but the appointment of his cousin, S. S. Major, to the internal revenue service has caused the friends of William J. Buxton, the strongest rival candidate, to make a more vigorous fight for their man. These two have control of nearly all the local politicians. The other candidates, Gen. John W. Vannoy, Joseph R. Kennerly and John H. McGuire would not be in a fight against the leaders, not belonging to any ring, but among the mass of democratic voters would give the ringsters a good fight. Both Ray and Wray will probably be aspirants for congress in this district the next time.—Shelbyville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 2.

* * *

Congressman Holman—from whose renomination Editor O'Brien, of the Lawrenceburg Register, has been appealing to be delivered—appears to be sanguine. He says he never has fought for renomination, and does not intend to at his age. He will rest his case "in the hands of his friends," meanwhile giving them a quiet tip occasionally on how they can handle it to the best advantage.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 9.

DEPUTY PRESIDENT TAYLOR.

Congressman Taylor called on Secretary Carlisle this morning in regard to the steamboat inspectorship of the Evansville district which will be vacant in a few days. The leading candidates are Captain Zinzach, of Evansville, and Will J. Hays, a Louisville poet. The latter is backed by Congressman Caruth.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 7.

* * *

Congressman Taylor called at the White House this morning and had an extended interview with President Cleveland upon the matter of appointing a steamboat inspector for the sixth district, which includes Evansville. It has been reported that Secretary Carlisle was in favor of the appointment of a man named Hayes of Louisville, but the result of Mr. Taylor's interview warrants a belief that a resident of Indiana will get the place. Mr. Taylor and the entire Indiana delegation, without exception, have been working for the appointment of Capt. John Zinzich of Evansville. Capt. Zinzich is at present ship chandler and he has been in the river service for fifty years. Not only is he strongly backed in Indiana, but delegations from Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Illinois are supporting him.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 13.

* * *

Congressman Taylor called at the White House again this morning in the interest of Capt. Zinzich of Evansville, who wants to secure the appointment as supervising inspector of steam vessels. President Cleveland informed the congressman that he desired to give the matter his personal attention, and that notwithstanding the resignation of the present incumbent has been called for a change is not likely to occur for some little time. It is well known that Secretary Carlisle leans a little toward Hayes of Kentucky, who is also an applicant for the place. This fact leads the Kentucky members to believe that their man will succeed to the place that has been so long filled by an Indiana resident. They say Secretary Carlisle will endeavor to settle the matter very soon. This only invigorates the Indiana members to make a harder fight for their man.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 16.

* * *

Congressman Taylor made a call on Secretary Smith yesterday to secure action on several Indiana appointments which have been promised him, but was unable to get an audience. Several of Mr. Taylor's democratic constituents are on the anxious seat. He expects to secure the appointment of a commissioner to Alaska, an assistant surgeon of Freedman's Hospital from the Department of the Interior, and has hopes, also, that an assistant attorney-generalship will be conferred on a citizen of his district.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 7.

In the first district, which is represented by Mr. Taylor, one of the most unobtrusive but useful members in the delegation, a fight is being made by a sprinkling of the local democrats against his renomination. Just what it will amount to remains to be seen. There are usually lively contests in the first district for democratic nominations. One of Mr. Taylor's opponents, his chief opponent, in fact, is Editor Sparks, of the Mt. Vernon Democrat. Mr. Sparks failed to get the appointment as postmaster, and has been hopelessly irreconcilable since.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 9.

* * *

Indiana has knocked another plum from the official tree and this time it fell into the open bonnet of Henry W. Mellen, a young attorney of Boonville. He has been appointed commissioner in and for the district of Alaska, to reside in Juneau City. It is a place of profit. Mr. Mellen is a very deserving young attorney and a democrat of high morals. He came here several months ago and filed his application for the office of secretary to Alaska. President Cleveland deemed it wise to appoint a resident of Alaska to this place, though at the same time he promised that Mr. Mellen should be recognized with something. He was backed not alone by his congressman, Mr. Taylor, but by the entire Indiana delegation, to whom the news of the appointment comes with gratification.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 11.

* * *

Congressman Taylor, of the First Indiana district, has made a record in securing appointments of postmasters that is the envy of all his democratic colleagues. He has secured a greater per cent. of democratic postmasters than any other congressman in the country. There are but two republican postmasters left in his district. One of these is presidential, at Petersburg, where there will be a change very shortly, after which the sole remaining republican postmaster in the First congressional district in Indiana will be at Rome, a small, fourth-class office in Perry county. Next to Congressman Taylor are Messrs. Bretz and Brookshire of Indiana. For a long time Congressman Bretz was accredited with having secured more removals of fourth-class postmasters than any other democratic congressman in the country. But Mr. Taylor has since quietly forged to the front. Mr. Brookshire has only one presidential postmaster remaining in his district, and he expects that there will be a change in that office very soon. The lone republican postmaster in the presidential class in Mr. Brookshire's district holds forth at Sullivan. Mr. Brookshire has only a few fourth-class offices remaining, and only one of these is of much importance, and that is Veedersburg. Congressman McNaghy has seven presidential offices, as follows: Angola, Lagrange, Garrett, Butler, Albion, Kendallville and Ligonier. He has about twenty fourth-class post-offices from which Republicans still hand out the mail.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 13.

* * *

Three presidential postmasters were appointed in Indiana to-day. The incumbents were removed in each case. At Princeton, in Congressman Taylor's district, was the most important change. Ollie W. Kolb, the appointee, is a grocer, and a scion of one of the pioneer democratic families of Gibson county. He succeeds O. M. Lohner, removed for offensive partnership. The office pays $1800 salary.

* * *

Through the influence of Congressman Bynum, United States Marshal William H. Hawkins, of Indianapolis, has been appointed custodian of the public building.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 13.

* * *

Upon the recommendation of Congressman Bynum, William Warmack, colored, of Indianapolis, has been appointed porter on a mail car in the railway mail service.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 8.

THE MERIT SYSTEM IN CONSULAR SERVICE.

The British consular service, in contradistinction to the American consular service, is regarded by its members in the light of a career. Applicants for consular posts, after having received a nomination, must pass an examination, of which the chief subjects are the French language, British mercantile and commercial law, and the particular language spoken in the district where the post applied for is situated. Having obtained an appointment, usually that of vice-consul at a minor port, advancement depends upon the amount of energy and ability displayed by the appointee. As will be seen from the statements of services of the attached list of consuls, important consular posts are not filled capriciously, but are only given to men who have shown exceptional ability during services extending, in the majority of cases, over a considerable length of time. Appreciation of long and meritorious services is occasionally shown by the bestowal of diplomatic appointments on consular officers. Some instances of this are here given:

Henry Francis Cowper, consul at Lisbon.—From 1862 to 1868 held unpaid positions in the consular service at various places in South America. Was appointed paid vice-consul at Trinidad de Cuba in December, 1868, and employed on special service at Omoa, Honduras, from March to July, 1875. Promoted to be consul at Santos in May, 1878. Appointed consul for the provinces of Sao Paulo and Parana, to reside at Santos, March, 1885. Transferred to Lisbon, March, 1890, and appointed for southern Portugal, to reside at Lisbon, July, 1891.

Length of service 31 years.
Consulship 15 years.

William Henry Wrench, senior consul at Constantinople.—Was acting consul at Damascus in 1860; vice consul at Beyrout, 1862; vice-consul for the Dardanelles, 1864; vice-consul at Stamboul, July, 1872. Had varied diplomatic experience in Eastern Europe, and after occupying alternately positions of acting consul-general and acting assistant judge at Constantinople till December, 1877, was, in April, 1879, promoted to the consulship at Constantinople. His consulship has, however, been broken and renewed at various times through appointments to conduct special negotiations with Turkey. Was made C. M. M. in 1885.

Period of service 33 years.
Consulship 14 years.

Charles Louis St. John, consul at New Orleans.—Nominated vice-consul at Christiana, November 21, 1867. Passed an examination February 28, 1868. Was acting consul-general from time to time in Christiana. Appointed vice-consul at Jassy in 1871. Between 1872 and 1877 was acting consul-general for various periods at Bucharest and Belgrade. Was promoted to the consulship at Ragusa in March, 1877. Acted temporarily as consul at Prizrend from September, 1879, to October, 1880. Transferred to Reunion, February, 1883; to Charleston in March, 1890; as consul for North and South Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee, and to New Orleans in January, 1893, as consul for Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

Length of service 25 years.
Consulship 16 years.

James Troup, consul at Yokohama.—After being engaged in the civil service as assistant interpreter in Japan, was between 1869 and 1873, at various times, acting consul at Nee-gata and Hakodaki. Promoted to be vice-consul at Nee-gata in April, 1873, and to be consul at Nagasaki, April, 1877. Transferred to Hiogo and Osaka in April, 1882, and to Yokohama, June, 1888, as consul for the district of Kanagawa.

Period of service.....23 years
Consulship.....16 years

George Jamieson, consul at Shanghai.—Was at first a student interpreter in China in 1864. Afterwards filled various appointments in China, sometimes as acting consul, till November, 1877, when he was promoted to be vice-consul at Pagoda Island and to be consul at Kiukiang in February, 1880. Was called to the bar in June, 1880. Became acting assistant judge at Shanghai, acting judge at Yokohama, and in April, 1891, was appointed assistant judge of supreme court for China and Japan and consul at Shanghai.

Period of service.....29 years
Consulship.....13 years

Denis Donohoe, consul at San Francisco.—Entered the consular service in 1857, and was appointed vice-consul at Puerto Cabello on January 6. On June 4, of same year, passed an examination and was appointed consul at Buffalo, U. S., July 1, 1857. Was transferred to New Orleans, May 14, 1864, and appointed consul for the town and district of New Orleans and for the states of Arkansas and Mississippi, February, 1871. On November 7, 1871, Mr. Donohoe was transferred to Baltimore as consul for Maryland, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri; was appointed consul for states of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and for territories of Washington, Idaho, Utah, and Arizona; went to reside at San Francisco, January 6, 1887.

Length of service.....36 years
Consulship.....36 years

John Michell, consul at St. Petersburg.—Entered the public service as a third-class clerk in the admiralty in 1860. Was appointed unpaid vice-consul at St. Petersburg, November, 1866; was acting consul there at various periods during 1867, 1868, and 1869. He then assisted in the work of verifying the Turko-Persian boundary maps, till August, 1869, when he resumed the post of acting consul at St. Petersburg. In January, 1875, he was promoted to be consul and translator, and in July, 1886, northern, northeastern and central Russia were placed under his charge.

Length of service.....33 years
Consulship.....18 years

Capt. Robert Charles Clipperton, consul at Philadelphia.—Was an officer in the Austrian army, from 1848 up till 1856. He was appointed British vice-consul at Theodosia, Crimea, in May, 1858, after passing an examination. Was acting consul at Kertch in 1861, and promoted to the consulship there in December, 1862. He was transferred to Nantes in 1866, and to Brest in 1871. In June, 1874, he returned to Nantes; his supervision being extended to the ports and places in the departments of Loire Inferieure, La Vendee, and Charente Inferieure. He was transferred to Philadelphia October 1, 1872, as consul for Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

Length of service.....35 years
Consulship.....31 years

Col. James Hayes Saddler, consul at Chicago.—Served as officer in the British army from 1858 till 1882, and was in the meantime appointed unpaid vice-consul at Boulogne in October, 1868. Was acting consul there from September, 1869, till October, 1871, and acting paid vice-consul at Boulogne and Caen from April, 1873, till June, 1874. Was appointed vice-consul at La Rochelle in June, 1874, and promoted to the important post of consul at Chicago June 1, 1886. The state of Missouri was added to his district in March, 1887. He was acting consul-general at Guatemala for a short period in 1889 and 1890.

Length of service.....25 years
Consulship.....7 years

Capt. William Francis Seagrave, R. F. R. G. S., consul at Baltimore.—Served from 1845 till 1865 as officer in the British army. Obtained the post of consul at Reunion by examination, November, 1867. Transferred to Stockholm as consul for the eastern coast of Sweden, February, 1874. Took over the consulship at Nantes, October, 1879, and in January, 1887, was appointed consul at Baltimore, for the states of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky.

Length of service as consul.....26 years.

Ronald Bridgett, consul, Buenos Ayres.—Was acting consul at Buenos Ayres from July, 1873, till November, 1874. Nominated vice-consul at Buenos Ayres, March, 1875. From May, 1875, from time to time, till 1881, was acting-consul at Buenos Ayres. Was promoted to be consul for Texas, to reside at Galveston, in July, 1882, and transferred to Buenos Ayres as consul for the Argentine Republic in May, 1884. Was placed in charge of the archives of the legation, as acting consul-general at Buenos Ayres, from May to June, 1885.

Length of service.....26 years
Consulship.....11 years

Albemarle Percy Inglis, consul, Copenhagen.—Was acting consul at Caen and Leghorn at various periods from October, 1864, till May, 1870. Was appointed unpaid vice-consul at Leghorn in June, 1870. Was frequently acting consul at Leghorn from August, 1870, till May, 1883, when he was promoted to be consul for the provinces of Lucca, Visa, Leghorn and Grossero. Was appointed consul for Denmark, to reside at Copenhagen, April 22, 1887.

Length of service.....29 years
Consulship.....10 years

William Lane Booker, C. M. G., consul-general, New York.—Was employed for five years in the consulate at San Francisco; was acting counsel there from July, 1856, till April, 1857. Appointed consul at San Francisco, May 1, 1857, for state of California. In February, 1871, state of Oregon and Washington territory were added to his district. Was promoted to be consul-general at New York, January 1, 1883. He was made a C. M. G., August 6, 1886.

Length of service as consul.....36 years

Charles George Guy Percival, consul, Marseilles.—Served twelve years in the royal navy, from 1845 to 1857. Was appointed to be vice-consul at Caen, December, 1859. Removed to Port Said in July, 1873, and was promoted to be consul January, 1875. In October, 1879, he was appointed consul at Bordeaux, and in October, 1882, transferred to Marseilles as consul for that port and six neighboring departments.

Length of service.....34 years

DIPLOMATS FORMERLY IN CONSULAR SERVICE.

Colonel Sir Charles Bean Euan-Smith, K. C. B., C. S. I.—After serving in the Indian army was acting consul-general at Zanzibar from June till September, 1875. Was consul at Muscat during part of 1879. Between 1880 and September, 1887, when he was appointed agent and consul-general at Zanzibar, he was engaged in political service under the Indian office. He was made a C. B. in 1889, and K. C. B. in 1890. Was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Morocco, and consul-general in Morocco, March 10, 1891. He recently vacated the latter post.

Sir Spencer St. John, K. C. M. G., British minister at Mexico.—Was secretary in political missions to Borneo and Siam during 1848 and 1850. Was appointed consul-general at Borneo in 1855. Later he served as charge d'affaires and consul-general in Hayti. He was promoted to be minister resident and consul-general in Hayti in 1872. He afterwards acted in the same capacity at Laim, and was subsequently intrusted with special missions to Bolivia and Mexico; was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Mexico, November 28, 1884.

Sir John Walsham, Bart.—Minister at Bucharest. Began his public career as clerk in the foreign office. Appointed acting consul at Mexico in 1859. Was subsequently intrusted with minor diplomatic posts at Madrid, Berlin, and Paris. At various times during 1884 and 1885 he was appointed acting minister plenipotentiary at Paris in the absence of the ambassador, and in November, 1885, was promoted to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Emperor of China and the King of Corea. Was transferred to Bucharest in April, 1892, where he still remains.

Captain Henry Michael Jones, V. C., Minister at Bankok.—After a military service of about eight years, he was given a temporary charge of the consulates at Bosna, Serai, and at Scrutaria. Was appointed consul for the Fiji and Tonga Islands, July, 1863. Promoted to be consul-general at Tabreez, July, 1868. Transferred to Christiana and Phillippopolis in 1875 and 1880 respectively, was promoted to be minister resident and consul-general at Bankok in January, 1889; at which post he still remains.

Major James Hay Wodehouse, Minister at Hawaii.—After brief service in the militia, was appointed consul in the Leeward Islands. He was subsequently transferred to Para, Brazil, and later promoted to be commissioner and consul-general in the Sandwich Islands. After thirty two years of consular service he was rewarded with the post of minister resident at Hawaii in July, 1892.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE,
Indianapolis, Ind.

IN stating last month that the Buffalo Association had initiated the present movement in New York against the Hill machine we understood the first step to have been a resolution offered by a Buffalo delegate in the last meeting of the National League. We have since learned that the New York Association had by a committee already taken steps in the matter. The movement now has gathered headway and promises to set the law of that state firmly upon its feet.

BEFORE the election last fall, it was repeatedly charged that the New York civil service law was being violated by Governor Flower and the state officers, and the Hill machine generally. Flower and his officers denied it and in this they were sustained by a servile civil service commission. One of the commissioners had the effrontery to appear at the last meeting of the National League and there make a speech defending Flower and claiming that the law was honestly enforced. When the attention of Flower and of the state comptroller, Campbell, was called to distinct violations, and they were warned not to continue paying salaries, they ignored the whole matter. The election gave the state an honest comptroller who declared that he would pay no salaries of employes in the classified service who had not obtained their places through competition under the law. Comptroller Roberts held the key to the situation, and his determination completely baffled the Hill machine and brought the facts to light. A report by the chief examiner dated January 11, shows that as early as February 27, 1893, 271 persons had been given places in the state service in deliberate violation of the law. In some of the institutions the civil service commission had held no examinations for applicants since 1884. This is Hillism. This is the Hill-Tammany notion of enforcing the law. Since he found an immovable comptroller in his way, Flower has been loudest in his declarations that the law must be enforced; yet just before the comptroller went into office in order to save some favorites, he transferred some fifteen of the places concerned from the classified to the unclassified service. This goes to show that he is the same rascally tool that he always was.

It is announced that Congressman Bynum will "take up" the Indianapolis post-office as soon as he gets through with the tariff bill. The country should understand that our post-office is in excellent condition, the employes are faithful, politics are excluded, the civil service law is honestly enforced and that any change which Congressman Bynum can bring about will be a damage to the public service. This undeniable fact should not be lost sight of. Bynum has no interest in this matter except a personal benefit to himself in the way of getting henchmen to work for his renomination and re-election while being paid out of the public funds. He hesitated about trying for renomination for fear he could not be re-elected but he seems to have decided that he can be. He has never been anything but a buccaneer in politics. His views of public administration are wholly bad and his acts carry out his views. He belongs to a class of officials who have been a curse to Indiana and she will never take her rightful place until she can shake them off and be represented by men who have political morality.

THE dispatch of the Indianapolis Sentinel's special Washington correspondent dated January 23 says:

To-morrow Senator Voorhees and Representative McNagney will call on Secretary Hoke Smith to recommend the appointment of Spencer, of Ft. Wayne, for pension agent. * * * It is safe to predict that Secretary Smith will not object to Spencer on account of brief army record and his appointment seems almost certain. There are other candidates, it is true, who have the earnest support of their members, but it is well understood that Senator Voorhees controls all the state appointments. He has controlled all the other appointments, such as bank examiner, marshal, district attorney, and revenue collector, and he is not going to be turned down on the last office to be filled in the state.

However much the regret, it can not be denied that this dispatch states the truth. In granting this control of appointments the President has knowingly put into places of profit and honor and influence the worst in the politics of Indiana, a state which has not had a high standard of political morals. It would seem well for this matter to be discussed by reformers and reform papers. Let us find out where we stand. This is either a corrupt use of public office and a flagrant breach of a public trust, or it is not.

MR. BURKE, the member of the Voorhees ring whom Voorhees made attorney of the district of Indiana, has been brought to notice again by inexcusable and fatal blundering in drawing the most important counts of indictments against men charged with wrecking the Indianapolis National Bank. It is worthy of note also that the government has called in John W. Kern, who was the only other candidate for Burke's office, to assist the latter in the first important cases which have come before the court since Burke's appointment. It is worthy of note also that Mr. Kern was appointed attorney for the receiver of the bank who in turn is said to have been appointed by Mr. Bynum. Thus do all things work together for harmony, especially public offices and perquisites.

IN the rejection of Hornblower, nominated for the supreme court, the President has another lesson of the small account in which he is really held by the average spoils congressman and of the stand-and-deliver spirit which the average congressman has towards the executive department. The CHRONICLE has often noted the terror and abject submission to which congress has reduced executive officers in Washington, and the Hornblower incident is but another evidence of its contempt. We have heard much of how the President may manage congress by "judicious" use of the offices. Yet here again it is shown that for the least exercise of his constitutional right against their taste they turn upon him like pirates who see their prey slipping away. The President is not entitled to any particular sympathy in this matter. The technical ground of the rejection was that he had not counselled about the nomination with Hill and Murphy, the senators from New York. Not to consult was right; but where is the room for sympathy with a President who does counsel about Indiana nominations with Voorhees, a man no whit better than Hill and Murphy, and who lets other senators dictate nominations. There has never been a more brazen looting of offices by congressmen than President Cleveland has allowed for nearly a year. It has never before been so openly taken for granted that congressmen "appoint" to the offices. What could Mr. Cleveland have meant when he said before inauguration, "If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point"? There has been a constant revel in partisan spoil with the President's permission and assistance. Every man who knows anything of the subject knows that there can never be reform while the President permits congressmen to seize the offices. We had hoped that President Cleveland, profiting by the failure of his first administration, would declare and maintain the independence of the executive. Refusing to do so, he is doomed to a second failure. He seems to have shortened his sight and can see only certain legislation, important, to be sure, but not more important than has occurred, and always will occur, in the routine affairs of government. Meantime the venality and piracy which sap the moral foundations of the government of our cities, of our states and of the nation flourish with but slight hindrance from him. With his second presidency the completion of national reform was possible and hoped for. But it is not to be, and reformers will have to gird themselves for a long future struggle. Again, and perhaps many times, they must resort to the ballot. It is, after all, not yet settled under what party the final victory will be gained.

THE President has nominated Wheeler H. Peckham, of New York, for the supreme court vacancy, and again without consulting Hill and Murphy. The latter are much exasperated, and are straining nerve and muscle to defeat the nomination. The senate will be likely to think twice before rejecting the nomination, as the people almost to a man are with the President as against any claim of any senator to be consulted. The only fault in the matter lies with the President himself. It is very enjoyable to see Hill and Murphy in such stress as this move puts them, and great strife and excitement will result. The President may gain this victory. But if he does no principle will be established; it will only be established that now and then he will not allow senators to dictate appointments. Yet merely to carry this isolated point, he will stir up as much strife, and he will engender a more relentless hatred of himself than he would if he had announced to the country that dictation and advice, and all manner of interference of every kind, by members of either house of congress in relation to appointments, except the constitutional right vested in the senate when in actual session, were at an end, and had after that lived up to the announcement. Streaks of reform with very thick layers of spoil do not give satisfaction to the people while to political buccaneers like Hill, Murphy, and Voorhees, a streak of reform is like the proverbial red rag to a bull, although in fact in the finest pasture.

A COMMITTEE of the national league, of which Morrill Wyman, Jr., is chairman, has prepared a bill for an act to aid the President in appointing first, second and third class postmasters. The bill provides for a record of fidelity and efficiency to be kept of all such postmasters, and of the higher grades of employes under them. All of these may become applicants for vacancies. Vacancies in first and second class offices are open to those in service in such offices throughout the country. Vacancies in third class offices are filled from the appointment district and from those employed in such offices. The country is to be divided into appointment districts. The postmaster-general must require certain information in applications. He is then to examine application papers and rating of applicants, and make his recommendation to the President. Other things being equal, rank and seniority are to govern. The President may direct the civil service commission to hold examinations for the third class offices. Under the English system, in many respects like this, it is interesting to note that a clerk at Plymouth became postmaster at Bridgewater; a chief clerk at Manchester became postmaster at Bristol; the postmaster at Lynn became postmaster at Doncaster; an inspector of letter-carriers at Liverpool became postmaster at Lynn.

Sometime such a bill can be got through congress. In the meantime, a President who went into office as Mr. Cleveland did in March last, could by a simple executive order accomplish every object aimed at by this bill. All it needs is a fair degree of statesmanship and nerve and consistency, instead of a childish fear of losing his party. Suppose the President had ordered Postmaster General Bissell to provide such a system of selection as this bill provides for and had made his nominations to the senate accordingly, what could the mercenaries, who have in fact dictated his appointments, have done about it? Nothing but curse and refuse to confirm and cut down appropriations and other spiteful things natural to them, all of which would have briefly preceded the final triumph of the President.

THE CHRONICLE is indebted to Mr William P. Fishback for a copy of some resolutions drafted by his father for a local Whig convention in Ohio, in 1835. They are interesting, as showing that from the very beginning of the Jacksonian practice, its dangerous, monarchical, and despotic tendencies were comprehended by thoughtful men. The riot which has been run during all the years since has been due, not to parties, but to the party machines, the system of bargain and sale, by which ward heelers help men into large places and in return receive from them small places. The resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That all attempts on the part of the high officers of the government to bring the patronage of their official stations into conflict with the freedom of elections, by holding out to the voter the hope of reward or menace of punishment, is subversive of our republican institutions.

Resolved, That public offices, created for the public benefit, ought not to be regarded as "the spoils of victory," as the doctrine has a direct tendency to degrade elections [the highest acts of freemen], into mere mercenary scrambles for the loaves and fishes in which the honest many are always the losers and the designing few the gainers.

Two important indications of a widespread desire for better administration have appeared. An association called the Anti-Spoils League has been formed, which is designed to unite throughout the country all who are in favor of excluding every element of spoil from the transaction of public business. No expense is incurred in joining this association; citizens are simply asked to openly declare themselves. The other movement appears in a meeting to be held this month in Philadelphia of those throughout the country who are in favor of better city government. The list embraces many distinguished names. The admitted fact that city government is the greatest failure of American institutions has made a deep impression, and the determination to find a remedy has a gratifying strength.

JUDGE WILLIAM H. TAFT, of the Cincinnati district of the United States court, delivered an address in that city upon civil service reform before the alumni of the Woodward high school, and it was published in the Cincinnati Tribune of December 28 last. The address shows a thorough familiarity with the reform system, and with the public service, and was admirably adapted to the audience. Having been formerly at the head of the department of justice, Judge Taft is able to say from experience that the methods of the civil service commission are "a most satisfactory means of determining the fitness" of candidates for places. The address fitly says that no defense worthy of the name has ever been made of the spoils system. Another exact truth is also stated in the assertion that it would be a vast improvement over the prevailing system in our cities if laborers and employes were selected only from those who measured nearest to a certain height. This is true because politics would be excluded, and it is only some such comparison that fully brings out the absurdity of the spoils system. The particular urgency of the address is to show the necessity for introducing the merit system into cities. Judge Taft shows how the boss makes himself an "uncrowned king," but we do not agree with him that the boss is not necessarily a wrong-doer. He does not, as a rule, violate the criminal laws, but he belongs and always will belong to the class which preys upon the community. He uses, or causes to be used, a public trust for his personal benefit, and this is corrupt.

We are glad to see such an address delivered before an educational body. As a rule our schools and churches are afraid to openly and specifically oppose the spoils system. The teacher and the preacher dread its Briarean arms. The fear is not unlike the fear which forty years ago made the church and the school anxious to repress discussion of the right and wrong of slavery. We do not mean to overlook the religious press. In a considerable list of exchanges we have never found a single line of opposition to the spoils system. The CHRONICLE believes that it tells the truth without regard to persons or parties, but the uneasiness of schools and young men's christian associations at a free copy seen in their reading-rooms is frequently and ludicrously displayed.

MR. QUINCY has received another rebuke from the most influential body of his fellow-citizens. The Boston Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting, January 17, adopted resolutions to the effect that the consular service should be reformed "so that it shall stand upon merit and permanency rather than upon the spoils system."

THE MASSACHUSETTS REFORM CLUB.

The Massachusetts Reform Club has cleared the atmosphere around it. It has been a problem whether it was really a reform club, or whether it was a club whose motto should have been "For Cleveland and Everything He does, Right or Wrong." At its meeting January 12th, the club settled the matter by declaring that it stands for reform without regard to persons.

The question was whether the club should keep silent as to Mr. Quincy's view of civil service reform, and as to the use of offices to buy votes in congress. Among those in favor of this silence, Mr. Winslow Warren urged that the administration needed confidence and support, and abstention from criticism; that the President feels that he has plenty of cold criticism and little real encouragement; that civil service reform would never come through any President; that the tariff and silver questions vastly overshadow this reform in importance. He regretted to be compelled to vote so as to declare that he would never believe it wise to use offices to carry through any great question. Mr. Gamaliel Bradford on the same side said the President could not get anything done without the pressure of the offices. Said Mr. Bradford:

"Take the matter of the silver bill; the only way the President could get that passed was by putting the consulships into the congressmen's hands, just as Mr. Quincy did, and I believe he was right in doing so."

We submit that there has been nothing like the foregoing since the days of the Cotton Whigs. It is the same craven spirit which made the career of Daniel Webster end in ruin and which led George Ticknor and his following to put Charles Sumner and the Richard H. Dana of that time under the ban. So it seems will President Cleveland's career come to nothing, and all who depart from true principles to shield him will find themselves with those who made the mighty mistake which preceded the destruction of slavery.

Against these astounding positions spoke, as we gather from the various accounts, Richard H. Dana, James J. Myers, Moorfield Storey, J. G. Thorp, Morrill Wyman, jr., Archibald M. Howe, John W. Carter and Charles F. Dole. We regret the lack of space to give the fullest report of what each one said. Quoting generally from the different speakers, Quincy was thanked for stating the spoils theory in the most gentlemanly manner possible, although his stand was the same as that of Senator Ingalls. It was absurd to keep silent in order to spare the President's feelings. That was tried and it failed in Cleveland's former administration. Never for twenty years had the spoils system been so flagrant at Washington as now. Office-seekers surround the President. If reformers keep silent how can the reform grow? The President was busy nine-tenths of his time distributing offices. Edward Atkinson was called to Washington to confer with the President upon monetary matters, but after waiting three days came home without seeing the President, so busy was the latter distributing offices. It was time to speak and if the principles declared were the principles of the club, then it had departed from the object of its formation. The club did not have consideration for President Harrison's feelings, and if it now kept silent it owed Mr. Harrison an apology. If we wait for tariff reform, the Wilson bill is only a compromise, and we shall have to wait till doomsday. If the offices had not been used for silver legislation the senators who held out would have yielded sooner to public opinion. If we believe it is proper to buy legislation with offices, we can not consistently rebuke the lobby and any one wanting a law passed can justify himself by the example of the club. It was surprising that the club had listened to such doctrine. Any one who begins with toleration of the spoils theory in any way will end where Quincy has ended.

At the close of the speaking the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the unqualified and active support which the President gives and has given to the United States civil service commissioners in the work of executing the civil service laws and rules, as well as the acts and recommendations of several cabinet officers, which help to strengthen the work and methods of the commission, afford much encouragement to all who are interested in the destruction of the spoils system.

Resolved, That we earnestly request the President to extend the civil service rules so that they shall be applied to the non-political, unclassified service in all the departments of the executive branch of the government at the earliest possible day, believing that it is well recognized by all honest citizens and officials that wherever the law and rules regulating the appointment, promotion and removal of public servants are applied the public service is made better and stronger.

Resolved, That this club emphatically dissents from the proposition that all hope of civil service reform outside the classified service is but "a sublimated theory," but, on the contrary, this club believes and asserts that it is both possible and practical to apply the spirit of civil service reform in making all appointments to non-political positions under the government.

Resolved, That this club is unalterably opposed to a system which permits appointments to office to be made the price of legislative support.

INDIANA STATESMEN AT WORK.

Our record of the occupation of Indiana congressmen during the month is perhaps more interesting than usual. Senator Voorhees has been absorbed in the Indianapolis pension agency. The death of Colonel Zollinger, who had been promised the place, was a severe blow, though promptly recovered from. Voorhees sent a long message of condolence to the widow, and the same afternoon held a conference with Indiana congressmen where it was agreed that northern Indiana should have the spoil. Voorhees gave no consideration to applicants from southern Indiana, it being admitted that Congressman McNaghy was "short" on loot and this place must be "accorded to him for district strength." In spite of this, candidates appeared from all sides and Voorhees has been nearly pulled to pieces. McNaghy has got one of his editors into the Lagrange post-office. Congressman Taylor has a man for the pension agency and thinks he has a cinch on it. His time is mostly occupied with his prolonged boost of Zinzich up to the Evansville steamboat inspectorship, but he announces that a colored man will be made assistant surgeon of the Freedmen's hospital, and is making a heroic effort for a place for Colonel

Wm. Gavitt in the interior department, and is pressing a man for an Oklahoma judgeship, and has got one Stowers into the government printing office. Martin also thinks he has a cinch on the pension agency, and he has got a man in as treasury watchman, and has appointed a postmaster at Zanesville and likewise at Decatur. Under Congressman Conn the South Bend post-office question is at a white heat. One candidate, Ginz, after promising in writing to abide Conn's decision and comply with all of Conn's conditions and requirements, withdrew his application and then tried to get the place on his own hook as an original Cleveland man. Conn is on the war path. Jason Brown was at home in a fight to the finish for renomination and had to be arrested and taken back to Washington. He has had two-thirds of the laborers in the Jeffersonville depot removed and has put his men at the trough. Bretz has removed the postmaster at Odon, and has knocked from the tree two appointments, a revenue agency and an Indian school inspectorship. Bretz has worked hard to quarter his henchmen on the treasury, and it is interesting to note the effect in his struggle for renomination. His postmasters and his revenue service appointees are all for him. The newspapers owned by his postmasters at Vincennes, Shoals, Bedford and other places are warmly loyal, and the Paoli News, edited by his private secretary, says: "The gallant democracy of the second congressional district is falling into line like a stone wall in support of the present member of congress, the Hon. John L. Bretz." Holman is still sweating purple sweat over the fight for the Shelbyville post-office, and apropos of his appointment of Noah Mendenhall to be his private secretary when a brother of the latter already had a place, the democrats of Decatur county declare that "two of a family is more than they can and will stand." Congressman Hammond decided to appoint Editor Isherwood postmaster at Delphi. Thereupon the editor of a rival democratic paper began a tremendous anti-Isherwood campaign and nine other candidates are demanding the place. The seat of war has been moved to Washington.

These brief notes give some idea of what our congressmen are doing. Any unbiased man must admit that they are stirring around. Meanwhile there are nominally before congress and the country questions of trade and finance which some claim are more important than dealings with the civil service. Clearly our Indiana statesmen do not think so.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

OVER-LORD VOORHEES.

Another caller at the executive mansion was Col. C. A. Zollinger, of Ft. Wayne. He wants re-appointment to the office of pension agent for Indiana, which he formerly held.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 20.

* * *

The death of Col. Zollinger, mayor of Ft. Wayne, was sorrowfully discussed by the Indiana members present to-day, for it has been but a few days since President Cleveland announced in a quiet way that he should receive the appointment as pension agent for the State of Indiana, which position he so creditably filled eight years ago. Senator Voorhees this afternoon sent this message of condolence: * *

Later in the afternoon a little conference was held between Senator Voorhees and Congressmen Marlin and Conn. It was agreed that Northern Indiana should have recognition in the appointment of pension agent.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 29.

* * *

It is a sad commentary on the "race for spoils" among the Indiana Democrats, that while the death of Mayor Zollinger, of Fort Wayne, was not generally known to the Indiana delegation until noon to-day, at 2:30 P. M. Senator Voorhees and other members of the delegation were in conference trying to settle who should succeed Zollinger as the prospective pension agent for Indiana. There are between thirty and forty places under Pension Agent Ensley, most of which had been spoken for already on the strength of Col. Zollinger's prospective appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 29.

* * *

Senator Voorhees has received a large number of applications for appointment as pension agent of Indiana by telegraph. They come principally from southern Indiana. The senator will give no special consideration to the applications, for the office is conceded to the Ft. Wayne Congressional District, if a suitable man can be found, and under any circumstances is limited to either Martin's, Conn's or McNaghy's congressional district. The fact that Congressman McNaghy's Democratic constituents have received so little federal patronage, influences his colleagues (Martin and Conn) to refer to him in the matter.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 30.

* * *

Representative McNaghy, of Ft. Wayne, is to name the new pension agent for Indiana. This conclusion was the result of a conference upon the part of Senator Voorhees, and all the Democratic congressmen here from Indiana. The position had been conceded to the late Mayor Zollinger, of Ft. Wayne, and the untimely and sudden death of that gentleman has left a sort of implied obligation to give the place to that district. Added to this is a feeling here that Mr. McNaghy has not fared well with this administration, so far as outside patronage is concerned, and that this position should be accorded to him for district strength. Mr. McNaghy will not divulge the name of the man whom he will present for the pension agency, but it is the understanding that he will name Martin Van Buren Spencer, a lawyer and ex-soldier of Ft. Wayne. A veteran is sure to get the place. Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, was an aspirant, and many of his friends have, during the past day or two, believed he was in the race, but he is not.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 30.

* * *

M. V. B. Spencer, of Ft. Wayne, whose appointment as pension agent for Indiana is considered highly probable, arrived at a late hour last night. He wants the appointment, and carried a grip-sack full of strong local recommendations. He will remain several days to confer with Congressman McNaghy and the senators.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 4.

* * *

Dr. Norman Teal, of Kendallville, is in Ft. Wayne to-day getting the indorsement of prominent democrats for the state pension agency. Dr. Teal, it is said, will make a tour of the entire district.—Fort Wayne dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 4.

* * *

Congressman Taylor has a candidate for pension agent for Indiana in the person of Col. A. D. Owen, of New Harmony.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 6.

The friends of Martin Van Buren Spencer, of Fort Wayne, who have been working for his appointment to the position of pension agent for Indiana, are reported to have run up against a snag in the form of a protest against his appointment on account of alleged irregularities in his war record. It is said that consideration of the filling of the office has been postponed for some days in order that Mr. Spencer's record may be inquired into. The arrival of Senator Turpie, who wants Joseph Reilly appointed to the position, adds another new element of doubt and delay to the situation.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 5.

* * *

Senator Turpie arrived to-day. A crowd of Hoosiers wanted him to take up the pension agency matter and see the President at once, but he said he was tired and couldn't look after it until next Tuesday, so it has been postponed.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 5.

* * *

Each of the three congressmen, McNaghy, Taylor and Martin, thinks he has a cinch on the pension agency. All have presented their claims to Senators Turpie and Voorhees, for it is recognized that their indorsement will go in getting the office. The senators have given ear to all claims, but no decision has yet been rendered. Ft. Wayne still has the lead.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January.

* * *

Judge Samuel M. Hench, of Ft. Wayne, put in an early appearance at the capital this morning, ostensibly to assist his cousin, C. S. McLaughlin, of Pennsylvania, who was injured at the Ford Theater disaster. There are others, however, who believe that the Judge is going to take a hand in the pension agency which is just now attracting so much interest. With due respect to them all, it is conceded that Mr. McNaghy's man, Martin V. Spencer, has by far the lead, and if no question is raised as to the time of his service in the army, he will be likely to get the appointment. If this bars him, there will be a merry time before another winner is picked. Mr. Spencer is here and also is Elza T. Stringer, another resident of Ft. Wayne, who wants the place. Ft. Wayne has other candidates in Milton Thompson, Dr. Norman Teale and Capt. Charles Rees. Besides these candidates Congressman Martin comes forth with one in the person of Marcellus M. Justus, of Bluffton.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 9.

* * *

The Indiana democratic leaders are beating the bushes of Allen county trying to find material for pension agent of Indiana. Several candidates are expected here this week under the belief that the office will be disposed of before the week ends. Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, whom Senator Voorhees is inclined to favor, and Dr. Norman Teal, of Kendallville, are already overdue.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 9.

* * *

The solution to the Indiana pension agency contest is no nearer now than yesterday, but the congressmen are inclined to think that in another week the matter will be disposed of. Mr. Elza T. Stringer, of Fort Wayne, who has been mentioned as one of the candidates for the place, returned home to-night, leaving Mr. Spencer to fight it out.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 10.

* * *

The pension agency contest continues to occupy the attention of the Indiana members, but there has been no real progression unless perhaps the struggle has narrowed down between two men, namely, Martin Spencer, of Fort Wayne, Mr. McNaghy's candidate, and Mr. Owens, of Mt. Vernon, who is backed by Mr. Taylor. While the other candidates who were here have withdrawn and departed for home, leaving the field practically to Spencer, Mr. Taylor has been one who would not give up. He says he will be in the race until the last and believes his man will win.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 11.

* * *

Intimation was made to-day at the capitol that it was not all together improbable that a prominent German citizen of Ft. Wayne may, after all, get the Indiana pension agency. While Representative McNaghy has not given up hope of the appointment of Martin Spencer, others regard his chances as less favorable than a few days ago.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 11.

* * *

This week has been devoted to but one topic of discussion by Indiana democrats—the selection of a pension agent for Indiana. The democratic leaders predict that the nomination will be announced before the week ends, but complications have arisen which promise to delay the appointment. If Voorhees could control the appointment, he would name I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City. As it is, the chances are that Congressman McNaghy's voice will prevail. If it does, the delegation will indorse M. V. B. Spencer. He has practically all the indorsements from Allen county, but other candidates are appearing in the field. E. F. Stringer, of Ft. Wayne, an old soldier, is here looking for the appointment. There are suggestions of names from other parts of the state, if the twelfth congressional district democrats should fail to agree on a man. Congressmen Martin and Conn have a few dark horses standing in the stable groomed and eager to enter this race. Col. C. C. Matson, of Greencastle, will certainly go into the race if it becomes a free-for-all, while Congressman Taylor, of the first district, has a candidate in Col. A. D. Owen, of New Harmony, who, if the appointment goes to Southern Indiana, is not to be counted out. But Spencer, of Ft. Wayne, may fairly be said to be the favorite now. Judge Hensch, of Ft. Wayne, is also a dark horse.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 11.

* * *

Some of the recent aspirants at Ft. Wayne presented good claims for the office, but Mr. McNaghy concluded that the retirement of Spencer for any other man in his district would only compound his troubles and make him new enemies. Captain Campbell, of Anderson, was at one time seriously considered, and was ardently supported by Mr. Bynum, but Senators Voorhees and Turpie have finally swung into line again with Mr. McNaghy, and agreed that the office shall go to Spencer. The nomination is confidently expected the first of next week.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 12.

* * *

J. B. McDonald, editor of the Ligonier Banner, is expected here this week to urge on the Indiana delegation the claims of his father, I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, for the pension agency.

Congressman Conn has presented to Senator Voorhees and the Indiana delegation the application of Col. Matthew McInery, of South Bend, for the pension agency.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 13.

* * *

This was to have been the second day for settlement in the minds of Indiana's senators who shall be the pension agent. Pressing business, however, caused consideration to be deferred, and tomorrow is expected the decision as to which one of the numerous candidates will receive the indorsement.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 17.

* * *

Senator Voorhees is in trouble over the Indiana pension agency. The Fort Wayne democrats served notice on him early in the game that unless Col. Zollinger's mantle fell on an Allen county democrat, they would make trouble for the senator. To appease this cry, Senator Voorhees publicly announced that he would recommend no one except a northern Indiana democrat, because southern Indiana had received the lion's share of patronage. This has stirred up southern Indiana democrats. Congressman Taylor saw the senator to day and laid a number of "sassy" letters from southern Indiana democrats before him, strongly refuting his declaration and demanding either the pension agency for southern Indiana or his political scalp.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 18.

Senator Voorhees stated to your correspondent this afternoon, that the long talked of and all important conference which is to be held for the indorsement of a pension agent will not take place for the time being, as other important matters are occupying the attention of the Indiana Senators.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 18.

* * *

The appointment of the Indiana pension agent could have been accomplished two weeks ago without much friction. But now the fight is decidedly warm and promises to grow hotter before it is finally settled. Until a few days ago the chief factors in the delegation have agreed upon M. V. B. Spencer, of Ft. Wayne. Repeated efforts to get the delegation together to formally indorse Spencer have failed, and now it is understood that nothing will be done until next week. The delay has brought out all the dark horses. Nearly every congressional district now has from one to two candidates.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 19.

* * *

Congressman McNaghy to-day voiced his opinion that if Senators Voorhees and Turpie indorse Martin V. Spencer for pension agent, President Cleveland will make the appointment without paying attention to any objection that might come from the interior department. Judge Holman, on the contrary, believes that the wishes of a cabinet officer will be respected, and that President Cleveland will not upon his sole responsibility make the appointment. This is the existing state of affairs while the two Indiana senators withhold their indorsements.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 19.

* * *

John G. Schwegman was sworn in to-night as postmaster for this city under the democratic administration, and B. F. Wissler [editor of the Sun] was appointed his assistant.—Richmond dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 16.

* * *

Judge Samuel Hensch, of Fort Wayne, is a candidate for a place in the treasury department. This morning he called on Secretary Carlisle, accompanied by the senators from Indiana, to make known his desires.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 11.

* * *

The democratic county primary yesterday to select delegates to the congressional convention, which will select a district chairman, was the first occasion the Lamb-Fairbanks Tammany has had to dictate the action of a democratic meeting. The machine worked as smoothly as that of its New York prototype. Postmaster Donham, who is chairman of the county committee, called the meeting to order, and Police Commissioner Sankey was installed as chairman. The delegates from the city to the congressional convention are all out-and-out Lamb-Fairbanks men, one of them being a new employee of the revenue office. The Lamb-Fairbanks Tammany now has absolute control of the post-office, revenue office, county commissioners' court, police department, and indications are that it "bosses" the school board.—Terre Haute dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 31.

* * *

There is quite a contest at present over the post-office at Winchester. G. D. Williamson is here in the interests of O. E. Davis. Col. M. B. Miller, special pension examiner, of Freeport, has left his post to work for L. G. Ellingham [editor Winchester Democrat.] It is also understood that he filed charges against the other candidate, which makes the matter all the more interesting. The office is in a republican district and Senator Voorhees will have the disposition of it. As yet the senator has made no choice.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 11.

About ten days ago Garland D. Williamson went to Washington to work in the interest of O. E. Davis, but that is regarded as a joke, and occasioned Mr. Heaston's friends no uneasiness; but when Col. M. B. Miller, who is special pension examiner at Freeport, Ill., left his post of duty and went to the national capital to work in the interest of his prospective son-in-law, Mr. Ellingham, they became a little shaky. The editor recognizes the fact that he is not very popular, and has said a number of times that he would not under any circumstances go into an election, because he knew he would not stand a ghost of a show. Local democrats claim to have polled the democratic vote and to know that Mr. Ellingham would receive but three votes besides his own. They say that Mr. Ellingham is aware of this fact, and, regardless of democratic harmony, is relying on the influence of Miller to make him postmaster over the almost unanimous protest of the democratic patrons of this office, even though it wrecks the party.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 15.

The Indiana senators have recommended John Lynch for postmaster at Liberty, Ind., after a long contest. Ex-Representative Rude and George C. Strubel, of Liberty, have been here working for the appointment of Miller.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 19.

* * *

Con Cunningham, of Crawfordsville, who made a struggle at Washington for months to secure a consulship, writes to friends that he has been given a place temporarily as assistant doorkeeper of the house of representatives, and that "he will soon be invited to the pie counter," meaning thereby that he will be sent abroad.—Indianapolis News, January 19.

* * *

The nomination of C. H. Leach to be postmaster at Kokomo gives excellent satisfaction to the democracy of this city and county. He had the support of nearly every prominent democrat in Kokomo and was successful in a popular election held last March, receiving a clear majority over the combined vote of the five other contestants. Up to that time his most formidable opponent was C. H. Havens of the Kokomo Dispatch, Auditor of State Henderson's paper. Havens is a brother-in-law of Leach. He did not enter the election and withdrew from the race, throwing his strength to Leach.

The appointment has been reckoned a foregone conclusion here since last July, Leach having the indorsement of both Senators Voorhees and Turpie and the active support of Auditor of State Henderson and other eminent democrats. The retiring postmaster, G. W. McKinsey, has been a most excellent official.—Kokomo (Ind.) Dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, November 6.

* * *

The appointment of Michael H. Kennedy to be postmaster at Lafayette came like a clap of thunder to those who were not on the inside. It was generally supposed that in view of the all-important financial situation now occupying senatorial and presidential circles, there would not be any forward movement on the post-office here, particularly as the Hon. B. Wilson Smith, present incumbent, had but about five months more to serve. His predecessor, Mr. Ruger, a democrat, was not disturbed by President Harrison, and actually served four years and two or three months.—Lafayette Dispatch, Indianapolis News, September 27.

UNDER-LORD McNAGHY.

Congressman McNaghy secured the appointment of D. A. Fawcett for the Lagrange office. Mr. Fawcett is the editor of the Lagrange Democrat, and his appointment is considered a vindication for the democrats, because a contemptible fight was made on him. The other presidential office goes to Congressman Hammond's man, Adam R. Eberl.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 9.

* * *

Two other members of the Indiana delegation are rejoicing over to-day's appointments. Mr. Hammond has placed V. C. Hanawalt in the post-office at Logansport, and Mr. Brookshire has secured the Sullivan office for his friend, Wm. H. Parks. Mr. Hammond has also recommended a change in the office at Delphi. Editor Isherwood, of the Delphi Times, is his choice for postmaster, and the change is daily expected.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 10.

Congressman McNagny has secured the appointment of George E. Young as postmaster at Angola, Ind.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 10.

* * *

Abram Orr, who was recommended for postmaster at Kendallville by Congressman McNagny, after an exciting contest, has added to the embarrassment of the situation by declining the office now that it is within his reach. He has offered no explanation.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 5.

* * *

Upon the recommendation of congressman McNagny, J. C. Compton, of Fort Wayne, has been appointed inspector of the free delivery system for Indiana.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 19.

UNDER-LORD TAYLOR.

Capt. John J. Zinzich, of Evansville, will now work all the harder to secure appointment as inspector of steam vessels on the Ohio river. To-day Secretary Carlisle called for the resignation of John Ingle, supervising inspector.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 15.

* * *

Secretary Carlisle to-day told Representative Caruth, of Louisville, that the appointment of supervising inspector of steamboats at Cincinnati would likely determine who should be appointed to the similar office at Evansville. The secretary does not want to give the Cincinnati and the Evansville offices both to Kentucky men.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 16.

* * *

Congressman Taylor and Capt. Zinzich, of Evansville, called at the White House to-day and held a long interview with the President. The captain feels that his chances for appointment have improved wonderfully, and he expects the place.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 20.

* * *

Capt. John Zinzich, of Evansville, called at the treasury department to-day with Representative Taylor, to see Secretary Carlisle, and then visited the capitol. Captain Zinzich believes, as does Representative Taylor, that he will surely be appointed supervising inspector of steamboats for the Evansville district. Mr. Taylor assured the Journal correspondent to-day that Will S. Hays, of Louisville, was not in the race, although the Kentuckians believe their man will be appointed.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis Journal, December 20.

* * *

Captain John J. Zinzich has been here for two or three days, but was only discovered this morning, as he did not desire his presence to become public. He came on from Evansville to make a personal effort for appointment of supervising steamboat inspector. He hopes, with the assistance of Congressman Taylor, and one or two other Indiana members, to present to Secretary Carlisle and President Cleveland the necessity of allowing the office to fall again upon a resident of Evansville.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 20.

* * *

Congressman Caruth says that he has discovered sufficient evidence to convince him that there is treachery among some Kentuckians, who, while indorsing W. S. Hayes, of Louisville, for the Evansville steamboat inspectorship, are secretly at work to secure the place for Captain Zinzich. Caruth is much exercised over his discovery.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 6.

* * *

Representative Taylor is not only confident of securing the appointment of Captain Zinzich, of Evansville, to the position of supervising inspector of steamboats within the next ten days, but he believes now that he may bag the state pension agency.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 7.

* * *

At this peculiar time the friends of John H. Thropp, of Evansville, are making a grand rally, proclaiming that Captain Zinzich is out of the field, Congressman Taylor says Zinzich is in to win and his appointment may be looked for within the next few days.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 16.

* * *

Congressman Taylor announces that Dr. George W. Buckner, colored, of Evansville, will be appointed assistant surgeon for the Freedmen's Hospital, this city. He endeavored to give an Indiana man the office of surgeon-in-chief, but it is very likely a resident of this city will get it.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 15.

* * *

Congressman Taylor, of the first Indiana district, is making a heroic effort to secure a place in the interior department for Col. Wm. Gavitt, of Evansville.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 20.

* * *

Congressman Taylor is pressing Judge E. A. Ely, of Petersburg, for appointment to a judgeship in Oklahoma.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 3.

* * *

Congressman Taylor succeeded in getting John B. Stowers, of Evansville, in the government printing office to-day.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 4.

* * *

Congressmen Taylor and Jason Brown were at the White House to-day, urging the appointment of John J. Zinzich, of Evansville, as steamboat inspector. Congressman Stone, of Kentucky, has added to the complications about this office by recommending John Troop, an Evansville man.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 18.

UNDER-LORD JASON BROWN.

Representative Jason B. Brown observed to the Journal correspondent to-day that he expected a sweep-out of the republican employes at the Jeffersonville army depot about the 1st of January. There are loud complaints from the democrats who want those places, and the general demand from the hungry office-seekers has been made for some months. They point to the fact that under the last administration republicans were early installed into the positions, and bewail the inaction under President Cleveland. It looks as though the republicans who took charge at Jeffersonville early in the spring of 1889 were so capable that no grounds for their dismissal can be found.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 8.

* * *

Representative Jason B. Brown will call upon Secretary Lamont again to-morrow and make another insistence upon the immediate removal of all the republican employes at the Jeffersonville army depot.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 17.

* * *

Representative Jason B. Brown continues absent from his seat in the house. He is at home looking after a renomination. He has told his friends here that he is in the field for an aggressive race and a fight to the finish.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 8.

* * *

The democrats of the Third district met at North Vernon this afternoon to select a member of the state central committee for this district. The contest was a spirited one, and was the field against Hon. Jason B. Brown, congressman from this district, who is seeking a renomination.—Scymour dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 9.

* * *

Representative Brown sent the names of three democrats to the secretary of war to-day for appointment to positions in the quartermaster's military depot at Jeffersonville, and is confident of their immediate appointment, although he will not make known their names for some days yet. About two-thirds of the force of that depot have been changed recently.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 21.

* * *

The Hon. Jason Brown has secured the appointment of Hugo Albin, of Jeffersonville, to the position of chief packer at the government depot at that city. It is a permanent position, and pays a good salary.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis Sentinel, January 23.

* * *

UNDER-LORD HAMMOND.

Congressman Hammond is giving some attention to the question of presidential postmasters. Four of the leading offices in his district become vacantly early in the year. These are at Hammond, Goodland, Rochester.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 9.

* * *

R. M. Isherwood, the editor of the democratic paper at Delphi, is in the city. He is an applicant for the post-office in his city, with fair prospects of getting it.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 6.

* * *

R. M. Isherwood, editor of the Times, wants to be postmaster at Delphi, and is now in Washington looking after his interests. A. B. Crampton, editor of the Citizen (democratic), and John A. Cartwright, ex-representative to the state legislature, are opposed to Isherwood, and they, too, are in Washington, attempting to persuade President Cleveland that Isherwood's appointment would split the democratic party of Carroll county into two sections, and that the largest section would be the one opposed to Isherwood. This contest has been long and bitter, and whichever way it is settled it will leave the party of Jackson and Cleveland in a badly demoralized condition.—Delphi dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 9.

* * *

The opposition to the appointment of Editor Isherwood, of the Delphi Times, as postmaster of Delphi, has taken very positive form, and the local democracy has ordered a popular election to determine a choice. Mr. Isherwood is indorsed by Congressman Hammond. Nine candidates will submit their names to ballot, but Mr. Isherwood declines to enter the contest.—Indianapolis News, January 17.

* * *

There is a lively row on over the Delphi office. N. J. Howe, of Delphi, is here, trying to induce Senator Turpie to override Congressman Hammond's recommendation for the office.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis News, January 22.

* * *

There is a hitch in the senate committee on post offices and post-roads over the nomination of V. C. Hanawalt to be postmaster at Logansport. The nomination has been held up on charges preferred against the nominee. Some letters, and an affidavit or two, have been laid before the committee, stating that Hanawalt is an exceedingly unpopular citizen of Logansport, and that his nomination was made in payment for services which he rendered National Committeeman S. P. Sheerin, and others interested in the gas plant of Logansport, by procuring certain franchises and privileges at the hands of the city council, and manipulating affairs in the interest of this corporation and against the interests of the citizens there. It is alleged that the improper motive which brought about the nomination, and the intense unpopularity of Hanawalt, should be enough to cause the committee to report the nomination adversely, and the senate to reject it. Had it not been for these charges, which are well authenticated, the nomination would have been acted upon favorably some days ago.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis Journal, January 19.

* * *

UNDER-LORD CONN.

Congressman Conn called on Postmaster-General Bissell this morning, in regard to the appointment of a postmaster at Notre Dame. The post-office is a small institution, whose patrons are all connected with the university. First Assistant Postmaster Maxwell requested that a petition signed by the students of Notre Dame also be submitted in behalf of Father Cosby. Congressman Conn has declined to comply with this request. In a polite but emphatic letter to Postmaster General Bissell to-day, he said that he thought the recommendation of the trustees of the university, backed by his own ought to be sufficient in view of Father Cosby's high standing, and the custom that has prevailed for forty years of vesting the office in the president of Notre Dame.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, November 24.

* * *

The South Bend (Ind.) post-office question is now at white heat. There promises to be lively times between Adolph Ginz, one of the applicants, and Congressman Conn, the member from the South Bend district. Ginz filed an application March 1, last, with Congressman Conn, accompanied by a personal letter, in which he pledged himself, his friends and supporters to abide by Mr. Conn's decision as between the various applicants which he would recommend. Mr. Ginz, it is said, also pledged himself to comply with all the conditions and requirements Mr. Conn might see fit to impose, and to exert his efforts toward keeping peace over the result, whatever it might be. Ginz's letter making these sweeping and abject compliances is now on file in the post-office department. Last week there came a hitch between Ginz and Mr. Conn and Ginz ordered his papers returned by telegraph. The congressman understood this to mean a withdrawal from the race and forwarded the papers. It has since been learned that Ginz has tried another route to the appointment than through Congressman Conn's influence, and has been writing to President Cleveland, Secretary Lamont and other prominent officials explaining that he was an original Cleveland man, and asking the appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 29.

* * *

Five presidential postmasters for Indiana were nominated by the President to-day. Of these Congressman Conn secured two, at Goshen and Notre Dame, and Congressman Jason Brown lays claim to the remaining three, at Jeffersonville, North Vernon and Seymour. The nominations were as follows: Patrick C. Donavan at Jeffersonville, Joseph A. Bean at Goshen, James Renie at North Vernon, George D. Price at Seymour, and William Corby, president of Notre Dame University, at Notre Dame.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 6.

UNDER-LORD MARTIN.

Congressman Martin had James McCoy, of Danville, a republican and an old soldier, removed from his position as a treasury watchman to-day. The place was given to James Lynch, of Wells county, a democratic ex-soldier. Representative Martin has been promised the appointment of O. K. Chaney as postmaster at Lanesville to-morrow. The republican postmaster is to be removed at Mr. Martin's request.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 26.

* * *

O. K. Chaney was appointed postmaster at Zanesville, also on Mr. Martin's recommendation.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 26.

* * *

Collector Bracken of the Sixth Indiana revenue district, upon the recommendation of Congressman Martin, has appointed the Hon. William H. Harkins of Portland a deputy collector.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 8.

* * *

Congressman Martin of the Eleventh Indiana district this morning recommended the appointment of two new postmasters in his district. James B. Chapman will probably get the Hartford City office, and John M. Jackson the one at Peru. Recommendations in either case is as good as appointment.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, November 29.

* * *

UNDER-LORD COOPER.

Congressman Cooper is endeavoring to secure an appointment for "Dick" Johnson, an Indiana man, who formerly held an office in the Treasury department.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 8.

* * *

The democratic patrons of the Danville post-office yesterday elected a postmaster, according to the orders of Congressman Cooper, and Robert Wade was the lucky man. He was the man who was elected last winter at the meeting held to protest against Cooper's recommendation of Editor King of the Gazette.—Danville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 18.

* * *

There was a stir created in the post-office here to-day when Postmaster Rush informed mail carriers Albert Owens and Cornelius Larabee that their services were no longer desired. These two men were efficient employes and democrats on their routes would not sign a petition for their removal. Some days ago, however, they learned they were to be removed and at once wrote to the president of the civil service commission.—Columbus dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 12.

* * *

Henry C. Hoagland of Trafalgar, Johnson county, who has been assured of a place on the capitol police through the efforts of Congressman Cooper, came in to-day and submitted to an examination.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January.

* * *

Congressman Cooper has secured the appointment of C. H. Spencer, ex-mayor of Columbus, Ind., as lieutenant of the watch in the interior department. This is preparatory to securing a better position for him later.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 10.

* * *

Willis G. Neff will be appointed postmaster at Greencastle in the next few days. Mr. Neff has some very high recommendations for the office, and was indorsed by Congressman Cooper.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 5.

* * *

UNDER-LORD BROOKSHIRE.

Friends of Congressman Brookshire, in the eighth district, see danger ahead for Mr. Brookshire in the fact that Thomas J. Mann, of Sullivan, who was elected district committeeman, is a close friend of John E. Lamb, of Vigo. A strong fight against the recommendation of Brookshire is anticipated.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 11.

* * *

Walter F. Hulett, of Crawfordsville, is in the city and called at the treasury department to-day. It is said that he is after a government position. He was a candidate for the collectorship of his district.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis Sentinel, Dec. 14.

* * *

The batch of appointments that went before the senate to-day caused happiness to Congressmen Taylor, Brookshire and Martin, for they got three more presidential post-offices for Indiana democrats. These offices are: Petersburg, Mr. Taylor's district, to be filled by T. K. Fleming, a liveryman. This is the last one in his district to be looked after; Sullivan, Mr. Brookshire's district, Wm. H. Burk, a merchant, appointed; Decatur, Mr. Martin's district, John Wellen, appointed.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 8.

* * *

The office pays $1,800 salary. The appointment of Charles W. Bristley at Thorntown, settles a long controversy. Charges were preferred against the incumbent and affidavits made to secure his removal. The case was called up a few days ago at the request of Congressman Brookshire. Both senators have also indorsed Bristley. The salary of the Thorntown office is $1,200. The Warsaw office, to which W. D. Alleman was appointed, was in Congressman Conn's district. The salary was $1,200.—Washington Dispatch, Indianapolis News, October 3.

* * *

The State of Indiana has received more patronage proportionately, it is claimed, than any other one state in the Union. This is particularly true of places in the treasury department. It is very difficult for an aspirant for office to gain access to the President, or any member of his cabinet, without he is accompanied by his senator or representative.

* * *

UNDER-LORD BRETZ.

Congressman Bretz will be a candidate for renomination, but will not have a clear field. W. A. Cullop, of Vincennes, is supposed to be a candidate. Mr. Cullop sought the appointment of district attorney for Indiana, and afterwards wanted to be appointed Governor of Utah.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 9.

* * *

Three important presidential offices in Congressman Bretz's district will be vacant January 8. The names of the successful candidates have already been settled, and they will be appointed probably on the expiration of the terms of the present postmasters. At Bedford, John Johnson, editor of the Bedford Democrat, will be recommended by Mr. Bretz. At Washington, John W. McCarty will secure the congressional recommendation, and at Worthington, Mr. Wilson, who was the choice of the democratic primary election, will be appointed, if Congressman Bretz's recommendation prevails.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 9.

* * *

Congressman Bretz returned home this afternoon to spend the holidays. Before going he was notified by Postmaster General Bissell that John Johnson, editor of the Bedford Democrat, would be appointed this afternoon to the Bedford post-office.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, December 21.

* * *

Congressman Bretz has succeeded in removing the postmaster at Odon, Daviess county, although he has served but two years, and William J. Danner, a prominent merchant, has been appointed to the office.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 6.

* * *

Congressman Bretz is likewise well pleased, for he succeeded in knocking two appointments from the tree. Eph. Inman, of Shoals, who was elected from the second congressional district, is named as revenue agent and assigned to New Orleans to look after the sugar industry. Henry Wiegman, of Bedford, gets a six hundred dollar place as inspector in the Indian school at Genoa, Neb.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 8.

* * *

Mr. Bretz has made a very conservative member of congress. He has worked hard to please his friends, but, unfortunately, he does not control enough offices to go round. However, he has filled the majority of the post-offices with democrats, who are working for his renomination, and he has also secured places for a few friends of his in the revenue service. These gentlemen are also for him. Eph. Inman, of Shoals, through Mr. Bretz, was appointed a revenue agent. The democratic newspapers of Vincennes, Shoals, Bedford, and other places, whose editors have received commissions as postmasters, are very earnest in their support, and the Paoli News, whose editor is Mr. Bretz's private secretary, begins a column editorial in his praise this week, with the declaration, "The gallant democracy of the second congressional district is falling into line like a stone wall in support of its present member of congress, the Honorable John L. Bretz.—Indianapolis News, January 13.

UNDER-LORD HOLMAN.

There is going to be a lively fight in the house of representatives one of these days when Collector Bracken, of the sixth Indiana revenue district, asks for an appropriation for additional clerk hire. It is probable that several Indiana democratic congressmen will take occasion to pay off a few political scores and get even with Collector Bracken for broken promises in regard to the patronage of the collector's office. Senator Voorhees is not feeling in the best of humor toward Bracken, and the latter may find a formidable obstacle in the senate. All the northern Indiana representatives are feeling "sore" because Mr. Bracken has not, it is alleged, made a fair distribution of his patronage among the northern counties. Bracken's defender will loom up in the person of Judge Holman.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 28.

* * *

The election for postmaster ordered by Congressman Holman takes place here to-morrow. The management of the affair was taken by the city democratic committee, which limited the voters to the democratic patrons of Addison township. Nearly a hundred democrats who reside in surrounding townships get mail at this office, and they could not understand why they should be shut out. There will be eight names on the tickets. Edward Ames Major, the city clerk; General John W. Vannoy, Wm. J. Buxton, ex-auditor; Joseph R. Keenerly, deputy postmaster; John H. Maguire, Thomas J. Cherry, Andrew J. Higgins and James Dickinson. Major seems to have the best of the fight up to to-day, although some surprise may be expected. Higgins has offered to distribute $100 every month to the poor of the city if he be elected, and has executed a five thousand dollar bond to that effect.—Shelbyville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 28.

* * *

The election of a democratic postmaster passed off quietly in this city to-day. Charges were made rather openly during the day of the bribery of electors and other frauds. One candidate declared that although he had signed an agreement to abide by the result of the election, the frauds were so open and brazen that he would be compelled to make a squeal.—Shelbyville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 29.

* * *

The election for postmaster here on last Thursday does not seem to have settled the question. As soon as the vote was announced letters and telegrams were sent to Congressman Holman protesting against his recommending City Clerk Major, who received more votes than any other one man. The bitter feeling among the candidates and their friends has not abated a particle, but is getting stronger as each day passes. It is understood that charges have been filed against Major to the effect that he attended the last national democratic convention and worked against the renomination of Cleveland.—Shelbyville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, December 31.

* * *

The fight against the renomination of Representative Holman, by members of his own party, is being carried on with great energy. Wires are being pulled to sidetrack him in every movement that is being made to continue him in congress. The democrats of this (Decatur) county are angry over the recent appointment of Noah Mendenhall, of Franklin, a brother of James E. Mendenhall, and private secretary of Judge Holman. They declare that two of a family is more than they can and will stand; that the day will come when they will have a voice, and they propose to even up.—Greensburg dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 8.

* * *

Three factions developed in the democratic convention held here yesterday afternoon, W. H. O'Brien appearing in direct hostility to Congressman Holman—John S. Martin espousing Holman's cause, and Judge Hord being regarded as representing Governor Matthew's forces. O'Brien was nominated for district committeeman on the first ballot. This ballot was interpreted as meaning that the forces in opposition to Holman were in the ascendancy in the district.—Lawrenceburg dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 9.

* * *

The fight for the Shelbyville post-office does not seem to be over by any means, but is growing warmer day by day. From the very start there were four strong applicants with strong political "pulls," and last November Mr. Holman picked out ex-Recorder Buxton for the place, but the Ray wing, which for years controlled the patronage, made serious objections and demanded an election, at which their candidate received a plurality of the votes cast. Mr. Buxton's recommendations were the strongest, but the Ray wing had no trouble in getting their man, G. A. Major, selected. Mr. Holman at last handed his name to the President, but it was met by protest from men of standing and integrity. The Ray ring has been opposed to Cleveland's renomination, and it is said Major himself attended the national convention and opposed him and favored Hill.—Shelbyville dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 9.

* * *

Congressman Holman's friends are very much excited over the re election of O'Brien, of Lawrenceburg, as a member of the state committee. It is understood here that O'Brien's re-election was contested in every township by the Holman men.—Indianapolis News, January 12.

* * *

Edwin F. Uhl, of Michigan, assistant secretary of state, vice Josiah Quincy, resigned, was delegate-at-large to the Chicago convention last year, where he stood for Cleveland, and nominated Judge Morse for vice-president.

* * *

Secretary Herbert has appointed his son-in-law, Benjamin Micou, an Alabama youth to fortune and to fame unknown, to be chief clerk of the navy department. The son-in-law knows nothing whatever of the business he will be called upon to attend to, but other clerks in the department, among whom the secretary should have found his chief clerk, can show him how while he draws the salary.—New York Commercial Advertiser, December 6.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The railway mail service not only adds to the promptness of mail delivery at all offices, but it is the especial instrumentality which puts the smaller and way-places in the service on an equality in that regard with the larger and terminal offices. This branch of the postal service has, therefore, received much attention from the postmaster-general, and though it is gratifying to know that it is in a condition of high efficiency and great usefulness, I am led to agree with the postmaster-general that there is room for its further improvement. There are now connected with the post-office establishment 2,324 employes who are in the classified service. The head of this great department gives conclusive evidence of the value of civil service reform, when, after an experience that renders his judgment on the subject absolutely reliable, he expresses the opinion that without the benefit of this system it would be impossible to conduct the vast business intrusted to him.

I desire to commend as especially worthy of prompt attention the suggestions of the postmaster-general relating to a more sensible and business-like organization and a better distribution of responsibility in his department.

* * *

The method of employing mechanical labor at navy-yards through hoards of labor and making efficiency the sole test by which laborers are employed and continued, is producing the best results, and the secretary is earnestly devoting himself to its development.

Attention is invited to the statements of his report in regard to the workings of the system.

Among the heads of divisions of this department [agriculture] the changes have been exceedingly few. Three vacancies, occurring from death and resignations, have been filled by the promotion of assistants in the same divisions. These promotions of experienced and faithful assistants have not only been in the interests of efficient work, but have suggested to those in the department who look for retention and promotion, that merit and devotion to duty are their best reliance.

I join the secretary in recommending that hereafter each applicant for the position of inspector or assistant inspector in the bureau of animal industry be required, as a condition precedent to his appointment, to exhibit to the United States civil service commission his diploma from an established, regular and reputable veterinary college, and that his appointment be supplemented by such an examination in veterinary science as the commission may prescribe.

The continued intelligent execution of the civil service law and the increasing approval by the people of its operation are most gratifying. The recent extension of its limitations and regulations to the employes at free delivery post-offices, which has been honestly and promptly accomplished by the commission, with the hearty co-operation of the postmaster-general, is an immensely important advance in the usefulness of the system. I am, if possible, more than ever convinced of the incalculable benefits conferred by the civil service law, not only in its effect upon the public service, but also, what is even more important, in its effect in elevating the tone of political life generally.

The course of civil service reform in this country instructively and interestingly illustrates how strong a hold a movement gains upon our people which has underlying a sentiment of justice and right, and which at the same time promises a better administration of their government. The law embodying this reform found its way to our statute books, more from fear of the popular sentiment existing in its favor than from any love of the reform itself on the part of legislators; and it has lived, and grown, and flourished in spite of the covert as well as open hostilities of spoilsmen, and notwithstanding the querulous impracticability of many self constituted guardians. Beneath all the vagaries and sublimated theories, which are attracted to it, there underlies this reform a sturdy, common sense principle, not only suited to this mundane sphere, but whose application our people are more and more recognizing to be absolutely essential to the most successful operation of their government and its perpetuity.

It seems to me to be entirely inconsistent with the character of this reform, as well as with its best enforcement, to oblige the commission to rely for clerical assistance upon clerks detailed from other departments. There ought not to be such a condition in any department that clerks hired to do work there can be spared to habitually work at another place, and it does not accord with a sensible view of civil service reform that persons should be employed on the theory that their labor is necessary in one department when, in point of fact, their services are devoted to entirely different work in another department. I earnestly urge that the clerks necessary to carry on the work of the commission be regularly put upon its roster, and that the system of obliging the commissioners to rely upon the services of clerks belonging to other departments be discontinued. This ought not to increase the expense to the government, while it would certainly be more consistent and add greatly to the efficiency of the commission.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE President has at last removed Postmaster Thompson, of the Indianapolis post-office, for offensive partisanship during Harrison's administration. In view of the fact that the President is now letting democratic congressmen use the federal service to the fullest extent to secure their own renomination, and in view of the further fact that some of them, like Holman, Jason Brown and Cooper, could not possibly be renominated without the utmost efforts of their federal office-holders, the removal of Mr. Thompson for offensive partisanship will have to be put down as a perfect specimen of colossal hypocrisy. The only approximation to it in Indiana were the removals secured by Voorhees for "immorality." Senator Turpie had refused to vote for the confirmation of Hornblower. He has been much humiliated among the spoilsmen at home because he could not secure Thompson's removal. Two days after that removal he voted for Peckham, and the belief is very general that his vote was influenced by the "tact" of the President, of which we are hearing. There is a painful juxtaposition of the removal of Thompson and the vote for Peckham. Mr. Albert Sahm, the newly appointed postmaster, can undoubtedly learn the post-office business, but it would be absurd to say that he can learn in a short time what Mr. Thompson has learned in nineteen years in this post-office. Mr. Sahm declares that he will enforce the civil service law "in letter and in spirit." This means a good deal, but there is reason to believe that he will do it, and in view of this fair promise it is fair to omit notice of some points in his political career which are open to grave criticism.

THE success of the Peckham nomination would not have established any principle and its failure is therefore no more at most than a regrettable incident. If the President had laid down the rule that he would not allow a senator or a representative to speak to him or to communicate with him in any manner upon the subject of appointments to office and had made the Peckham nomination under that rule, the defeat of the nomination because it was not dictated by Hill would have aroused the country. As it was, success would only have shown that the President would not let some senators dictate. The victory would have been as bare of permanent result as were the victories of Hayes and Garfield over Conkling in similar cases. As we said last month the President will stir up a strife over this isolated case as great as he would cause in putting through a fundamental reform; nor can the people see that he is consistent in letting such men as Voorhees, who are no better than Hill, dictate nominations and refusing the latter the same privilege.

The reports are so numerous and so well authenticated that there can be no dispute as to the manner in which the President attempted to secure the Peckham confirmation. The constitutional way which he was bound to follow was to send the nomination and leave the senate uninfluenced to make its decision. As a matter of fact members of the cabinet went to the senate and personally lobbied for votes, and offices were showered upon senators suspected of being doubtful. It is almost impossible to believe it, but this transaction is like a chapter from Walpole's time.

IN view of developments which have been coming to light in Washington since congress met last summer, the people of Indiana will have to consider whether men who represent this state in the national legislature have sold their opinions and votes for patronage—not necessarily in open bargain and sale, but has patronage been presented in such a "tactful" manner by the President that it has caused some of our representatives to advocate and vote for measures which they would otherwise have been against? Has the determination, which the President's closest friends declare he has been acting upon, to purchase congressmen's votes with offices caused some of our congressmen to sell their votes for such a price? The evidence is almost conclusive against them. Congressman Bynum and Senator Voorhees will be called upon particularly to answer this question. Indiana will carry a heavy load of bad government, but we do not believe she will tolerate men who trade off their votes and opinions.

THE investigation of the Fort Wayne post-office brought out again the general

character of inspectors. With each change of administration they adapt themselves to their superiors. They go out knowing what kind of a report is wanted, and they come back with that report. It was so at Terre Haute and it was so at Fort Wayne. It is so with inspectors generally under every administration. If they show a disposition to be honest and impartial, it affects the tenure of henchmen, and that makes trouble for congressmen, and the inspectors incur an enmity which is all-powerful in the civil service.

Another point made plain is the entire groundlessness of the average charges. The remedy for this is publicity at all times. The secrecy which has been enforced has encouraged falsehood and backbiting throughout the country to a degree beyond comprehension, and to enforce this secrecy is criminal in any administration. If a man knows that his charge against a public employe will be telegraphed back home, he will try to keep to the truth.

Probably a complete remedy for the attempt of the heads of offices to create vacancies for political reasons would be to give the civil service commission the right by law to summon and swear witnesses in matters relating to dismissals, and this should by all means be done. In the meantime what is to hinder the commission from going to any place and getting what information it can about dismissals? In most cases it could get all the information, and after hearing one side it would find the heads of offices only too glad to make the best possible explanation. In all cases everything should be done publicly. With the information thus gained the commission could come at the truth, and could with great force ask the proper authorities to correct misuse of the law.

WE have read with interest a report of the proceedings of the national conference for good city government held in Philadelphia, January 25 and 26. It is curious to note how many of the participants just missed the mark, how many had palliatives but were not aware that there was a specific. One proposition was to meet the bad influence of the corruptionists and disorderly classes with a good influence equally persuasive and equally energetic of the other people of the community.

Another proposed to educate the people in the province of municipal government. Another proposed to bring pressure to secure better nominations. There was also the declaration that municipal politics should be divorced from national politics and that the influence of women should be brought to bear, and so on. Carl Schurz set forth the specific. The cause of municipal corruption is the spoil of office. No amount of pressure by good citizens to keep public officers straight, no plan to secure good nominations, no separation of municipal from national politics, nor any other thing proposed at this conference will ever bring about municipal reform, so long as minor city offices and employment are distributed as spoil by ward bosses. The spoil must be taken away and there is only one tried and approved method of doing it, and that is by the merit system of open competition and by the Boston labor service system.

IT IS not often that the doctrine that the salaries of public employes are to be taxed, not for the benefit of the people by an income tax, but for the benefit of a party machine, by a stand-and-deliver assessment, finds such a bold statement as is given it by the Democratic State Committee of Connecticut, which sent out to the employes referred to the following:

Finance Committee, Democratic State Committee, No. 778 Chapel Street, Room C, Garfield Building, New Haven, Conn.:

DEAR SIR—For the purpose of paying rents, expenses and legitimate bills of the Democratic State Committee,

Resolved, By the finance committee of the Democratic State Committee, that all officials who may be appointed to office under the national and state governments be requested, upon receiving said appointments, to pay into the treasury of the said Democratic State Committee the following sums annually: For all appointments from which an income of between $200 and $400 per annum is derived, the sum of $10; for all appointments from which an income of from $400 to $1,000 per annum is received, 2½ per cent. of the salary; for all appointments from which an income of 1,000 and upwards is received, 5 per cent. of the salary, payable semi-annually to the treasurer of the said committee.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Democratic State Committee be requested to forward to every appointee of Gov. Morris, and to every democratic appointee of the national and state governments, a copy of the above vote of the finance committee, with the request that they comply as far as possible with the tenor of the resolution.

One of the members of the committee is the collector of customs at Bridgeport, and if justice is to have its due, he will have to answer for soliciting funds from persons in the employ of the United States. The sending of the circular to employes in public buildings renders every member of the committee liable. The maximum penalty is a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for three years.

THERE are a class of reformers, much less in numbers than a few years ago, who couple with a peculiar devotedness to Mr. Cleveland the doctrine that civil service reform must wait until the tariff question is settled. Now if any person has been supposed fitted to speak for tariff reformers it has been Mr. Watterson. In a recent interview he gives some idea of how long under the above doctrine the reform of the civil service would have to wait. He says:

I have recently expressed myself so elaborately as to the Wilson bill that any repetition would seem superfluous. It is a bad bill from the beginning to the end. It will do no good and much harm. It may set the cause of genuine revenue reform back a generation. But it will not stop tariff agitation. Every one who supports it begins by qualifying his approval.

THE civil service reformers of Maryland have again come forward by a bill introduced into their general assembly to establish the merit system in that state. The bill contains the usual provisions of such laws. It is interesting to note that at a conference held upon the subject with members of the general assembly there appeared a decided feeling in favor of the bill, and the mayor of Baltimore so declared himself by a letter. That such a law should pass is probably too much to expect from Gorman's state, but it is only a question of time.

IN announcing his determination to retire from public life, Congressman Harter says:

"A congressional career has many attractions, but more drawbacks. It does not suit me to be nine-tenths an office-broker and one-tenth a legislator."

We were told the other day by some Boston reformers that the only hope of breaking up congressional patronage was through congress. As a matter of fact, the men who would be in favor of the reform are more and more leaving congress. The only hope of bringing congressmen back to their constitutional duties is through the President. He must by his fiat cut them off from patronage.

PENNSYLVANIA democrats who are tired of the boss organization of their party in that state have united under the name, "The Pennsylvania Democracy," and have nominated a candidate for congressman-at-large. He gives an interesting description, applicable universally to party machines, of the way in which the "regular democracy" of Pennsylvania occupies itself. He says:

Although Mr. Patterson's election as governor was understood to be a triumph over political bossism, he was no sooner in office than he surrendered the government of the state into the hands of a political clique which immediately made the executive department a political headquarters for completing a system of boss organization of the democratic party. The department heads were filled by the boss and his supply lieutenants, and the public offices swarmed with his henchmen and satellites. The public business was subordinated to political scheming for controlling conventions, making and defeating delegates, bartering patronage, promulgating edicts and advancing and securing factional control of the party. Executive appointments were distributed at boss dictation without regard to personal character or fitness in the appointees, but solely as a reward for cringing subserviency. No surrender could be more abject, no betrayal of the people more utter.

The regular democratic machine as thus described, headed by ex-Postmaster Harry, has just been given by the President the offices of collector, surveyor and naval officer of the port of Philadelphia.

F. W. M. CUTCHEON, chairman of the Minnesota state democratic committee, recently resigned the chairmanship in a letter which again proves, what every one knew, that party machines as they now exist in this country are devoid of political principles of any kind, and are only kept in existence, so far as their present membership is concerned, by the enjoyment or the hope and prospect of enjoyment of official plunder. In his letter of resignation he tells a shameful story in which the present administration has an active and willing part. Mr. Cutcheon says:

I accepted the chairmanship of your committee in the earnest hope that I should be able to be of service in so preserving and improving the organization of the democratic party in this state that it would be prepared successfully to meet the demands of the political campaign of the coming year, and that I might thus assist to hasten the coming of the complete triumph of the principles we all have at heart. Either the building up of a political machine, in the popular sense of the word, or the mongering of federal offices was very far from my thought, and is to-day farther from my inclination. However, I was hardly installed in the position to which in April last you did me the honor to elect me, when I was forced to realize that the democrats of the state expected from me the devotion of virtually my entire time and energies to obtaining and distributing federal patronage; that for the present, at least, they had little attention to devote to the promotion of the effectiveness of the party organization; that all eyes were turned towards the spoils of past success, instead of towards the necessity of laboring for future victory. The work of attempting to obtain and parcel out offices was forced upon me, not only from this pressure upon the part of the members of the party in the state, but by continual requests from some of the departments of the federal government for recommendations of fit persons to be appointed to a multitude of minor offices. Under the circumstances, I have endeavored to render the individual members of the party who have applied to me, and who seemed deserving, such assistance as lay in my power, and so to perform these services and to promote the public and party interests.

The work, however, has required and still requires an expenditure of time, money and energy that is entirely beyond my ability. The position of chairman of this committee demands a person who possesses ample leisure and pecuniary means as well as an inclination for its duties. I possess none of these qualifications. The chairmanship should be filled by one either in sympathy with the other and more powerful agencies which the present administration chooses to employ in selecting persons for federal appointment in Minnesota, or one who commands leisure, means, and inclination to combat these agencies successfully. I do not enjoy the sympathy, the leisure, or the means, referred to. Moreover, without being guilty of disloyal criticism of the present democratic administration, I may say that I am not in sympathy with the policy that has been adopted by it in making appointments to federal offices. I believe that no one would give support more heartily than would I to a policy of genuine civil service reform—a policy in accordance with which removals from office would be occasioned solely by unfitness to hold it on the part of the incumbent—and appointment dictated only by the special fitness of the appointee; but with the policy adopted by the present administration, which is at once retrogressive from the standpoint of the reformer, and unjust from the standpoint of the partisan, I have no sympathy. In my opinion this system retains all the vices characteristic of the spoils system and possesses none of its redeeming qualities.

THE FORT WAYNE POST-OFFICE.

On account of the repeated complaints of partisan manipulation in the Fort Wayne post-office, a committee consisting of William Dudley Foulke and Lucius B. Swift, of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, was appointed to look into the matter. They spent two days in Fort Wayne and their report may be found in full in the Indianapolis Journal of February 8. The present postmaster, W. W. Rockhill, part owner of the Fort Wayne Journal, took possession of the office July 20, 1893. He found it under the civil service rules, under whose operation three democrats had already gained places. Mr. Rockhill's case is of that class which in the past have caused great struggle and bitterness in connection with the civil service law and the outcome of which has caused the administrations under which they occurred to be branded as hypocritical and treacherous. Mr. Rockhill was a man of good standing in the community, liked by his fellow-citizens and in his business dealings honest. But he is one of those officers, plenty enough now but becoming less numerous, who think that the ordinary rules of fair dealing do not apply in politics. His mind was corrupted with the view that he must make places for partisans, and to accomplish this he resorted to slyness, trickery and deceit. With two exceptions, he would have been ashamed in his Fort Wayne newspaper establishment to deprive men of their means of support for analogous reasons to those given for dismissing carriers and clerks from this post-office. If the reasons had been true, as a private employer he would have first given a reprimand. The men would have been warned and everything would have been done frankly and openly. but as postmaster he did not mention the subject to the men but he sent charges against them secretly to Washington and the first notice the men had was a dismissal from employment. Cases were filed, the trials had and the judgments were rendered without a word of notice to the accused. In one case he dismissed a carrier upon charges wholly untrue and the carrier was reinstated from Washington. Mr. Rockhill almost immediately dismissed him again upon new charges which were undoubtedly false. Before the second dismissal and before the carrier heard of the new charges, an inspector named Holmes appeared as he said for the purpose of investigating the charges, but he left Fort Wayne and forgot, as he afterwards wrote, to mention the new charges. Yet upon his adverse report as to those charges the second dismissal was approved. In one case the charge upon which a carrier was dismissed was not known to the postmaster when he sent the written dismissal. This fact puts the motive of Mr. Rockhill beyond any question. The post-office department has made one improvement; after the men are dismissed it will in most cases let them know the grounds and that is the way these assigned causes came to light. What has always been claimed is now proved: If the charges could be brought to light they would not stand the test of the judgment of the community. These were trumped up and they had no foundation in fact. In some cases there was no pretense of an accusation; the men were told that they were dismissed for the good of the service. In other cases the postmaster sent them letters, saying; "Your resignation will be accepted," and then crowded them out by putting other men in their places. He cares nothing for the civil service law and admits that he does not understand it. He is simply McNagney's man; and we repeat again that the civil service law should be in the hands of men who want to carry it out.

THE MACHINE ROUTED.

There has been going on at Indianapolis for many weeks a struggle which is of interest to the whole country. It will be remembered that the republicans elected a mayor last October by 3,000 majority. He frankly realized the fact that the enormous change from 2,700 the other way at the preceding election was caused by voters who want and are determined to have, if possible, the best city government, and he determined to address himself to the matter, of getting it. The mayor with the three city boards and the comptroller are required under the charter to form a cabinet and are directed to adopt the merit system for appointments. The police and fire departments are expressly excepted but the board having control of those departments is given the power to adopt the rules. The mayor declared in favor of the merit system and proposed that his cabinet should adopt it; and the board of public safety declared that it would adopt similar rules for the police and fire departments. A curious and motley crusade against these proposals was begun by the party machine. Comptroller Pres. Trusler, whom the mayor by a serious mistake of judgment had given his office, led the machine. In wards, precincts and club rooms and where two or three could be got together, resolutions against "civil service" were carried with a whirl. Individuals one after another declared themselves against it, and finally the party organ, the Indianapolis Journal, although an old civil service reform advocate, was whipped into line. Merrill Moores, chairman of the republican county committee, worked desperately to secure their defeat. It must be said that all together they made a good deal of noise. The mayor and the members of the boards listened to everything but kept steadily on in the preparation of the rules. From time to time they gave public expression of their views to the effect that they knew what their duty was and they meant to do it. The board of public safety adopted its rules without dissent. When the mayor's cabinet met the vote stood ten in favor of the rules to Trusler against them.

We give elsewhere the principal points of the objections publicly made. Clearly neither they nor the members that made them are formidable. The citizens of Indianapolis with the exception of this hungry fringe of party hacks and ward workers and little bosses were with the mayor. It is a great example to show what the CHRONICLE has always claimed—that the people are opposed to the spoils system. The rules are not yet accessible and we defer comment.

A TYPICAL BOSS.

Since the defeat of Maynard there has been no penal news so gratifying to the public as the verdict of guilty against John Y. McKane, of Gravesend. He was a carpenter, and took to town politics. By the usual hustler's methods he became town supervisor, chief of police, commissioner of police, commissioner of highways, commissioner of common land and commissioner of excise all at once. He was now in shape to do business. No person or corporation that had to ask favors could safely ignore Carpenter McKane. When letting building contracts, railroad corporations, hotel builders, jockey clubs, and all keepers of questionable resorts took note of this, and McKane was overwhelmed with business. As excise commissioner he could grant his patrons licenses, and as chief of police he could look the other way while pool selling, prize fighting, and all manner of law breaking went on. He controlled all town expenditures, handled the town money and paid the bills with his personal checks. He sold the town lands, and built the town buildings. He became rich.

He had a difference with Boss McLaughlin, of Brooklyn, and to punish the latter he decided to have his town go for Harrison in 1888, and the vote was counted that way. The New York Tribune called attention to his good work, and he led the John Y. McKane Association at the inauguration of Harrison, and was received at the White House, and was allowed to name the United States marshal. Two years later he supported Fassett, and Gravesend gave 1098 votes for the latter against 180 for Flower. In 1892 he had made up with McLaughlin, and Gravesend was counted heavily for Cleveland. The John Y. McKane Association marched in the Cleveland inaugural procession, and McKane named the present postmaster. He was a good man—at Sheepshead Bay, where he lived. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and zealous in his religious duties. But at West Brighton he consorted with pool sellers, prize-fighters, dive keepers, and so on. He divided up the town so that the six election districts centered in one room, where the election could be under his eye. In 1891 the number of registered voters was 2,547, in 1892 it was 4,843. He finally toppled over. In 1893 he put 6,218 names on the registry list as voters where the population of the town was 8,418. He refused to allow the registry list to be copied. He defied a court injunction, and arrested and threw into jail persons who came under the protection of the court to act as watchers. For these offenses he has been tried and convicted. His career represents the natural and complete development of the spoils system. It is true he is convicted, but it took the ablest lawyers and a trial of over three weeks, costing thousands of dollars, to do it. And with that it was feared to trust the regular methods of drawing the grand jury, or the regular sheriff, or the regular prosecuting attorney.

It has often been said that the spoils system would subvert free government. The blindest can see that if it were perfected throughout the country as McKane perfected it, free government would be actually gone, and no courts or juries could help us.

THE SAME OLD STORY.

The report of the Indian Rights Association for the year 1893 has the merit of being plain. So far as the Indian service is concerned, it is the old story of lying, deceit, trickery and treachery. Before his inauguration President Cleveland, through a friend, asked the association to suggest a name for Indian commissioner. A number of names were suggested and were disregarded, and an Illinois politician named Browning was appointed, who was entirely devoid of experience in Indian matters. Among its other exploits the administration removed Mr. Steele, the Blackfeet agent, and of remarkable efficiency, appointing an army officer in his place. When asked the reason, Browning said the President felt almost obliged to make military appointments. Mr. Crouse, the Pima agent, was removed and

Mr. J. Roe Young, of Kentucky, who was not a military officer, was given his place. Mr. Crouse being anxious to know why he was removed, wrote to the association:

"I should be very much pleased to learn the nature of the charges preferred against me, if any. I have had from three to five employes of democratic faith in good positions here ever since I took charge of the affairs of the agency, and in the selection of employes for various places no religious or political affiliations have been considered at any time. What I am most interested in is to know the cause of my removal."

The association asked Browning, and the only reply it could get was, "the good of the service required it."

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Robinson were removed from the post of superintendent and teacher respectively of the Ponca school. They asked Browning for a copy of the charges, but he ignored their request. The association then made the same request, and Browning replied that it was for the good of the service, but that he was not required to give reasons. The association gently replied, regretting the necessity of discussing the case before the public. Browning at once responded that the charges had been sent to Mr. Robinson. The charges consisted of a report by an inspector, a new political appointment, and whose report was pervaded with personal hostility, accounted for by a statement which the inspector's indiscretion at the school drew from Mr. Robinson. Benjamin H. Miller, an experienced and faithful Indian inspector was removed, and the only charge the association could ever find out was that "a man from Georgia wanted his place." It is difficult to comment upon the removal of Captain Brown, the Pine Ridge agent. The reason stated was that the assistant Indian commissioner regarded him as an enthusiast, impractical and extravagant in his estimates. The instance given of his extravagance was a request for steel fence-posts in the sand-hills, where wooden ones were constantly destroyed by fire. That he was impracticable was false, and his enthusiasm was sadly needed. The CHRONICLE has already commented upon Browning's proposal to remove from the classified service superintendents who have to give bond for school furniture and like property. In this line Browning has been doing a little business on his own account. He abolished two teachers' positions within the classified service at Chilocco school and created two assistant teachers' positions without the classified service. Into one of these creations he put his niece and into the other the son of a friend.

At the writing of the report Hoke Smith had deigned to counsel with the association regarding the improvement of the Indian school service. The report is anticipating the appointment of Dr. Hailman, and if it is made, it bespeaks support for the administration. The appointment has been made, but the CHRONICLE will wait awhile to see if Dr. Hailman is cramped by any more of Browning's capers.

THE LAKE MOHONK CONFERENCE.

We have received the printed proceedings of the Lake Mohonk conference which was held in October, 1893. Through the whole the spoils system is made to appear the one insurmountable obstacle to the civilization, or even fair treatment, of the Indians. In a conference of one hundred and seventy members, embracing some of the most eminent philanthropic names of the country, this was the universal declaration. We can not do better than quote the words of the speakers. Herbert Welsh said:

"Upon the policy adopted by the executive in making appointments to and removals from office within the Indian service will depend, in a large measure, the success or failure of this great work. The spoils system has in the past been the bane of this as of all other departments within the civil service of the United States. Both political parties have been equally guilty of the abuse of the Indian service by making its salaries the purse from which to pay party debts, and by improper political appointments and removals. This system, so wholly at war with common sense and those established principles on which every successful business concern is based, has afflicted the Indian service with a spirit of weakness and inefficiency amounting at times to demoralization and chaos. It has not only introduced at various times into every part of the service large numbers of persons wholly without qualification, either in character or ability, for their positions—persons who were never selected with that end in view, who secured appointment by political pressure—but it has taught every worthy person in the service that high character and faithful work are no guarantee to the retention of place. It has scattered the garnered harvest of experience to the winds, as of no greater value than chaff, and has undone the patient work of years with a single thoughtless stroke of the pen.

Philip C. Garrett said: Very disastrous to successful administration from any business point of view is this most unbusiness-like and pernicious system. When is the day to come, when, with cars closed to interested parties and politicians, a President will be allowed by public opinion to observe and investigate deliberately on his own initiative the merits of all incumbents of offices in his gift, and retain or dismiss for merit or demerit only? Not till then will it be possible to administer the Indian office so as with reasonable celerity and humanity to solve the troublesome problem it presents.

Captain Wotherspoon said: I do not think an army officer should be used except as a stop-gap, until a proper law can be passed, applying civil service to the Indian service from its top to its bottom. My own experience is this as quasi-agent. When I come to take charge, I find my doctor is a blacksmith, appointed by Senator So-and-so. My carpenter is an indifferent saddler, my saddler nothing, and my clerk the political henchman of some politician. How can we do efficient work unless we can appoint our own employes and be responsible to the heads of our department, as in military service? Give us these, and we can do good work. I have one interpreter who has a salary of one hundred dollars a month, and his fitness consists in a perfect knowledge of the Apache language. I have had nearly five hundred applications from politicians, backed by senators and congressmen, to discharge this man, and put in people who never saw an Apache in their lives and know absolutely nothing of the language. Yet my clerk must act as interpreter for the Apaches. Unless he can do this, he is of no use.

Dr. Proudfit said: I want to call attention to one argument which has been left out, in behalf of placing the Indian service under the civil service rules; and that is the argument of humanity. I am an original civil service reformer. If there is one argument which ought to commend itself to everybody without regard to politics as pre-eminently requiring to be administered on civil service reform principles, it is the Indian department. Why? Has not experience taught us that it is utterly ruinous to administer it on any other principles? It makes little difference whether our letters are delivered twenty-four hours earlier or later, whether we lose a few hundred dollars in the ordinance department of the army or navy; but I tell you it makes all the difference in the world whether you are going to put a man in office, for political reasons, who will mismanage a department where the bodies and souls of men and women are concerned. You put in an ignorant, corrupt, inefficient man, you put in place-men, a man who is "on the make," and what is the result? It is demoralization to the Indians.

These extracts show the opinion of those who spend much time and money for no other reason than to benefit the Indians. They have accurate knowledge of what will benefit the Indians. The administration is an ignominy in comparison. Yet their experience is disregarded, their recommendations are ignored, and congressmen from Maine to California are permitted to send their henchmen to the Indian country to be quartered upon the Indian appropriations. We could commend to the conference a less excusing tone toward public officials. It is not worth while to be deprecatory when dealing with officials who are at heart political sharpers.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND AND THE PURCHASE OF CONGRESSMEN.

Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

SIR—In your January issue you quote, with some severity of criticism, a remark of mine at the dinner of the Massachusetts Reform Club, to the effect that the President was right in using the consulships to buy the votes of the senators on behalf of repealing the Sherman silver bill. The words were no doubt correctly quoted, but they do not cover all which, with the context, I intended to convey. I have been a civil service reformer for twenty-five years, but I thought at the first as I think now, that the promoters overlooked a defect in the organization of our government against which their efforts would dash themselves in vain. By tremendous and persistent agitation a certain measure of reform has no doubt been accomplished, but at the end of a quarter of a century I find the outcry against the spoils system nearly as great as ever. It may be said that the people of the country are thoroughly weary of the subject. No President ever has been found, and it is almost certain that under the present system none ever will be found, to meet the demands of the reformers. The civil service commission exists by the reluctant tolerance of congress under the lash of incessant public agitation. If that body dared it would suppress it at once, and if the senate, by a few more experiments like that of last autumn, finds out that it can safely defy public opinion, the country may be treated to the spectacle of an appropriation bill, which will reduce the civil service commission to an untimely end for want of funds.

The root of the evil lies in the usurpation by congress of the whole power of the government. At the Massachusetts Reform Club dinner Mr. R. H. Dana, civil service reformer pur sang, referred to the civil service of other countries. If he will follow out the comparison he will find that in every case the civil service is pure just in proportion as the executive is strong, because it is for the interest of the executive that it shall be. The governments of Prussia and the German empire are a military despotism such as I, for one, have no desire to see here; but in no country is the civil service tenure more permanent, or promotion more regular. In Great Britain, which has the strongest executive of any really parliamentary government, the spoils system has been wholly done away with. It is in France and Italy, where executive power is merely a puppet in the hands of the chambers, which occupy themselves in setting up and pulling down ministries at the bidding of private interests, where the finances are in disorder and the budget shows a constant deficit. It is in these countries, and for precisely the same reasons, that the spoils system rages almost as fiercely as in the United States.

Of course the control of legislation means the control of administration, and the President of the United States has little more voice in legislation than any ordinary citizen. He has, indeed, power to say in extreme cases, what shall not be done—unless two-thirds of congress insist upon it. Beyond this he can only send messages, and these are referred to committees, which use them purely as a means of compelling submission to party and private demands. A good illustration is furnished in the disgraceful spectacle of our financial condition. The revenue shows a deficit, current bills are unpaid, and the cash in the treasury is rapidly running down, yet congress has taken no step to relieve the emergency. After pleading in vain with the committees, the secretary has felt himself obliged to resort to an old statute authorizing the issue of five per cent. bonds, an implement about as antiquated as a muzzle-loading musket. Yet congress, with, be it observed, a democratic majority in both houses, instead of trying to help him out, falls to quarreling whether he has the right to issue the bonds, or to use the money for his expenses.

Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, a kind of Apostle Paul of the movement, has written a considerable and very interesting book in praise of the reform and condition of the English civil service. Yet not once does he take the trouble to consider how these things were brought about. It was through the public, personal and individual responsibility of ministers for their appointments. Some years ago, Mr. Disraeli was suspected of having appointed a relative to some minor office. Instantly he was set upon in the House of Commons, and received such punishment as served for ample warning not only for himself, but for all future ministers.

The first effectual step towards civil service reform will be taken when the country insists that the President, through his cabinet, shall have the same opportunity of stating publicly his views and wishes with regard to legislation as members of congress have, and shall thus be relieved from the necessity of private solicitation and lobbying with members and committees, and as a corollary of this, that the cabinet shall be held to public and personal responsibility for appointments on the open floor of congress; so that prompt and sharp castigation shall make it more costly to yield than to resist the solicitation of office-seeking members.

To recur to the original point. Last autumn a large part of the people of the country felt, wrongly as I thought, and still think, that the great financial depression was owing to the silver law. If Mr. Cleveland shared that feeling, and saw that no other means of securing the repeal by the vote of the senate was open to him, than that which always has been used for such purposes and against which no law existed, then I do not think that he should be denounced for deciding that actions may be of relative importance, and that the general welfare of the country is above any details which are not immoral or wicked in themselves.

Respectfully yours,

GAMALIEL BRADFORD.

MR. BRADFORD AND THE PURCHASE OF CONGRESSMEN.

The words of Mr. Bradford quoted last month in the CHRONICLE were as follows: "Take the matter of the silver bill; the only way the President could get that passed was by putting the consulships into the congressmen's hands, just as Mr. Quincy did, and I believe he was right in doing so." On receipt of the letter printed above we expected to find a denial of these words, or at least some modification of them. The words, however, are not only admitted, but there seems to be in Mr. Bradford's mind no conception of the political morality which the words indicate. Passing to the statements of his letter, the only people in this country who are weary of the subject of civil service reform are the spoilsmen and the nominal reformers. It has made a tremendous progress. In almost all parts of the country it has permeated the public thought, and the people at large have come to believe in it. There are few communities where a dismissal to make room for a partisan does not meet the disapproval of the majority. The reform has reached the stage that if the machinery of the law and the rules were once established throughout the country, the people would no more submit to a repeal than they would submit to a repeal of the ballot reform acts. We can not say what a congress composed as our congress is might not do. It might strike out the appropriation. A cowardly submission without criticism to any abuse of the civil service is the way to bring that about. In 1874 the republican party struck out the appropriation, and immediately after met the greatest defeat which had come to a party since the downfall of the whigs. To strike it out now would result in the shattering of the party that did it, as the repeal of the Missouri compromise shattered the party which did that.

Mr. Bradford says the root of the evil lies in the usurpation by congress of the whole power of the government. The evil lies in the usurpation by individual congressmen of the President's power of appointment, and in his weak submission. Our executive is not weak. Next to the arbitrary governments, it is one of the strongest in the world. Compared with ours, the English government is a town meeting democracy. Mr. Eaton considered fully how the reform of the English civil service was brought about, and Mr. Bradford has evidently been too "weary" of the subject to read his book with advantage. It was not brought about because the cabinet had seats in parliament. The cabinet had seats in parliament a hundred and sixty years before the English service was reformed; and if cabinet officers like Whitney, Don Dickinson, Wanamaker, Carlisle and Hoke Smith had seats in congress a hundred and sixty years, our service would not through them be reformed. The English reform originated wholly with the executive. The first report was made in 1853, and the order establishing examinations was made by Lord Palmerston in 1855, and was that same year disapproved by a vote of the commons. Nevertheless the executive did not back down and talk about not being able to "carry its party," or "of the danger of sitting down between two stools."

It persisted and submitted the matter to a discussion of the people with such effect that in a single year the commons were compelled to give way. The same result would be reached here if we had a President with backbone enough to do his sworn duty.

The trouble with Mr. Bradford and those who agree with him is that they have the notion that it is the business of the President to get certain legislation through congress. The President has no such business. It is his business to publicly state his views, and there he should stop. If congress will not then legislate as the people desire, and if the people have no remedy except the coercion or purchase of such legislation by the President, then among us popular government has come to an end. The people have a remedy in the ballot. It is the remedy and the only remedy which the constitution designs, and if the corruption of congressmen by the executive can be brought to an end, the ballot will do its effectual work. It is true that needed legislation might be delayed, but this country had better suffer years of financial rack than have its laws given it for a price. It is an impropriety for the President, except by his public utterances, to seek to influence congressmen in any manner. He goes beyond his constitutional authority in attempting to work laws through congress; and if with offices he deliberately purchases senators or representatives to vote for measures which they would otherwise vote against, he makes a corrupt use of the power with which the people have trusted him. If Mr. Bradford can not see that, or if it is sufficient to him that there is no law against it, so much the worse for Mr. Bradford. It is no different from ordinary blocks-of-five purchase. The blocks-of-five men always say that they are simply paying the floaters "to vote right." If it is right for the President to buy legislation with offices, it is right for Mr. Bradford to buy it with money. It is true that no President has been found to meet the demands of reformers, but, as Mr. Bradford knows, it has not been for want of promises. Such a President will be found, and under the present system. He will manage the civil service as the constitution provides. He will publicly express himself as to legislative needs. He will resent any intrusion upon his constitutional power. And congress, without hope of reward from any source except in the approval of the people, will pass bills and submit them to the President for approval, and upon these bills he will exercise the discretion the constitution gives him. The time of waiting will be lengthened or shortened according as men like Mr. Bradford shall attempt to drag the name of reform into apology for acts for which there is no apology.

"CIVIL SERVICE" IN INDIANAPOLIS.

"Of course I'm dead agin it. Say, I'd be a rank sucker to give up all me spare time fer an office and then cut it up with some other bloke. Not on yer life! I believes that them as do the hnstlin' should get the offices, and when they gets a pig-iron cinch on a job, spike her down an' keep the other gny out. Dat's polyticks, an' dat's what makes ns fellers do the hnstlin'. Dat man Trnsler is a terrorbred, an' yer bet we're all wid'im to a standstill."—Tommy Miller, light-weight boxer, republican, ex-member of Tammany Hall.

"I am in favor of Pres. Trnsler and agin civil service. I tell you civil service never did ent any ice."—Royal Hammer.

I believe the civil service idea is a political heresy; that its tendency is to eliminate from the civil service all who have the manhood to have political opinions and who are worthy of American citizenship; that it perpetuates an office-holding class who are either hypocrites or are white-livered to the extent that they will change opinions to hold office; that in removing the interest of the masses in politics, it is the first step toward a monarchy or at least an aristocracy; that it is a cover for ungrateful politicians to hide their responsibilities to those who elevated them.—Pres. Trnsler, City Controller.

* * *

There is no disputing the fact that civil service breeds a class that cares for nothing but their own aggrandizement. Love of country is a pretty fable for school children and it finds no lodgment in their calculating natures, for if they were ever possessed with that commodity it has been destroyed through the blighting civil service method.—William W. Jackson.

* * *

We believe that it is as honorable for a man to try to become a fireman or a policeman as to try to be a United States senator, and we believe he should be appointed if the majority wants him to be. We do not believe that any party believes in civil service, as it is, unless the other party is in power. We do not believe that a man running a large business would employ men to help him in running his business if their sympathy and interest were in another concern in the same kind of business on the opposite side of the street. We do not believe that any man, a candidate for any office before any convention of any party, could be nominated if he declared himself in favor of civil service.—Protest of Southsiders, read by Joseph B. Cameron.

* * *

"I notice an interview with Controller Trnsler in last night's News. He expresses my idea of civil service—to the victor belongs the spoils. Why is it that Mr. Denny is so much better lawyer than Mayor Sullivan? He never discovered the civil service in the new city charter. Mr. Denny had to go to Boston to see how he could keep the democrats in their places. Why do we work for our candidate 'day and night?' Is it because we expect him to leave the democrats in their places and allow the republicans to hang around the streets and be called 'tin-horn' and 'peannt politicians'? Is it not strange that this city has been saved as long as it has when it was run by political parties and paid political assessments? We had money then in the treasury, but now it takes it to pay salaries to officers to help us out with civil service."—Cal. Darnell.

"Civil service be-be-be blown! Say, you will be short every night. What's the use of civil service, anyhow? No one will be able to get a job. Everybody would have to go to high-school and graduate, so they could tell the names of all the rivers in Posey county, and how the Mississippi river compares with White river, and how high the Alps are, and a whole lot of stuff. There isn't anything in it."—P. J. Ryan, democratic councilman and deputy collector of revenue.

"Say, didn't you see what our club did last night?"

"No. What did your club do?"

"Wh—wh—why, we passed resolutions against the civil service rules."

"Did you read the rules?"

"Yep. We read them section by section, and they are no good."

"What particular section is objectionable?"

"Why, under the rules a man who has office can't talk politics nor pay a cent to the party."—Ed Duvall, sanitary officer for the board of health.

The members of the city administration who are in favor of the code of civil service rules, which will be considered by the mayor's cabinet to-night, assert that a strong effort is made on the part of politicians not only to defeat the adoption of the code, but to bring such a pressure to bear as to compel the discharge of the few democrats left, that republicans may get their places. This, it is asserted, is true in every department. Among those against whom these accusations are made are John W. Bowlus, candidate for county clerk; Ed Duvall, sanitary officer; Henry Smith, ex-councilman; H. B. Stont, ex-deputy city clerk; Merrill Moores, chairman of the republican county committee; William W. Milford, secretary of the republican county committee and clerk to the board of public works; Charles Krauss, councilman at large. Mr. Moores recently appeared before the board of public safety and asked that Clarence Foster (republican) be made clerk of that board, a position held now by Richard Herrick (democrat). He explained that he did not ask that one man be discharged that another might be appointed, but insisted that republicans should have all appointments to be made.

Mr. Moores is a member in good standing of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, of which William Dudley Fonke, of Richmond, is president. The object of the association is thus set forth in its constitution:

"The object of the association shall be to establish and maintain a system of appointment, promotion and removal in the civil service, founded upon the principle that public office is a public trust, admission to which should depend upon proved fitness. To this end the association will demand that appointments to subordinate executive offices, with such exceptions as may be expedient, not inconsistent with the principle already mentioned, shall be made from persons whose fitness has been ascertained by competitive examinations open to all applicants properly qualified; and that removals shall be made for legitimate cause only, such as dishonesty, negligence or inefficiency, but not for such reasons as political opinion or refusal to render party service; and the association will advocate all other appropriate measures for securing integrity, intelligence, efficiency, good order and due discipline in the civil service of the national government, the state of Indiana and the various municipalities therein."—Indianapolis News.

Col. W. W. Holloway, Mayor Denny's private secretary, is sometimes given to expletives. Ex-councilman Jasper came in to talk about "civil service." The mayor being out, Jasper and Holloway had, according to the News, the following conversation:

"Morning, Bill."

"Morning, Joe."

"Colonel, about the civil service rules. Don't you know that ? ! ! — — * * I 8 — ! ! — ! ! ! ! ! ! ! !"

"Joe, — — — ! ! ! ? ? — *, — ! ! ! — — — ! ? ? ? I 4 — —," quoth Mr. Holloway, and the meeting was at an end.

"The republicans of the first ward in mass

"Resolved, That the republicans of the south side earnestly protest against the adoption of the proposed civil service rules, believing them to be un-American and treasonable to a republican form of government."

"Be it further resolved, That we, as republicans, do not believe that the Indianapolis News is capable of judging of what is for the best interest for the republican party. As proof, note its position on the tariff question."

"Be it further resolved, That we believe in majority rule, and to the majority belong the emoluments of office, from the highest to the lowest, and as republicans we are willing to stake our political future on that line of action."

"WHEREAS, It is reported that the city administration is about to adopt a set of civil service rules, which rules have been published in the Journal; and,

"WHEREAS, It is reported that said rules were prepared by persons whose opposition to the republican party is notorious, and whose motives may be viewed with distrust; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That said rules are un-American and a step toward the disfranchisement of a large number of voters, and that we condemn in the strongest terms the rules now under consideration by the Mayor's cabinet; and, be it further

"Resolved, That we will support no candidate for office who will not openly announce himself as opposed to all interference with the rights of voters under the guise of civil service reform.

WHEREAS, We are informed through the columns of the daily press of this city that his honor has under consideration the introduction of civil service into our municipal government, which, as a club, we believe that at this time is inexpedient, therefore be it

There was another "mass"-meeting of men opposed to "civil service," last night. This time it was in the Sixth ward. There were six persons, not candidates, present. At noon to day still another "mass-meeting" was held. It was composed of John W. Bowlus, candidate for county clerk, and two other men who are trying to secure places under Mayor Denny.—News Item.

* * *

The precinct committeemen of the Tenth ward met in the criminal court room, Saturday night, and passed a resolution declaring that the republicans of the Tenth ward and of the city generally are opposed to the proposed rules.—News Item.

* * *

Eleven of the sixteen republican members of council met in the city clerk's office to canvass on the proposed civil service rules. The greater number present were either candidates for something or expect to be some time. Those in attendance were Rauh, Cooper, Krauss, Allen, Shaffer, Stout, Murphy, Puryear, Kaiser, Drew and Young. The majority agreed that they were opposed to the code and would tell Mayor Denny so. They also said that they intended to make an effort to prevent the rules from being adopted.—News Item.

* * *

Controller Trusler is against the rules openly, and will fight their passage by the cabinet. For his alleged valor in opposing the mayor in his civil service idea, Controller Trusler has been idolized by the spoils element of the party. Yesterday he was presented with a glass upon which was inscribed: "Civil Service—Rats." On the other side was a flag, and underneath was the name, "P. C. Trusler." Around the bottom of the glass was tied some red, white and blue ribbon."

The Indianapolis Journal, in its columns, has long been in favor of the merit system, and for many years, in editorials, it has set out the great benefits to be derived from the extension of civil service reform. While this city was under the democrats, it repeatedly upbraided them for disregarding the plain direction of the charter that the merit system must be introduced. October 20, 1893, ten days after the great victory of the republicans last fall, it had the following:

The placing of subordinate appointments in the city government on a civil service basis is not a matter of choice or discretion with the mayor or his boards. It is made obligatory by law. The charter, after providing for monthly meetings of the heads of departments, says, etc.:

We think it unfortunate that this provision excepts from its operation employees under the department of public safety, which includes the fire and police departments. But if the letter of the law does not include these departments, its spirit should more or less be applied to them. Outside of the fire and police forces, every subordinate appointment in the city government is required to be made according to civil service rules and "without regard to political opinions or services." This being the case, the appointments of deputy controller and deputy clerk, already made, were in violation of law.

But, February 2, 1894, the Journal said:

This provision [of the charter declaring that civil service rules shall be adopted] expressly excludes from its operation the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments, the market master, station-house keeper and all clerks and employees of the board of public safety. As to employees in other departments the charter requires the adoption of uniform rules to ascertain the fitness of applicants for office, without regard to political opinions or services. This gives the mayor and heads of departments the widest possible discretion as to what kind of rules or regulations shall be adopted. The charter would be fully complied with by a rule providing that all appointments to subordinate positions in the city government should be made with a view of promoting its efficiency, and that no appointment or promotion should be made except on the written report of a majority of the board controlling the department that they had examined the person and found him qualified. Such a rule could be put in a dozen lines. * * * It should not be necessary to examine a hundred men to find one competent clerk, nor is it necessary for any city administration to go outside of its party ranks to find persons to fill responsible positions. * * * The people who worked and voted for a change of city government last October wanted reform, but not that kind. Nor does the charter require that kind.

The Journal has evidently been seen by the machine. Yet there are few even of the partisan papers which, at the command of the party machine, would in such public humiliation return their necks to the yoke.

A MANACLED PRESS.

But remember, sir, that these are the attributes of a free press only. And is a press that is purchased or pensioned more free than a press that is fettered? Can the people look for truths to partial sources, whether rendered partial through fear or through favor? Why shall not a manacled press be trusted with the maintenance and defense of popular rights? Because it is supposed to be under the influence of a power which may prove greater than the love of truth. Such a press may screen abuses in government or be silent. It may fear to speak. And may it not fear to speak, too, when its conductors, if they speak in any but one way, may lose their means of livelihood? Is dependence on government for bread no temptation to screen its abuses? Will the press always speak the truth, when the truth, if spoken, may be the means of silencing it for the future? Is the truth in no danger, is the watchman under no temptation, when he can neither proclaim the approach of national evils, nor seem to decry them, without the loss of his place?

Mr. President, an open attempt to secure the aid and friendship of the public press, by bestowing the emoluments of office on its active conductors, seems to me, of everything we have witnessed, to be the most reprehensible. It degrades both the government and the press. As far as its natural effect extends, it turns the palladium of liberty into an engine of party. It brings the agency, activity, energy, and patronage of government all to bear, with united force, on the means of general intelligence and on the adoption or rejection of political opinions.—Daniel Webster in 1832.

TYPICAL CASES OF THE FORT WAYNE DISMISSALS.

THE MORGAN CASE.

My name is Frank M. Morgan. I was a carrier in the Ft. Wayne Post-office from August, 1889, to January, 1891, when I became a distributing clerk in the same office, which place I held until October 28, 1893. I threw the letter mail and always had it ready for the carriers, and my work seemed to give satisfaction. October 28th, last, I received a note from Postmaster Rockhill stating that my services were no longer needed. I went to Mr. Rockhill the same day and asked him if there were any charges against me and he said nothing whatever. My place was taken by a man named Worden, a democrat. I am a republican. I wrote to First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones, asking if there were any charges against me. Receiving no reply, I wrote again, and received an answer that my letter was on file. His letter was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1894.

Mr. Frank M. Morgan, Ft. Wayne, Ind., 184 E. Jefferson St.:

Sir—Your letter of the 6th inst., relative to charges for which you were dismissed from Ft. Wayne P. O., has been received, and will be duly considered. Very respectfully,

FRANK H. JONES,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

I have heard nothing further.

FRANK M. MORGAN.

THE BOWER CASE.

My name is Claude Bower. I was a messenger boy in the Ft. Wayne post-office, appointed in 1892. I held that place until December, 1893, when I was promoted to be stamp clerk, it being my duty to stamp letters and assist in distribution. I kept my work up. I had a partner and he was sick a great deal, and I kept his work up, too. August 15, 1893, a man named Kerr was sent in to me to be instructed in my work. I had been showing him about two hours when the following letter was handed to me:

FT. WAYNE, IND., Aug. 15, 1893.

Mr. Claude Bower, Ft. Wayne, Ind.:

Sir—Your resignation as stamper will be accepted, to take effect this evening.

Yours truly, W. W. ROCKHILL, Postmaster.

I left the office that evening. I had no talk with the postmaster. I never asked for any charges and never heard of any. CLAUDE BOWER.

THE ASHLEY CASE.

My name is George L. Ashley. I was a letter carrier in the Ft. Wayne post-office from August 12, 1889, until August 24, 1893. No complaint had ever been made against my service to my knowledge before I was dismissed. About August 10, 1893, Mr. Amos K. Mehl, a democrat who had been appointed substitute letter-carrier upon civil service examination, informed me that Mr. Gallmeier and Mr. Wright would be dismissed and that I would be dismissed also. He said if Mr. Paul Richter was placed on my route when I went on my vacation that I would never come back again. I asked what charges were against me and he said he did not know. I was notified about August 16th to take out the rest of my vacation. Mr. Kettler told me that Mr. Rockhill had requested it. I went on my vacation and Mr. Richter took my place. I received a notice on the night of the 23d that after the 24th my services would be no longer required. On the morning of the 24th I went to Mr. Rockhill, the postmaster. I asked him what the charges were against me and he said for the good of the service. I asked him was it for the good of the service to appoint in my place a man who during the preceding week had delivered the Masonic Temple mail to the Newspaper Union? He asked if I had never made any mistake. I answered that I had never a rush or where names were similar, but not such a break as that. He said, "Well, I have dismissed you for the good of the service." I asked First Assistant Postmaster Jones, who answered as follows:

DECEMBER 21, 1893.

Mr. George L. Ashley, Ex-Letter Carrier, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Sir—Replying to yours of the 18th inst. in which you make inquiry as to nature of the charges on which you were removed as a letter-carrier, you are informed that said charges were preferred by the postmaster, who accused you of neglect, inefficiency and inability to cover your route in a reasonable and a required time, that he assigned one of the substitutes to the route, who made much better time and did more satisfactory service.

He specifies one instance of finding in your desk a letter addressed to C. H. Van Gorder, 221 Main street, which should have been delivered a month prior to the date of finding it.

The exigencies of the carrier service at this time make it imperative that only the best men should be continued therein.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK H. JONES,

First Asst. Postmaster-General.

I saw Mr. Rockhill and asked if he made these charges. He said he had, and they were correct. I said they were not correct, and I would see Van Gorder. I did so, and showed him the letter. Then he said, "Where is there a notary, I will make an affidavit?" He said he had made no charges, and asked where there was a notary, and at once made the following affidavit which was sent to First Asst. Postmaster-General Jones, and its receipt acknowledged:

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss:
ALLEN COUNTY, }

C. H. Van Gorder, being duly sworn, on his oath says that he resides at 221 Main street, in the city of Fort Wayne, Ind., and is the person named in the annexed letter, signed by Frank H. Jones, first assistant postmaster-general of the United States; that he has resided at the said 221 Main street in the said city for about four years, and has been acquainted with Mr. George L. Ashley as mail-carrier for about three years, during which time said Ashley delivered mail at affiant's residence; that said Ashley was prompt, efficient and industrious as such mail-carrier, and was the most prompt and capable carrier that ever delivered mail upon said route; that the letters of affiant were never detained by said Ashley; that the letter specified in the charges against the said Ashley was detained in the Fort Wayne post-office at affiant's request during his absence at the World's Fair in Chicago, Illinois.

CHARLES H. VAN GORDER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23d day of December, 1893.

HENRY C. HANNA,

[SEAL.]

Notary Public.

I never failed to cover my route under Postmaster Rockhill within schedule time, and Postmaster Higgins has told me that he had no complaint against me during his administration.

Mr. Mehl, who took Gallmeier's place about August 27, told me that Mr. Slater would not keep his place because he was secretary of the local civil service board, as all Mr. Rockhill's transactions passed through his hands. Slater was dismissed October 30.

My name is Paul Richter. I am a letter-carrier in the Fort Wayne post-office. I am a democrat, and was appointed a substitute letter-carrier by Mr. Higgins on 21st of June, 1893. I began to carry Geo. L. Ashley's route on the 17th of August, 1893. He was then on his vacation. When I began that route the Van Gorder family had returned from Chicago. After August 23d, in going through my case I found a letter in a drawer addressed to Mrs. C. H. Van Gorder, which I took and delivered to her. Ashley's vacation began on August 17th.

The same day I found the letter I told Mr. Mehl. The date of the postal card was the 23d of July. At least one month afterward I delivered the letter to Van Gorder's, and I told Mr. Mehl of the letter the same day I found it. The postal card was substantially as follows: I am going to Chicago for one week. Please hold my mail until I return.

PAUL O. RICHTER.

A correspondent from Ogdensburg, New York, writes: "I think I owe for the CHRONICLE. * * I wish there more of other than Indiana politics in it."

[The CHRONICLE has made every effort to get the patronage spoils news of other states as fully and vividly told as that of Indiana and has failed. The goings on in this state are no worse than in many others, but here they are brought to the light of day. If there is ever the dawn of a better time in this state, it will be largely due to the steady, persistent gathering of facts by the three leading papers of Indianapolis, representing republican, democratic, and independent policies. One New York paper that in the Harrison administration was an inexhaustive store-house of spoils news the country over, is, most unfortunately for the CHRONICLE, silent in these days.]

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

If we see nothing in our victory but a license to revel in partisan spoil, we shall fail at every point.—

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

Indianapolis, Ind.

THE index to the CHRONICLE, extending over the Harrison administration, has been printed and mailed to those who requested it. It will be promptly forwarded to any others who desire it. There are several reflections suggested by this very complete resumé. One is that there is now a distinct lowering of tone toward wanton removals. They are in the present administration taken for granted. The ruthless proscriptions of Carlisle and Quincy have aroused public disgust for them, but the cases themselves have not been repeatedly told, and the meanness and hardship of each case dwelt upon as in the preceding administration. There was nothing in that to equal the cynical openness of the claims of the congressional barons to parcel out spoils. Such reports as are now sent from Washington regarding what appointments Indiana congressmen have made, are making, or are about to make, were never sent before. There were no advocates among prominent reformers as now that worthy legislation may be rightfully attained by bribery with patronage, and no culmination of such baleful doctrine in the confirmation of a justice of the supreme court, sought in an open market, by the offer of spoil. For the first time in nine years it now appears to be taken for granted by civil service reformers that all outside the classified service will be removed, nor is there now any steady protest over the removals pressed forward as rapidly as practicable of postmasters, nor is there any protest over the admitted fact that the removals and appointments are for political reasons. It seemed inconceivable that a President elected under the conditions that Mr. Cleveland was, could be diverted from the one great reform possible to him, but he has been, and it can not be denied that the standard has been lowered, and specious excusing is far more prevalent than in the preceding administration.

THE close of the first year of President Cleveland's second administration brings little satisfaction to the friends of good government. With rare exceptions, of which

Hill is one, he has delegated his presidential power of appointment to political bosses. In the light of his long experience, he has done this with a full knowledge of what he was doing and he has done it in complete stultification of his many declarations against doing it. In view of the large body of literature produced by him antagonistic to this course, he would naturally be ashamed and humiliated by his own acts. But as has been well said he seems to have become cynical. This is illustrated by the fact that while the rate of the removal of postmasters for the first twelve months of Harrison's administration was 1,646 a month, Mr. Cleveland's monthly rate for the same period has been 1,977. The boss system was never more flourishing, and there are yet graver matters. It was for a long time incredible, but it is no longer beyond question that the President has given places in the civil service for votes in congress. This is a brief statement of the most corrupt and dangerous act which has occurred in the whole history of the spoils system. This, too, seems to have been done with the utmost deliberation and in doing it Mr. Cleveland has placed a blot upon his career which can neither be removed nor excused. During his first administration his wreck of the civil service found a host of apologists. They are silent now; a few Josiah Quincys are the only ones left to say it is right to bribe congressmen with offices. This bribery undoubtedly delayed the repeal of the silver purchase act; in the Peckham case the bribe was lost as completely as any money ever paid to a treacherous floater; and with the tariff bill bribed members have been paid a higher price by the whisky, sugar, coal and iron trusts. Every one should rejoice at this futility of presidential bribery.

Two important federal offices of Indianapolis are being "settled." The new postmaster will take his office in a few days. For the fourteen places which it is reported he will treat as spoil he had over 1,400 applications when he gave notice that he would receive no more. The new pension agent, Martin Van Buren Spencer, had difficulty in getting his place. For a long time Secretary Smith refused to appoint him because his term of service as a soldier was short. When Voorhees determined to have Spencer appointed, he brought Smith's neck under the yoke in short order. There are twenty-eight places in the agency office. He says that in order to secure the office he promised to different congressmen every place there was in it, and up to March 7, congressmen had not furnished him the list of henchmen to be appointed. In the actual division, however, which is now going on, there is much crimination and recrimination, but Spencer says that he has made it satisfactory to the Indiana senators. The post-office of this city is admitted on all hands to be the most efficient it has ever been. Some of the fourteen employes about to be dismissed are model public servants, as, for instance, the superintendent of carriers and the stamp clerk. Of the twenty-eight present employes in the pension agency, Mr. Spencer has expressed himself as "greatly pleased," but he has told them that he will discharge them as fast as new men can learn the work. All of these men in both offices are to be removed because they are republicans and new men are to be put into their places because they are democrats. This is called the reward of party service. The declaration of the last democratic national platform that places in the civil service ought not to be a reward for party service is to be treated with contempt. Business principles have nothing to do with these proposed changes. They are to be made upon principles which would wreck any private business and which make taxes higher and more oppressive. It is true these two officers have an example in President Cleveland. Meanwhile the logic is likely to be applied both to the President and to them that if it is a good thing to loot the offices now, it will be a good thing for some other party to do it four years from now.

THE machine republicans here and elsewhere are openly saying that they "could put a yellow dog on the ticket this year and elect him." From their recent township nominations here they appear to believe what they say. It is impossible to say how much further down the democrats will get, but it is a good while yet to election, and there are large opportunities for them to recover. The situation would have to be desperate before the republicans, in local and state matters, could successfully shake yellow-dog tickets in the faces of voters in this state. So long as the spoils system continues yellow-dog politicians will come to the front after every great victory. On account of yellow-dog politics the people at last drive out one party by a great defeat. It is a victory of the best in the community over the worst. In a little while the yellow-dog politicians of the victorious party step forward and claim it was their victory, and being in control of the machine nominate themselves for the offices, and we start on the other half of the circle.

MR. CLEVELAND must be proud of his manipulation of Voorhees. Against all the honest sentiment of the state he let Voorhees name Burke for district attorney, Donham for postmaster at Terre Haute, and every man for every place that Voorhees wanted. It was supposed that the naming of Joshua Jump, the partner of Voorhees's particular protégé, John Lamb, and attorney of the distiller Crawford Fairbanks, to be collector of internal revenue, would be too great a strain upon Mr. Cleveland's "tactful" policy; but it was not. It is true Voorhees voted for the repeal of the silver purchase act, but he attempted to annul his vote by shouting a speech full of all the financial fallacies of the time. He voted also for Peckham; but the administration minority was hopelessly safe. When, however, he came to the tariff bill, Voorhees was himself again. As soon as the bill went to the senate committee John Lamb went to Washington, where he has remained much of the time since, and is always reported to be "in close touch" with the committee having the bill in charge. Voorhees suddenly concludes that the whisky men ought not to pay their taxes now, but some years hence, and further, that being heavily burdened with taxes, they deserve a reduction which they get by a nominal increase. Those who said that Voorhees and Lamb, and Jump and Fairbanks, were going to rule things in this state, were right; but what about the President? There is one glimpse of sunshine in this infamous business. It may result in the defeat of Voorhees here in Indiana.

THE law gives Secretary Carlisle the power to select plans for public buildings by open competition among the architects of the country. The advantages are plain, and, if the intent of the law was carried out, there is no question but that the country would soon begin to get permanent effects in architecture similar to the noble but transitory exhibition which astonished the world at Chicago last summer. Mr. Daniel H. Burnham, president of the American Institute of Architects, says: "This country is the greatest client of architecture known in history unless Rome, in the height of her wealth, power and glory, be excepted." We have built buildings by the rule of congressional patronage instead of by the rule of architecture. Congressmen and their heelers have passed into perpetual oblivion but their buildings stubbornly stay with us. Meanwhile new congressmen and new heelers are all the time making new buildings to become in turn exasperating monuments when in the near future the names of the vulgar builders will be forgotten. A year ago Secretary Carlisle informed the American Institute that he would choose plans for the Buffalo building in open competition. But, as Mr. Burnham says, congressional patronage interfered, and, without notifying the institute, Carlisle had plans prepared by the politicians who pose as government architects. Of course the plans are undesirable, and the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE knows without being told in the words of Mr. Burnham, that "the disreputable practices of municipal politics rule in the treasury department." The Secretary is simply a weak Covington politician who is ruled by a vicious son whom he has quartered upon the people.

MR. HENRY C. LEA recently said in Harper's Weekly, that Mr. Cleveland keeps congress "under fitful control by a prostitution of patronage more cynical than has hitherto disgraced the nation." To this, the Weekly says editorially:

"Now we are certainly not disposed to spare Mr. Cleveland whenever his management of the patronage is open to criticism, and we are far from approving all he has done. But in common justice we must say that when he is charged with 'a prostitution of patronage more cynical than has hitherto disgraced the nation,' the exaggeration is simply absurd and scandalous. To go no farther, Mr. Harrison's management of the patronage was unquestionably more cynical than Mr. Cleveland's."

Mr. Lea's comment dealt only with the use of patronage to buy legislation. Mr. Harrison, evil as his administration was, in its wanton removals and appointments, never used patronage to purchase congressmen's votes. The incessant occupation of the present administration, night and day, week in and week out, has been to appeal through patronage to the cupidity, and weakness, and dishonesty of congressmen, to secure legislation. There has never been anything more cynical than the openness with which this has been done, and it is useless to try to be blind or deaf to the danger of using patronage in this way. Granted that Mr. Harrison and his co-adjutor Clarkson, manipulated the patronage wholesale, that their motives were bad, that they both should have been impeached, while Mr. Cleveland has had only the best of motives, and that the legislation he desires is needed, it is still true that in far-reaching demoralizing corruption, Mr. Cleveland's prostitution of patronage has been "more cynical than has hitherto disgraced the nation."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE does not believe in extra pay for government employes who have worked over hours. These employes are better paid than the same grade of employes are in private business; for instance, letter-carriers are paid several hundred dollars more annually than they would be for the same grade of work in private employment. Neither does the CHRONICLE believe in any law which sets apart letter-carriers as a class whose tenure is to be specially protected. Business principles should be applied to the entire public service; but no other principles should be applied. The executive department should have the power of dismissal; this is essential to discipline and efficiency. The civil service law is right in this respect. It is true that heads of offices take a mean and dishonest advantage of this power, as was done in Topeka, Terre Haute, Fort Wayne and elsewhere. The remedy for that is public opinion and punishment by the President. Information, however, is an absolute necessity, and to this end the civil service commission should have power to investigate every change in the public service within its charge, and to report the facts. Upon such facts public opinion and the President could act, and the time would speedily come when heads of offices would be ashamed to trick employes out of their places. It is unnecessary to repeat that every dismissed employe should be entitled at the time to an honest and fairly complete written statement of reasons, and that those reasons should be a part of the office records.

CIVIL service reformers should insist that the scales of justice weigh fairly all administrations and that the standard be not changed. If those interested will turn over their files of the CHRONICLE they will come across the case of Colonel Rice, the postmaster at Springfield, Mass., whom Mr. Harrison turned out. This was condemned in language none too vigorous or explicit as bad for the service, a betrayal of pledges, and coarse ingratitude toward an old soldier and efficient officer. If any change were to have been made in the Springfield office by the present administration, Colonel Rice should have been reinstated. The business community tried to get him appointed; but there has been so fierce a demand for this place for political purposes, backed by Josiah Quincy, that the intimation has come from Washington that a new candidate must be presented. Have the friends of reform been so clear cut and outspoken in their denunciation of the use of this office for political purposes by this administration as they were when President Harrison used it in this same way? Turn also to the case of Postmaster Sperry, of New Haven. He had twenty-six years of the most efficient service back of him. The whole community wanted him kept. The President called it a "hard case," considered two months and then removed him. It is probably true that the late President would only have considered two minutes and would then have removed him. What is the difference in yielding after two minutes or after two months? Then there is the case of Postmaster Harlow, of St. Louis. His removal is wanton and in wanton disregard of the best interests of the city, of the desires of the people, and of decent treatment of a good officer. This large office has again simply been manipulated for political purposes, but like the other cases very little public protest has been made by civil service reformers. Do we have one standard for Mr. Harrison and another for Mr. Cleveland, or are we all getting calloused and brutalized by these recurring changes?

ON February 20 a meeting of Harvard students was held in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, to combine against the spoils system. President Eliot presided, and in opening the meeting said:

We have in this university the spectacle of a rightly organized staff of men employed in a public service. They are taken into the service of the college on probation, to be retained in that service if they are found efficient. In this way we have a body which is highly efficient, serviceable and American. Some people say that if we had civil service reform in our government service that changes would not come often enough, and that after all places were filled there would be little chance for any one to enter the service of the government. There are in this university 385 officers. All but six of these men have been appointed or promoted during my connection with the college. We have here as permanent a system as there is, yet we see that it is almost completely renovated in a period of twenty-five years.

The next day some 300 Harvard students met to perfect an organization for the promotion of civil service reform. The newspaper report says great enthusiasm prevailed.

We urge Indiana colleges to follow Harvard College. We urge it as a duty, and the most pressing duty at hand. The feudal spoils system is the most widely ramifying and the deadliest corruption at work to-day in the body politic. It is a question peculiarly fit for the enthusiastic work of college men; it is not sectarian, and it is not political, because it is the vice of all parties of to-day. Indiana colleges can not afford to be indifferent or timid, and so intensify the unjust suspicion that there is in this state no general appreciation of the moral degradation of the spoils system or a callous indifference to it.

If a simultaneous movement were begun, it would be easy enough to secure the names of several thousand Indiana students in enthusiastic support in the new Anti-Spoils League. Below is a copy of the simple declaration to be signed, and which calls for no dues:

THE ANTI-SPOILS LEAGUE.

CARL SCHURZ, President. WILLIAM POTTS, Secretary. SILAS W. BURT, Treasurer.

OFFICE 54 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK.

We hereby declare ourselves in favor of the complete abolition of the Spoils System from the public service, believing that system to be unjust, undemocratic, injurious to political parties, fruitful of corruption, a burden to legislative and executive officers, and in every way opposed to the principles of good government.

We call upon all in authority to extend to the utmost the operation of the present reform laws; and by additional legislation, to carry the benefits of the Merit System to the farthest possible limits under our national, state and municipal governments.

AT the call of the senate the civil service commission has made a report of its investigations since March 4, 1889. These investigations have occurred in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Troy, New Orleans, St. Joseph, Toledo, Indianapolis, Albany, Atlanta, Rochester, Buffalo, Omaha, Denver, Topeka, Quincy, Rome, Terre Haute, Paducah and many other places. The completeness and efficacy of the commission's investigations are striking. Whenever it sets out it appears to get at the truth. With a reasonable addition to its authority, specifically giving the commission full power to investigate and report upon all occurrences under the civil service law, the fair and honorable enforcement of that law would only be a question of the near future. The recommendations of the commission have in cases of the highest importance, such as Baltimore, been entirely ignored, but there have been exceptions. Persons improperly employed have been dismissed in Denver, Omaha and elsewhere, and employes improperly discharged have been reinstated in San Francisco, Topeka and other places. Carlisle maintains his reputation. Among the irritating cases is that of a clerk named Gaddis, who had been detailed from the treasury department, and had worked under the commission for some months, giving good satisfaction, when he was dismissed through the baneful and callow influence which reigns in the treasury department.

Another Carlisle case, not in the report, is that of a clerk in the treasury department, named Cumming, who, in an interview in a Washington paper, relating to the Wanamaker loot of the railway mail service in 1889, went out of his way to make false and malicious statements concerning Commissioner Roosevelt. Carlisle's attention was called to this, and he promptly promoted Cumming with an increase of several hundred dollars in salary.

UNPLEASANT REMINISCENCES.

Since the jury found John Y. McKane, the boss of Gravesend, guilty the Indianapolis Journal goes into a spasm at the bare mention of the fact that McKane in 1888 counted the vote of his town for Harrison and then named the United States marshal. Greater criminals than McKane were given vastly greater spoil by the late administration. For instance, Quay had his hundreds and thousands, where McKane had only his fives and tens. But the verdict of the jury, followed by the sentence of a court, has a conclusiveness about it by which the respectable, though usually blind, republicans must, however unwillingly, admit themselves convinced.

It is not only true that McKane counted the vote of his town for Harrison and then named the United States marshal, but it is one of the most degrading instances of paying a rascal for a rascal's work in an administration where excessively degrading instances were common. Nor until now has it ever been in any manner denied. It was widely noted at the time it occurred in New York and Brooklyn papers. It was again noted in 1892 in the same papers and at no time was it denied because it could not be.

In 1884 the town of Gravesend gave Cleveland 667 votes and Blaine 295. After that McKane quarreled with McLaughlin, the boss of the Kings county democracy, and in 1888 McKane went over to the republicans and in Gravesend Harrison received 833 votes, while Cleveland got only 397. A man named Dan Lake was democratic boss of the Eighth ward of Brooklyn and had been for many years a most active ward worker. The democrats had several times elected him supervisor and for two terms he was county auditor. While he was in the latter office all of the fraudulent bills for which the supervisors were indicted were audited and paid on the strength of Lake's guaranty. So much for the Journal's statement "that Mr. Lake had long been a reputable citizen of Brooklyn." While in the auditor's office he went over to the republicans with McKane and lost his job of democratic office-holding.

When Harrison was inaugurated Mc-

Kane led one hundred of his henchmen in the inaugural procession. They were put ahead of Brooklyn republicans as a mark of honor. In front of the reviewing stand Buffalo Bill led McKane close up to the stand, which compliment the president acknowledged amid great cheering. Later, McKane asked that Lake be appointed United States marshal, going very slyly to Washington March 13, 1890, refusing to register at the hotel. On the 17th of the same month the name of Daniel Lake was sent to the senate to be United States marshal for the eastern district of New York, and McKane in the meantime returned to Gravesend boasting that he had demanded and obtained Lake's nomination for services in casting the vote of Gravesend for Harrison.

The republicans in Lake's ward had a candidate in Robert W. Fielding, and the chairman of the county committee, with all his followers, had been to Washington urging Fielding's appointment. Fielding declared that insult had been added to injury "by shelving me and taking in my place a democrat from my own ward whom I have had to fight politically for over a dozen years. Here I have been struggling to hold our party vote in this democratic district for a decade, and have had to buck against the great power of this fellow Lake backed by Boss McLaughlin."

The Journal says that the fact that "Mr. Lake was a faithful and competent officer brands the assertion that he was named by McKane as a falsehood." Lake never took the office. Before the time came he was killed on his way home from one of McKane's Gravesend horse races. The Journal attempts to shoulder the matter of Lake's appointment upon General Tracy. If Tracy had anything to do with it, he would now be filled with contrition; he would not attempt to lie out of it. He went into the cabinet with crude views as to the civil service; but those views became clarified and he did what he could, and in doing so he rendered his country a great service. He did not go into the administration a professed saint and come out a convicted promise-breaker and incorrigible sinner. Considering the confidential relations which the Journal holds with two members of the late administration it must have been in possession of all of the facts, and must have willfully prevaricated.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT IN BALTIMORE.

A certain oriental nation is said to have no legal title for its sovereign, he is too sacred to be named by his subjects. It may be for the same reason that there is no constitutional provision, statute or ordinance defining the powers or even recognizing the existence of the true ruler of Baltimore. I shall call him in this paper the Supreme Boss, but claim for the designation no other merit than that it will be readily understood by those most interested.

The office has existed for some twenty-five years, but it has not always been held by one man. On several occasions during that period it has been placed in commission. On October 27th, 1892, a speaker who had every reason to know whereof he spoke said at a public meeting:

"I tell you, your political liberties are in danger. There is a clique who have seized the democratic organization, and who hold it for personal aggrandizement. They have said to you (I am talking to democrats), 'We have determined who shall be the judges.' Frank Morrison, Robert J. Slater, and Rasin say to any young man who aspires to office: 'You shan't be nominated unless we say so, and we won't say so unless you pay for it.' Since then the two first named of the triumvirate have shared the fate of Antony and Lepidus, the democratic primaries of 1887 corresponding in result to the battle of Actium, and for the past six years an Augustus has borne unchallenged sway. The tenure of his office may be described as "during good behavior," but, "good" as thus used must be understood, like agathoi or aristoi in the literature of Greek politics, in the conventional sense. Mr. Freeman calls an aristocracy, as he uses the term, a rule of the best, not indeed of the best morally, but of those best fitted to rule. So a Baltimore boss remains such, while, and only while, he shows himself a better man than his competitors; not better in what he and they would call a Sunday-school sense, but better fitted to be a boss. Nowhere is the survived of the fittest better illustrated, each successive boss wrests power from the grasp of one who had previously clutched it and looks upon his own lieutenants and pupils much as a Roman Emperor regarded his generals. Were he a classical scholar (which he usually is not) his office might remind him of

"Those trees in whose dim shadow
The ghastly priest doth reign,
The priest who slew the slayer,
And shall himself be slain."

But, however this may be, he knows well enough that he will keep his place no moment longer than he can hold it with the strong hand against all odds and all comers.

A boss in Maryland, like a Turkish Pasha, owes his dignity to merit only, and in great measure to the same kinds of merit. For the one position, as for the other, no one is disqualified by humble birth or limited education, or questionable antecedents and reputation. A poor man may rise to be a boss as he may to be a Pasha; but, in either case, he usually becomes a rich man soon after. The American potentate, however, lives in no such barbaric splendor as surrounds his eastern brother. Again, like Augustus, our present ruler dwells among us to outward view a mere private citizen, with no shade of that divinity which doth hedge about a king. He is familiarly known as "Free," not because, as Clarendon said of an English king: "He is as free as any other monarch of Christendom," but from a corruption or abbreviation of his middle name. His colleague of the state at large (for we have a state boss as well) has been for some fourteen years a senator of the United States, but he has always preferred to rule Baltimore as Pericles did Athens, without any official authority. It is true that as Pericles was annually elected strategos, he has been successively a clerk of court, a naval officer of the port, and insurance commissioner, but the modern, no less than the ancient ruler, has invariably sought the substance, not the show, of power. He is willing that others should make and administer our laws, provided that he makes the law-makers and all other public servants, decides what laws shall be made and how they shall be administered. In certain respects, however, he differs widely from Pericles; he is no orator, and pretends to be no statesman. I do not recollect that I ever heard of his making a speech, and so far as my memory serves me, the only topic of national interest on which the public had a seemingly authentic statement of his views was the nomination of Mr. Cleveland in 1892. This he was reported to favor, although most of our politicians expressed another preference, because, as he was said to have declared in substance, "He had never found any cause to complain of Mr. Cleveland." Indeed, the cacoethes loquendi and any real interest in public affairs are very dangerous to a boss: the immediate predecessor of our present senior senator, both as senator and as state boss, and who was also afterwards city boss, had, while on both thrones, brief and turbulent reigns, closed by decisive overthrows, very largely because he could and would make speeches, and even express opinions in them.

The ordinary duties of a supreme boss are both responsible and onerous. He relieves those legal voters of the city who belong to its dominant party of the labor and anxiety involved in choosing candidates for all elective offices, and he renders, in no small measure, the same service to the party of opposition, for patriots of the kind called in New York "Tammany republicans," are well known in Baltimore. It will be remembered that this function had been already assumed by his former colleagues and himself in 1892, and, in view of the complaint then made by the speaker I have quoted, as to the terms of its exercise, I deem it but just to say that he has, to my knowledge, permitted, and even caused "young men who aspired to office" to be nominated without his being paid for it, at least in money or by them. In the principal democratic paper in Baltimore there appeared some months ago a narrative, in much detail, of his interview with another magnate, of greater dignity, but less real power, namely, the President of the United States. According to the account thus published, the latter requested of him recognition (in political parlance, a euphemism for some measure of support at public expense) for certain "elements" in their common party, guilty in the past of much disaffection and even insubordination towards the supreme boss, but in warm sympathy with the President's reputed views. Our ruler is said to have shown none of that ill-judged bitterness exhibited by Queen Liliuokalani towards the rebels against her authority, but conceded promptly and gracefully a "reasonable" portion of such "recognition," and soon after the alleged interview, four gentlemen belonging to the association which I here represent were notified of their selection to serve in the present general assembly, one as senator, three as delegates, from the city of Baltimore. Together with all the other candidates for these or any other offices, they were unanimously nominated by the appropriate convention; the functions of such bodies in Baltimore, and their relations to the boss being closely analogous to those of the old French parliaments when the king appeared in a lit de justice. No one who knows these gentlemen (and they are well known) needs any assurance from them that they have gone to the legislature absolutely untrammelled by pledges express, or implied, or doubts that whatever may have been the motives of those who offered them election, their acceptance was dictated by a sense of public duty; indeed, rumor credits the boss with an expression of perfect indifference as to what bills they might introduce, he would "take care," he is currently quoted as saying, of these bills afterwards. It is therefore clear that his act of gracious oblivion was either a matter of pure "comity," or else is to receive his reward from some one other than those immediately favored.

Article 9 of the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of Maryland declares:

"That no power of suspending laws or the execution of laws, unless by, or derived from the legislature, ought to be exercised or allowed."

"Nous avons changé tout cela," and a power of suspending laws or their execution exists in Baltimore, which is in no wise "derived from the legislature," although the political existence of members of the legislature is often "derived" from those who exercise this power. On our statute books are laws which seem to prescribe penalties for election frauds for various forms of gambling and of swindling disguised as gambling, for illicit liquor selling and for maintaining or advertising resorts for sexual immorality, but practically all these pretended crimes are licensed except the one first named, and that is rewarded. In an address which I delivered some years since at one of the annual meetings of our local society for the suppression of vice, I said, and I now and here repeat: "It is no exaggeration of language to say that saloons and gambling houses and brothels are here nurseries for statesmen, and the active hostility of their keepers is, if not fatal, at least a grave impediment to success in public life; and that men and women who gain their living by habitually breaking the laws have a potent voice in selecting the public servants, who make, interpret, and execute those laws. The proprietor of a dive may be of one party or the other; neither enjoys a monopoly of this desirable constituency, but, whatever his politics, he is almost certainly a power at the primaries as a factor in the vote of his precinct; only practical experience can teach how much these facts aggravate the task of bringing him to punishment." The fishing bounties once granted by the National Government were defended as fostering a nursery of seamen; we ought not to complain of a mere impunity for the breach of obsolete laws accorded to those who provide training schools for our future rulers.

Still less can we reasonably object to a service pension, in the form of permanent public employment, awarded to those who have "worked" for the boss or his lieutenants at the polls and even suffered for them in jail. Of the admirable custom lastly mentioned, a significant illustration has been recently brought to my knowledge. In the year 1887 the Baltimore Reform League prosecuted criminally a large number of those who had served as judges or clerks of election throughout the city in the autumn of 1886. By a deplorable oversight on the part of the reigning bosses, which has not been repeated, the assistant state's attorney was a lawyer of marked ability and disposed to really bring criminals to justice, and, as a consequence, some twelve or fifteen of the officers mentioned were convicted of fraud in various forms and sent to jail. Moreover, the annoying irritability of public opinion at that time, due in some measure to the previous conviction of two of the same set of election judges for a murder, committed after their appointment and just before the election, prevented the governor's receiving orders to pardon them until they had all endured some months of imprisonment. Among these exemplars of loyalty and zeal was a certain clerk of election who in July last was appointed elevator man at the post-office building. This patriot's record was investigated by a special committee of the Civil Service Reform Association of Maryland, and by them called to my attention as president of the association, and by me to that of the custodian of the building, who is also collector of internal revenue and the first appointee of the present administration to an important office in Maryland. My letter to him remained without acknowledgement, but very soon afterwards the newspapers announced that the health of the elevator man, undermined, perhaps, by his cruel incarceration for about seven months six years before, had failed under the arduous labors of his position, and this he resigned. Within the past month it has been ascertained that he continues to draw pay from the national treasury, but his post of duty has been changed to the basement, where he is well enough to act as fireman. The treatment of his case by his superiors exemplifies a kind of devotion to reform which displays itself upstairs and fades away as the reformer's scene of action disappears from public view. Doubtless this spirit has its merits, but it awakens in me a qualified enthusiasm.

A very important "condition" of municipal government in Baltimore is the "Grandmother's Fund." As I am away from home, it may be well to explain that this is not a particular sum of money committed to a designated custodian, but represents the aggregate proceeds of various kinds of tribute levied upon the community by its real, as contradistinguished from its nominal, rulers. This tribute includes assessments on office-holders and candidates for office, "benevolences" from contractors doing work or furnishing supplies of any kind to the city or state institutions under public control, the price of franchises and privileges and special legislation of every kind, whether from the city council or the general assembly, the amounts contributed by corporations when subjected to a process known technically as "plugging," and the ransom paid by criminals of all sorts, and especially, as I have endeavored to explain, by policy players, brothel keepers and offenders against the liquor laws, for impunity. It will be readily seen that great tact and judgment as well as vigilance, must be displayed in this work of levy, for, such is the selfishness of human nature, that hardly one of those tithable would hesitate to evade payment of even the most moderate subsidy could he do so with safety, and, on the other hand, here as elsewhere, business will be checked by a prohibitory tariff. It is, moreover, necessary to "size up" each "job" separately before this is undertaken, for the circumstances and the disposition of the person "struck" will often determine whether or how hard to strike him.

To study the supreme boss, his rivals, his followers and his revenue, is to learn something of the true conditions of municipal government in Baltimore; he can say with Louis XIV, and with much the same measure of truth: "L'Etat c'est moi," he embodies and typifies those influences which have made the city's politics what they are, just as the great monarch embodied and typified the absolutism of his time and country. Any one boss may lose power, or die or grow virtuous, when he is rich enough and wishes to get into good society; but while his environment remains what it is, he will surely have a successor. Every people has had, and will have always, as good a government as it deserves.

GOVERNMENT BY AN OLIGARCHY.

It is believed that the nomination of Scott Harrison, brother of the ex-President, to be surveyor of the port of Kansas City, will be defeated. Chairman Vest, of the committee having in charge the nomination, and a Missourian himself, says the nomination can not be confirmed. Senator Vest says he was not consulted about the nomination, which was a personal one of the President.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 9.

The senate committee on commerce has just rejected the nomination of J. Scott Harrison for surveyor of the port at Kansas City. It is stated that the vote was unanimous.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 11.

* * *

The senate, in executive session, yesterday rejected the nomination of J. Scott Harrison, to be surveyor of customs at Kansas City. A ye and nay vote was not asked upon the nomination after a statement of the case had been made by the Missouri senators.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, January 18.

* * *

This Mr. Harrison was a brother of ex-President Harrison, and a democrat. So Mr. Cleveland, as an act of courtesy to his predecessor, appointed him government surveyor at Kansas City, Mo., which is Mr. Harrison's home. It was an excellent appointment, and on its merits deserved to be confirmed, aside from the fact of the relationship with the ex-President. But President Cleveland hadn't consulted Senators Vest and Cockrell of Missouri, and these worthies immediately unsheathed their knives. In their search for "reasons" why J. Scott Harrison should not be confirmed, these senators claimed that the appointee was not a democrat, because he had voted for his brother for President of the United States, although being in Missouri, a safe democratic commonwealth, General Harrison's brother might have been pardoned for so doing in view of his fraternal feeling. But the august senate stood by Vest and Cockrell, and J. Scott Harrison was rejected simply because he was not the choice of the Missouri senators, and for no other reason in the world.—Springfield Republican, February 3.

* * *

There is considerable speculation as to the attitude of the two Missouri senators toward the nomination. Messrs. Vest and Cockrell voted against the confirmation of Mr. Hornblower, and it was taken for granted by many that they would take the same stand against Mr. Peckham, but Governor Francis of Missouri arrived in Washington, and soon after his arrival the report became current that he had come as a peacemaker, and would endeavor to restore harmony between the President and the senators from Missouri. The President this afternoon sent to the senate the nomination of John R. Walker of Missouri, to be United States attorney for the western district of Missouri, and of Gen. Joseph O. Shelby to be United States marshal in the same district. Mr. Walker is a brother-in-law of Senator Cockrell, and his application was presented by the senator some time ago. The senator, however, did not especially recommend him, or at least says he did not. Gen. Shelby was supported for the place for which he has now been named by Senator Vest.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, February 5.

* * *

In connection with the Hornblower case there is an interesting story afloat regarding the action of Senator Martin, of Kansas, in voting to confirm Mr. Hornblower. Some time ago the President nominated Dr. S. F. Neely, of Leavenworth, to be United States Marshal of Kansas. Neely had been recommended by Mr. Martin, and his appointment caused surprise to many who believed that the Kansas Senator was not in favor with the administration. It is said at the capitol that Mr. Martin induced the two New York senators to favor the immediate confirmation of Dr. Neely, and gave them to understand that he would vote against confirming Mr. Hornblower. However that may be, it is certain that Mr. Martin stood by the administration.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, January 17.

* * *

Interest in the Peckham case was intensified today by the arrival of Secretaries Gresham and Carlisle at the capitol about 1 o'clock. Secretary Gresham went to the marble room and Secretary Carlisle took a seat in the private room of Secretary of the Senate Cox.

For the next hour there were some animated discussions between the secretaries and senators whom they had summoned from their seats. It did not take Mr. Hill very long to ascertain that Messrs. Gresham and Carlisle were laboring in behalf of Mr. Peckham, and he immediately renewed his efforts to prove that he has greater influence with the senate than the administration has. A dozen or more senators who voted against Mr. Hornblower's confirmation were consulted by the two secretaries. Mr. Gorman had quite a long interview with Mr. Gresham. Mr. Martin, of Kansas, was another who was requested to meet the visitors. About the time Mr. Martin was invited out of the senate the President sent to the senate eleven Kansas post-office nominations. In the Hornblower struggle Mr. Martin was regarded as an ally of Hill. At the eleventh hour, however, he deserted Hill and voted for Hornblower, much to the disgust of the New York senators.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, February 8.

* * *

According to the officials of the senate more nominations have already been rejected than during the whole of President Harrison's term, and the end is not yet. The first contest in the senate to be brought to a vote was on the nomination of Van Alen, as ambassador to Italy, and was won by the administration. After a protracted struggle, the nominee was confirmed on October 20th, only to resign later on. Next came the attack on Hornblower, resulting in his rejection on January 15th. The committee on commerce was next supported by the senate on January 17th in the rejection of J. Scott Harrison, nominated to be surveyor of customs for Kansas City, Mo., both the Missouri senators opposing the executive. On the same day the name of Kope Elias, nominated to be collector of internal revenue for the 4th North Carolina district, against whom Senator Vance made a fight, was withdrawn, he having previously declined the appointment in order to restore harmony. His successor was promptly confirmed. Against F. M. Simmons, nominated for the other North Carolina district, Senator Vance, aided by the republicans, is waging a relentless war with the probability that the nominee will be rejected or forced to withdraw. On February 13th Benjamin Lenthier, nominated to be consul to Sherbrooke, Que., was rejected, to be followed three days later by the rejection of Wheeler H. Peckham in the second bout over the supreme court vacancy. The atmosphere is not yet clear in the matter of nominations. Senator Cullom is opposing confirmation of some postmasters in Illinois; Senator Cali is up in arms over the batch of appointments for Florida, sent in last week, and Mr. Hill has not ceased his attack on some New York nominations which are particularly objectionable to him.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, February 25.

* * *

The President to-day withdrew the nomination of Arthur M. Randall to be postmaster at St. Johnsbury, Vt. Mr. Randall is a democrat suggested for the office by Bradley B. Smalley, and, so far as anybody can find out, there is nothing the matter with him except that he is persona non grata to Representative Grout. Not long ago a case came before the committee from another state where the name of a postmaster sent in by the President to occupy an office at Danville, Ill., was withdrawn because Representative Cannon, a republican, objected to him. Having considered the subject in what it is pleased to call a "broad" manner, the committee resolved that it would not report any person for postmaster who was objectionable to the representative from the district.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, February 21.

QUINCY.

The senate has rejected the nomination of Benjamin Lenthier, of Massachusetts, to be consul at Sherbrooke, Canada. He was a personal selection of Josiah Quincy. He was first nominated soon after March 4, 1893. The nomination was not reported from committee, and when the extra session convened his name was again sent in. The nomination fell with the session and was renewed at the beginning of the present session. This time the nomination was reported unfavorably, the main objection being that Mr. Lenthier received his appointment as a reward for political services to Mr. Quincy.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 16.

Col. J. Courtney Hixson, appointed consul and judge of the consular court at Fuchu, China, has issued a printed circular containing his photograph, autograph and a sketch of his life. From this it appears that he was "bawn in Georgia, sah," but at an early age became a resident of Alabama. He has been "commandant" of the military department of the Alabama university, which, of course, makes him a colonel. He has also practiced law and been editor of a weekly paper at Union Springs at Ala. The circular says he was a writer of great force and originality. Of his personal appearance the colonel says: "Colonel Hixson has a striking personality, and in any crowd he would attract attention, being of splendid and massive physique—six feet tall, straight as an arrow, with a dark, heavy mustache and military imperial, and the easy, graceful bearing of a gentleman of education and travel." As this information is furnished by the colonel himself it may be accepted as reliable. Those who have seen him say that he does not at all exaggerate the impressiveness of his mustache, and that his imperial is, in the language of the day, "out of sight."—Indianapolis Journal, February 16.

One of the faithful and experienced officials to whose lot it fell to feel the keen edge of Mr. Quincy's guillotine during the latter's brief but sanguinary career in the state department was Mr. George L. Catlin, our consul at Zurich. A college friend of Mr. Catlin's at Yale has written a letter in which he expresses some very justifiable indignation at the manner in which the removal was accomplished. Mr. Catlin's first intimation was a paragraph in his evening paper announcing that one Eugene Germain of Los Angeles had been appointed to his place. That was the way a grateful republic rewarded sixteen years of continuous and successful labor in the consular service. Mr. Catlin was stationed first at La Rochelle and then at Stuttgart, before being transferred to Zurich, where Quincy's avenging blade found him. Mr. Catlin declares that he has "reason to believe that it was Mr. Josiah Quincy, and he alone, who did it—and that at five minutes' notice." What kind of a man is he whom our Massachusetts prince of spoilsmen turned off with such uncommonly short shrift? Mr. Catlin is a Yale alumnus, a veteran officer of the Union army, a gentleman of scholarly tastes, speaking fluently three European languages. For many years he was the editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser. Mr. Catlin was considered one of the model consuls of the service. He was retained by Mr. Cleveland during his first presidential term, only to fall a victim to our insatiable young Bay State "reformer."—Boston Journal.

Take Julius Goldschmidt, our late consul-general at Vienna, for instance. He was one of the most uncompromising republicans ever in public employ, but he was also one of the most efficient men in our foreign service. Quincy turned him out and put into his place a man whose chief claim rests on his ability to play chess.

Another instance in point was that of Consul-General Lay at Ottawa. From a consular point of view the place does not amount to a great deal, but on its semi-diplomatic side it is very important. Mr. Lay is a natural diplomat, and is on the most agreeable social terms with all in Ottawa whom it is useful to know. Why should he be called home to make room for Mr. Riley, who, whatever his virtues as a citizen, must figure as a raw recruit in diplomacy for a good while to come?

Warner P. Sutton, our consul-general at Nuevo Laredo, was another man whom nature seemed to have cut out for his particular place. The Mexicans are a people by themselves; not one American in ten thousand understands them. But Sutton does. He knows them, their language, their literature, their politics, their business and social interests. He understands how to treat them, and they like him and are ready to do anything for him. He had his eye on the whole frontier, and saved this country from many a collision on the border land. He must have been in the service a dozen years or so.

Adamson, our consul-general at Panama, had some odd traits, was a good deal of a martinet, and possessed a tremendous thirst for paper controversy when aroused. He was, nevertheless, so useful an officer, and so thorough-going an expert in local matters on the isthmus, that he served under Arthur, Cleveland and Harrison without disturbance.

Fechet, who was consul at Piedras Negras, is now in Washington, doing clerical work for one of the senators. He was a good consul, with something like a genius for the special duties laid on him in Mexico. Brown, who was at Glasgow, was a first-rate consul, and made a good local reputation for Americans, which is of great advantage to us in such a community. His reports were of the highest value to the department. Thomas H. Sherman at Liverpool—who was one of the stand-bys of the department, and whose knowledge of his consulate even before he went there was greater than any new man could hope to acquire after a considerable residence—must give way when Quincy takes charge. Why? The answer which Mr. Quincy would make to this question doubtless would be that the place is worth $40,000 a year with its fees, and that it must go to some one belonging to the party in power. But why not ask congress to order the fees put into the treasury and give the office a fair salary, and then try to keep an experienced man there?

Trail, who was consul at Marseilles through Harrison's term, served under the former Cleveland administration as secretary of legation at Rio; so he evidently was not an offensive partisan. He was a Harvard graduate, a good linguist and a most faithful consul, sticking to his post through all the cholera panic and keeping the department carefully informed of everything which would be of value in protecting this country against the invasion of the scourge. He seemed to be ambitious for a career, and he ought to have been encouraged. So ought Washburn and Loomis, two other young men who gave promise of a future of marked usefulness. Washburn was consul at Madgeburg, and his reports were among the very best sent to Washington. He was a Cornell graduate, and a bright, intelligent fellow. Loomis was a scholarly young man and an able writer. He was at St. Etienne when his head came off. The crime for which he suffered was that he had been private secretary to Clarkson, the Iowa republican boss, while the latter was in charge of the campaign of 1888. But although Loomis was an ardent republican, he divorced politics and business, and would have made a useful officer under any administration.

Gardner, who was at Rotterdam, was another strong partisan. It is not known whether he would have wanted to stay; but Quincy should have given him the chance if he was willing, for he was one of the most faithful and energetic men we ever had in the service.

Frank Hill, who was consul at Montevideo, was one of Cleveland's original appointees. He was sent as consul to Asuncion in 1887. He was a Minnesota man, and a warm personal friend of the late Secretary Windom's. When Mr. Windom entered President Harrison's cabinet, he interested himself in procuring Hill's promotion—a task which was not difficult, because his record was of the best. Catlin, at Munich, was a nephew of ex-Secretary Tracy. He did not distinguish himself for exceptional general ability, but he was admirably fitted by his personal traits and education for the special place to which he had been assigned. Dougherty, at Callao, found consular work congenial, and did it in the most satisfactory manner.—Washington dispatch to New York Evening Post, January 20.

It is to be said of the appointment of Michael J.

Griffin as postmaster of Holyoke that the office has been filled on the basis of political support, and not on the simple and sound ground of seeking to discover what the business men and patrons of the office wanted and doing it. Mr. Griffin finally won the favor of Josiah Quincy and the democratic state committee, through a more or less open harmonizing of conflicting local ambitions, and so the democratic machine has carried the day, just as it has been boasting it would do. The activity of the democratic state committee in post-office fights, under the leadership of Josiah Quincy is something beyond what this state has before seen.—Springfield Republican, January 12.

* * *

It is an interesting fact in this connection that the ante-room of Mr. Quincy's Boston office is daily crowded with hungry applicants for place, and that the initials "J. Q." appear upon the papers of most of the successful candidates for the Massachusetts post-offices.—Springfield Republican.

* * *

Josiah Quincy's latest performance, while no worse in principle than some other things he has done, is liable to bring the administration into real trouble. There is a very large scandal brewing over his acceptance of a retainer from the government of the Argentine Republic to represent its interests as counsel before President Cleveland, who has been chosen arbitrator of the boundary controversy between Argentina and Brazil. The only ostensible reason for choosing Mr. Quincy for this work when so many abler international lawyers could have been retained, was his intimacy and supposed influence with the President.—Washington dispatch, February 15.

CARISLE.

Collector of the Port Townsend to-day appointed William A. Comegys as deputy collector. Secretary Carlisle recently ordered Collector Townsend to discharge William R. Shinn, his republican deputy, and to appoint John F. Cattahan in his place. This the collector refused to do, and selected Comegys, who is a democrat and ex-speaker of the house of representatives.—Wilmington dispatch, New York Times, February 17.

"The chief attorney of the lottery is the secretary of the treasury, John G. Carlisle." So says Manager James Douglass of the Kentucky State Lottery.

John H. Wise, of California, came to Washington last spring to plead his claims to "recognition" by the new administration, and went back in June with the collectorship of the port of San Francisco in his pocket. He was so full of Democratic zeal that he dribbled interviews all along his route westward, telling how he was going to reorganize the custom-house force and turn it into a good democratic institution.

Among his first acts as a reorganizer was the dismissal of several republicans who were in the classified service. Two examiners named Raymer Sharp and Charles J. Evans, and a sampler named G. D. Bunker, who were appointed on probation under his predecessor, Collector Phelps, reached the end of their probationary period on the 21st of June. Appraiser Ralston reported to the collector:

They have been punctual, industrious, and show themselves to have the ability to fill their positions thoroughly. I commend them to your favorable consideration, and recommend that they be appointed according to the civil service rules.

The collector's only response came in the form of a letter to each of the probationers, saying:

Your conduct and capacity not having been satisfactory to me as nominating officer, you will not be absolutely appointed, and therefore, in accordance with the terms of your temporary appointment, you will be out of service on the 22d inst., as provided in the civil service rules and regulations.

Mr. Sharp is a Harvard graduate and Mr. Evans a graduate of the University of California. Their places were filled by the reinstatement of two democrats named I. G. Underwood and D. W. Morris, who were removed by Collector Phelps. "I think it is only right that they should be reinstated," Mr. Wise was quoted as saying to a representative of the San Francisco Call.

"Sharp and Evans did not succeed them directly, but, as they are new men and on the probation list, I can remove them, and thus provide places for Underwood and Morris."

"Have the conduct and capacity of Messrs. Sharp, Evans, and Bunker been satisfactory?" he was asked.

"Certainly, and nothing can be said against them in that respect. As far as I know there has never been a complaint against them."

When asked if he had received the appraiser's letter commending the probationers, he answered:

"Yes, I believe there was such a letter received, but I did not pay much attention to it."

"Why did I remove Sampler Bunker? Just because I had to make a place for W. R. Prouse. Mr. Bunker performed his duties all right, but you know how it is—I must make places for some of my friends."

Two other sufferers in like manner, "to make room for friends" of the collector, though guiltless of any misdoings, were Inspector L. E. Beban and Night Inspector T. J. Halpin.

The attention of the civil service commission was called to the cases, and it investigated them. The affidavits of the newspaper reporter who had the significant interview with the collector, was forwarded from California and laid before the secretary of the treasury, with the other facts in the case. Wise was confronted with the affidavit, and admitted that it was substantially the truth.

Secretary Carlisle has written to the collector ordering him to reinstate Sharp, Bunker, Beban, and Halpin. The case of Evans is still under advisement.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 9.

A "shake up"—so-called—the first of many yet to come, occurred among the clerks in the register's office, treasury department, to-day. The work of reorganizing the register's office is now in progress. Reforms will follow in other offices, and a plan mapped out by Secretary Carlisle contemplates the saving of from $350,000 to $400,000 a year in the treasury department when all the bureaus and divisions shall be trimmed down and all of what is regarded as "dead timber" shall be eliminated from the treasury roll.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, February 13.

* * *

The changes made by Secretary Carlisle in assistant chiefs of division in the treasury department were officially announced this morning. Burton T. Doyle of Tennessee, first controller's office, is appointed assistant chief of the warrant division, vice Charles H. Miller of Massachusetts, reduced; Silas L. Lupton of Virginia, first auditor's office, is appointed assistant chief of public moneys division, vice Jerome Wise of New York, reduced. All the new men appointed are within the classified service at present, and all those reduced have been dropped into fourth-class clerkships at $1,800 a year.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, January 27.

* * *

The remains of John L. Ingraham, of Jeffersonville, the treasury clerk who died suddenly in Representative Jason B. Brown's room at the Riggs yesterday afternoon, were shipped to his old home this afternoon. There appears to be no doubt that the recent changes in the division where he worked and fear concerning the stability of his position and desire for a promotion and transfer wrought his death. He probably died from heart trouble.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, January 29.

* * *

The treasury department is getting another shaking up from Secretary Carlisle and his energetic son, Chief Clerk Logan Carlisle, which is causing something of the terror that was felt last spring when Mr. Sturtevant, the experienced chief of the stationery division, was removed. A number of assistant chiefs of divisions were disgraced a fortnight ago and clerks from the classified service, whose democracy was vouched for by their local representatives, were shoved up into their places. These changes were recommended in one or two cases on the ground of the efficiency of the service, but in others politics was apparently the controlling reason. Controller Eckels did not take kindly to the idea of having his chiefs of division "fired" without his approval. When one of his chiefs, W. W. Eldridge, of Maryland, brought him a request which he had received from the secretary's office for his resignation, Mr. Eckels was a good deal surprised and somewhat piqued. He had heard nothing of it, and he promptly took the paper to Secretary Carlisle and intimated that he would like to have some knowledge, if not some voice, when changes were to be made in his office. He stated that Mr. Eldridge had been promoted under Secretary Fairchild; that he was a competent official and that he did not wish him removed. The secretary admitted the force of these representations, and Mr. Eldridge will not be disturbed. Secretary Carlisle is not much of a fighter, and he probably did not care for a round with the young controller. There are not many chiefs of bureaus, however, who have the courage and independence of Mr. Eckels in such matters, and Mr. Eldridge would undoubtedly have had to go if he had been in any other bureau. The present management at the treasury department is very different from that which prevailed under Mr. Fairchild, Mr. Cleveland's former secretary of the treasury. Mr. Fairchild recognized nothing but merit in making appointments and promotions, and several republicans, among them A. T. Huntington, who comes from Western Massachusetts, received important advancement while he was secretary.—Washington dispatch, Springfield Republican, February 16.

MISCELLANEOUS SPOIL.

By the appointment of Messrs. O'Donnell and Beach to-day as postmasters at Pittsburgh and New Haven respectively, President Cleveland has disposed of two cases which have given him considerable trouble. He has repeatedly referred to them as the two "hard" cases of his administration.

There was a fierce contest over the Pittsburgh office. The state administration, as well as Mr. Harrity, the chairman of the national democratic committee, were favorable to Messrs. Larkin and Foley. Congressmen Sipe indorsed Mr. Howley. Mr. O'Donnell was the dark horse in the race. He had been an applicant for the office of surveyor of customs at Pittsburgh, but had stepped aside for another candidate, whose friends subsequently indorsed Mr. O'Donnell. After considering the matter for several months, the President, finding it impossible to choose between the other three, selected Mr. O'Donnell as the compromise candidate.

Mr. Beach, who was nominated as postmaster at New Haven, was the only candidate for the office. He had the indorsement of Congressman Pigott, but strong pressure was brought to bear upon the President to retain Mr. N. D. Sperry, the republican incumbent. The influences in favor of Mr. Sperry were so great that the President hesitated for two months before making the change.

The first assistant postmaster will be John J. Lane, private secretary to Congressman Pigott from this district.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, March 9.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell, the axman of the post-office department, is threatened with a duel, and, what is worse, with a congressional investigation. The man who is after his official and physical scalp is Representative Strait, of South Carolina. The congressman claims that Mr. Maxwell has not only persistently deceived him but actually lied to him in regard to the distribution of post offices in the Palmetto state. Mr. Strait has, therefore, sent a letter to Mr. Maxwell, one paragraph of which reads as follows:

"You have promised to notify me when you were ready to consider the post-office appointments in Lancaster county, South Carolina. You have lied to me. You are unworthy the notice and respect of a gentleman, and you are nothing but a — puppy."

He was elected to the present congress as an alliance democrat, and is a radical free-trader and free silverite, but is welcomed in the deliberations of the democratic caucus. Last fall the anti-Tillmanites of the South Carolina delegation were black-listed at the post-office department after a long conference between the Tillmanites, represented by Senator Irby, and their opponents, represented by Senator Butler. At this conference, which was presided over by Postmaster-General Bissell, there was a very lively time, and some of the participants came very near having a knock-down argument. Mr. Strait is a Tillmanite; so his name has ever since been on the black-list, and he has been absolutely ignored, being unable to name the postmaster even in his own town.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, February 23.

* * *

The bitter struggle for the postmastership of Plainfield is practically ended. John Hetfield undoubtedly will get the place.

There were a dozen applicants for the post, but Congressman Dunn and the democratic senators united in favor of Mr. Hetfield, and his name on Saturday was sent in to the postmaster-general.—Plainfield dispatch, New York Times, March 11.

* * *

There was great excitement on the floor of the house this morning by a report that Chairman Wilson, of the ways and means committee, who is sick in Mexico, had taken a sudden turn for the worse. Mr. Wilson's closest friends here have but little hope of his recovery. Mr. Wilson himself, when he left for Mexico, intimated to two of his associates on the committee the belief that he would never return alive. The West Virginia congressman was very weak physically, and had succumbed to the continual strain of work on the tariff bill and the importunities of the office-seekers. He had more than six hundred applicants for office from his district, and being near Washington most of them waited upon him in person and pressed their claims persistently while he was in the thickest of the tariff fight.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, March 1.

* * *

The vice-president has fared pretty well under the present administration as regards the places in the public service conferred upon members of his family. The latest one to profit is his son, Lewis G. Stevenson, who is now private secretary to the vice-president, and who was married a little while ago. The young man is slated for appointment as assistant paymaster in the navy.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, March 9.

* * *

It would be sad news to Senator Voorhees and Indiana congressmen to hear that the government printing office had been brought under civil service regulations. The Senator has as many appointees in that bureau as any other man in Congress, with the possible exception of Senator Gorman. Even under the Harrison administration the senator's friends were "placed." When every other department seemed crowded to the limit with Hoosier employes, Senator Voorhees, as a last resort, always sent his trusty lieutenant, Faulkner, to the government printing office with "his man," and he has never come away disappointed.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, December 27.

* * *

The condition of affairs in the government printing office amounts almost to a crisis. Public Printer Palmer has no assurances whether or not he will continue to serve in that capacity during the remainder of the administration or give way to a democrat. This unsettled condition of affairs has lasted for several months. Mr. Palmer has discharged none of the old working force of the office put in under the Harrison administration, and several hundred new employes have been added to the force since the new administration came into power, at the urgent demand of democratic senators and representatives. A few weeks ago the public printer found that he had a larger force on hand than ever before, and that they were idle about half the time. The additions to the force continually added to the crowded condition of the building, until eight men are working in one alley, where formerly only four were placed in the arrangement for convenience.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, March 2.

* * *

Collector Kilbreth yesterday restored the custom house cartage contract to Thomas A. Briggs. The treasury regulations call for the advertising of bids for the contract, which is estimated to be worth $100,000 a year. Collector Magone, when he was in charge of the custom house, awarded the contract to Briggs, who was the lowest bidder. Last summer Collector Hendricks took the contract away from Briggs, and, without advertising for bids, awarded it to George B. Deane, Jr., the republican leader in the ninth assembly district, who took in partnership Bernard J. Biglin, George Hilliard, George Wanmaker, all republican district leaders in this city, and Le Roy Jacobs of Greene county. Yesterday Mr. Kilbreth canceled the contract with Deane and restored it to Briggs.—New York Times, February 10.

[Why "restore" to Briggs except upon open competition to the lowest bidder?]

So many changes in the unclassified list of employes in Collector Kilbreth's department at the appraiser's stores have taken place recently that the men speak of them as nothing short of a revolution in the department causing for the present considerable confusion. So many new faces are seen, it is said, that it is hard to tell who are employes of the department, even for those who have been there for some time. One of Appraiser Bunn's men the other evening saw a man in the stores whom he believed had no business there, and unceremoniously ordered him out. The man returned and proved himself a recently appointed watchman. Since then unfamiliar faces at the stores are regarded with caution. The changes have been made quietly, not from any feeling of compunction, for that they were made for political reasons is freely admitted. It has been done without fuss, in order to keep off a host of applicants, otherwise, it is said, the collector's office would have been crowded with at least 500 applicants for many days. Gen. Williams, when seen to-day, was very reticent on the subject, but he admitted that the radical change described had taken place. When asked for what cause, he said: "Oh, these changes are simply political; there is no other cause. They take place at the beginning of each administration. The men understand this perfectly well, and there is not much ado when they find themselves discharged.—New York Evening Post, January 20.

P. H. Geelan, postmaster at Big Springs, Kansas, was shot and killed to-day by Fred Hill. The shooting was the result of hard feelings between the men, because Geelan had held the post-office four years and did not get out and allow a successor to be named. Both are prominent in local politics. Hill's weapon was a rifle. The shooting occurred in the post-office.—Associated Press Dispatch, March 14.

In the appointment of William R. Dawson at Tidoute, Pa., this administration recognizes again the importance of a county chairman. About a year ago John M. Sigfried, democratic chairman of Warren county, carried off the Warren postmastership with its $2,700 salary. It is the most remunerative office in the county. Mr. Sigfried was succeeded as chairman by Mr. Dawson, who now rakes in the $1,500 postmastership at Tidoute, the second office in the county. Mr. Dawson was postmaster under the other Cleveland administration and made a good record. A savage fight was made against him this time, but he won with ease.

The democrats who have been conspiring to have Postmaster Dornfeld at North Tonawanda ousted because the office has been promoted to the presidential class, have run afoul an obstacle. It appears that Mr. Dornfeld is a democrat, and was appointed as a democrat by the fourth assistant postmaster-general, Col. Rathbone, just previous to the incoming of this administration.—Washington Dispatch, Buffalo Express, March 13.

Indianapolis, Ind.

THE index of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE through the Harrison administration will be sent without charge to all who request it.

MRS. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS has tendered to the senate the bust of Sumner presented to her husband by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It almost seems as if this were a case of casting pearls. What does the senate of the United States to-day know or care about Charles Sumner and his ideas of the duties and dignities of the once honored office of senator? Is it not almost an ignominy to place the bust of Sumner in the midst of men whose days and nights have been given up to patronage traffic? Would that the marble bust could come to life long enough to speak the mind of Sumner on the political lowness of the senate; when, for instance, the Indiana members sell a pension agency for the naming of every clerk but one which the agent demands for a relative, and their colleagues still meet them as honorable men and gentlemen.

THE republicans of this county have made their nominations for the various lucrative county offices. They are not interesting except that being made in the full expectation of election, they indicate about what we could expect of the party if again in power. Generally speaking, the nominees are of the machine; to a man they are thorough spoilsmen, largely wheel-horses, apt to be attached to political moves which will succeed for the time being, and who have done in the past a good deal of party machine work, with the hope and expectation of its leading sooner or later to a good paying office. There is nothing very lofty or patriotic about this. The people of Indiana for a good while have been trying to get rid of being taxed outrageously for the purpose of making lucky party machine men rich out of county offices. The struggle has been a desperate one between the people and the holders and seekers of these offices. These nominees will not help along that reform, but will do all they can to block it. These remarks are pertinent, because the republicans here are saying that all who want reform in the county offices will vote their ticket.

THE proposed changes we mentioned last month in the Indianapolis post-office and pension agency are under full headway. Men and women are being turned out because they are republicans and other men and women are being put in because they are democrats or relatives, or more than all, because they are named by political bosses. This travesty upon business principles is being carried on side by side with the operation of the classified service. In that service there is no terror, no inhumanity and no practice which would wreck any private business. That this is infinitely better is universally admitted. Why, then, does President Cleveland permit the other to go on? Why does he not put the whole pension agency and the heads of divisions in this post-office under the rules? In this pension agency the situation shows the degradation of politics. Mr. Spencer, the pension agent, is a member of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association; yet, to get this office, on his own admission, he promised every one of the twenty eight places in it to Senators Voorhees and Turpie, except one place reserved for his sister, and which she has received. Voorhees and Turpie sold him the office and he sold them the places; President Cleveland ratified the contract, and it is now being carried out. If the President's apologists say that he knew nothing of the contract, and then the facts are brought to his notice by the Indiana association, and he refuses to remove Spencer, will they still deny his ratification of the contract?

THE New York Times, of April 14th, says that a month ago the President notified Senator Gorman and the rest of the Maryland delegation to submit a "slate" of Maryland appointments, "intimating, however, that he reserves two places for himself—the postmaster at Baltimore, and the district attorney." The "slate" has been submitted and the President has made the nominations, and in doing so, he has perpetuated the power of a man who for years has deprived the State of Maryland of free government.

The Indianapolis Sentinel, of April 16th, has a valuable dispatch from Washington concerning Gorman. The latter is apparently engaged in holding up the nomination of public printer until patronage terms are made. There are 2,000 employes in the printing office, and they are not in the classified service. Eight years ago Gorman was on the committee of public printing and secured so many appointments in the printing office that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad ran a special train from Baltimore to Washington every morning, and back every night, to carry Gorman office-holders to and from their work. With those office-holders he completely throttled every attempt to throw off his machine. When the senate committees were reorganized under this administration, Gorman could have had his pick, but he chose the committee on printing, having an eye to the 2,000 places. His reasons are well set forth in the Sentinel dispatch:

In Baltimore there is a strong reform element in the democratic party opposed to Gorman, which has repeatedly failed to crush out the Maryland boss for want of organization. With the entire democratic press of Baltimore, and the professional and business element against him, Gorman always carries the primaries of that city, notwithstanding. This he accomplishes through the ward politicians, who are well organized under the control of trusted leaders. A machine politician can not succeed unless he is loyal to his henchmen, and Gorman never forgets the men who fight for him at the primaries, and Gorman men are seen by the hundreds at the navy yard, in the printing office, on the capitol police, and other public works of this city. Gorman does not barter his patronage on the "statesmen" of his state. The appointment of a Maryland man to a diplomatic or consular position is of no benefit to Gorman. The appointment of a ward-worker, or a township boss to a place on the capitol police, or an active Baltimore printer to a job in the printing office, will bring greater returns to Gorman when he has a fight on hand at the primaries, than the appointment of a dozen foreign ministers. When the primary day is at hand, the printers, carpenters, blacksmiths, whom he fixes with jobs at Washington, go home and pull of their coats and whoop it up for their boss at the primaries. That is practical politics.

But what about President Cleveland? He knows Gorman, and he knows that he is, and has been for years, at the head of a machine in which the efforts of thugs, murderers and scoundrels have been indispensable. Why does Mr. Cleveland have anything to do with such a man?

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

I sincerely regret the attitude of the present administration toward the reform. But I find it difficult to believe that Mr. Cleveland is guilty of direct vote-buying by selling offices. It seems to me you should not depart from your usual practice of being specific. Give names, dates, offices, etc., before imputing so much evil to one we feel is in sympathy with our cause.

We were never present, and never expect to be present, at the making of such bargains. We did not hear the bargain by which Wanamaker raised money for Quay, and received the postmaster-generalship, but we know that he got the office because he raised the money. We were not present when any bargain was made that McKane should count the vote of Gravesend for Harrison, and name the United States marshal, but we know that he was allowed to name the marshal for that service. We can not give names, dates and offices where Platt has made deals with Tammany, but we know that such deals have been carried out for years. We heard no bargain by which Van Alen was to give $30,000 to the campaign fund, and receive the Italian mission, but we know he was named for the mission because he made the contribution. We were not present when votes upon the silver question were traded for patronage, but such votes were given. Nor did we hear patronage bargained for votes for Peckham, but patronage was used to secure such votes. Bargains in such matters are never made. Direct purchase and sale never occurs. But if any man can say that Mr. Cleveland has not used the patronage to influence congressmen's votes he is blind to the facts. It has been universally asserted. Voorhees has said that the President has been so kind to him in patronage that he could not refuse him anything. Quincy has openly boasted of the value and power of patronage in securing legislation. Senator Lodge gave as one of his reasons for voting against Peckham the shameless use of patronage to purchase votes for him. Not one of these and other facts is pretended to be denied.

SINCE the statement was published, of which the CHRONICLE gave the figures last month, showing that the changes in post-offices aggregate more than they did in the same time under Harrison, we have been looking for the per cent. calculator, who, in Mr. Cleveland's first administration, so gravely figured out apologies amid the wrecks of the civil service which strewed the country, and he has come. A writer, from Washington to the New York Evening Post, March 28, takes account of the whole number of post-offices existing at the respective times and makes out that in the presidential offices during the first year and nineteen days the changes under Wanamaker were 17 per cent. and under Bissell 11 per cent. In the fourth-class post-offices during the first year the changes were 37 per cent. under Wanamaker and 34 per cent. under Bissell. The writer also repeats the following Cleveland saw:

To anybody who wishes to see things as they are and not distort them for purposes of misrepresentation, it will be plain enough that the spirit of civil service reform has made distinct progress, even if it has not gone as far as some of its promoters would have been glad to see it go.

We shall never be able to comprehend what satisfaction arises from such figuring and reasoning. In the opportunity to break up the loot of the fourth-class post-offices Mr. Bissell had one of the greatest which come to the hand of a statesman. He has completely missed it. His attempt to establish a four-year tenure is not a blessing but a curse, for it extends the scope of the pernicious four-year tenure act of 1820. Whether he goes a little slower or a little faster does not alter the facts. The fourth-class post-offices are being looted by congressmen and that is all there is of it.

SINCE the above was written, Mr. Everett P. Wheeler has, in the New York Times of April 16th, a blanket apology for the administration. Any one who knew Mr. Wheeler knew that this would come sooner or later. It is, perhaps, sufficient to say that he adopts Quincy's notion that consulships and other offices will be looted until the looters, that is the congressmen, pass a law forbidding it. Meanwhile, the President, with absolute authority vested in him by the constitution, is helpless. Mr. Wheeler does not notice such little circumstances as the snubbing of the reform democratic element in Indiana which secured Cleveland's nomination at Chicago, while the Voorhees-distillery crowd revel in spoil. Nor does the undisputed fact that the administration tried to buy votes with patronage for Peckham seem to have made any impression upon Mr. Wheeler. As chairman of the executive committee of the New York Civil Service Reform Association, Mr. Wheeler sat for years and let Tammany tweak the nose of the civil service law, and his view of the matter was that you could not believe all you heard.

A SENATE committee after a long investigation introduced a bill to improve the organization and methods of the treasury department. The second controller happens to be one Joe Nicholl, once a not very successful lawyer of Indianapolis, a government clerk during the first Cleveland administration, a brother-in-law of Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, and a nephew of the late Joseph E. McDonald, being one of the relatives that the latter so freely quartered upon the people. The new bill proposes to abolish Nicholl's office, and the Washington dispatches all say that for that reason Voorhees and Turpie and every democratic congressman, including Holman, are opposing the bill with all their might, and are confident of defeating it. In this they are entirely true to their political nature. That nature is to strike the lowest political level that can possibly be found; and to keep Joe Nicholl in "a good soft berth," quickens their energies to an alacrity in which they delight. Their notion of statesmanship is to work and keep henchmen in place at whatever cost, and without any regard for the public service; to work the pension system for all it is worth, without any regard to merit or to the principles upon which pensions should be granted; and to load up the treasury with cheap dollars, without any regard to or knowledge of financial principles, utterly reckless of the effect upon the business of the country—and utterly oblivious of the fact that variation, or danger of variation in the standard of value, is the most successful paralyzer of business the befogged wit of man ever invented.

THE young men of the Christian Endeavor Societies in Kansas City and the "department of good citizenship" in the Indianapolis Christian Endeavor Union are stated to be engaged "actively, though quietly and unobtrusively," in the effort to promote the interests of good government. They are urged "to attend the primaries and to see to it, personally, that only clean, pure men are nominated." The machine has always been very much in earnest in pointing out the primary as the proper field for the reformer to work in. McKane, Murphy, Hill, Platt, Croker, Divver Gorman, Quay, and all the other big and little bosses are disinterested and emphatic in this opinion that the primary is the spot where the good citizen has the chance to down the bad citizen, and for thirty years their gullible victims have been bunced again and again. It does not seem as if it required a very clever man to see that men whose living is assured by public taxation, with time and some offices to give and contracts to control, and with an increasing skill with increasing experience can "steer," neatly and successfully, the young men of the Christian Endeavor Union so that they really assist, by their respectability, to hide the operations of a selfish, unscrupulous party machine.

No man has any duty to meet the boss and the machine in the primary. He stands no show and he will accomplish nothing. Learn from the enemy to do the one thing that always starts him to profane and ribald denunciation—be an independent, uncertain voter.

IN his closing address to the law class at the Leland Stanford University, ex-President Harrison advised the members to "keep out of politics." Probably he had in mind the politics with which he has always been familiar—machine politics, Slick Six politics, politics which extends from very small deals and trades to the distribution of offices by the hundred thousand among political buccaneers. If this was in mind the advice was well timed. In not defining his meaning, Mr. Harrison indicated his own limitations. Any college man who does not propose to take an active and incessant part in such matters as municipal reform and in breaking up the spoils system generally, in maintaining a sound currency and in the minor, but ever present question of taxation, has not been well educated, and is not a good citizen. Every man should take a part in politics; he should give time to it, make sacrifices for it, and no important election or political movement should take place without his giving his best efforts to the side that makes for freeing government in every relation and locality from the parasites which prey upon it.

Mr. McAneny, assistant secretary, says in his monthly report:

That the work of enrolling members in the anti-spoils league is progressing with an encouraging degree of success. The league numbers 8,229 voters. The signatures represent 871 localities, distributed through forty-seven states and territories. In sixty cities, in which there are at present no active civil service reform associations, the signers form a body numerous enough to warrant urging the organization of such associations at once in affiliation with the national league.

BOSS GOVERNMENT.

Its Dependence Upon Spoil; Its Wide Ramifications; Its Impregnable Position Having Spoil to Give—Every Phase of which is Illustrated in New York.

This issue of the CHRONICLE devotes considerable space to an attempt to show how New York is now governed. A corrupt trading machine, manned by Platt for the state of New York and called the republican party, and democratic Tammany, entrenched in its largest city of over two millions, and formidable democratic machines elsewhere, like McLaughlin's in Brooklyn and Murphy's in Troy, make conditions favorable for the manifestation of every phase of the boss system. It is worth while to study the conditions in New York and the biographies of the two notorious bosses, Divver and Murphy, given elsewhere, because it all makes plain what a good many people are apt to forget—that the essential features of boss government are the same in New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Gravesend, Indiana and Podunk. If our machine does not murder and maim as do Gorman's and Murphy's; does not blackmail and flaunt its manifold power openly and on a great scale as does Boss Croker's, and does not bully when nullifying the franchise as did McKane's, we get to thinking that the home machine is different and harmless. It may be more galling to be ruled by a machine dominated by a single boss than by a machine run by an oligarchy, but there is no difference in methods. Tammany in New York and the Slick Six in Indianapolis got their power by the use of spoil and by spoil maintained their power. All boss or machine government is spoils government. The two are never found separated. And whether accomplished by Tammany methods or Gorman methods or Quay methods or Podunk methods there is always a throttling of the natural workings of a democratic government; always the use and manipulation of the tough and law-breaking elements of the community, and always the smothering by brutality or by guile of the disinterested and patriotic leadership of both parties. The state and city of New York seem to lie helpless under the heel of a boss system developed as variously and wonderfully as it is possible to conceive.

The chief cause of this helplessness is Mr. Platt's republican machine. It is responsible for the continued supremacy of Tammany. It might have been ended again and again had it not had secret republican aid.

"Many people fancy, because Gov. Hill carried New York when President Cleveland was defeated, that a plurality of the voters in the state would support him again, but in that contest, as the people here well know, Hill succeeded only because he was able to sell a presidency for a governorship.—New York Tribune, February 14, 1890.

Last autumn Mr. Platt had no intention of winning a republican victory, but the astutest of bosses occasionally miscalculates the depth of a popular uprising. The New York legislature became heavily republican, and decent citizens took courage. It could not fail to investigate the Tammany government of New York city root and branch. There is now a "Platt" investigation on after weeks of mysterious delays and moves, and rumors of trades and dickers regarding this investigation, and after the conduct of it had been declined by a number of lawyers of distinction. Wheeler H. Peckham gives the reason:

"This time they can't find a lawyer. What's the reason? I know, for myself, it is because they wouldn't give me the power, without which I wouldn't act, and because they wouldn't allow me to direct the prosecution whither I wished."

The speaker of the house goes weekly to Platt for instructions and every intelligent man who is not a partisan knows that Platt's will is the legislature's will. Platt is investigating Tammany's police department just far enough to get two of his men on the commission instead of Croker having all four.

A reform bill introduced into the legislature gave power to the next mayor to remove the heads of departments and to appoint their successors, making all their terms expire with that of the mayor. This bill has just been defeated by the aid of Platt republican votes. It hit Tammany but Platt wants Tammany and relief comes from his men. If a reform mayor like Schieren, of Brooklyn, should be elected next year, he would have to work with every head of department a Tammany selection; Mike Daly as commissioner of public works, Scannell in the fire department and so on. What could he do?

Republican Hamilton Fish reports favorably bills increasing Tammany salaries; and he wears to-day some diamond shirt studs, the gift of Tammany. Says Owens, nominated by a Platt machine and elected last autumn to the legislature:

"I am a republican on general principles, but there is a $7,500 mortgage on my house, and I think I ought to do all I can this winter to pay it off. Isn't that all right?"

With every paper of standing in New York clamoring for favorable action on various bills in the interest of good government and for the benefit of New York City, the New York Tribune in alliance with Platt, had only a few perfunctory words for such bills as

The rapid-transit bill of the chamber of Commerce.

The bill to put the sheriff on a salary and give all the fees of his office to the city.

The bill giving the next mayor power to remove all heads of departments.

The New York Post says:

Clear as is the trace of Tammany power in all these cases, it comes out most plainly in the treatment of the chamber of commerce's rapid transit bill. That is a measure upon which the best and most intelligent elements of the city are agreed as furnishing the wisest solution of the problem. Yet, when Mr. Hewitt went to Albany yesterday to advocate it, he discovered that there had been "sneaked" through the assembly a bill which gave the elevated railway company a complete monopoly for elevated structures on all the streets of the city below the Harlem river, and gave Tammany the very reasonable prospect of being able to construct with city money and operate as a city work an underground road which it could construct and operate in its own way. At the very time Mr. Hewitt was denouncing this astounding measure, Senator Lexow, Platt's spokesman and investigator, was doing his utmost to force it through the senate and get it to the governor before its true character could be exposed. If any additional proof was needed of a Platt-Tammany "combine," this performance of Senator Lexow would furnish it. He was opposing a Tammany investigation and advocating a huge Tammany job in almost the same breath.

* * * Putting aside all party considerations, too, one would say that the legislature of a Christian people would not adjourn leaving "Paddy" Divver and "Barney" Martin on the bench administering justice to the poor, and leaving "Jimmy" Martin in charge of its police force, and Croker levying blackmail on its taxpayers.

And yet, in spite of all this, Platt's grip on the party machine is secure, and he will be able to hold in line, as he has before, those excellent bigots who are always fooled by the party boss and are always used as the respectable wall behind which Tammany robs and and blackmails and Platt trades for a poor measure of spoil.

It is physically impossible, in the space of this paper to give any adequate illustration of the infinite ways the boss or spoils system is working in New York.

McKane's shortage is something like $200,000. He had used the public funds to pay Sutherland, his justice of the peace, over $10,000 for the year 1893, and for constables and justices for the town of Gravesend, with 8,000 inhabitants, for 1892 and 1893, $66,568. According to the sworn confessions of election inspectors McKane and his chief lieutenant stuffed 1,000 bogus ballots in the boxes at the close of the voting in the presidential election of 1892. In 1888 there was no pretense of a canvass of the votes. At least 1,000 bogus ballots were stuffed into the boxes after the polls were closed, and the totals were set down according to figures furnished by McKane, and based on the exigencies of the occasion. As an instance of the extortion practiced by this land pirate, after he had established his artificial ice plant on Coney Island, a license fee of $200 was put on every wagon peddling natural ice. This squeeze drove out all competitors.

After tremendous effort and expense McKane and Sutherland were convicted. Sixteen election inspectors, including McKane's school-teacher, plead guilty and have been sentenced. His police justice, Sutherland, is a fugitive, and another, Newton, is serving a nine months' sentence.

In New York thirty-nine men for frauds in Tammany's attempt to make its man Maynard a supreme court judge, either plead guilty, or were convicted upon trial or ran away forfeiting their bail. All these were Tammany democrats, except six Tammany republicans. For these Tammany worked as for her own braves. The district of Police Justice Divver furnished eighteen of these thirty-nine criminals.

These are surface indications of the extent of the crimes that have been going on against the franchise. McKane, as a boss, has been crushed, some of his tools have been punished, and other tools of other bosses in New York likewise; but all the elements are still left to make new bosses, and to do the same work again. So long as spoil is left to be divided among henchmen, so long will another set of bosses build another machine.

In other fields Tammany is equally busy and equally infamous. Mr. Peckham says:

Tammany Hall takes the place of the lobby. At its head is a man who handles a large amount of money yearly and is accountable to no one. He says whether a bill shall pass or not. They are all afraid of Tammany. Many corporations pay large amounts for peace, as they put it. The Metropolitan Telephone Company pays, I understand, $50,000 a year for peace. I know of one corporation which pays a similar amount. I tell you that every day of their lives these Tammany men are bribed and bribe others. Of course there is sometimes a cry of investigation.

As we have tried to show above, a republican machine is always ready to call off an attack for compensation in spoil.

A year ago Police Justice Andy White resigned his position and became a dock commissioner. He quit an $8,000 place for a $5,000 one. It was queried at the time in all of the Tammany dives, "Has Andy lost his grip?" Andy and Tammany had lost no grip. His advent made the board a unanimous Tammany body. The enormous work of this board had been done by contract, after advertised competition. After Andy's accession construction began to be done by days' work. One pier, for instance, built upon Andy's system, cost just $12,000 more than such piers had cost by the previous contract system. The board now has the proposed building of a water front which they place at a cost of between $6,000,000 to $7,000,000. Experts place the cost at fully $20,000,000 and property owners put the cost at $50,000,000. Last year Comptroller Myers blocked this undertaking until he could examine the plans and thereupon Tammany refused him a renomination.

Last winter $1,000,000 was appropriated in park improvements to aid the unemployed of New York. Thereupon Tammany employed a labor expert at $5,000 a year who rode around in a carriage to inspect and to hire Tammany heelers; yet few were employed. Thousands of men came day after day for the promised work, but Tammany had other plans. It is keeping the $1,000,000 to expend just before the next election.

Some of the rich men of New York desired to get through the legislature a bill to incorporate a provident loan association, which is a pawn shop for the benefit of the poor, and an entirely charitable undertaking; but the bill did not get on. Mayor Gilroy passed from enthusiasm to coolness. Tammany Sulzer said it was "a bad bill." It is stated that the regular pawn shops sent down to the legislature $30,000. Unless the protests of the press make Tammany democrats and republicans feel uncomfortably notorious, the poor of New York will continue to pay 36 per cent. to the regular pawn shop.

Mr. Paul Dana has just had to resign from the park board because his associates refused to be bound by the law. Mr. Gray had to leave the fire department board because of the scandals in the purchase of supplies which he was powerless to avert. Dr. Parkhurst says a man told him that he dared not contribute openly to Dr. Parkhurst's fund because his new building would have an additional assessment of $200,000 put upon it. When Boss Croker recently returned to New York, after his sixty-day trip across the continent in a magnificent private car, republican Chauncey M. Depew ordered that it be drawn over the New York Central railroad free of charge.

Harper's Weekly of April 7 shows the financial side of the boss or spoils rule in Brooklyn. Two-thirds of all moneys professedly expended for city purposes really have gone to the machine and its henchmen. They got the Long Island Water Supply Company's property for $175,000 and Mayor Chapin prepared to take it off their hands for $1,750,000. In this case there was an indomitable good citizen who fought this deal and the supreme court sustained him. Again the machine got the refusal from the owners of a public dumping-ground, started a clamor to buy a park for the poor and then through a dummy sold two thirds to the park commissioner for twice as much as they had paid for the whole. Again, three years ago, a South Brooklyn politician was about to be turned out of his house for non-payment of rent. Six months ago he boasted he was worth $300,000. Between these times he was a power in the board of aldermen. He held them together through a trolley deal and the franchise extension and the park purchases.

"At present he is a senator, with a big fur collar on his coat, and a roll of money so large that when he goes in a friend's saloon he throws down a $100 bill, cocks his stump of cigar up as he pulls his mouth into an expression of infinite disdain, and says:

"'Jim, ask de blokes what dey'll have, and keep de change.'

"Swaggering and rolling his shoulders, he walks the streets, looking with wall-eyed haughtiness on his admiring fellow-men, who whisper as he passes along:

"'Dat's de man what bled de railroad for two hundred t'ousand cool plunks. Ain't he nerry?'

"'Some of dem aldermen only got two t'ousand out of it. Dis man hung on to de bag. Ain't he a daisy?'

The holding up of the Kings County Elevated Railway by the politicians was as open as any stage robbery on western plains. In spite of the protest of the press they bound this railway hand and foot and built their own line before the court of appeals could come to the rescue. Years after electric light companies were ready to illuminate Brooklyn they were not allowed franchises because they would not come to terms.

"At last Pope, Sewall & Co., two enterprising young men, ran wires over the house-tops to serve their customers in the business districts. Their wires were constantly cut and their men arrested, till they let in one of the political chiefs, who got in other political chiefs, and kicked out Pope and Sewall. Then, by means of the city government, they gave themselves large contracts at high figures, and stole their factory water from the city by a secret connection. They then made the closest kind of monopoly of the electric lighting, and prospered exceedingly until the last election."

The other day Judge Martine sentenced a policeman who had arrested a saloon-keeper for no other reason than a refusal to give the policeman free drinks. Says the account:

Before sentencing the prisoner, Judge Martine publicly told Mr. House, the policeman's counsel, that he refused to be dictated to by those who believed themselves in power. The strongest pressure, said the judge, had been brought to bear on him, from very high politicians, but he refused to be influenced by any such men in his judicial findings. Not a day had passed since the case was called, continued Judge Martine, without his being approached from some source concerning the fate of the guilty policeman.

The state has spent on the unfinished capitol at Albany, in thirty years, $20,673,499. The capitol commissioner in 1892, said the building would be completed for a little over $2,000,000. In 1894, he said it would take $3,000,000 more to finish it. The Buffalo Express says:

There are now 1,600 men employed on the construction of the capitol. They are appointed by Commissioner Perry on the recommendation of the state officers, political committees and members of the legislature. Not a man gets a job unless he has the backing of some politician. The work has become simply a public trough at which the Albany spoilsmen can feed their clamorous supporters. John E. Milholland went to Albany the other day to try to get patronage on the capitol for his new machine in New York. Milholland did not meet with good success, because, just at present, Tammany controls most of the appointments and has none to spare for its republican assistants. William Barnes, Jr., according to the New York Herald, confesses to having 84 men at the trough, but is kicking because he ought to have 400. Milholland says that Speaker Malby has been able to get but eight on the payroll. As he is ex-officio, a capitol commissioner, he is naturally looked upon by the gang as no good. Perhaps he is too honest to be a successful spoils-grabber in competition with the experts who have fed so long on this rich garbage. Sulzer, the minority leader, is more successful. He has 90 men.

Elsewhere is a sketch of Murphy, a great boss and a United States senator. March 5 the Troy dispatch to the New York Times stated that the political prestige of the boss was trembling in the balance; that the signs were that the election on the morrow would result in his defeat; that the citizens were in open revolt at his bossism. From Albany, on the same date to the same paper, was the dispatch that Governor Flower refused to sign the bill to provide for non-partisan boards of inspectors for Troy, on the ground that it was imperfectly drawn; that a delegation of seventeen clergymen called upon him and begged him to sign the bill; that Murphy, recognizing the tremendous uprising, was at home leading his forces in person; that the gang of toughs who followed the lead of the senator realized that they must make a desperate fight. What happened the next day is well known. Robert Ross, a reputable unarmed citizen, was wantonly murdered by one of a gang of repeaters. Troy was aroused and a committee of safety organized. With Murphyism controlling the mayor, the police department and the prosecuting officers, the people's committee have to contend. Governor Flower insisted that the attorney-general of the state should appoint as his deputy the assistant district attorney of Rensselaer county, and the attorney-general declined to take charge of the case under those conditions. A memorial to the governor said, "The forces that now disgrace and enthrall this city can not be dislodged except by persistent, honest and fearless attack. That attack can not be made by a prosecuting office which is itself a part of the corrupt system to be attacked." Governor Flower declined to meet the one hundred distinguished citizens of Troy who went to Albany to protest against leaving the conduct of the prosecution within the circle of Murphyism.

The last point is the enforcement of the civil service law in the state and in the cities. An appeal for an investigation has just been made to the legislature to investigate the violations and breaking down of the law by the governor. In New York City and Brooklyn the machine has found the law no impediment.

In conclusion, the reasons for this awful condition are vast spoil, and a republican machine entrenched in the state and democratic machines entrenched in various cities, both ready to fight to the death any good citizen or any measure that puts this spoil in peril. In such a condition is it not worse than folly, is it not a crime, to be a party man in New York?

A GREAT BOSS—MURPHY, UNITED STATES SENATOR.

Who is Edward Murphy?

If it be a warm, comfortable afternoon, and business for the day has been attended to, it is more than likely that a short, thick-set, good-natured, genial-looking man with a white mustache, neatly dressed, will be leaning against the door-way of 8 Third street. Possibly one or two congenial companions will be with him.

If the afternoon is hot, he may be up stairs, in the little building which is on the lot mentioned. The elderly gentleman has blue eyes and soft white hands. He wears a diamond in his scarf. Apparently he is a gentleman of leisure, a good liver, temperate, and a pleasant man to meet. He has a genial way about him; his smile is soothing. He shakes hands warmly, and is glad to see the visitor.

If the visitor's business has been something that requires a confidential talk the kind old gentleman has probably taken him up stairs into a little club-room which is comfortably furnished, has some easy chairs, a poker table or two, and some racing pictures for its most noticeable pieces of furniture.

This is the headquarters of the little coterie which admires the old gentleman, and in whose society he spends much of his time evenings and pleasant afternoons when he is in the city. He does not look like a "boss." He is intelligent, but will not enter into any profound discussion of law, metaphysics, poetry, art, or any of the finer topics of conversation. His discourse will be limited chiefly to political places, stocks, and horse trotting. If the visitor tells him that Corbett has knocked Mitchell out he will probably ask "where did he land on him?"

If he were asked for his views on the tariff question, he would probably smile and say that he did not care to express any opinions just at present.

If, in company with him, a stroll down the street be taken past one or two prominent saloons, the keeper sitting in the doorway will nod to the rosy old gentleman and say "Hello, Ed," and Ed will reply, "Hello, Jim."

This will be the exchange of greeting between Jim Dwyer, poolroom keeper, and Edward Murphy, Jr., United States senator from the state of New York.

Edward Murphy is fifty-seven years old. He was born of parents who came from Ireland, and he has lived in Troy all his life. His father was a brewer on a small scale and made some money. Edward attended the public schools, and for a time was at the Catholic Institution at Fordham. He was not a brilliant scholar according to report, and had no tastes for professional life.

His early associates, some of whom are now alive, had not been good. He had more money to spend when he was a boy than the others, and it pleased his vanity to become something of a leader because of this fact. Some of those associates became afterward notorious sports. Murphy trained with them long enough to have acquired some of their tastes. When he was a young man, or even a boy, chicken fighting in Troy was a common pastime among the rougher element. When a crowd of the boys wanted a good chicken fight they appealed to Murphy, and he bought the chickens. He liked to see the fun.

Mr. Murphy was interested for a time in a place called the "Nonpareil," near the corner of Fulton street and Fifth avenue. Tradition says there was a cockpit in the place, and the sports used to gather there from time to time whenever good game birds could be secured. This place was burned in 1862.

Mr. Murphy's power in Troy is due to three or four prominent reasons. He has business interests which would make any man powerful. He has been in politics, holding public offices, which he has used for his own advantage, long enough to have entrenched himself among that class of people which makes itself felt on election day, and he controls absolutely the so-called "Murphy machine."

He has associated with him in business enough republicans to secure a considerable influence from that party. When he was an alderman, he learned how the business of making or killing ordinances was done. He learned that franchises could be granted by the city councils. Later, he wanted some franchises of his own, and the city council was such that it was easy for him to get them. He is one of the large stockholders in the Troy City Railway Company. Some capitalists who knew how to make money in handling corporations took Mr. Murphy as a partner, and secured control of this corporation. The council which Mr. Murphy owned granted franchises on application, and the company now has the right to own and operate railways on almost every available street in the city, for which it paid not one red cent.

Some years ago, Daniel E. Conway became president of a company, which, if it had secured franchises, would have been a rival company. Mr. Conway's company offered the city $40,000 for a franchise to lay tracks and run cars through certain streets. Mr. Conway is a political opponent of Mr. Murphy. The city council refused to grant the franchise. Mr. Murphy controlled the city council.

Mr. Murphy is the president of the Troy City Gas Company. He has taken a few republicans into that company, and they naturally knowing how he controls the municipal business of the city, are enrolled among what is generally known as the "Murphy Republicans." One of the stockholders in the street railway company, who is also a director, is Ex-Mayor William Kemp, who is a leader in the republican party. For business considerations, many of his followers are not hostile to Murphy. Mr. Murphy is president of the gas company and he has made considerable money by the manner in which the stock of this corporation has been handled. He is also a stockholder in the Electric Light Company and has made more money out of this.

Mr. Murphy's name has also been connected with the Huckleberry Road, and he is supposed to have made a comfortable amount of money from stocks in this corporation.

But the great and irresistible element in his power in Troy to-day is a machine which perpetuates itself, is absolutely within his control, and itself controls an army of ruffians, dive keepers, repeaters, cheap gamblers, saloon keepers, loafers and all manner of men who have no scruples to do any political trick, who have low ideas of morality, and will obey orders if they are paid for it. The machinery of law, which in ordinary circumstances would be expected to mete out just deserts to some of the army of the law breakers which infest the city on election day, is so absolutely controlled, directly or indirectly, by this Murphy machine, that decent men have almost decided that justice is impossible.

Edward Murphy has lived in the city of Troy all his life, and for the last twenty-five years has been actively engaged in politics.

At first he was an Alderman, after that he was a police commissioner, then he was mayor, afterwards he was chairman of the state democratic committee. On numerous occasions he had been a delegate to national conventions. He has attended every state convention. * * *

Isaac McConihe was the really big "boss" at that time, and Murphy was his pupil. McConihe was not only the "boss" of Rensselaer county, but figured in that capacity in state politics. He was chairman of the state committee. Innocently, as it is said, with probable truth, he became involved in business transactions with Tweed, and when the big "boss" of Tammany was overthrown and convicted, McConihe was forced out of that position.

That was Murphy's opportunity. As a member of the local police commission he secured absolute control of the police force of Troy. At about the same time he entered the brewing business, and soon built a prosperous trade. It has always been alleged that his political influence helped make a market for his beer. He soon became the leading political figure in his town. He went across the river to Albany and began to take a hand in securing legislation from the state which would intrench him in his position in his own county. If any office-holder was obnoxious to him he would procure a charter amendment to legislate that man out of office.

Mr. Murphy had become the accepted "boss" of Rensselaer county in 1874, when Mr. Tilden was nominated for governor. He had extended his acquaintance to politicians all over the state. His pleasing address, a certain personal magnetism, and the fact that many unscrupulous and daring men in Troy looked to him as a leader and would obey his orders, made him useful to men who were at that time powerful throughout the state. Mr. Murphy was then well known as a sporting character. John Morrissey, whose early home was in Troy, was one of his chums, and he and Mr. Murphy trained together, attending sporting events and gaining acquaintance with sporting men with persistent regularity. * * *

Hostility to Mr. Cleveland was the bond which cemented more firmly than ever Mr. Murphy to Mr. Hill. They had been associates before. Their styles of politics were one. Hill knew that he could use Murphy to his own advantage, and, as soon as Hill adopted his policy of antagonizing Mr. Cleveland, he made Mr. Murphy his first lieutenant and chief adviser. They began a systematic "peanut" policy of driving out of public places all the men whom Mr. Cleveland had appointed, each of whom had been originally selected with a view to his efficiency as well as to his position in the democratic party. James Shanahan, a friend of Mr. Cleveland, was forced to resign as superintendent of public works. This was brought about because the superintendent would not allow Mr. Murphy to dictate certain appointments on the Champlain Canal. When this change was made, the great patronage office of the state, that of superintendent of public works, passed into the hands of one of Mr. Murphy's supporters, Mr. Edward Hannan. He had lived in Troy in one of the toughest wards. He had been associated with the young loafers with whom Mr. Murphy had spent his boyhood.

From that time Mr. Murphy and Mr. Hill used the immense patronage of the canal against Mr. Cleveland in building up their state machine. Anybody who wanted an office or work did not go to Albany to apply to Mr. Hannan, but to Troy to apply to Edward Murphy. * * *

While Mr. Murphy was thus the head of the state organization, and his distribution of patronage had fixed it so that it could not be shaken, he fixed his attention upon the state legislature for a season. Richard Croker, of New York was a friend of Mr. Murphy. It used to be said that Murphy would manage the legislature, while Mr. Croker would control New York City.

Up to the time that he set his hands on a legislature, individuals had made up his machine. When he had grasped the state lawmakers, the corporations were added to his list. They could be made very valuable in campaigns and in every part of the state. Railroads, gas companies, electric companies, insurance companies, and whoever else depended for prosperity or existence on the nature of the laws that were made, were thus under the dictation of the man whom David B. Hill had set up in Troy. Great campaign funds can be raised when corporations are forced to contribute.

When once a favorable relationship between the corporations and Mr. Murphy had been established, Mr. Murphy was enabled to make money for himself. In perfectly legitimate ways he began extensive and successful operations in business.

During the last few years he has grown rich. He is a millionaire, and more, too. He practically owns the greatest corporations in Troy. If he does not own them, he is the dominating influence in their management. He has been allowed to come in "on the ground floor" in extensive operations.

It would be a mistake to infer that such a man had confined his attention entirely to state legislation. He has acquired a great influence in many of the cities of this state. He has great influence with Richard Croker in New York City. Mr. Murphy has been interested with Mr. Croker in enterprises of large importance, and their political connection has been as close as must necessarily be that of any two men who stand at the head of New York City and the New York state democratic organization. They have been so successful that they have bought a farm near Richfield Springs, stocked it and are joint partners in it and a racing stable.

Since Mr. Murphy became a United States senator he has in no wise changed his former style of life or his political habits. Although a representative of the state of New York in a seat which has been held by Evarts, Conkling, Hamilton Fish and other distinguished men, he still attends to the ward politics of Troy. He dictates the nominations of the local candidates, he scans the list of election inspectors, and looks after the movements of the police in the tough wards of his city. Neglecting all thoughts of the tariff and other questions on which he is expected to vote as a representative of the state, he found it more congenial to spend the few days before election in consultation with the men who manipulate the squads of repeaters and adjust the election machinery so that whatever may be the vote cast, the count will show that the machine he has built up is still intact.

His political headquarters when in Troy are divided. Much of the work is done from his brewery office on Ferry street. Some of it is outlined in the saloons on Third street, where Mr. Murphy finds congenial companions.

The Murphy machine is still rolling on, but its wheels are red—red with the blood of men.

Slowly it has been built, but surely. Decent men, honest politicians, have not been able to withstand it. It is held together by the "cohesive force of public plunder." It dictates the nomination of city officers—after consulting with Mr. Murphy. Nearly every one of its members holds an office which Mr. Murphy gave him.

This machine is composed of a general committee of two from each ward in the city. There are thirteen wards. The committee selects the inspectors for the primaries just before election. Those inspectors are men who will do as the committee orders them to do or they will not be selected.

There are three inspectors from each ward. It has been the experience in Troy for a number of years that the inspectors thus appointed declared the Murphy candidates at the primaries to be the successful candidates, without much regard for the number of votes which may have been cast for any other candidate. The result is that very few people go to the caucuses. It is a useless proceeding, they think. The primaries are held, the inspectors appointed meet, go through the formality of receiving a few votes, and declare who are the candidates. The whole thing has come to be a farce in most of the wards. When a member of the general committee has about completed his term an election is held for a successor. The general committee appoints the men to pass on the qualification of voters and to count the votes. The result, in most cases, is a perpetuation of the committee. It practically reappoints itself.

An analysis of this committee, with names, history and occupation, will prove interesting to people who live in some other city than Troy, and may, perhaps, think that the Murphy "machine" is simply political talk.

In the first ward the members of the committee are William Donohue and William N. Keenan. Mr. Donohue is a police magistrate. He held that office ten years ago. Samuel Morris and others preferred charges against him, which he did not see fit to face, and he resigned. Later, Mr. Murphy reappointed him. Mr. Keenan, the other member from the first ward, is one of Mr. Murphy's bookkeepers.

In the second ward, the members of the general committee are William Dunphy and James W. Dwyer. Mr. Dunphy is an engineer in the Osgood Steamer Company. He is a brother of Police Captain Dunphy. James W. Dwyer keeps a poolroom in which gambling is openly conducted.

In the third ward committeemen are Charles R. De Freest and John F. Ahern. Mr. De Freest is the well-known secretary of the democratic state committee, formerly clerk of the assembly. He now has a post with the state railroad commission, which Mr. Murphy secured for him. John F. Ahern keeps a saloon in Third street. A faro "lay-out" is above it on the second floor, and as long as Mr. Ahern obeys Mr. Murphy, the Murphy police do not interfere.

In the fourth ward the committeemen are William Holmes and Andrew J. Forrest. Mr. Holmes is the business partner of Mr. Ahern in the saloon in Third street. Andrew J. Forrest holds a position in the district attorney's office, secured by Murphy influence.

In the fifth ward, John J. McCormick and Thomas McCabe are the members of the committee. McCormick is city clerk, by grace of the Murphy influence and bookkeeper in Mr. Murphy's brewery. Mr. McCabe is in the fire department, and foreman of the Farham Steamer Company.

In the sixth ward John Kinney and William Fallon are the committeemen. Mr. Kinney is an employee at the court house through the Murphy influence. William Fallon keeps a saloon in that delectable part of Troy known as "the Patch." The police kindly allow Mr. Fallon to conduct business without any interference.

The seventh ward presents a peculiar and instructive situation. It is peculiar because it is the only ward in Troy which is anti-Murphy. It is instructive because it illustrates the fact that as soon as a man breaks from Murphy, if he holds a public office he will lose it. The two committeemen are George E. Sands and John Allen. Formerly they marched under the Murphy banner. Mr. Sands was then clerk of a court. He broke from Mr. Murphy. He is not clerk of a court now. John Allen was in a department at Albany in the state house. He revolted against the Murphy domination. He was removed from his office.

In the eighth ward, Kyrou V. Cleary and John Devery are the committeemen. Mr. Cleary is Mr. Murphy's cousin. He also holds a position in the office of the state controller at Albany. John Devery holds no office. He is anti-Murphy, and supported Whelan in the recent contest.

In the ninth ward William H. Donahue is the only member of the committee, his associate having died recently. Mr. Donahue is a brother of Clerk Donahue of the police board, an office kindly given to him by the Murphy influence.

The members of the committee from the tenth ward are "Dan" Carney and "Jerry" Denny. Mr. Carney is engineer of the Eddy Steamer Company. He has the reputation of being one of the most successful and skillful dog-fighters in Troy. Senator Murphy used to enjoy seeing a dog-fight himself years ago, before Mr. Hill thought of taking him to Washington as his associate. "Jerry" Denny of the tenth ward is a fireman of the Eddy Steamer Company.

In the eleventh ward, William Martin and John J. Kenna are the members of the committee. Mr. Martin is janitor at the city hall, and Mr. Kenna has an office in Mr. Hannan's office, the superintendent of public works. Both of these offices were bestowed by the Murphy influence.

In the twelfth ward Patrick Byron and Charles Burke are the members of the committee. Mr. Burke is a carpenter by trade, and inspector of the state dairy department by reason of the Murphy influence. Mr. Byron is chief engineer in the fire department, because the Murphy influence appointed him.

In the thirteenth ward Martin Kane and Patrick Lewis are the members of the general committee. Mr. Kane is a policeman, appointed through the Murphy influence.

This constitutes the framework of the Murphy machine. Mr. Murphy is chief engineer of this machine. It grinds out the sort of grist which he directs. He attends to it almost as closely now that he is a member of the United States senate, as he did when he was simply a Troy brewer.

The committee meets usually at 8 Third street, upstairs, over Dwyer's poolroom. Dwyer is a member of the committee, it will be remembered. His "place" is five doors from the resort of Senator Murphy when he is down town of an evening. This is at 18 Third street, over Breeze's.—From the New York Times.

A LESSER BOSS—DIVVER, POLICE JUSTICE.

"Patrick Divver, commonly called 'Paddy,' is the Tammany leader in the second assembly district. He is the keeper of a sailors' boarding-house and is the proprietor, or has interests, in several liquor saloons. He is an ex-member of the board of aldermen, a race-track frequenter and the friend and confidant of gamblers. He is on terms of intimacy with 'Johnny' Matthews and 'Jake' Shipsey, two members of the sporting and gambling fraternity, whose particular methods of gaining a livelihood are unknown to the frequenters of Paddy Divver's and other run-shops on Park Row, where they are generally to be found."—"Tammany Biographies," April, 1890.

A few months later a Tammany mayor was able to get a judge of a court of record, a president of the board of education, and two leading merchants to say that Divver was in "every way qualified" for the police justice bench.

"Gentlemen of the committee, I hope you will do your best at this election. They have been attacking our standard bearer, Judge Isaac H. Maynard [Hooroo! Woop! Bully for Maynard!], the most uprightest judge that ever lived. This is the banner district of Tammany Hall [Hooray! Three cheers for Judge Divver!], and no other district must get ahead of the old second. We must win this banner again. [We will! We will!] As the leader of this district, I will give the captain of the election district that polls the most votes for the democratic ticket a $1,500 place. He can take the place himself or give it to one of his friends. [Most enthusiastic cheering.] To the captain of the district that polls the second largest number of votes I will give a gold watch and chain, and to the third largest I will give this silk banner."—World.

Patrick Divver's friends and lieutenants are among the most disreputable men in the city of New York. His political power is built upon crime and law-breaking. Here are the men upon whom he chiefly depends for his power and success; here are the men with whom he associates, who are constantly seen in the club-house of the Divver association, the headquarters of the Tammany hall committee of the district:

"LOS" CURTIS.—Notorious fourth ward dive-keeper, ready man with a gun, political heeler and supposed to be an office-holder of the class not required to enter their names on the city roll. Curtis formerly kept his dive in the basement at the corner of north William street and Park Row. He also kept a dive at No. 6 James street, which Police Captain Slevin, of the Oak street station, ever looked in May last when he raided the dives at Nos. 2 and 4 James street. Curtis was on the list to be raided, but, it is said, was saved through the influence of Divver. Curtis is Divver's most valuable man on election day, as he is afraid of no law. It was he who helped young Jimmy Divver poll 608 votes out of 620 cast in young Divver's election district. But that was not all he did that day for the "cause," he helped other captains in the same way. Curtis has been involved in many shooting "scrapes." In the election of 1884, when Divver was defeated by "Fatty" Walsh in his race for alderman. Curtis shot at a man for voting against Divver, but he was too drunk to have a good aim. He has been arrested many times, but always manages to escape.

"MICKEY" C. PADDON—Former proprietor of a shady resort. He is a district captain for Divver and was never known to flinch. It was this gentleman who held, two years ago, the honorable position of librarian of the city hall. It was a standing joke that "Mickey" could not read a single book in his charge. He is now in the street-cleaning department, and holds an $1,800 position as district superintendent. It is a very agreeable position, as all it requires is to drive around the district for a few hours daily. He is a member of the Divver Association and of Divver's committee on organization.

MIKE LALLY—Who hasn't heard of him? He was appointed a policeman on the Brooklyn bridge through the influence of Divver, about four years ago. He left his post on the bridge one night, and, going to a saloon in Front street, of which he was himself the owner, ordered his bartender to dance a jig. Although his request was complied with, Lally drew a pistol and shot him. In spite of the publicity given the affair Lally remained on the force. Subsequently Lally, while drunk, kicked Roundsman Brophy in the abdomen, and, while under suspension on this charge, entered a Water-street dive and shot Michael Delati, a bartender, in the breast, inflicting a wound which for a long time it was thought would prove fatal. As a result of Divver's omnipotent pull Lally was discharged in police court. The World then took up the case and the grand jury promptly indicted Lally, who fled before the indictment could be served. When he returned, two years later, every witness was conveniently absent from the city. The indictment still hangs over him. Lally was also involved in numerous other assaults. On one occasion he brutally knocked down and kicked, while prostrate, an elderly and respectable resident of Brooklyn for asking a question, and on another occasion insulted and beat a young woman. Last summer Divver got John Y. McKane to employ the ex-policeman as a detective at Coney Island. Prior to that he worked under Tammany Hall Contractor Dailey. Two weeks ago the remarkable fact became public in court that Divver had the effrontery to make Lally one of his assistant district captains. Lally was arrested for defying the election laws, and on his plea of guilty escaped with a fine of $250 before Judge Barrett. He is, of course, a nightly visitor at the Divver Association, and it is generally understood that his name is on the city pay-roll under the classification of "laborer."

ALFRED O. NEILSON—Notorious fourth ward dive-keeper, twice convicted of keeping a disorderly house. He kept a resort at No. 94 Cherry Street. On July 21, last, he was tried in the court of special sessions, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for three months. Several months before that he had been fined $50 for the same offense. He did not go to prison, however, succeeding in the usual mysterious way in getting out on bail, pending an appeal. For a third time he was arrested three weeks ago for keeping a disorderly house in the twenty-second precinct, but he escaped on the extraordinary plea that he was "a respectable citizen."

ED. FLYNN—Member of the Tammany Hall General Committee and of the Divver Association, and reputed owner of a shop at Pell street and the Bowery, a place frequented by the most degraded of the women who frequent Chinatown. He has been repeatedly arrested for violation of the excise law, and once for felonious assault.

TOM H. CONNELLY—Under indictment for assault on Policeman James E. Dougherty, of the Elizabeth street station. The policeman had ordered Connelly to remove the ice from the sidewalk in front of his residence at No. 40 City Hall place, several months ago, and for reply Connelly felled him to the ground and stamped on him. Connelly is a member of the Tammany Hall general committee and of the Divver Association.

HENRY LAWSON—Ex-divekeeper and proprietor of the den known as "The Lighthouse," at No. 103 Cherry street. Lawson had been a persistent violator for years. He was recently closed through the efforts of Dr. Parkhurst. Election worker for Divver.

PATRICK FOSTER—Ex-keeper of the Tombs, handy man with a pistol and district captain for Divver. Several years ago he created a panic on a pleasure-boat by discharging his revolver at a boatload of passengers, wounding two of them. The steamer was heading for Brooklyn at the time, and Foster was taken to the Raymond street jail. He was bailed, and his case never came to trial. Member of the Tammany Hall general committee and Divver Association. Foster was captain of the eighteenth election district. Vote, Maynard, 267; Bartlette, 0. Buckley was convicted from this district.

JOHN BIEREGEL—Keeper of a thieves' resort at No. 73 New Chambers street. His place was closed several weeks ago through Dr. Parkhurst. When the case came up before the excise board the police of the Oak street station said that it was one of the worst resorts in the precinct. One of Divver's assistants on election day.

HENRY REDDING—Divekeeper at No. 342 Water street. He was arrested in May last through the exposures made in the newspapers, was promptly bailed in court, and went right back and opened up his place again.

VINCENZO DE VITO—Padrone and fraudulent obtainer of naturalization papers. Exposed by The World. Member of the Tammany Hall general committee and of the Divver Association.

"FATTY" WALSH—Ex-alderman, ex-warden of the Tombs, and lieutenant for P. Divver. Holds a $2,100 position as dock master in the dock department. Career too well known to require more specific mention. Member of the Tammany Hall general committee and of the Divver Association.

JEREMIAH J. CRONIN—A faithful, very faithful worker on election day. Member of general committee and Divver Association. Captain of the nineteenth election district for Divver. Registration, 271. Vote, Maynard, 271; Bartlett, 0. Inspectors James J. Dooley and Michael Fay sentenced to State prison for five years each from this district, and Edward S. O'Donnell, said to be a relative of Divver; fled to Canada, forfeiting $2,500 bail. Cronin was considered to have won the second prize offered by Divver.

ROBERT M. DORE—Inspector of excise, salary $1,200; district captain for Divver in spite of his office; member of committee on organization and Divver Association; formerly frequenter of the dive known as "Bismarck Hall," on Park Row.

PETER PETERSON—Divekeeper at No. 110 Cherry street. His place was closed by Dr. Parkhurst two months ago. A good "quiet" worker. Is impatient at being counselled to lie low for the present, and not re-open up.

JAMES GROTHOR—Ex-divekeeper at No. 340 Water street, a vile place where no law is known. The dive was raided in May last, because of exposure in the newspapers, but quietly opened the following day. Recently closed for good by Dr. Parkhurst.

FRANK TIERNAN—Divekeeper at No. 346 Water street. Was arrested and his place closed in May last, but opened again. Finally closed by Dr. Parkhurst. Marches at the front of the Divver "chowder" parades.

FREDERICK WILSON—Divekeeper at No. 344 Water street. Recently closed up by Dr. Parkhurst. A heavy contributor.

HARRY LARSEN—Keeper of the dives at Nos. 88 and 97 Cherry street. Closed by Dr. Parkhurst. Wears the biggest diamond in the Divver club.

JACOB HARLAND—Divekeeper at No. 110½ Cherry street. Closed by Dr. Parkhurst. Would like to be an alderman.

CHARLES J. AUFFARTH—Election worker for Divver, and is a clerk in the license bureau attached to the mayor's office at a salary of $1,100; was captain of the twenty-second election district. Registration, 363. Vote, Maynard, 362; Bartlett, 1. Aufarth was considered to have won the first prize. Member of general committee and Divver Association.

MICHAEL A. SCUDI—Recently arrested for keeping a disorderly house in the back of his saloon at No. 195 Worth street. Member of the Tammany Hall general committee and the Divver Association.

LOUIE FRANZ—Dive-keeper at No. 95½ Cherry street. Election worker for Divver.

DENNIS J. BUCKLEY—Serving a sentence of one year in the penitentiary for election frauds committed in the hope of winning one of the prizes Divver offered. Member of the Divver association.

THOS. F. HUMPHREYS—In Canada. Had to skip out because he was indicted for election frauds, member of the Divver Association. He said before he went away that he would never go to prison, and threatened to turn state's evidence.

JAMES J. DOOLEY—In Sing Sing for five years. He tried to win one of Divver's prizes. Member of the Divver Association.

MEYER MARKS—In Canada. Prize, fraud, indictment, flight. Member of Divver Association. Said to be a cousin or nephew of Divver.

EDWARD S. O'DONNELL—In Canada. Tried to win a Divver prize. Sorry that he ever joined the Divver Association.

JAMES COLLINS—In Canada. Ditto, ditto, ditto. Also member P. D. A.

PATRICK J. MARONEY—Indicted for election frauds and fined $500. Member of Divver Association.

WILL J. GILES—Indicted for election frauds and fined $500. Member of the fatal association. He is on the eligible list for appointment on police force.

PHIL HARGRAVES—Indicted for election frauds; fine $500. Member same organization.

JOSEPH ANDERSON—Indicted for election frauds, but fined only $250. Member P. D. A.

EDWARD J. COPPERS—District captain, member of the general committee and the Divver Association. Holds the position of excise inspector, salary $1,200. He was paid nearly $6,000 for plumbing work by the department of public works in 1892. When Deputy Comptroller Storrs caught sight of the case he objected strongly and Coppers turned the business over to his son, Edwin, who does plumbing for the city at the old stand, at No. 483 Pearl street, while the father continues to hold the inspectorship. Edwin is also a member of the general committee. The excise inspector spends much of his time around the plumbing shop.

MIKE CALLAHAN—Former bouncer at Koster & Bial's, and owner of a low resort at No. 12 Chatham square, was nominated for assembly by Divver despite the protest of decent citizens of the district. Divver promised to withdraw Callahan in case of his own nomination for sheriff, but when it was refused him he said he would run Callahan if it meant his own political deathblow. Salary as assemblyman, $1,500.

JOHN O'BRIEN—Political heeler and member of the Divver Association, holds the position of city marshal. Salary, $2,000.

JAMES DIVVER—Son of Patrick Divver, was arrested in November, 1892, by United States marshals for giving, as was alleged, Charles Harris 50 cents to register under the name of Patrick Ryan in the forty-eighth election district of the second assembly district. The indictment charged that young Divver employed Harris, or Ryan, to register at fifteen different polling places, and that he paid the man 50 cents every time he registered. When the case was called for trial before Judge Benedict, March 14, 1893, Harris had a defective memory and the case was dismissed. Much to the surprise of every one in court Divver walked over to where Harris was confined and handed him a $10 bill. Divver is a clerk in the second district civil court. Salary, $3,000.

HARRY WILSON—Keeper of a dive of the lowest type at No. 357 Water street. October 27, 1891, Joseph Farley, one of Wilson's workers, was arrested for false registration on complaint of Thomas F. Harrington, a republican watcher, and was taken before Divver, who occupied the bench in the Tombs police court. Wilson testified for Farley and the case was dismissed. Wilson is a Divver heeler.

Here is a list of Divver's office-holders, all of whom contested for the prizes, but were lucky enough not to be caught. These men are members of the general committee and of the Divver Association, and mingle with the divekeepers in the club-rooms in Madison street. They are:

JAMES W. LEDWITH, warden at the Jefferson Market Prison; salary, $2,000.

WILLIAM, alias "KID," GALLAGHER, subpoena server in the district attorney's office; salary, $1,200.

THOMAS P. DINNEEN, clerk at the Yorkville police court; salary, $2,000.

FRANCIS J. O'CONNOR, clerk at the Yorkville police court; salary, $2,000.

MICHEL PARKER, recording clerk in the surrogate's office; salary, $1,200.

PATRICK WOLFE, clerk in the bureau of the water purveyor; salary, $1,500.

CONSTANTINE DONOHUE, inspector in the water surveyor's office; salary, $3.50 a day.

THOMAS J. SHEEHAN, messenger in the commissioner of jurors' office; salary, $1,000.

DANIEL SULLIVAN, janitor of the county courthouse; salary, $1,000.

EDWARD F. SMITH, examiner in the register's office; salary, $1,500.

JOHN POWERS, keeper in Ludlow Street Jail; salary, $1,000.

TIMOTHY J. DONOHUE, transcript docket clerk, county clerk's office; salary, $1,200.

JOHN DAVIS, janitor of hall of records; salary, $900.

MICHAEL HERLIHY, foreman of stables in street cleaning department; salary, $900.

DANIEL J. MCCRYSTAL, foreman of stables, street cleaning department; salary, $900.

BARTHOLOMEW MCGOWAN, disinfecter attached to sanitary bureau; salary, $1,000.

MICHAEL D. DOWNEY, keeper in Tombs prison; salary, $900.

WILLIAM FLYNN, keeper in Tombs prison; salary, $900.

EDWARD H. DINAN, inspector of buildings; salary, $1,200.

TIMOTHY F. PAYNE, messenger, building department; salary, $900.

JAMES MCCOLLOUGH, janitor of the second district civil court; salary, $900.

MATTHEW GAUGHAN, machinist, to supervise elevators, department of buildings; salary, $1,200.

JAMES LANGAN, night watchman, registrar's office; salary, $1,200.

HENRY DRISCOLL, general copy clerk, registrar's office; salary, $1,000.

FRANCIS J. GRIMES, certificate clerk, registrar's office; salary, $1,000.

What do the citizens of New York think of Patrick Divver, his district and his friends?—New York World, April 2.

SPOIL AT LARGE.

Tower was appointed postmaster at Bloomfield in January, having been indorsed by Senator Smith and Congressman Cornish. Many Bloomfield democrats had no sooner heard of the appointment than they began to protest. They said that Tower was not the popular choice, but rather the selection of Robert Rudd, a New York lawyer. Mr. Rudd controls a large faction of the local party. It was said that Tower owed money to two of the men who became his bondsmen, and secured their signatures by promising to pay his bills if he should secure the appointment. It was determined to keep Tower out of his office if possible.—Bloomfield dispatch, New York Times, March 1.

Wilmington, N. C., is the largest city in this state, and the post-office there is the best paying one in North Carolina. Capt. W. P. Oldham, a prominent citizen of that city, was the leading applicant for the postmastership, and it was generally supposed that he would be successful, until a few days ago another man, a Mr. Morton, was appointed. The reason of Capt. Oldham's defeat has now come to light. It seems that Oldham, in a letter to Senator Ransom, used the following language:

The custodian of post-office building is made by the treasury department. If you will have this duty added to the postmaster, I will be under many obligations to you, and will be willing to share the pay of the office with you. I do not know what it pays, but I think it is about $1,000 per year. The building has three departments, court-room of United States district court, post-office and observatory, all government property. The supervision of this building properly belongs to the postmaster, but it does not necessarily follow that he is always appointed custodian. It adds but little extra to his duties as postmaster, and the pay is good.

Senator Ransom naturally regarded this as an attempt to bribe him, and saw proper to lay the correspondence before the postmaster-general, and the other man was soon appointed.—Raleigh dispatch, New York Evening Post, December 30.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"I find that a year ago at this time I sent $5 for your paper, and I am very sorry, indeed, that I must limit my contribution this year to $2. This does not mean that my appreciation of the value of your work has lessened, nor that other interests have crowded it out, but simply that it is impossible for me to do more.

Thank you very much for your clear statement of Mr. Bradford's mistake in the February issue. * * * His letter only makes the matter worse, as it repeats in cold blood what might possibly have passed for an accidental expression drawn from him by the excitement of the speaking. If Gamaliel Bradford can not see the absolute wickedness of the executive purchasing legislation by the bribe of office, how almost hopeless seems the mission of the civil service reformer.

Your paper ought to have thousands, where now it has dollars. I wish you good cheer."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

DR. CHARLES E. FERGUSON, superintendent of the city hospital, has at last been harried into resigning, or rather, perhaps, resigned because he discovered that he was about to be removed. Professionally competent, possessed of business and executive ability of a high order, strictly impartial and in every way honorable, he was a model public officer. When the present city administration came in, in answer to the universal demand, it was announced that Dr. Ferguson would be left to serve out his term; but immediately a series of petty annoyances and higgling vexations were begun against him, such as disallowing bills for planting a few trees to shade a sunny ward, and other minor expenditures of a similar nature, all of which were after all paid. At last the "pins" seem to have been set, so that Dr. Ferguson was to be turned out solely to make room for a republican. The mayor could have prevented this if he had desired to do so, and he is the one to hold responsible for it. The fact that he was compelled, by some malicious and vicious appointees of his, to permit this dishonest use of the public service, will not be taken as an excuse.

THE new republican council at Anderson, in this state, immediately put in a republican superintendent of the electric light plant, republican lamp trimmers, and a republican city engineer, displacing the men who were in those positions. Yet we suppose Anderson would be surprised and grieved to know that this method puts her on a level with Morocco which transacts business after the same barbaric fashion.

On the other hand, all Indiana is not like Anderson and Algiers. The Logansport Times of May 4th says, that the complaint of the blunders of the new clerks and carriers in their post-office at Logansport, has been universal, that years of faithful service for the public seem to count for nothing in this department, but what does seem to count is the amount of work one has done to put his party in power. And very refreshing after the usual nauseating doses of "the patriotism of the belfry" is the following from the Times:

The United States can take many profitable lessons from Great Britain, the nations of continental Europe, and a few lessons even from the pagan Chinese. We yet lack considerable of knowing it all. There is absolutely no sense in discharging a mail carrier for any other reason than inefficiency. The public, whom he is supposed to serve, cares nothing about his political complexion. What the public wants is that its mail be handled as it should be.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel says that the recent appointment by Secretary Morton of Col. William Hicklin as government inspector at the stock yards is a striking illustration of the old adage as to bread cast upon the waters. Years ago the Morton and Hicklin farms in Nebraska were adjacent. Mr. Morton lost his farm through unfortunate speculation and Mr. Hicklin generously engaged his neighbor, Morton, at a hundred dollars a month to manage a newspaper owned by the former. Years passed on and Hicklin met with reverses and Morton prospered, and now comes the touching climax. According to the naïve admission of the Sentinel

"One of the first acts of Secretary Morton's official life was to hunt up the address of Col. Bill and write him a personal letter inquiring as to his affairs. Learning that some return for former favors would not come amiss, the secretary wrote asking Mr. Hicklin what he wanted in the way of appointment."

Mr. Morton's private obligations should certainly have been discharged but not by the public treasury. We are teaching a great deal in our public schools—patriotism among other things. Might it not be well whenever the scholars salute the flag to have them repeat a solemn invocation for strength as they grow older to resist all temptations to quarter upon public employment their needy relatives and all others to whom they are under private obligations.

IN contrast to the moral callousness shown in the above, it is refreshing to come upon one who had the moral delicacy which ought to characterize citizens in their public actions. The late Teakle Wallis, of Baltimore, who fought Gormanism unflinchingly and unsuccessfully because the boss whenever menaced had a President to fortify him with patronage, refused an office that he had pecuniary need of. He had given his support during a campaign to the mayor who offered the office, and Mr.

Wallis said he could not afford to have any one think that his support had not been disinterested.

THE people of Indiana for a long time have been endeavoring to grade the pay of county officers so as to make it bear some relation to the value of the services rendered, and the general assembly finally passed an act for that purpose. Under the former system in the wealthier and more populous counties there had come to be a considerable sprinkling of men who had gone into these offices worth nothing and had come out comparatively rich. They usually became men of leisure, remaining active in politics, and were pernicious supporters of the system by which they had prospered. This was county government of the most odious kind. There existed and still exists in Indiana an association of county officers whose sole object is to prevent the overthrow of this oligarchy-breeding system. After the reform law was passed they made a combined attack upon it by means of suits to test its constitutionality with relation to the different offices. In the case of the sheriffs they were defeated by a decision of the supreme court in which Judge Coffey joined. He was a candidate for renomination before the republican state convention which lately met in this city. Prior to the convention two attempts were made by persons in the interests of the county officers' association to obtain from Judge Coffey an expression in writing as to how he stood upon the other fee and salary cases yet undecided in the supreme court. These infamous attempts were met with the refusal they deserved, and the advocates of this old system of legalized robbery set to work to defeat Judge Coffey's nomination and succeeded in doing so by four votes. There is no mistake about these facts. The Indianapolis Journal was so scared about it that it said the next morning that if any mistakes had been made they could be corrected before the election. Every attempt has been made to cover the matter up. We wonder if the people of Indiana will stand this sort of thing. It was a plain attempt to corrupt the judiciary and to make sure that the candidate was corrupt when he was nominated. The Folger nomination in New York was a party machine trick; yet for that he was defeated by 197,000 majority. The successful scheme against Judge Coffey goes to the very foundation of government. Is the state of Indiana so debauched that it will take no notice of it?

THE new abolition movement, known as the Anti-spoils League, is rapidly gaining in numbers, but a membership of 10,000 is a mere beginning. As is usual in this state, Indiana University is the first to show activity and open sympathy. In the East, Williams College has followed Harvard with a membership at the start of forty. The secretary of the league, Mr. William Potts, 54 William street, New York City, will furnish cards for membership. THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE is sent to the reading rooms of all the colleges in Indiana, to many Christian associations and to a large body of clergymen. It can not be possible that the facts it has printed for the past five years have not aroused the interest and desire of thoughtful readers for the total abolition of the spoils system, and from these should come a large enrollment.

MR. WINSLOW WARREN, who is a Quincy apologist and collector of the port of Boston, according to his speech at a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Reform Club, has evidently come to the conclusion that independence is such a good thing that he can not have too much of it. He declared, "I even propose to be independent of the Massachusetts Reform Club." He defines this somewhat by adding, "Since taking office I have found many difficulties of a practical nature which stand in the way of the civil service reform." Mr. Warren's acts as collector will later define his meaning better, but the sound is not reassuring. It suggests the wicked forestalling pursuit. He belongs to the cult, now much narrowed in numbers, who have always maintained that Mr. Cleveland could do no wrong, which would make criticism admissible or which would permit one jot of "sympathy" to be withdrawn. His words now import that like some others he will fail under the test, and that he has become so independent as to be a free lance as it were among his own principles. Possibly he and Quincy may combine and as Free Companions ride rough shod over their lifetime professions. It is true he says that he does not abate one jot of his civil service reform principles. We do not understand that Quincy has abated any of his principles; he is still in favor of abstract declarations. But it is the acts that strip a man of his honor and his good name and make him the most despised of public men—a reformer transformed into the puppet of bosses.

SURELY he is not believed by any considerable number of Americans to be a frivolous, short-sighted intriguer, who seeks his ends by means that would shock and discourage all his friends.—New York Times.

Congressman Caruth is a free silver man; he was zealous and bold in trying to prevent Mr. Cleveland's nomination, and ever since Cleveland became President, Caruth has been hostile. Now he is engaged in crushing a rebellion in his district in Kentucky. The rebels, like those of Gorman's, "are the very cream of the population politically, socially, and in a business way." Mr. Cleveland has popularly been supposed to represent this class of people, and these citizens of Kentucky spent money and time in the successful effort to crush the machinations against Mr. Cleveland, of men like Caruth. It does not seem that it would be too much to expect that under these circumstances Caruth and his rebels should be left by this administration to wind up their war with no outside interference. This is not the case, however. The treasury department, the post-office department, and the war department, have been called upon by Caruth, and they have responded.

The crowning ignominy was recently made known by the Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post. Major Handbury, of the United States engineers, was assigned to Louisville to take charge of the engineering work of the Ohio Falls canal. First Caruth secured the removal of Mr. Shaw, who had been assistant engineer for fifteen years; then he designated the brother of his law partner for the place. Major Handbury thought if his competent assistant had to go, he would try to get along without anybody in his place. Mr. Caruth kept getting men dismissed, but Major Handbury kept on conducting his office on scientific and business principles. Secretary Lamont and the chief of engineers were the tools to execute Caruth's orders. At the war department, says the Post, the only information given out about the matter is that the major had made himself very obnoxious to Mr. Caruth and some other citizens of Louisville by his persistent habit of "turning down" all their requests and suggestions. The climax of this odious work was that Major Handbury was transferred to Florida and was ordered to turn over his unfinished work to a subordinate officer and to leave at once.

The only explanation is that the administration has tried to buy Caruth's vote, and in the process has attempted to assist in crushing a revolt of decent citizens against a congressman who does not represent them, and has wreaked a contemptible vengeance upon an army officer of high character. The President indeed "seeks his ends by means that shock and discourage his friends."

THE CLERGY AND THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

We commend the sermon of Mr. Dewhurst, printed in this paper, to the religious press, to the christian associations to which this and other civil reform papers have been sent, and to the clergy of this state especially, because, with many notable exceptions, they have not given this reform the support and sympathy to which its relative importance entitles it. The progress of the movement to abolish the spoils system is curiously like the movement for the abolition of slavery. As that history is read to-day one feels that the church at large did not appear well. Its ministers showed a timidity, a weakness, a vacillation, a bent toward casuistry, a deliberate blindness and deafness to facts distressing to those who feel that in all matters of conduct clergymen as a whole ought to lead the people in clear-seeing and in courageous action. The future student will find a like backwardness of the great masses of the clergy in their feeling toward the evils and the inherent wickedness of the spoils system. If ministers do not realize that the evils springing from that system ramify to every village in this country, that the system is dangerous to private morals, that it menaces the stability of a republican form of government, that it is brutal and degrading, it is only because they choose to be blind and deaf to facts thrust upon them, and for willful indifference and ignorance there is no excuse.

A common plea is that the pulpit should keep out of politics. The abolition of the spoils system can not be made "politics" by any jugglery. It pertains to no party; it is hated with equal hatred by the machines of both parties. All bosses of all parties fight to preserve spoil in the desperate effort to save themselves. If a clergyman objects to the advocacy of this reform in his pulpit, while we do not agree with the wisdom of the opinion, there is no criticism to be offered. But out of the pulpit he is a citizen and a minister and he can not evade his double obligation to stand openly for righteousness and to denounce a system that shows itself more base the more it is known. Rev. Robert S. MacArthur in celebrating his twenty fourth anniversary to the pastorate of the Calvary Baptist Church in New York, very pithily said last Sunday:

"If the sacred salt is to save the secular meat they should not be put into separate barrels. Every true American should find cause for patriotism and piety in the history of his country."

It is true that Phillips Brooks in the pulpit did not touch upon specific reforms but out of it he made very manifest that he felt he had a stand to take and a duty to perform. But in the pulpit the power of Phillips Brooks to arouse the human heart to a passion for righteousness by dealing with great principles only in the abstract and stripped of all special illustrations from contemporary life was a great and rare gift. When attempted by most clergymen the result is an entire absence of influence on matters of conduct.

There are certain evils that have become the safe and respectable foot balls to be kicked about in the pulpit and in the religious press. These evils are puerile by the side of the evils inherent in the spoils system, and it is amazing to listen to denunciations of these comparatively petty misdemeanors and then to meet silence or indifference or exasperating want of comprehension regarding a system founded upon injustice and immorality.

THE FAILURE OF THE SPOLIATION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE FOR TARIFF REFORM.

The combination of reformers against the spoils system has always had among its numbers a large contingent who have never felt that this struggle was of the first importance. Tariff reform, they have said, must have precedence. While this theory has been preached and acted upon we have seen President Cleveland turn out over 150,000 public employes to make places for henchmen of his own party and quit office without accomplishing anything for tariff reform. We have seen President Harrison turn out over 150,000 public employes to make places for henchmen of his own party and quit office with the McKinley bill upon the statute book. We have then seen President Cleveland again in the process of turning out over 150,000 public employes to make places for henchmen of his own party and using this patronage with special reference to securing the votes of congressmen for measures he desires to see passed, and we have the prospect of some changes in tariff taxation and of an income tax, which is a fair exponent of the views of organized bands of tramps who are now going about living upon the savings of other people.

We have never believed that the tariff turned the tide which caused the defeat of Cleveland in 1888, or of Harrison in 1892. We believe that hypocrisy exposed, bogus saintship in office stripped of its covering, Gorman and Quay rascality—in a word, the disgust of a boss-ridden nation—has caused the loss of voters which brought deserved defeat. However that may be, the tariff reformers came into complete possession of the government by reason of the election of 1892. No devotees of a cause ever had a better opportunity, but for ten months after the election they put in their time dividing spoil. This is a part of the programme by which civil service reform waits upon tariff reform. It was a veritable sacrifice, made with deliberation. Here were Voorhees and Gorman and all of the other supposedly propitiated bosses pampered with spoil under two Cleveland administrations at last brought to the point of dealing with tariff reform. This is the ninth month of their work. Of what they have done the following authorities speak decisively. March 9 the Indianapolis Sentinel said:

The senate committee has made its report on the Wilson bill and the report is simply infamous. It shows the sugar trust, the whisky trust, the railroad and coal combine, and the iron mine combine have had their way with the committee, and the whisky man from Troy has had his demands granted as to collars and cuffs.

Within a week Senator Mills said:

"I find that the bill before us is not the Wilson bill, but a bill that ought perhaps to bear the honored name of the senior senator from Maryland, Mr. Gorman, or the name of the senator from Ohio, Mr. Brice.

"No man can torture me into the admission that the bill pending before this body is a response to the pledges made by the democratic convention to the democratic people of the United States."

What is the cause of this wreck of expectations? For many months federal offices, worth in the aggregate millions a year, have been given out as a bait in the interest of tariff reform. The excuses given for it sanction bribery with startling frankness. This is the end of a policy which has been followed and advocated and excused since 1886. The end is a prospective law which is a legal outrage.

How much longer is this to go on? It ought not to go on any longer. So long as party machine managers have the spoil, it will always be a matter of indifference to them whether laws are passed or not. Their principles are the principles of the floater, who gets his money before casting his vote, and then is ready to sell it over again.

This purchase and sale has been of gradual growth. When the first signs appeared that the President might be entering upon this policy in his second administration, the New York Times said, editorially:

But as he could not rely upon it [the respect and confidence of the people] long if he undertook to carry out his views with congress by a "deal" in which offices were traded for votes, it is not conceivable that he contemplates such a deal. * * * Surely he is not believed by any considerable number of Americans to be a frivolous, short-sighted intriguer, who seeks his ends by means that would shock and discourage all his friends, and that would moreover be hopelessly inefficacious.

Later it became apparent that the plan to buy with patronage the representatives who could not be trusted to carry out the pledges of the democratic party, had been mapped out with cool deliberation and on a large scale. There was not even the excuse that it was resorted to in a desperate fight as a last measure. Josiah Quincy, in Boston, before a large number of its most distinguished citizens, was triumphant over the power of the President to influence legislation by patronage. He had sympathy and support; fortunately for one's faith in the survival of a conscience in Boston, only a minority gave sanction.

In 1890 two papers were read before the national civil service reform league meeting in Boston, insisting that the abolition of the spoils system was the first issue and the vital issue, and that those who believed other questions were more important could accomplish nothing while great bosses and little bosses were maintained and kept strong and impudent on spoil. An effort was made in the league to prevent the printing of those papers. The soundness of those views has been demonstrated by what has since happened. It is time to protest more vigorously when a tariff reformer, who claims also to be a civil service reformer, disposes of the question by a statement that tariff reform is the more pressing and more vital issue. We have yet to hear or to read any detailed proof or argument maintaining such a position; on the other hand, civil service reformers have not shirked the demonstration that the evils of the spoils system ramified to every city and town and hamlet in this country, and attacked the very foundation of a democratic government, and that aside from all moral considerations as a practical question every other reform was prostrate so long as we bore the yoke of a lot of feudal chieftains.

The time has now come to put under foot the doctrine that it is necessary for any purpose whatever to give public offices as spoil to any party machine or any boss or set of bosses or to any person or persons for any purpose whatever. The war-cry should be the spoils system must be destroyed, and the way to destroy it is to cease to use it. If this destroys a President, or a dozen Presidents, a party or a dozen parties, so let it be.

ANNALS OF INDIANA CONGRESSMEN.

Barring some minor interruptions, such as the necessity for Voorhees to speak an hour or two upon the tariff bill, the reports show that our Indiana delegation in Washington since our last notice of them three months ago have kept quite steadily to their normal work. In his speech Voorhees made a resounding noise about wealth and trusts under cover of which those favored entities were creeping into the statute books upon favorable terms. Turning to the reports, in the appointment of Lynch to be postmaster at Liberty, Voorhees administered a slap in the face to a large section of Liberty democrats and eighty-five telegraphed Voorhees that the appointment "will be resented at the polls." As heretofore stated Voorhees brought Hoke Smith to time in forcing the appointment of Spencer to the Indianapolis pension agency. He had a pitched battle with some presumptuous democrats over the Frankfort post-office. An election was held and one Smith was chosen, but Voorhees was for Marvin and lost the battle. Perhaps his most signal victory in his long list of triumphs during the past year was in getting a place for Con. Cunningham, who has been in Washington since the inauguration and whose struggles for a place have occupied pages of the CHRONICLE and who has now become an emigrant inspector at Port Huron. Voorhees a month ago was working tooth and nail to make Joseph Gwin superintendent of the railway mail service, but appears to have failed for the present.

The Indianapolis Sentinel has pretty steadily criticised Senator Voorhees for what he did to give the whisky ring more time to pay taxes. This made Voorhees smart, and April 19th he declared of Mr. Morss, the owner of the Sentinel, and the present consul-general in Paris, "I could have called him home to-morrow if I but said the word."

Our readers will remember "Judge" Chester R. Faulkner, annals of whom have from time to time appeared in the CHRONICLE, and whom Voorhees keeps steadily in some public job. He also, as Voorhees's man, joined in the effort to put down the Sentinel, and sent it the following letter:

UNITED STATES SENATE,

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1894.

TO THE EDITOR—SIR: I See that you aire giving a good Eal advise a Bout the tariff and if you will Compaire the Differnt tariff Bills you will finde this Result:

McKinley Bill49.58 per cent.
Wilson Bill35.52 per cent.
Mill Bill42.78 per cent.
Senate Bill.....34.15 per cent,
Now these aire the Facts So take your Chise.

Yours as ever,

C. R. FAULKNER.

The Indiana delegation is likely to be beaten in the effort mentioned last month to defeat the bill reorganizing the treasury department and legislating Joe Nicholl out of office, but it is given out that Carlisle will fix Nicholl with something equally as good. April 11 Voorhees and Turpie went up to the post-office department and urged greater rapidity in decapitating fourth-class postmasters. May 9 our senators spent but little time in the senate. They first went with Representative McNagney and an Indiana lawyer to the President to try to obtain a pardon for one Ritter, a bank defaulter. Then the two senators joined Representative Taylor and Captain Zuchsiegle, of Evansville, whom they escorted to the treasury. Captain Zuchsiegle is an old constituent of Secretary Carlisle, but the purpose of his visit to-day with his political backing was to enter a plea for appointment as an inspector of buildings. Voorhees delivered a eulogy upon Zuchsiegle, saying that in a campaign he was indispensable in rounding up the German vote at the last moment for the democrats and his dialect speeches were simply irresistible. All he asks for this is a little inspectorship, says Voorhees.

Our representatives are beginning to find out what sly old dogs Voorhees and Turpie are. The other day they slipped up to the public printer and had him give two-thousand-dollar places to William Edmonds and H. O. Holman. Shortly after McNagney went up to have a man appointed, but was told that the Indiana quota was full. Thereupon McNagney, Cooper, Taylor, Bynum, Holman, Bretz, Martin and all the rest raised a loud and exceeding bitter cry. Each had henchmen to quarter upon the printing department, "worthy and bona fide residents of Indiana," yet the places are given to men who have not seen Indiana for years; and when they go with demands for their bona fide henchmen the appointing power inquires whether Indiana wants the earth. They propose to let the democrats of Indiana know who is responsible for this imposition.

Congressman Taylor never relaxed his struggle to make Zinsich steamboat inspector up to April 5th. This struggle has been depicted in columns of Washington dispatches extending over many months, but on April 13th it went to an Arkansas man. Hammond has disposed of three very bitter post-office fights. The most noted was at Delphi, where there was an election, but Mr. Bissell refused to sanction the successful candidate, because he lived over the Delphi corporation line, and this secured Hammond's man, Editor Isherwood, for the place. The anti-Isherwoodites kept up the struggle for two months. Hammond has also appointed William Jackson postmaster at Winamac, Thomas Mayors at Remington, and one Houser at Rensselaer, John Brodie, prison director, postmaster at Valparaiso, and Jay Shields, a clerk in the auditor's office, postmaster at Rochester. After a long struggle, Bretz got the postmaster at Epsom removed, and put Jerome Reese into his place. At Kendallville there was an election, and Jerry Foley was chosen for the post-office; McNagney wrote for the returns, and they were found stowed away in a barn. When they reached McNagney they were badly mutilated, and were accompanied by a bill against him for the expenses of the election. He did not see the joke, but with some bitterness he agreed to pay the bill. This circumstance started up remonstrances against Jerry's appointment, but McNagney finally got him through.

Bynum got a place for J. J. Netterville in the government printing-office, and allowed Secretary Morton to appoint Bill Hicklin to inspect meat in Bynum's animal industry political machine at Indianapolis. Senator Turpie tried to get his nephew, J. W. Jones, made receiver of the Bozeman land-office, but met with the failure usual to his many struggles after spoils. Congressman Brookshire has appointed W. H. Huff, watchman in the treasury department. Brookshire will have a hard pull for re-nomination. The Washington dispatch of April 16th, to the Indianapolis News says that—

John E. Lamb has been quietly undermining Brookshire's political fortress, and Senator Voorhees has been helping him. Whenever Brookshire declined to recommend a man to an office, Lamb and Voorhees took him up and managed to secure him a place somewhere in the government service. The senator and his Terre Haute protege have caused Mr. Brookshire a great deal of embarrassment in appointments.

After a long fight Conn appointed Walter

Harrigan postmaster at South Bend; also, one Beck, of Goshen, was appointed, through his influence, assistant teacher in an Indian school.

Since last February Congressman Jason Brown has been in a fierce struggle for re-nomination. United States district attorney Burke spent two weeks attending to necessary work in the primaries of Clark county. As the Indianapolis News briefly put it: "It was first, Brown for Burke; now it is Burke for Brown." Editor Jennings, to whom Congressman Brown failed to give an office, says:

Brown made a hundred speeches in the district during the campaign for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, but he made the third speech that was made in the house for the repeal of the Sherman act. He flopped for a piece of patronage pie in the appointment of Frank Burke as district attorney. He has appointed two or three lieutenants in each county to distribute the patronage, and if I had consented to become a member of the ring I could have had the appointment I sought. Brown told me plainly that he would not be able to do anything for me unless I would agree to work for his re-nomination.

In Jennings county Brown's forces are said to be led by the editor of the North Vernon Sun, who is also postmaster of the town. The correspondent of the Indianapolis News, in a diverting account of Brown's fight for re-nomination, said:

When republican filibustering required the democrats in congress to secure a quorum of their own members, a warrant was issued for the arrest of Mr. Brown, who was then in his district in the interest of his re-nomination. The charge of absenteeism has been pressed so vigorously in Washington county that he has not dared to leave his post of duty to go there and confront and disprove the accusation. But he has detailed his secretary of the house committee on elections, who lives in Salem, to go there and organize his friends. This secretary is Mr. Robert H. Mitchell, formerly prosecuting attorney of the county, and he is there now earnestly at work for his chief—at government expense.

General C. C. Williams, late United States minister to Stockholm, contributes an article to The American Journal of Politics, New York, March, condemnatory of "the spoils-system." Citing the condition of the Papal States under Gregory XIII, and attributing to the high-handed injustice of that potentate the swarms of banditti which overran the country, he draws a parallel between the then condition of things in the Papal States, and the existing prevalence of disorder and crime in our own country, as illustrative of the position that like causes produce like results. As the spoils-system, he says, is in every way lacking in justice, it must be charged with responsibility for a large part of the present demoralization. It is a common saying, he continues, that nothing can be done at Washington (in respect to offices) without influence, and that anything can be done by influence. Landed estates are not confiscated, as under Gregory XIII, but, take the President and senate together, their confiscations of civil offices will aggregate in value about as much as the confiscations of the church potentate. He refers to no particular President or administration; the practice has been the same with each party, for many years. If, in addition to the national government, we take city and state governments, there are more than two hundred thousand offices in this country which are subject to the spoils-method, and the injustice of the system tends to alienate respect for government, and produce demoralization.—Literary Digest, March 29.

The stalwart democratic state central committee met here to-day. J. B. Crouch was removed from the committee, it being charged that he was engaged in an office brokerage business in Washington and had been representing "stalwart" applicants for employment ever since last March. The secretary was instructed to notify the President and heads of departments at Washington that Crouch no longer represented the stalwart democracy of Kansas.—Topeka Dispatch, New York Times, February 20.

Buffalo furnished the most interesting feature of to-day's investigation of the State board of health. That feature was a letter from Lieutenant-Governor Sheehan to Secretary Balch. Until Comptroller Roberts relieved him, Julius H. Haas, a faithful Sheehanite from the second assembly district in Buffalo, was a registrar in the health department. He got $125 a month from the state. He is one of the employes who, by the report of the board's executive committee, did considerably less work than he was paid for doing. Mr. Haas did practically nothing for the $125 salary he drew for October, 1892.

"BUFFALO, Oct. 10.

"DEAR DR. BALCH—I need the services of Julius Haas here absolutely until after election. He is indispensable to me in a legislative contest in one of the districts, and in other ways. You will do me a great personal favor if you will give him a vacation until election is over.

"Yours very truly,

"WILLIAM F. SHEEHAN."

—Albany dispatch, Buffalo Express, March 8.

Gov. McKinley's second term as Ohio's chief executive has thus far proved no improvement upon his first from a strict business standpoint. An atmosphere of scandal continues to hang about a number of the state institutions where McKinley office-holders have been enjoying their easy places without much regard for the public welfare.

The penitentiary in this city is the greatest of the state institutions. Two thousand prisoners are crowded into it. Chaplain Dudley fell from grace so far as to have very peculiar financial relations with convicts seeking his influence for parole and had to step down and out. He was the second of McKinley's appointees in that place to retire in disgrace. The warden is being attacked for incompetency even by republican papers. Shocking stories of cruel treatment of prisoners are published frequently and are believed to be well founded.

The McKinley management of the deaf and dumb institution in this city has also been discredited. Superintendent Clark was investigated two months ago at the governor's direction by the Board of State Charities, a non-partisan board composed of highly-respected gentlemen, and two weeks since a report was submitted to McKinley finding the superintendent incompetent and disqualified by disposition for the place. Among other facts it was shown that he had reported an average attendance for last year greater by sixty than the largest number of pupils enrolled in any single day. This fact revealed the methods by which Superintendent Clark was able in his last annual report to exhibit the lowest per capita cost of maintenance in the history of the institution. The governor has not yet removed Clark or indicated what he intends to do.

The Boys' Industrial School at Lancaster has also been the theater of numerous scandals, and while the board of trustees promptly whitewashed the management the stories will not remain smothered, but reappear to bother and worry the administration.—Columbus dispatch, New York Times, March 10.

A MANACLED PRESS.

But, remember, sir, that these are the attributes of a free press only. And is a press that is purchased or pensioned more free than a press that is fettered? Can the people look for truths to partial sources, whether rendered partial through fear or through favor? Why shall not a manacled press be trusted with the maintenance and defense of popular rights? Because it is supposed to be under the influence of a power which may prove greater than the love of truth. Such a press may screen abuses in government or be silent. It may fear to speak. And may it not fear to speak, too, when its conductors, if they speak in any but one way, may lose their means of livelihood? Is dependence on government for bread no temptation to screen its abuses? Will the press always speak the truth, when the truth, if spoken, may be the means of silencing it for the future? Is the truth in no danger, is the watchman under no temptation, when he can neither proclaim the approach of national evils, nor seem to deery them, without the loss of his place?

Mr. President, an open attempt to secure the aid and friendship of the public press, by bestowing the emoluments of office on its active conductors, seems to me, of everything we have witnessed, to be the most reprehensible. It degrades both the government and the press. As far as its natural effect extends, it turns the pædium of liberty into an engine of party. It brings the agency, activity, energy, and patronage of government all to bear, with united force, on the means of intelligence and the adoption or rejection of political opinions.—Daniel Webster in 1832.

SERMON

Delivered by Rev. Frederic E. Dewhurst at Plymouth Church, Sunday, April 15, 1894.

[Preceded by readings from Lincoln's first inaugural and "Lowell's Commemoration Ode."]

Luke xi:47, 48.—Ye build the tombs of the prophets and your father killed them. So ye are witnesses and consent unto the work of your fathers; for they killed them and ye build their tombs.

It is needless to say that this is satire of the keenest sort; satire that is almost aglow with the white heat of indignation, yet an indignation that is not blind to those incongruities of life that awaken the sense of humor.

There is something terrible in the lashing of words that it gave to the representative religious people of his time, something far more terrible than the actual lashing with the whip of small cords when he drove the traders from the temple. But if we ourselves had stood there, the actual victims of his scornful attack, I do not see how we could have suppressed a passing smile at the subtle humor in this allusion to the tomb building propensity, even though like all the other words it had carried the shaft of condemnation to our hearts.

Let us view the situation for a moment. Jesus stood there almost at the close of his tragic career, fully conscious now at last of the irreconcilable conflict between himself and those who represented the official religion; it was himself against the whole church; he had realized by degrees that those from whom he naturally might have expected sympathy were his most implacable foes; and at length unable to restrain longer his indignation he launches forth on this tide of invective. Presently he points with his hand toward those white tombs outside the city that had been rebuilt by that generation and gathered from ruin and oblivion; they were the pride and boast of these people. "Our fathers killed the prophets," they said, "and in order to show our sorrow and to help undo the wrong and to prove that we ourselves have the prophet loving spirit we will rebuild their tombs."

But how strangely and swiftly Christ reverses all this—"Ye consent," he says, "unto the deeds of your fathers; for they killed the prophets and ye build their tombs; you are fit and worthy successors; your tomb building is only another exhibition of prophet-slaying."

Now, I say there is a subtle sense of humor in this swift reversal of motives underlying a deed that was intended to correct and discountenance the deeds of a past generation; but deeper than the humor or the satire of it is an analysis of motives that is searching to the last degree—a disclosure of the inner working of certain phases of human life that cover a wider field than the men or the generation to whom the words were first addressed.

These words have come afresh to my mind on this anniversary of Lincoln's death. Many of us here to-day can well recall that mournful morning twenty-nine years ago to-day, when the telegraph or the daily papers brought the tragic tidings of the President's assassination. It was like a thick cloud that completely hid the sun which had been shining upon us with new light and clearness in the few brief days since there had come the happier tidings that the long war was over.

How inevitably humanity marches onward to its triumphs and conquests over new Calvaries, planting upon each a cross. Verily without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. The atonement for the wrongs that are graven deep in human life is made when the innocent, the brave, the holy suffer and perish that they may disappear.

In those events some of you here to day were actors, bearing the marks still in your bodies. Others of us here to-day were but mere children, not old enough to know the meaning of it all. And I look into the faces of many more to whom all these events are mere history, and to whom the name of Lincoln, like that of Washington, is an object of reverence about which gathers the halo that surrounds the memory of all heroes who have receded far enough into the past.

Almost an entire generation has passed away since Lincoln died, and more than a generation has come and gone since the days when the prophets of emancipation opened their mouths to proclaim their "Thus saith the Lord," the message that failed not until it reached its Mount of Transfiguration in the Emancipation proclamation and its Golgotha in the tragedy of April 14th.

The generation which has been passing over the stage since then has not been negligent in the building of tombs to the prophets. In the most beautiful and fashionable avenue in Boston, through whose streets Garrison was dragged by a mob of her citizens, now stands his statue, almost fulfilling Lowell's words:

"The hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return,
To glean up the scattered ashes into History's golden urn."

And all the men and women who belonged to the prophetic group are now at last held in reverence; their monuments glisten in the light of day; their deeds are immortalized in bronze.

Lincoln to be sure was not a prophet; he had not the temper of the seer; it would not have been possible for him to do the work of Garrison and Phillips. He was of that company, also noble, who serve the future best by serving their own day and generation well. In him at last the pent-up feeling and purposes of the people found a voice. Emerson in his funeral eulogy gave the true estimate of Lincoln. He said: "He is the true history of the American people in his time. Step by step he walked before them; slow with their slowness, quickening his march by theirs; the true representative of the continent; an entirely public man; father of his country, the pulse of twenty millions in his heart, the thought of their minds articulated by his tongue."

Now all these men have receded into the past; those of the prophet type, those also of the statesman type, and we are the children of the generation in which they lived, which they served. The natural and fitting duty that befalls us, so far as they are concerned, is to build their monuments, to perpetuate their names and memories in sacred memorials.

It is obedience to a right and holy instinct that places the statue of Garrison on Commonwealth avenue; that enshrines in bronze the memories of heroic men in the public squares of our cities and villages; that sends toward heaven a shaft so strong and stately as this monument close by. Such visible tokens of love and devotion, however belated they may be, are honorable to humanity.

But we must not forget that there is also in all this tomb-building activity an immense power to deceive and bewilder. It is all so evidently noble that it carries with it the presumption of a motive and spirit which men do not by any means always possess. There is great satisfaction in building monuments and erecting statues; we seem in that honorable activity to be proclaiming to the world that if we had lived in the days of the fathers we should not have been sharers with them in the blood of the prophets; the very proof of this, we say, is seen in the reverence and honor in which we now hold their names. But it was just the charge that Christ brought against his contemporaries, that they were fitting and worthy successors of their fathers and that their tomb-building showed it. Now how could this be true? Is not this the explanation? These people, like the most of men perhaps, lived not out of convictions, but out of traditions; their acts sprang not from original inspirations and deep-rooted personal persuasions, but from that which they had received by inheritance, by education and by the compulsion of forces external to themselves; they were not really themselves; they were acting a part; they had assumed a role; they were enacting a character, and that is why they were called hypocrites; it was largely an unconscious process. Most cant, Carlyle used to say, is sincere cant. The essential fault was that they did not stand in original and open-eyed relations with life; therefore they could not understand and receive the prophets. They could understand only the routine that had been marked out and walk in the path that was already well beaten, so distinctly the safe road that the fool could not err therein.

Therefore when the time came that they were willing to build tombs to the prophets, eager to do them honor, it meant no essential change of attitude on their part; it did not mean that they had exchanged the way of tradition for the way of conviction and life. It meant only that the prophet had at last come to his posthumous reward, as the prophet always does; it meant that his new and original word had now been so long familiarized that it could at last itself become a safe tradition; it meant that these masqueraders in garments not their own could at last weave the ideas of the past prophets into a new garment for the present and go on masquerading still; it meant that the prophet had simply provided them with a new raft by means of which they could still preserve their inertia and spiritual indolence and float on down the sea of life.

That, I think, was the real sting of Christ's satire and the true meaning of his declaration that they were consenting unto the work of their fathers; "for they killed them and ye build their tombs." The killing of the last generation was an exhibition of the traditional spirit; the tomb-building, when it came, was also an exhibition of the traditional spirit, for the past conviction which was rejected had at length become a new tradition, which it was safe and popular to accept. And this charge was the more convincing because they were rejecting the new and living prophet before them, which was proof that they had no ears for the prophetic message. "If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed me, also."

Herein, then, is the great lesson for us all. It is not building tombs to the prophets that established our reverence for them, but such a response to the spirit of their message as shall show itself in lives morally alert and eager. Our statue and monument building may be honorable to us, but before we can know that it is we must ask ourselves one question: Whose statue would you erect in the public square to-day? Who among living men is your idol and hero? To whose voice do you listen and by whose words are you persuaded and led on to action? Who is your man and your chieftain among living men?

It all comes back to this—that life is a holy and ceaseless struggle. "There is no discharge in this war." There is a sublime moral sense in which the teaching of the old Greek philosopher Heraclitus is true, that this universe is in perpetual flux and movement; it is continually changing its form and meaning; the devouring and cleansing fire is its perpetual symbol. And the Hebrew writer caught something of that meaning when he wrote that the divine voice once shook the earth and said, "Once more will I make to tremble not the earth only but also the heaven which signifieth the removing of the things that are shaken as of things that hath been made, that those things that are not shaken may remain."

So there is the ceaseless movement, the restless, eager, unsatiable demand of the moral order upon us. There is scarcely time for bivouac; you win a battle and stop to take breath, to rejoice in the victory, but you must be up and on; there are more battles to win, and so it will be forever.

It is wholly right that our past moral gains should fix themselves in the customs, the traditions, the laws and habits of the people; fix themselves until they become moral instincts transferable by heredity and ingrained in the moral fiber of the race. We must hold on to our gains. We must put the pawl into the ratchet to keep things from unwinding. But after all the ratchet wheel is not the wheel that goes forward; it is not the symbol of movement and progress; it is the symbol only of the conservation of what we have. And unless we progress there is no sense in conserving anything; unless the sight of the prophets' tombs inspire us to the exercise of the prophetic spirit, the building of the tombs is itself a delusion and a snare.

I trust I may not be misunderstood, but it sometimes seems to me a mistake to perpetuate the veterans' organizations in the generation that lies beyond the participants themselves. It was a noble and inspiring moment when the soldiery dissolved quietly back into citizenship, for the soldiery is the vanishing fact; citizenship is the perpetual and abiding fact; it vanishes not away; in all shakings of heaven and earth it alone is not removed. The sons of veterans do indeed perpetuate the memory of their soldier fathers; but it is a loftier and holier duty for all of us who are sons of veterans to be the sons of soldiers who became citizens. To discern the vital and urgent duty of the present, to see the duty that claims us for our struggle even as it claimed our fathers for theirs, this is the most noble monument we can build.

And all this seems more urgent and true than ever when we look around us and realize the graver responsibilities of citizenship in a land like ours. Terrible are the responsibilities of freedom. The experiment of popular self-government is one as full of peril as it is of opportunity. It is an experiment that calls for vigilance to the last. "We have solved the problem already," say the political optimists. Let us not say that; let us say rather, it must be solved, and by God's grace it shall be solved.

"Here or nowhere is thy ideal." Out of the material, the spiritual is to be wrought. Life is not in the monastery, but here in the world of commerce, of politics and of social life. What we need to realize is that the moral life is in these things, not apart from them. All political, commercial and social questions are but the other side of ethical questions.

The progress and safety of a republic beyond all other forms of government therefore depend upon the constant discernment of the moral heart of all political problems. The sons of veterans, if they are really loyal to the fathers, must do something more than build monuments to them; they must bring to the front the moral claims of the present; that is the way to build the monument that no satire can touch.

I wish to speak above all possible implications of partisanship (and all moral issues inevitably rise above partisanship), but certainly there are issues and problems in our political life that need more than anything else a clear moral discernment to make them in their way as important as those for which our fathers fought.

Almost ever since the close of the civil war we have been trying to eradicate the spoils system from our political life. And the main reason why it is not buried in the depths of oblivion is because it has not found its way into the citadel of our consciences with sufficient force. It is not because it lacks the material for moral enthusiasm, for it is the most unequivocally ethical question in the whole field of our political life. There is hardly anything more utterly debauching, more blinding in its effects, than this infamous system. It has stood in the way of the highest usefulness of all our recent national administrations, and it sends its poison into the remotest regions of petty local politics. It is, next to slavery, the most absolutely corrupting influence in our political life. Some of the most promising and right-minded young men that I have known who have gone into political life (and you all can duplicate cases from your own acquaintance) have fallen before its power as trees fall before the hurricane. It is sad enough to read some of the recent apologies that have come from men high-minded in most relations of life, but who have become so bewildered as reluctantly to admit that it is right to buy patronage and political support with office rather than imperil the principal issues before the nation.

Fellow-men, when that degree of moral debauchery has come about, it is time for a party to arise which shall distinctly avow that there is no measure that can be primary and essential until the corrupting spoils system is buried in fifty feet of earth; slung into the sea with the millstone of the gods about its neck. It would not take long to do this; one President who would not vacillate or shrink for an instant would accomplish it; one who should be willing to leap into the gulf like Curtius would fill up the gulf forever, and though it meant political failure to himself, his failure would be the vicarious sacrifice for a people.

The moral quality of such things as this is slow in making itself fully realized. There was once indifference to the fact of slavery; but gradually it became apparent that it was a corrupting and demoralizing thing for a man to have a proprietorship in a fellow-man. Well, it is also corrupting and demoralizing for any man to have such a proprietorship in a fellow-man's political action that he can buy his support with the promise of a post-office or a petty consulate in some remote Patagonia or can barter for his political support by granting him the distribution of patronage. It is not simply an indecent and impolitic thing; it is morally debauching beyond power of exaggeration and it is a direct plunge at the very heart of self-government; for if those who govern themselves are not incorruptible, where indeed is the stability of free institutions?

I affirm this not from the standpoint of a cast-iron ethics. I fully believe there is relativity in moral action; that some things claim precedence of others in importance and so in right. I would not insist on the too easy moral formula that the right is right and that's the end of the matter. The right itself often has to be determined by a comparison of all interests involved.

Again and again I have tried to feel the force of those who are telling us that the spoils system is wrong, but that it must wait until the pressing questions of finance, or of the tariff, of the election bills and the like, are disposed of. "Men can go on buying and selling patronage a little longer," it is said, "but they can not bear the suspense of uncertainty on these graver and more pressing issues."

It is plausible but it is misleading, for there are always questions of greater apparent urgency than the simple questions that need only firmness and courage to settle once for all. Here is a wrong that has come to the point that all honest men are ashamed of it. And yet we appear to be powerless to effect a change.

Now, in the face of all this, it seems to me that our monument building can wait. We can let the graves of the fathers go a little longer uncared for. Their bones will rest in peace and their spirits will rejoice in an activity on our part that is contemporaneous with ourselves.

There are a few men now in congress engaged in the fatuous attempt, which every now and then is made, to put the name of God into the constitution. How vain and foolish such an endeavor! It would change no fact; it would create no new relation; it would stimulate to no new devotion. A fiat God would be no better than a fiat dollar. God is in the constitution only when the infinite purpose gets discerned and loved and enacted by mortal man. It almost seems that he would break through the eternal silence and cry out: Spare me the empty honor of putting my name on the pages of the constitution and exert yourselves toward staying corruption and bribery. Not those who say to me, "Lord, Lord! but those who do my will, are those in whom my soul delights."

I have seemed to particularize, but it is only in the way of seizing what is perhaps the most conspicuous example. The applications are, however, far wider than to this single example of a corrupting influence at work in our political life. But the principle is that we should live not in the past but in the present; that we should seek the place of application to our own conditions of the ideas and spirit which have made the past glorious and our father worthy to be praised. If we really love and honor the men whose deeds at last seem to us glorious and praiseworthy, let us declare that love not so much by erecting memorials to their name as by manifesting in the midst of our own life the spirit that was in them.

"Is earth too poor to give us Something to live for here that shall outlive us?"

* * * * *

No age was e'er degenerate
Unless men held it at too cheap a rate
For in our likeness still we shape our fate.
Ah, there is something here
Unfathomed by the cynic's sneer,
Something that gives our feeble light,
A high immunity from Night,
Something that leaps Life's narrow bars
To claim its birthright with the host of heaven;
A seed of sunshine that doth leaven
Our earthly dullness with the beams of stars,
And glorify our clay
With light from fountains older than the Day;
A conscience more divine than we,
A gladness fed with secret tears,
A vexing, forward-reaching sense
Of some more noble permanence;
A light across the sea,
Which haunts the soul and will not let it be,
Still glimmering from the heights of undegenerate years."

RESOLUTIONS.

"We condemn the outrageous bargain and sale of federal patronage by the Cleveland administration in its unblinking efforts to usurp the prerogatives of the legislative branch of the government, to force favorite measures through congress and compel the confirmation of presidential appointments by the senate.

"We believe that the benevolent, educational and correctional institutions of the state should be placed under non-partisan control."—Indiana Republican State Platform, April 24, 1894.

Under the present administration an abuse has arisen which, though not heretofore unknown, has been so little worked that it comes with startling force and opens to the reformer an almost endless vista of struggle and dismay. Heretofore the debauchery of the public service has been mostly for the purpose of aiding in factional fights: for the advancement of one or another person within the ranks of a party, the implied return being in the form of personal loyalty to the appointing power and support to his claims for party position. The new bargain is on a different basis. It being understood that the head of the administration has no further design for place for himself, his return for feed at the public crib is to come, not in the shape of votes for him in convention, but of votes for his measures in congress. We are thus brought face to face with the presence of a most insidious and dangerous corruption.

Heretofore our congressmen have found their forces sapped, their energies weakened and their time taken from their legitimate duties by the office-broking demands, which have, first, weakened their power as legislators, and, second, tended to a great deterioration in the character of the men seeking congressional honor. Now it is supposed that their votes on public questions are to be the price of places for their henchmen.

In the past a congressman has earned his reelection by much running after and importuning of the cabinet and heads of departments. In the future he is to earn it by the sale of his convictions. An abyss of corruption so great as to be conquerable only by overturn, instead of by niplifting, yawns at our feet. That this is not more generally seen and more severely denounced, lies in the fact the use of the system so far has been in the interest of legislation which is in accord with the beliefs and convictions of most of us who are identified with the civil service reform movement. How doubly dangerous is such an evil, when men whose mental clearness and moral purpose we are wont to applaud, can throw them both to the winds; and not only uphold it in the excitement of debate, but can defend and approve it in studied communications to the press?

It would be idle to claim that the evil named does not exist because no evidence of corrupt bargaining can be shown. Of course it can't. But it is nevertheless believed that this evil is upon us, and is already working.—From the resolutions of the Newlon [Mass.] Civil Service Reform Association, April, 1894.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A correspondent writes: My attention has been called to a reference in the current number of the CHRONICLE, at the foot of page 121, as to the effect of the operation of the civil service law in Brooklyn. I suggest that Brooklyn's experience has really been better than is indicated and ask whether some attention may not be directed to this fact in your next issue. Except during the administration of Mayor Whitney, the civil service rules have been a serious impediment to the "machine," and at the present time may be said to be operating perfectly. Brooklyn was fortunate in having rules drawn with the utmost care by so competent a draftsman as Mr. E. M. Shepard, and their enforcement has always been in the hands of a first-class commission. The result of this has been that so far as entrance to the service is concerned there has been almost a total absence of cause for complaint. During previous administrations it has been of course impracticable to protect the men appointed to office or position from the influence to which they have been subjected immediately after coming into service. The promotion or relegation of employes, and even the amount of drudgery forced into their work, has been at the will of heads of departments, and for this reason the influences they have been able to exert have always been for the best. But up to the point of entrance nothing of this kind has occurred. Even during Mayor Boody's administration, for instance, when the control of the system was in the hands of the splendid commission of which Mr. Alexander E. Orr was chairman, the machine found that the civil service was admirably protected from any assaults it might hope to make. The present commission, of which Mr. Orr is still chairman, is, if possible, even a stronger one than the last, and there is every reason to believe that within the next year Brooklyn may present a perfect object-lesson of the good effects of civil service reform principles in practice in municipal government.

TO THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE: Your long chapter in the last CHRONICLE on New York was very effective. A similar chapter on Philadelphia would be equally startling.

THE INDIANAPOLIS PENSION AGENCY.

A few days ago Mr. Bynum wrote to the pension agent demanding "official" recognition for the seventh congressional district in the distribution of Mr. Spencer's patronage. The reply came promptly from Mr. Spencer that, acting under the instructions of Senators Voorhees and Turpie, he had given nearly all the political plums to the twelfth congressional district, and there was nothing in sight for Bynum's district.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, March 26.

* * *

United States Pension Agent Spencer has notified John P. Stone, James R. East and Miss Mary Simonson that their services in the office will not be needed after this week. Mr. East served through the war and was wounded. Miss Simonson is a daughter of Captain Simonson, the artilleryman, who was killed during the war, and who was often mentioned in the war reports as an artilleryman of unusual bravery and skill.—Indianapolis News, March 26.

* * *

In Miss Simonson's place the pension agent has appointed his sister.

Current report is that there are differences between Pension Agent Spencer, Congressman McNagney and the two United States senators from Indiana about the patronage of the office. Congressman McNagney, who comes from Columbia City, the home of Miss Simonson, said to her before the appointment of an agent was made, that she should hold her place in the office. He knew of her father's faithful service to the government, and was aware that, for other reasons, she was deserving. The day after Miss Simonson had been notified by Mr. Spencer that her services would not be required after April 1, she received a letter from Congressman McNagney, in which he said it seemed that he did not have any influence with the new pension agent. He said he had tried to have Miss Simonson retained in the office, but Mr. Spencer was unable to carry out his (the congressman's) wishes, because the senators from the state had men for all the places in the office. At that time the pension agent's sister had come here to take the place of Miss Simonson.

It is the understanding among Indianapolis democrats that Mr. Spencer, before he was able to get the help of the two senators, surrendered all rights as to appointments, except as to the one place for his sister. A democrat said to-day that Mr. Spencer could not get the appointment through Congressman McNagney alone, and that before the two senators would recommend him for the place they exacted an agreement that they should make the appointments in the office. Mr. Spencer has said to friends since he came to Indianapolis, that every one of the old clerks will have to go.—Indianapolis News, April 5.

* * *

"Has Mr. Cooper had any more success in securing appointments than other congressmen have had?"

"No more than any one else. He has no more influence with me than other congressmen have that I know of."

There are twenty-eight employes in the pension office. Ten of these are new. Four were made to fill vacancies caused by the resignations of Messrs. Ensley, Jones, Smith, and Davis. The other six vacancies were caused by removals.

"Will there be other changes?"

"Not until the present payment of pensions has been completed."

"Will all of the eighteen old clerks be changed?"

"They will probably all be changed, but the changes will be gradually made, and the clerks who occupy the most prominent positions will be retained to the last, so that the efficiency of the new force may be promoted."

Mr. Spencer said that Miss Simonson had not been removed as had been alleged, but she had resigned upon the statement of the case to her that persons promised employment had followed Mr. Spencer to the city, and hoped for immediate installation into the office. Of the remaining old clerks in the office, two are democrats, but they will go.—Interview, Indianapolis News, May 3.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

IN this commencement season, when all eyes are turned toward the colleges, the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE prints in full the short-hand report of the address of Mr. Moorfield Storey in Sanders theater before students of Harvard College. The CHRONICLE has now for over five years been regularly sent to the libraries of all the best known colleges of the United States. Will not Mr. Storey's speech move these college readers to a keener feeling for the duties of citizenship? College presidents and professors, as a rule, personally deprecate the spoils system, but with many and notable exceptions they, like the masses of the clergy, have been strangely indifferent to the duty of doing anything to make others realize the actual condition and significance of the spoils system in this country. This indifference is largely willful. It is not convenient or pleasant to state the facts regarding the gifts of public offices, regardless of party or persons; to give the histories of big and little bosses; to describe the present system of buying and selling legislation, the barter used being patronage. These odious facts hit so many respectable persons all about us. They strain social relations. They cool the interest of private benefactors who thrive upon legislation bought with patronage. They anger spoils-grabbing legislators on whose good humor state institutions depend for income. But in spite of all pains and penalties, colleges must do their part toward making the republic safe by sending out citizens. And we must not let our colleges escape their duty. We must prod them on. Mr. Storey has done it genially, thoroughly and eloquently, and his audience manifested proper enthusiasm.

THE $25,000 proposed to be raised for a memorial to George William Curtis is such a modest sum that it ought to be an offering of many people widely scattered. Those who understood while he lived what manner of man he was, and the many who, through partisan bigotry, were blinded until his death cleared their vision, all have now a chance to build a monument to him and better yet to perpetuate his work in the "Curtis lectureship," a course of annual lectures upon the duties of American citizenship and kindred subjects. This feature was a happy thought, and the feeling of everybody who knew Mr. Curtis must be, how pleasing to him would such a testimonial be. Subscriptions are to be sent to William L. Trenholm, treasurer, 160 Broadway, New York City.

SINCE the last issue of the CHRONICLE the dreaded calamity which weak-kneed civil service reformers always predicted would happen if other civil service reformers refused "sympathy" to compromising Presidents, refused respect to knavish congressmen, refused to tolerate plundering the public service under the guise of "practical politics," and in fact insisted upon hitting an enemy whenever and wherever he appeared, has happened. The appropriation for the civil service commission and for the operation of the civil service law has been struck out. It was done in the house May 22. The victory was easy and complete. All of the democratic congressmen from Indiana voted to strike out. Bynum so voted and made a speech to the same effect. We emphasize this now because, following his well-known habit, Bynum will be denying it before long. The victory, however, was not final. On May 24, when in open daylight the enemies of civil service reform had to face it and go upon record in a recorded vote, they melted away like smoke. The proposition to strike out was beaten two to one. Reform has not won such another victory since the passage of the Pendleton act. It is the Gettysburg of the war against the spoils system. When the final vote was taken only two Indiana congressmen, Taylor and Bretz, dared to vote to strike out. Johnson, Brookshire, Cooper and McNagney voted against striking out. Brown, Conn, Hammond, Holman and Martin, democrats, and Waugh, republican, did not vote. While the vote was being taken Bynum left the hall and stayed away until it was finished.

THE freedom with which Quay once made use of the state money is well known, and of course the people of Pennsylvania do not approve of that. He is full of vagaries upon financial questions, although the people of his state are sound upon these questions. He openly says that he deals in sugar certificates at the same time that his vote as senator is helping to raise or depress the price; but the people he claims to represent are too honest to sanction that transaction. He is a thoroughbred political rascal. Yet if his office were vacant and a senator were to be chosen tomorrow from Pennsylvania, he would get the place. This is because the free will of the people is completely throttled by the system known as the spoils system. The faithful henchmen for whom he secures a living out of the public treasury control and largely compose the party machine and Quay may, if he chooses, defy law and sound judgment and honesty; they will see to it that the people do not get at him. They call this performing the duties of citizenship; they have not, they say, ceased to be citizens because they have become office-holders. Gorman and Murphy and their followers in their respective states are like examples. It is the boss system in its perfection, and while it exists no other important question can proceed toward solution without danger of being ham-strung as buccaneers in the senate are now ham-stringing the sugar question in order to give millions to a trust.

THE government printing-office in Washington continues to be a national disgrace. The office apparently has need of 2,000 to 2,500 hands. After Mr. Cleveland's last inauguration, Superintendent Palmer, the republican hold-over, seems to have allowed democratic congressmen to quarter their followers upon the office, for whom he had neither room nor work, until he had 3,600 employes. Then the new democratic superintendent, Benedict, came in and it was found that the public interest required a large reduction in force, and 700 have been discharged. The 700 are not selected from among the least efficient and the least experienced, but from republicans. This wasteful and corrupt management of the public business could be terminated instantly by the President, by transferring this office to the classified service. To bring in 700 henchmen of congressmen and deprive 700 men of this settled and steady means of supporting themselves, and their families, is no different from the descent of 700 Goths and Vandals upon Southern Europe, and driving 700 families off from their farms.

The devilish inhumanity of this plundering system is well illustrated by the following Washington dispatch:

A great many of the discharged employes, particularly the women, are very poor, have no homes to go to, and have no other means of support. They are haunting the halls of congress from morning until night, and beseeching representatives who are supposed to have influence, to assist them in getting their places back.

CHARLES F. STONE has been nominated to be naval officer at the Boston custom-house. Stone says:

As a democrat, all other things being equal, I believe the offices belong to democrats, but it will not be my purpose to impair the efficiency of the service by creating vacancies simply to give positions to those of my own party faith, irrespective of qualifications. However, I am frank to say that in my opinion, so far as the same can be done consistently, the plums should go to democrats.

Any private employer would at once get rid of a superintendent who declared such unbusiness-like and vicious sentiments. Yet, of the multitude of shallow, prating appointees who have slapped President Cleveland's face with his own reform literature, he has been cowed, seemingly, by every one, and there is no reason to expect a different result now. But how refreshing it would be if even one such upstart politician were told that his principles are not such as must prevail in the civil service, and that he may seek some other field.

THE civil service law provides that no person shall, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of his duties by any government employe, "solicit in any manner whatever," money for political purposes. Attorney-General Olney has given an opinion that the solicitation may be by letter without violating the law. A campaign committee may not blackmail by word of mouth, but may blackmail in writing. This opinion fits in well with general course of this administration in relation to the civil service. It is not the judgment of a court, but its effect will be that the district attorneys, who, almost to a man, are in favor of assessments, will find it a welcome excuse for laxity in the matter of offenses against the civil service law. If there had been no Josiah Quincy we should have wondered how Massachusetts could have produced a man like Olney.

SOME three months ago the highly efficient postmaster of Indianapolis, after having been in the post-office nineteen years in various positions, was turned out because he had been up to the Minneapolis convention and had worked for General Harrison's renomination.

On June 6th, however, a Sullivan dispatch to the Indianapolis Sentinel said:

The democrats of the county held a very enthusiastic convention here to-day. The convention was called to order by United States Marshal W. H. Hawkins.

We do not wish to be "querulous" nor

"impertinent," but we venture to ask whether turning out the republican participator and keeping in the democratic participator is hypocrisy?

On June 18th, is the following dispatch from Greensburgh, Ind.:

Saturday afternoon the democrats of Washington township met at the mayor's office. Delegates were chosen to the state and congressional conventions, Holman's friends getting their men according to programme and contrary to the expectations of a number opposed to the veteran. Mendenhall is Holman's clerk of the committee on Indian affairs, and has been here for several weeks laying the pipes to secure a solid Holman delegation from Decatur county. The better class of democrats are growing tired of his bossism. He occupied a prominent position in the convention and dictated what should be done.

POSTMASTER GENERAL BISSELL is circulating among the postmasters President Cleveland's famous order of 1886, forbidding office-holders to interfere in politics. Probably Mr. Cleveland never made a more conspicuous failure than he did in enforcing that order. The order is known by heart to every democrat in the country, and what it now needs is not circulation but enforcement. In all the years of its existence we do not recall an example made of a democrat. Thousands of republicans have been removed for being active partisans, while thousands of democrats, although active partisans in exactly the same manner, are unmolested. If Mr. Bissell wants to show the country that he is sincere, he can do so by dealing with the postmasters in Congressman Bretz's district—beginning with Royal E. Purcell, postmaster at Vincennes and editor of the Vincennes Sun. It was by the efforts of these postmasters that Bretz secured his renomination. The same may also be said of Congressman Cooper and his postmasters.

June 16 the democrats of Huntington, West Virginia, undertook to hold a primary election. Mr. Cleveland's United States marshal, Vinson, though not living in the county, and a gang of deputy marshals appeared and began to work for candidates who favored the reelection of Senator Camden. This led to fights and bloodshed, a deputy marshal being prevented from shooting Ex-Congressman Gibson only by the interference of the police. The chairman of the primary at last sent the following telegram to Washington:

Attorney-General Olney, Washington—United States Marshal Vinson, of Wayne county, with a platoon of deputies, is here at work as partisans in the democratic primary for legislative candidates. Is it not unlawful? Please advise him at once. Answer.

EVERY body must remember the recent history of the Murphy machine, printed in the CHRONICLE, closing with the murder of a citizen of high standing by Senator Murphy's henchmen, the uprising of the citizens of Troy, and their fruitless attempt to get

Governor Flower to have the trial of the murderer taken from the influence of this machine. A large body of eminent and distinguished citizens of Troy believe that Senator Murphy is responsible for the murder of a man who was doing what every honest man should do in the protest against fraudulent voting. These same citizens have declared that the Murphy machine is so fortified by patronage that it is well-nigh impregnable. And yet two weeks ago the President appointed Murphy's man, Michael F. Sheary to be postmaster at Troy. The senate confirmed him the same day. His bond reached the post-office department on Sunday night; was approved Monday morning, went the same evening to the President, and in short, in one week Murphy's man was nominated, confirmed and commissioned. "This record," says the newspaper report, "is unprecedented." The Springfield Republican says:

The administration has evidently brought Senator Murphy to its support, so far as tariff legislation is concerned, by the only means which would influence the "collars and cuffs" statesman from Troy. He has been permitted to name the new postmaster in that city. Statements are now frequent in the newspapers, that Murphy will not support Hill in his policy of obstruction to the administration, and certainly he has not been voting with him of late.

Up to the time I differed with Mr. Cleveland on the silver question, he had done me the honor to consult me freely and often as to Missouri appointments, and I had honestly endeavored to advise him, as was my duty. When he suddenly departed from this custom, and appointed to the most important office in Kansas City a gentleman who had supported almost the entire republican ticket in 1892, I considered his action a declaration that my opinions were no longer needed, and that the President intended to emphasize that fact in the most public manner.—From the letter of Senator Vest to the New York Evening Post, June 8, 1894.

Senator Vest evidently believes that patronage was withheld from him as a punishment for his stand upon silver legislation. Looking at congressmen, for instance, Voorhees of Indiana, whose opinions had been the same as Senator Vest's but whose vote was with the administration and whose rivulets of patronage swelled into rivers, there is hardly a chance to doubt the correctness of Senator Vest's diagnosis of his case. We can not do better than to quote from Mr. Storey:

"The moment it is understood that legislation is for sale, that moment the seeds of revolution have been sown, and the revolution in time is sure to come. If the populist, the anarchist, the socialist, succeed in turning out the men who are in power and appointing men of their own caliber, their own party, in their places, they will apply the same rule; they will use the offices to buy votes for their pernicious measures."

Mr. Vest's experience also illustrates why Mr. Cleveland has felt as he has the tremendous pressure against reform in his own party. Whenever his reform friends have ventured to suggest any criticism of his course, he has turned with the demand for sympathy because of the dreadful difficulties of his position. He has made these difficulties. How can one expect Vest or Hill to respect a stand on the spoils system that is one thing for one senator and another thing for him? We hear a great deal about practical and practicable reform. A steady, consistent plan of reform, even the most drastic and far-reaching plan would never have resulted in the venom and in the onslaught that have come from the President's isolated efforts to assert for personal reasons the supremacy of the executive.

It would seem that the Indianapolis district had carried an incubus in the shape of Congressman Bynum long enough. He was too cowardly to have his vote recorded in favor of breaking down the merit system, yet he is and has always been one of the most vicious enemies of that system. This action illustrates his whole character. He has no political principles by which he will stand in a personal emergency. He is devoid of reliable political opinions. His notion of politics is to work spoil for all it is worth. From the first day he became a congressman he has debauched the public service to his utmost. The effect of his whole course as a congressman has been, not to elevate, but to degrade politics. The only way to do with such a man is to beat him at the polls.

MAJOR HANDBURY AGAIN.

SOME one sent a long dispatch from Washington to the New York Times, June 11th, in which the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE is charged with not stating the facts last month as to Major Handbury, who was transferred by the war department from Louisville to St. Augustine. We note some things in this rebuke with much satisfaction. We note that while Major Handbury is an excellent engineer, "he is not a person of tact." We honor the lack of tact which will not allow an officer to stand silent while political bosses load up the service with heelers and rounders. Again, Major Handbury refused to heed a recommendation of Congressman Caruth, who wanted a "friend" quartered upon the public treasury, and then did not refrain from "discussing, with unconcealed satisfaction, in more or less public places, the decision he had shown in jumping on a politician." Thus "he had needlessly and undiplomatically provoked Mr. Caruth's dislike." If there is in the whole United States one officer who is brave enough to openly denounce a congressman engaged in preying upon the public service, a ray of light has certainly appeared. The fact that heads of divisions, heads of departments, cabinet officers and the President stand in such cringing fear of congressmen that they dare not refuse them spoil is the most disgraceful fact connected with our government. The army officer who denounced Caruth set them a lesson in manliness which ought to make them ashamed.

Again, the Times's dispatch asserts that Secretary Lamont made a minor appointment under Major Handbury, and that the latter notified the appointee in writing that he might not find the place comfortable, and thereupon the appointee declined it. Why are facts kept concealed? Who was this man? It has always been said that Presidents and cabinet officers could not personally know men for subordinate places, but must rely upon recommendations. Who recommended this man? In the face of this studied concealment fair-minded men will conclude that the man was a leech, a heeler, recommended by Caruth, and that Major Handbury knew the character of the man, and very properly warned him off, and thereby again showed himself a faithful and efficient officer. Upon the evidence of his accusers the more this matter is sifted the more it appears that Major Handbury has been made the victim of an ignoble spite and sacrificed to a desire upon the part of the administration to mollify Caruth whom he had angered. The fact that Caruth did not know when the transfer was made only makes the matter worse. For Secretary Lamont or the President to attempt to give Caruth an agreeable surprise of this kind is only the more abject.

It is rather late in the day for followers of the administration to begin to be sensitive about the purchase of congressmen's votes with patronage. Such a sensitiveness might have been useful months ago, but the fact is now so branded upon the administration that the mark can never be removed. As to the "impertinence," the "overzealousness," and the "querulousness" of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, it is proud of the acts which have caused it to be thus charged, and in the same manner it intends to be more impertinent, more overzealous and more querulous as the time goes on.

THE JACKSONIAN DOCTRINE IN ITS FINAL DEVELOPMENT.

Since the publication of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE began it has given much space to the political organization known as Tammany Hall of New York City. This, with Gorman's organization in Maryland, Quay's in Pennsylvania, and others of greater or less note, it has regarded as the perfection of the spoils system and as being upon the margin between a government by the people and oligarchy and imperialism. We have from time to time given facts to prove this position. Nevertheless Tammany and the other organizations have not only been tolerated but have been nursed and petted by their respective parties. Members of Tammany Hall have been distinguished by appointments to great offices like the postmastership at New York, and in many other places throughout the country, notably in Indianapolis, this organization has been the envy of party leaders. But Tammany Hall is uncovered, and an amount of degradation, of thieving, of multitudes of officials accumulating vast sums by preying upon that great under world which lives without the pale of the law, has been revealed to an extent infinitely beyond the faintest suspicion of the people of this country. The thousands of executive officers of the city of New York hold their places at the will of Tammany and they are not in any sense the trustees of the people, but an organized band of ghouls feeding upon the vices of the criminal and the weak. This is the last stage of the spoils system. This is giving the offices to the party in power in order that subordinates may be in touch with the party policy. To be more explicit: Captains of the police are from time to time shifted. Upon the advent of a new captain each disorderly house in his district pays him an "initiation fee" of $500. After that the fee for keeping the house without molestation by the police is $50 a month, with a Christmas present to the captain and something for the "ward man," the captain's factotum; $25 a month are paid by saloons for the privilege of running without a license. In addition all must be ready to take five or ten tickets to chowder parties or picnics at $5 a ticket. There is an attorney system by which favorite attorneys take fees from $100 upward from arrested law-breakers and secure for them by a word or by a name written on a slip of paper immunity from prosecution. One such attorney, named Roesch, after a profitable career of this kind has become a police justice himself. To get a position as patrolman the applicant must pay $300, while a captaincy costs $10,000. In this perfect instance of the working of the spoils system we have exhibited the most degraded and conscienceless official and private character and the most infamous system of official blackmail now existing anywhere in the world.

SPOIL WITH ONE HAND AND MERIT WITH THE OTHER.

On June 1, Mr. Warfield, of whom excellent things are reported, became postmaster at Baltimore. In a short speech to the employees he said:

I desire to say to the carriers and clerks that I propose to run the office on strictly business principles and as laid down in the rules by the department at Washington. I believe in civil service reform, and in the classified service democrats and republicans alike shall receive the same treatment. Just so long as they perform the duties required of them their places are secure, but I shall hold each man to a strict performance of his duties.

We note that he believes in civil service reform, and in the classified service democrats and republicans shall receive the same treatment.

On May 14, in response to an inquiry of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, Washington Hessing, postmaster at Chicago, wrote:

The clipping you sent me from the New York Evening Post is correct. Those remarks were made to a number of eligibles who were about to be put on the substitute list as clerks in this department. In excepted places I have of course given preference to personal and political friends, but whenever I have considered the efficiency of the department was best served by a republican, I have retained such a man in office. All other things being equal, of course I would put on men of my own political faith. I believe in civil service, and no governmental appointee will be more strict and earnest in carrying out civil service laws than I. I believe if every employe, federal, state and local, could be under civil service rules, millions of dollars would be saved to the people themselves, the service much more satisfactory, and even the office-seekers, to say nothing of the office-holders, better pleased.

Mr. Hessing is even more explicit than Mr. Warfield. He says that if every employe, federal, state and local, could be under civil service rules, millions of dollars would be saved to the people, the service would be more satisfactory, and even the office seekers would be better pleased, and yet Mr. Hessing turned the unclassified service over to personal and political friends. When, by his own admission, he could have taken such a reform step, why did he not himself put these places under a competitive test? The civil service commission has for years plead with whoever was President over the absurdity of the "excepted places." It puts, in almost every case, over employes who have got into the service by competition, a man who is the enemy to competition because his place came through favoritism. These are the leaders in all the bullying and trickery against the classified service, and yet the moderate amount of backbone required for this moderate step forward does not seem to be at hand.

DILETTANTE REFORMERS.

The trying part of fighting the spoils system is not in the kicks of the spoilsmen, but the needle-thrusts of the great body of dilettante sympathizers who assure you that they approve of your object, but your methods are tiresome. The golden mean of interesting these people in reform, but not of arousing any consciousness of obligation to arise and put on their own armor, is an acrobatic position extremely hard upon the fighter. He knows perfectly well that victory will end the struggle, that the fight is thoroughly interesting, that it is being conducted scientifically and practically; but these dilettanti, who call themselves conservative reformers, warn him against pessimism, against boring people with unpleasant facts and overzealousness, and at the last, superciliously class him as a man of one idea and a theorist.

To continue his work in spite of such criticisms of the friends of good government required more courage and persistence in Dr. Parkhurst than all the open barriers Tammany could raise. In fact these people were more or less the instruments of Tammany Hall. It knew how to arouse the party bigotry, the dislike to the disagreeable work of citizenship of this class of the community, and it recognized the imperative necessity of furnishing an anesthetic for the rigorous American conscience, and so Dr. Parkhurst was reproved for sensationalism, for contaminating the young and for employing spies to track out infamous things. He persisted and now he is vindicated.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.*

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: No human government, however cunningly devised, however skillful its system of checks and balances, can succeed unless it is administered by men of ability and integrity. In every form of government, brains and character are required for public office. As Mr. Schurz put it the other day, speaking of municipal government, "If Gabriel draws your charter, and Lucifer administers it, your government will be bad. If Lucifer draws your charter, and Gabriel is called upon to administer it, your government will be good." Most of all men, we, who are working out the great experiment of self-government for the world, who are called upon to deal, not only with the delicate questions of taxation, of finance, of the relation between labor and capital, of the business of sixty-five millions of people, which other governments to a certain extent are called upon to deal with also, but who are required to consider and settle these questions under difficulties of our own, difficulties arising from the presence in this country of four millions of people who were lately slaves, difficulties arising from the constant immigration of men who bring here no acquaintance with our questions, no familiarity with our traditions and our methods, and frequently no understanding of our language. We, certainly, with municipal questions, as well as national questions before us, require brains and character.

Let me remind you, briefly, if you will permit me, of a tendency which has lately developed in this country toward the methods of Mexico. I will not allude to the newer communities, nor even to a state like Kansas, where last year we found the governor of the state ordering a colonel of the militia to take possession of the house of representatives, and the colonel refusing to obey his orders, and the democrats and republicans engaged almost in a fisticuff fight for the possession of the hall. That is comparatively a new community. But here in New England, in the most orderly and best conducted part of this country, where the traditions of self-government are the strongest, only a few years ago in Maine, under the administration of Governor Garcelon, the worst frauds were perpetrated, violence, and deceit of every kind, for the purpose of defeating the will of the people. Two years ago, in New Hampshire, we found a republican assistant clerk—the clerk himself having resigned because he was unwilling to do the work—organizing the legislature in the interest of the republican party, by refusing to recognize certain persons who had been elected by the people, in defiance of the opinion of the best republican lawyers. In Connecticut, only two years ago, the whole legislative power of the state was paralyzed for two years. In New York the legislature was made democratic because the attorney-general of the state stole a return and prevented the proper canvassing. And in New Jersey to-day we have one republican and one democratic senate, each claiming to be the true senate.

This is in the very best part of America. We certainly need brains and character if republican institutions are to succeed. And yet we have a skilfully devised system, aptly called "the spoils system," which keeps both out of the public service, whose tendency is inevitable, and steadily operating, and its results are before you.

We have, in this country, two hundred thousand offices, dealing only with those offices which come under the federal government. If you add those which belong to the state and municipal systems, the number would be something like five hundred thousand. The amount paid in salaries to the federal office-holders alone is one hundred millions a year, and that great sum of money is treated, by those of the public servants who are charged with the duty of appointing others to office, as a fund which belongs to them, and which they have the right to spend, not for the purposes for which it was created, but for the purpose of helping themselves—helping their own political fortunes—helping their party in order that they may keep in office; and at times, and times which become more frequent every year, for the purpose of supporting their friends and their relations. That is going on about you every day. Our money, placed in their hands in trust for a certain purpose, is being, in effect, stolen and applied to an entirely distinct purpose. Raised for the public use, it is being put in private pockets, and used for private gain.

Now, what is the effect of that on the public service? Let us deal, first, with its effect on the office-holder. How does a man get office? Leaving out of view, for the present, that portion of the federal offices which has been rescued from the operation of the spoils system by the civil service law, a man gets office, first, by establishing claims on his party. The doctrine is very well expressed by two office-holders under the last administration. One of them was the man who was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Indianapolis district, and who said that to secure an appointment from him a man must show

*Address of Moorfield Storey delivered before the students of Harvard College, at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, February 20, 1894.

"that he is an unwavering, active republican." The mere fact that a man may always have voted the ticket is not nearly enough. He must have been an active party worker." And General Coulter, of Ohio, the sixth auditor of the treasury, having dismissed the deputy and chief clerk and nine of the chiefs of divisions for no reason except that they were democrats, remarked: "That is what we are here for, and it is about time that the men who did the horn-blowing during the last campaign should have something to show for their labor." [Laughter.] There is the doctrine, from high official sources.

After a man has worked at party caucuses, after he has attended conventions, after he has attached himself to the fortunes of some successful political chief, he has established claims, claims which must be recognized. And what is the next step? The next step is to get indorsements. To get them, he himself or his friends must carry around a paper, must get the signatures of all the prominent men of the same political way of thinking that he can find, must get the signatures of prominent citizens who are independent, but who are believed to have some influence with the appointing power. And then, with these credentials, he goes to his member of congress. He there meets various other people with like claims, and very likely with the same indorsements, for this business of indorsements has been reduced very nearly to a science. An officer high in the federal government told me not long ago that one member of congress said to him: "Whenever you see my name written in full on an indorsement, you will understand that it counts for nothing. Whenever you see it written with my initials, that means business." [Laughter.]

So the unhappy candidate, provided with indorsements which either do not count or do, enters into a struggle with other men similarly equipped, and by and by he gets, perhaps, an appointment. And what does he get? Not a place where he may be sure that fidelity and efficiency will count, not a place which holds out to him a career. No matter how faithful his service, no matter how long his experience, if his party is defeated, if that wing of the party to which he attached himself loses its control, if his particular patron goes out of power, or, even worse, if his patron finds some other henchman whose services he thinks are more likely to be useful, out he goes. The best of records is ignored. He may have spent twenty years of his life in office, he may have fitted himself to discharge the duties of that office singularly well, he may be absolutely unfitted for any other employment, as a man is likely to be who spends his life in a bureau, he may have a large family dependent on him for support; and when he pleads these claims, the answer of the appointing power is, "Other men have families. You have had it twenty years. Other men want salaries. Out you go." No one thinks of the public service. It is simply a question between two claimants. The public service is sacrificed.

Now, is that a system which is likely to attract men of brains and character? A man who occupies official position is bound, not merely to think as his party thinks—any lack of political orthodoxy is fatal—but he is bound to think as his wing of his party thinks, as his patron thinks. And his melancholy position is perhaps illustrated by a story I used to hear of a man who was postmaster at Concord when that town was strongly anti-slavery, and he held office under a democratic administration. He was an apothecary, and wanted to keep his customers. He was a postmaster, and he wanted to keep his office. Consequently he was singularly non-committal, and it was very hard for his fellow-citizens to find out where he stood on any of the burning questions of the day. And he did not mean that they should. By and by there came an election, and they set a trap for him. A committee was appointed to watch him and see how he voted. He went up to the polls, and it happened to be the first year when the law took effect which allowed a voter to ask for an envelope and inclose his ballot. He asked for an envelope and went through the form apparently of inclosing his ballot, and they thought they had lost him. But when the votes came to be counted it was found there was only one envelope, and they thought they had got him. But when they opened the envelope they found there was no ballot in it. [Loud laughter.]

Consider what the miserable position of a man must be who does not even dare to tell himself what he thinks on politics [laughter], who does not even dare to vote in secret. That system, gentlemen, does not attract men of brains and character. And what is the result? Take, for example, the census, which is a very important business. It is very important that the statistics of this country should be taken accurately once in ten years, and a great deal of money is spent in order to secure accuracy. The civil service reformers urged the President, and urged the commissioner of the census, to put that office under the civil service rules before the last census was taken, but he declined to do it, and the census went on. The first thing that was discovered, by a recount in New York, was a difference of 200,000 inhabitants in that city—a pretty large percentage. And the question was asked the superintendent of the census, "How do you explain this?" "Well," said he, "I do not know that I can fairly say whether it is due to carelessness in the original enumeration, or whether it is due to fraudulent counting the second time." Now, certainly, if his census was of the least value, he ought to have known; if his enumerators were to be trusted at all, he ought to have known. Perhaps, again, a story of personal experience which happened in a family with which I am very familiar, in Brookline, may throw some light on the cause of that discrepancy. The enumerator came into the house, and, being informed that the oldest daughter was in Europe, declined to enumerate her on the ground that she would be counted there. [Laughter.] He was finally driven from that position and consented to count her. He then asked the birthplaces of different members of the family, and the mother said, "I was born in Washington, D. C." "Delaware county?" "No, D. C., District of Columbia." "Well, in what state is it?" "It is not in any state, it is the District of Columbia." "But it must be in some state." And again a club was used, and he finally surrendered, saying "Well, I will put it so, but they won't know where it is." [Laughter.] He then insisted on classifying the oldest daughter as a housemaid without pay [loud laughter], as being the only blank which the census offered, there being no other possible heading under which she could be enumerated. Now, gentlemen and ladies, this did not take place in any remote part of this country, but it took place in Brookline, under the shadow of Harvard College [laughter], in sight of the gilded dome, and in perhaps the most intelligent community about here. Only the spoils system could find such an enumerator in Brookline. If it happened there, what do you suppose must have happened in the Tammany districts of New York, and what happened all over this country? That is the legitimate business result of the spoils system as applied to the census.

Now, take the Indian question. I do not know how many Indians you suppose we have in this country. We naturally imagine they are very numerous. I believe there are 250,000. And it has been stated that we spend enough in taking care of them to board each one at the best hotel in New York. [Laughter.] Why? Because we have neither brains nor character in the Indian service. If by accident either of those qualities appear, it is promptly extirpated. [Laughter.] Under the last administration, or under the last administration but one, my recollection is that out of fifty-eight Indian agents, fifty-six were removed. Under the last administration fifty-seven of the fifty-eight were removed. Against the protest of every body who was familiar with the subject, the experienced and competent men were turned out. And what was the result? The result was the death of a great many people in the northwest. The result was that Pine Ridge outbreak, directly traceable to replacing a competent man, in whom the Indians had confidence, with a miserable politician, who was appointed at the behest of one of the senators from Dakota, on the ground that the home-rule doctrine must be applied, and that the spoils of that particular state belonged to the senators from that state. The result was an outbreak. Farmers were obliged to abandon their property, farms were laid waste, a whole section was thrown into confusion; and the final result was, that men, women and children were surrounded and shot down by men who wore the uniform of the government. That is the result of the spoils system in another form.

Now, take the consular service. Here is a great country which desires to preserve intimate commercial relations with its neighbors. An excellent consul in any part of the world is a missionary, a missionary of commerce, a man who can lay before the merchants of this country important facts for their guidance. And what do we have? The longer a consul remains in place the more familiar he becomes with the people, the more familiar he becomes with the business, the more useful he is to those of his fellow-citizens who happen to find themselves there, the more useful he is to his country. But our system is, once in four years, to turn them all out and fill their places, not with men who are selected because they are fitter, not with men who know anything about even the language of the place to which they are accredited, but men who have successfully packed some caucus, perhaps in Indiana, and who have claims and indorsements. Some years ago we had a minister in Chili under General Grant, a man whose character and whose conduct was such that the Chilian government requested his recall. General Grant looked into the case and recalled him. Shortly afterward another republican president was elected, and this man, who had been making campaign speeches in one of the states, desired an appointment, and they sent him back to Chili. They slapped the most powerful government in South America in the face, they paralyzed our influence there for a great many years, they injured our commerce, merely that that man might have perhaps $12,000 a year, which he did not earn and to which he was not in the least degree entitled. That is the way the spoils system works in our foreign relations. You have got a system which drives the men of character and the men of brains out of your service, for such men will not pay the price which is now charged for a public office. Men will not pay any price unless they get something in return. And an office which leads nowhere, an office where character and capacity count for nothing, is not a place which a man of either character or brains is likely to take. The result is you have bad workmen, and where you have bad workmen you are sure to have bad and expensive work.

Now, there is another effect. People sometimes say that a class of office-holders is to be avoided. Well, gentlemen, a class of office-holders is not to be named in the same day with a class of office-seekers. [Laughter.] For one office-holder there are twenty men who are demoralized by the hope that they may be able to get their living without work; that they may get an office, which to them seems a sinecure. Those men may be said to live on faith, hope, and ultimately on charity. [Laughter.] They fill the departments at Washington, they beset congressmen and the President, they grow more and more demoralized, and finally they degenerate into deadbeats. If you will go with me to Washington and walk up and down Pennsylvania avenue, I can show you shoals of them, aimless, hopeless, useless men, who have been ruined by the spoils system—men who might have been useful citizens, who might have filled some prominent place in the body politic, but who are now mere driftwood on the surface of the stream.

Now, what next? How is it with the legislature? How does the present system act with men of character and ability there? I could occupy all my time, and more time than you would feel disposed to listen, by reading you testimony from the first statesmen of the country as to the effect which it produced on them. One man, for example, said, after spending two or three years in congress, that there ought to be one man to attend to the business for which congressmen were elected, and another man elected from the same district to take care of the offices; one man could not do both. Now, as a matter of fact, a man who goes to congress soon finds himself beset by these people with influence and with claims. It is a very hard business to decide between them. He is pretty certain, if he recommends A, to offend B and a large variety of other letters of the alphabet. After he has made his selection with pains and thought, he has got to go and beset the President, beset the secretary of state, infest the offices of various members of the cabinet, and struggle with representatives from other states. His time and his thought, which ought to be devoted to considering the very delicate questions of legislation which come before congress, are in fact largely occupied, and in some cases entirely occupied, with this miserable business of trying to minister to the selfish wants of certain office-seekers. No thought of the public service enters here. These men do not go to the President and secretary of state and say: "You have got in that place a wholly incompetent person, and I offer you here a man whose training, whose ability, whose experience, singularly fit him to fill the place." Nothing of that sort occurs. They are very apt to go and say: "Here I have a constituent who wants a consulship, and his salary ought to be about $2,000. Let us look over the list of consuls." So he runs them down. "That place I have promised to So-and-So, of Arkansas; he can not have that. But here is a consulship with a salary of $2,000 that will suit him." "Who is in it?" "A. B." "Oh, kick him out and appoint my man." Nobody stops to inquire whether the man who is there is a good consul, nobody thinks of asking primarily whether the man that seeks the place is the man best fitted for it. He has claims, and he has influence, and the public service suffers.

Now, that work is not work which men of brains and character like to do. It is not pleasant when you are elected to congress to find your waking and your sleeping hours occupied by office seekers; to be continually weighing in the balance their respective demands, and offending other people to gratify them. But the member of congress who neglects that work, in many sections of the country, soon finds that what he calls his "fences" are down, and he has to go home and look after them or lose his place. The result is, that the men who are in congress, the men who ought to be able to give their whole time and thought to the legislative work which they are elected to do, have not the time for it, and they are continually distracted from their work by these petty considerations. And, on the other hand, constantly worse men are elected, because the man who makes the most promises to the would-be candidates for office, the man who establishes the closest relations with the men who manage the caucus and the machine, is the man who is likely to go to congress; while the man who should stand up at the beginning of his campaign and say before the nominating convention met, "If I am elected I do not propose to recommend a single person for any office," would be pretty reasonably certain of not securing even a nomination. In that way, the character of your legislative bodies is steadily deteriorating. Do you want evidence of it? Ask yourselves who are the senators to-day from the great republican state of Pennsylvania and the great democratic state of New York? Quay and Cameron; Hill and Murphyl [Laughter.] How happen these men to be there? What is their record as statesmen? What contribution have they ever made to the great questions which this country is called upon to decide? Were they selected on account of their eminent public services, on account of conspicuous ability, or because they are leaders of public opinion? I doubt if there is any strong partisan of either party in this audience who would stand up and answer that question in the affirmative. Those men are there because they knew how to wield the patronage successfully, because they were good managers of the machine. And what is the result? Last summer the business of this country was paralyzed, disaster to many of us seemed imminent, great industries were stopped, workmen were out of work, and the prospect on every side seemed desperate. The country made up its mind that the cause was the law which required the purchase of so much silver every month, and congress was called together to repeal it. Certainly there were no states in this Union more strongly in favor of that repeal than Pennsylvania and New York. And yet Senator Cameron stood up and made a speech in opposition to it. And when the senate tried to force a vote by remaining in continuous session, and failed, Senator Hill walked out of the chamber and remarked, "Well, it wasn't a very good Cleveland day, was it?" All those men thought of was their petty political contest. The interests of the country received no attention at their hands. Those four senators are the legitimate fruit of the spoils system, in the highest legislature of the country. If you are mortified that the largest and richest states in the country are so represented, the remedy is to abolish the system which puts them there.

Now, let us come to the President. How is he affected? I might remind you of the first President Harrison, who was killed in a month by office-seekers, a man who had served in various wars, but who could not bear that contest. I might remind you of President

Garfield, whose assassination was generally recognized as being the direct result of an unseemly contest over spoils, which occurred during the first six months of his term. But I do not care to take such comparatively recent illustrations. Let me carry you back to the time of the civil war—a time certainly when every patriotic citizen in this country recognized that his first duty was to his country, when men were willing to sacrifice their lives and their property, and every thing that they valued, in order that the rebellion might be put down. Every sane man recognized that at that time the future of the country, the future of a race, in large part depended on President Lincoln, upon his wise determination of the many embarrassing questions which he was called upon to decide. In that supreme moment we find him writing: "I wish I had time to attend to the southern question, but these office-seekers demand all my time. I am like a man so busy letting rooms at one end of my house that I have not time to put out the fire which is burning in the other." Now, if that was the experience of President Lincoln at that time, what think you must be the experience of President Cleveland now, with a united country to bear its fruit of office-seekers, with a population enormously increased, with a system solidified by long continuance, when the offices are more than twice as numerous as they were then, and the office-seekers of course numerous in much larger proportion? How is it possible for a single human being to meet this flood of applications? How is it possible to find time to consider the important questions that come before the President of the United States, when every waking and sleeping moment is occupied by this demand? I remember, even in that time, President Lincoln was asked how he passed his day. And he had in mind a certain senator from New York, whom he called Ira. "Well," said he, "I come down to breakfast in the morning, and I find Ira there, and he stays and talks to me about the New York offices while I eat my egg, and remains about an hour afterward. Then I have time to look over my letters, and am getting ready for lunch, when Ira is ushered in, and he stays another hour—stays with me to lunch, and very likely goes out to drive with me. Then I have my dinner, and I meet a few people in the evening. Then I go to my room, and look under the bed and see if Ira is there, and if he is not I go to sleep." [Laughter.]

And this is not the worst of it. It is not merely that the system interferes with the operations of your government. The theory on which our whole institutions rest is, that whenever we are dissatisfied with a public officer we have only to say so, and turn him out. At the next popular election the people rise in their might, and the officer is removed. That beautiful theory has disappeared in practice under the spoils system. Suppose you go to Baltimore. You will find there the scene of the hardest political battle that has been fought in this country for years. You will find there perhaps the worst city government in the world, a government administered by blackmail. And if you ask the prominent citizens of that place why it is that, with all their efforts, they have been unable to displace their corrupt rulers, the answer will be, "Why, Senator Gorman has organized the office-holders of this state into such an efficient army, so thoroughly disciplined, that our efforts are useless. We can not break the line." When Mr. Cowan was making his speech there he said to his fellow-citizens, "Why is it that murder, pure, simple murder, has got to be regarded in Baltimore as a qualification for office? How is it that at this moment there are seven murderers holding office under our city government, through the favor of Mr. Gorman and his associates?" That is the fact, and if you want the names of the murderers I can give them here. But they are only features of the general situation. The truth is that the man who stands at the head of the machine buys, with the money which we contribute to carry on the public business, a certain number of mercenaries, forms them into a disciplined cohort; and men who are less disciplined, who take a few hours from their business once a year for political work, which is what we mean by "the public rising in their might," find it almost impossible to displace them. Take an illustration a little nearer home. Two years ago the people of the United States, certainly those who belonged to the democratic party, had made up their minds that Mr. Cleveland should be the candidate of that party at the next election. He seemed to be the person who had the strongest hold upon this country. It was perfectly clear that a majority of the democratic voters of New York wanted him. Senator Hill desired, himself, to be the nominee. He knew perfectly well that a fairly-called convention would be certain to send Cleveland representatives. He had the entire control of the office-holders of the state, and he called what was known as the "snap convention," before the usual time and without due notice, and it returned a unanimous Hill delegation to Chicago. That is what it was to have the command of a band of mercenaries, paid for by the public money. What was the result? The people of New York were not satisfied, and, with infinite trouble, obtaining signatures all over the state, with a copious enrollment, at a great sacrifice of time, they succeeded in demonstrating practically to every man in the country that a majority of the democrats of New York were not satisfied with the delegates elected at that convention and were determined to be represented by delegates who were for Mr. Cleveland. And yet when they went to the convention their delegation was not admitted. Every one knew it was the true delegation, but this organized band of office-holders were determined to stand between the people and the bosses, and nothing but the strong force of public opinion outside the organization, clamoring at the outside wall, finally persuaded the men inside to nominate Mr. Cleveland. Now, suppose they had not done that—and they came very near failing to nominate Mr. Cleveland—suppose Mr. Hill had been the candidate of the democratic party, as under many circumstances he would have been against a candidate less strong than Mr. Cleveland, the result undoubtedly might have been a republican victory. The result might have been that the verdict on the tariff would have been reversed, and the whole economic policy of this country for a series of years might have been changed, simply because this senator from New York, through his control of the mercenary office-holders, was able to misrepresent the people of that state. This is the way in which the spoils system deprives the people of their right to change their rulers at their pleasure, and that is an evil which it is impossible to exaggerate.

Nor is this all. Last year almost every good citizen in the country recognized the importance of repealing the silver bill. They felt the pressure of impending disaster, they felt the misery which was hanging over a great many innocent people, workingmen, operatives, the community generally. They went so far as to say that they thought the President of the United States ought to buy votes for the repeal of the silver law by giving offices to senators; in other words, that the President of the United States ought to bribe congress to do that which the people demanded. No more dangerous doctrine than that was ever preached in a free government, and it is amazing to find that honorable men for a moment entertained the possibility of such a course. And yet there are many who believe that that thing was done. And what does this mean? The American people are perfectly disciplined to yield when the majority is against them. We are always willing to obey the will of the majority. But on this silver question there were a great many of our fellow-citizens, as honest as ourselves, who really believed in the existing law, who really believed in free silver, scattered throughout the south, scattered throughout the west, some of them here in New England. Now, if these people were satisfied that the majority of the congress of the United States, after careful debate, in the use of their unbiased judgment, had reached the conclusion that the silver law ought to be repealed, as good American citizens they would have submitted. But suppose they are left with the impression that the real belief of the majority was in favor of the law and that its repeal was brought about by bribery, you have sown the seeds of revolution. The moment it is understood that legislation is for sale, that moment the seeds of revolution have been sown, and the revolution in time is sure to come. If the populist, the anarchist, the socialist succeed in turning out the men who are in power and appointing men of their own caliber, their own party, in their places, they will apply the same rule; they will use the offices to buy votes for their pernicious measures. A bad example, once set, is certain to be followed; and instead of having a government of reason, we shall have a government simply of bribery, and no government can long endure where that prevails.

Mr. Emerson said, at the breaking out of the war, we had been trying to do without justice. It was a pithy sentence. It summed up in a few words the whole cause of that struggle. Now, if we try to do without honesty, the revolution is just as certain to follow as the rebellion was to follow slavery. The moral laws of the universe are just as inexorable as the law of gravitation. You can not avoid them. There is no truer word than the text, "Be sure thy sins shall find thee out." You may push the pendulum as far as you will one way. The farther you push it, the surer and the stronger is the recoil.

Now, we have another result. If the President interferes with the legislature, if he undertakes to control their action by bribery, the legislature, on the other hand, undertakes to deprive him of his undoubted prerogative. The senators say, "The patronage of our state is so important to us that we will exercise it, and not allow it to be exercised under the constitution by the President." There has grown up, in consequence, what is called senatorial courtesy, a corrupt combination between senators from different states, by which they agree that in case a man is nominated to office from one state he shall be defeated if the senators from that state disapprove of the nomination; and if the senators happen to be of different political parties, if the senator who is of the same political faith with the appointing power disapproves of it. It was openly avowed the other day by Senator Cullom, when the question came up of confirming Mr. Hornblower, "Why, we must stand by Mr. Hill. We shall want his assistance some day. We can't afford to defeat him." And what is the result; what is the result that you have just seen? Two years ago the attorney-general of New York took a return when it was on its way to the returning-board or the registering officer, at a time when the legislature of New York hung in the balance. The bar of New York proceeded to investigate the case. The bar association, through its committee, denounced the act, and branded the man who did it as a criminal. Senator Hill undertook to defy the public sentiment of New York by nominating that man for the court of appeals through an office holding convention which he absolutely controlled, and the people of New York set their foot upon the fraud by an enormous majority. Prominent in that fight to keep the bench of New York pure were Mr. Hornblower and Mr. Peckham. One is the president of the New York Bar Association; both are men whom their fellow-members of the bar of both parties cordially indorse as fit for the bench; and they have both been defeated, not because they were unfit, but simply because Senator Hill intended to punish those men for daring to try to keep the bench of New York State pure. The thief tried to drive the judge who helped to convict him from the bench. And the whole senate of the United States, or a large part of it, joined hands with the thief—joined hands with a man whom they despised, and helped him to carry out that malicious purpose. That is the present conspicuous result of the spoils system as it appears in the senate of the United States.

Now, gentlemen, what is the remedy? It is perfectly simple. It is the civil service reform law; that is to say, it is a system which invites every citizen of this country, who desires to serve the United States, who desires to take public office, who has the honorable ambition of serving his country, to come forward and present himself as a candidate. Let him show his fitness, and the man who proves his competency is chosen.

I need not say to you, familiar as you all are with the examination, that men are not examined for letter-carriers on the differential calculus; that it is possible, in human ingenuity, to devise an examination which shall test the fitness of a candidate for the particular office for which he presents himself. And whenever you hear a man talk of ridiculous questions being asked of this kind and that kind, you may set that man down either as ill informed or as a liar. The men who have framed these examination papers are sensible men, and their purpose is to get fit men; and the examinations are so framed as to test the fitness of a man for the particular place he is to fill. There is no hanging around the ante-chambers of congressmen, there is no beseeching fellow-citizens for indorsement, there is no working in caucuses and conventions to establish claims. Fitness, and fitness alone, is the qualification for a place. And the fittest man gets it. That is the way in which you get men of brains and men of character.

That law to-day applies to a certain portion of the service. It is capable of very great extension; but there are certain offices to which it can not be applied, certain places, for example, like the fourth-class postmasters, where the salary is so small, where so much depends upon locality, that is difficult, by competitive examination, to select a candidate. But there are other schemes by which all these offices can be taken out of politics and placed purely upon a business basis, and some of those measures are pending in congress now.

And now the question comes before you, young gentlemen, upon whose shoulders is soon to devolve your share in the government of this country, what can you do to end this abuse, what can you do to bring to an end the spoils system, and to bring about civil service reform? And remember that each one of you is just as responsible as every other.

In the first place, you can declare yourselves the friends of the reform. You can make its friends your friends, and its enemies your enemies. You can let it be understood that you vote as you think. This is not a partisan question. This is not a case where the reform is to be carried through by adhesion to either of the great political parties. It would be difficult to find a hole in the armor of either that is not paralleled by another of just about the same size in the armor of the other. Certainly since 1876 both parties have zealously devoted themselves, when they have met together to frame a platform, to declaring their undying adhesion to the principles of civil service reform. They promised that if they were only trusted with office, the principles of civil service reform should be applied in their entirety. And we have trusted them, first one and then the other, during these twenty years, and we have not got civil service reform from either.

Now, the man who undertakes to be first a republican and then a civil service reformer, does not help. A man who undertakes to be first a democrat and then a civil service reformer, does not help. The moment you put yourself in the position of attacking the sins of your political enemies, and disguising the sins of your friends of exactly the same quality, you put yourself in a false position. You can not attack one man for doing that which, in your friend, you pardon or excuse. And let it be understood that the man who always votes his party ticket, does not count. Put yourselves, if you will, in the position of a boss who is making his calculations. "There in the eleventh ward are a thousand respectable republican voters, or a thousand respectable democratic voters, as the case may be. If I appoint Smith to the post-office, they will be very angry. If I do not appoint Smith to the post-office, those fellows in South Boston, will be very angry. The fellows in the eleventh ward, what will they do about it? Oh, they will grumble, and they will write articles to the newspapers, but how will they vote? They will vote the republican ticket on election day all right. But how is it with those fellows in South Boston? Well, they will knife the ticket just as certain as I do not appoint that man to the post-office." Now, which set of voters influences that particular boss? Certainly not the man who always votes the ticket, whose vote he can rely upon, and whom he can not drive out of the political fold by any appointment he makes. The man whom you can not drive away is a voter whom you can count upon anyway, and you need not shape your course to suit him in the least.

Now, the next remedy is public opinion. And you have got to reach, let me explain to you, not men who think as you think, but men who do not. The trouble, for example, with our institutions in New York, is the presence there of a very large number of citizens who are apparently under the absolute dominion of Tammany—Italians, Germans, Irishmen, Americans, ignorant men. You may start with this postulate, that the majority of the people of this country or any other country want good government. They desire just what you desire. They only do not know how. Now, if you have a meeting in a hall and invite none but civil service reformers who think as you do, you do not reach these men. If, once a year, just before election, you go down and talk to them, even if you give them some money when they are unemployed, you do not reach them. They say, "What they want is our votes." Call yourselves, if you please, the leaven, and then the lump. The leaven never affected the lump in the least while it was in a cup on one side of the room, and the lump was on the other; it has got to permeate the whole lump. You have got to get down side by side and interest yourselves in the daily lives of these people, stand with them, understand their problems, work with them in January, February, March and April as well as in November, before you have any real influence.

That is the work which is required of you, and you may think it is disagreeable. Well, I admit it is thoroughly disagreeable, thankless, unpleasant work. But there is nothing in this world worth having that is not won in that way. It is not pleasant for Howard to go through all the prisons of Europe and see the vice and disease that he saw, for the purpose of exposing the system. It was not agreeable to freeze and starve at Valley Forge. It was not agreeable, like Garrison, to be imprisoned in Baltimore, and to be pursued by a mob in Boston, and to be threatened with death because he was opposed to slavery. There was nothing agreeable in Sumner's position when he was beaten on the floor of the senate, and his colleagues, unmindful of any courtesy of the senate, stood around and held their hands. The trenches before Petersburg, the swamps of Vicksburg, Libby Prison, Andersonville, were not attractive, but the men who went before you were willing to bear those hardships for the sake of their country. Are you not made of as good stuff?

You have all of you, as boys, read the story of the choice of Hercules, and I have no doubt that every one of you, when he read it as a child, said to himself: "Why, of course, between the life of ease and luxury and wealth, and the task of killing the Nemean lion and cleansing the Augean stables, and doing all the laborious and difficult and dangerous things that Hercules did, any gentleman would have chosen the latter." I do not suppose a boy ever read the story who thought it possible for a moment that he would actually have chosen the life of ease and luxury and wealth, when he could have killed the Nemean lion. Why, gentleman, there is no Nemean lion more dangerous than the spoils system, no Augean stable which requires cleansing any more than Tammany in New York. When you were children the choice was easy. Now that you are men, are you going to shrink from it? Be sure of this, that if you once enlist in that work, once get thoroughly interested in it, it makes very little difference whether you succeed or fail. The struggle, the fight, the work for something which you know is worth working for, makes your life full of interest, and worth living. You will learn the truth so well expressed by Lowell:

"'Tis not the grapes of Canaan that repay,
But the high faith that failed not by the way."

But if, by chance, like Sumner and Garrison, you live to see slavery abolished; if even at the moment of death, like Wolfe, you hear that the foe are fleeing, you may rest perfectly well assured that life has nothing in store for you that can be compared for a moment with the joy of such a triumph. No luxury, no ease, no wealth, nothing that fortune can give, is more than dust in the balance when weighed against a life spent in such a struggle, even if it is not crowned with such a victory.

Messieurs Hercules, the choice is before you. [Loud applause.]

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE,
Indianapolis, Ind.

AS WAS in another form stated, the address delivered by Mr. Godkin on the occasion of the unveiling of a memorial bust of Henry G. Pearson, for having ably and conscientiously performed his duty, and his whole duty, as a public officer, is a humiliating illumination of the great body of the civil service of which he was a member. Mr. Godkin's address was a calm and judicial statement of the principles and practices which are in combat in the spoils and anti-spoils struggle. The argument leads on to the crushing conclusion that free government and spoils can not permanently remain side by side. The manner in which the exigencies of business are fighting the battle of civil service reform is given by analogy a powerful illustration. Speaking of modern industrial machines, Mr. Godkin says: "The touch of a drunkard's hand sets them wild. *

* * The anger of a mismanaged machine is so serious in its consequences that no employer can afford to overlook even a single case of intemperance." So the growth of business and the consequent increasing impatience of the public with bungling are helping to drive out the public officer who undertakes to run primaries and conventions, and at the same time write letters and collect revenue. The address has no favorites. Few more leveling things have been said of Mr. Cleveland than that, in his first term, he appointed Pearson postmaster of New York, not because he was the fittest man in the world for the place, but to gratify the mugwumps. We could have wished that more of the history of that term had been given. We believe the facts will sooner or later show that there was a most dastardly and continuous attempt to break down an officer who had no thought for anything but a complete performance of his duties, solely because he refused to have any other thought, or, in other words, refused to mix politics with his duties, and that the wear, the indignity and the injustice of the attempt shortened Pearson's life. We believe also that the facts will fasten this attempt upon William F. Vilas and Don M. Dickinson, each respectively postmaster-general, and that Mr. Cleveland will have to bear a share of the responsibility.

Tammany's park commission could find no place for this memorial although it was offered to them, and Tammany's postmaster, Dayton, could not attend the unveiling in the postoffice building. It would have been a hopeful sign if from some part of the administration at Washington there had appeared an expression showing some realization of the fact that Pearson was a pioneer, amid enormous difficulties, of a higher civil service civilization which ought to and must spread over the country.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of July 7 to the Indianapolis News says that Voorhees is not feeling in very good temper over the report that Governor Matthews is a candidate for the senate. It further says:

It looks now as if the Indiana senator was preparing to contest every inch of the ground with any and all comers. He has been holding conferences with representatives in the house recently, and strengthening his relations, which were severely strained in a number of instances by the distribution of federal patronage in the Hoosier state. His health has not been very good for the last three months, and he has been conserving his energies and transferring the burden of the tariff fight in the senate to other shoulders in order to keep himself in trim for an energetic canvass of Indiana this fall.

We always felt that after Voorhees got well loaded with spoil he would become ill or afflicted with lassitude before he had completed his tariff work. It is a coarse suggestion, but the only safe way in this matter of the exchange of patronage for legislation is to follow exactly the methods devised after profound reflection and bitter experience with floaters. If the President had intimated to Voorhees, "After the tariff bill—offices," how spry and single-hearted we should see our distinguished senator now.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has received a second rebuke in a Washington dispatch to the New York Times regarding Major Handbury, but this like the one referred to last month is in vague and general terms. There is still a studied concealment of the facts. If Secretary Lamont, who is undoubtedly talking through this dispatcher, is not ready to give the facts, he would better drop the matter. Talking about an "inadvisable champion of civil service reform" is not meeting the charge that he was a party to an ignoble revenge reaped upon Major Handbury. Who was the man whom the secretary expected to give a certain report and whom Major Handbury did not want and what was the report to be about? There is no pretense of denial that he was Caruth's heeler. There is no pretense of denial that Major Handbury's strained relations with Caruth was one of the reasons for his transfer to St. Augustine. If those who are smarting under the general condemnation of this business will give out the names and data, we will verify their statements. In the meantime we repeat that Major Handbury was an officer of the highest efficiency; that he fought steadily and in case after case the attempts of political bosses to quarter their followers upon the public service; that in doing this he was carrying out the democratic platform; that his course brought upon him the enmity of Congressman Caruth and to the abject practice of placating congressmen Major Handbury was sacrificed. Of course Major Handbury's mouth is closed. There are worse posts than St. Augustine.

It is painful to admit the fact, but it really begins to look as if we were to have merely democratic protection as a substitute for republican protection.—Indianapolis Sentinel, July 17.

There is no failure of his administration that will cause President Cleveland such humiliation and disappointment as a failure to enact a real tariff reform law. The cause of this failure is again indicated in the passages elsewhere, showing the process of using patronage to make a great boss. Gorman's subsidized press, McPherson's successful demand upon the President to withdraw a nomination, and the evident desire not to antagonize Tammany in spite of the shocking disclosures of its apparently never-ending corruption, disclose powers made by patronage given by the President. The recipients are defiant of the President, their party and public opinion, and they are the chief personages in the shameful tariff dickers and deals. This is the way to undertake a reform and to fail through timidity and compromises. Last week the President met an assault upon the government of the United States with boldness and decision, and he has gained the hearty approval of all citizens, regardless of party. The American people love a brave man. The President has not been brave in his part of tariff reform. What is worse, it has had through the methods employed, a deadly blow, for who can urge further agitation and business peril to again make the reform the foot-ball of patronage?

WHILE the best citizens of Troy were holding Senator Murphy responsible for the murder of Robert Ross, and were trying to fix the execution of the crime upon a Murphy heeler, another follower of Senator Murphy was given the postmastership by the administration. But in spite of this strange mark of power or favor, and of the hostility or indifference of the Governor of New York, Murphy's man has been convicted of the murder. It is the old story of an American community so long and so helplessly in the grip of a boss, that it seems to the outsider to have lost all courage, all patriotism and all moral sense, suddenly rising in wrath and smiting the boss.

ACCORDING to the published reports, Pension Agent Spencer, of this city, although but a short time in office, has dismissed twenty-four of the twenty-eight men under him to make room for democrats, and the remaining four are to go after the August payment. Not a fault is found with the dismissed men. Spencer has never denied in any manner his published interviews, in which he stated that in order to get this office he had to bargain away these clerkships to Voorhees and Turpie. Time was when it was inconceivable that President Cleveland would allow such a fraudulent misuse of a public trust. We wish some of his apologists would take space in the CHRONICLE to explain this transaction.

THE administration has appointed a successor to Mr. Milchrist, United States district attorney at Chicago. Attorney-General Olney is stated to have explained the change as having been made "Only because Mr. Milchrist's term of office expired on the 2d of August next, and it was desirable to have his successor ready to qualify at that time, whether congress was or was not then in session. So far as he had had opportunity to observe, Mr. Milchrist had always been a loyal and efficient officer."

"A loyal and efficient officer" is displaced to make a place for a democrat. How grossly improper this is. A district attorney of the United States, as an upright officer, must know no class, no religion, no color, no politics, and yet one officer is displaced and his successor is appointed solely because of politics.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Carlisle asked for the resignation of Supervising-Inspector McMaster at Buffalo, and is reported to have said:

"There are no charges against Mr. McMaster that I know of, but he has now served about nine months more than his four-year term, and I want to fill his place with a democrat. I will do this as soon as possible. I suppose I can find some one who is competent and willing to take it. Postmaster-General Bissell or Mr. Lockwood will probably recommend Mr. McMaster's successor."

This dismissal is, compared with others, one of the secretary's minor offenses, but let any one reflect upon what would naturally be the view of a man fit to be the secretary of the treasury of a great country like the United States, and the pettiness and flippancy of the man who occupies the post are painful. When an ordinary politician is placed in one of these great offices and runs it on the grade of ward politics, with more than suggestions of trickery and false witness and conduct generally unbecoming a gentleman, with how much dignity and respect is he to be treated because of his office? And when we throw over the common politician the mantle of his responsible and dignified office to belittle such political acts as the indignity put upon Major Handbury by Secretary of War Lamont, and the indignity put upon Professor Mendenhall by Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle, is our respect for the great office itself thereby impaired?

"HAVING been called by the National Assembly to the position of first magistrate of the country, I am not the man of any party, but belong to France and the republic."—From the inaugural message of Casimir-Perier, July 3, 1894.

"The need of this country is lofty, disinterested patriotism, which forgets all minor allegiances in the presence of the general welfare and has the courage to make all sacrifices which may be needed to uphold this welfare."—From the interview of Archbishop Ireland, July 15, 1894.

Does President Cleveland also consider himself the man, not of any party, but of the republic? What he has done that he ought not to have done for spoils, and what he has failed to do that he ought to have done, have been pardoned by many on the ground that any other plan would break up his party. So we see reform blocked, because a president is the man of a party, instead of belonging only to the republic. The obstacle now looming up in the effort to purge New York of Tammany is the want of "lofty, disinterested patriotism, which forgets all minor allegiances." The partisan reformer is being played upon by cunning Tammany and Platt players, and it looks as if the players would get a response. Mr. Herbert Welsh finds the greatest obstacle to municipal reform the party bigotry of the good citizens. A late illustration from Indianapolis is the following:

If the army of tramps should come into the city after being forbidden by the mayor, every one of them will be arrested as vagrants and sent to the workhouse. The workhouse is now crowded, but this will not be permitted to interfere with the determination to prevent the citizens from being imposed upon by another aggregation of tramps.

The mayor was asked if the men would be put to work upon the Fall creek dike, which the city has been endeavoring to build for some time. He said the city had no authority to put the men at this work without the consent of the county commissioners, which it was impossible for the city to obtain. The commissioners have full and absolute control of the workhouse, and the city can not work its prisoners confined there upon public works without the consent of the commissioners. This the commissioners will not give for political reasons. The city administration being republican and the county democratic, the commissioners use their offices for political purposes, and will not permit the working of workhouse prisoners upon public works that will not otherwise be constructed for lack of funds.

How can we diminish this blind, deaf and dumb and violent party spirit, so that a president will consider his duty to the whole people, and not to his party? And how can the party bigotry of respectable citizens be eradicated? For only when this has been accomplished will Tammany have met its death blow, and all municipal government of the United States have ceased to be a lesson in corruption. It is in the hope of doing something in this direction that the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE prints Mr. Julian's interesting paper upon independence in politics.

CARRIER WELLS has just completed twenty five years of service in the Indianapolis postoffice, and during that time has distributed mail in a single district. He is a quiet, modest citizen and excellent carrier, but this length of service puts him in the "office-holding aristocracy," and makes him a menace to a republican form of government. Poor Mr. Wells.

CONGRESSMAN JASON BROWN has failed to secure renomination, and at the convention made an address in which he is reported to have "skinned alive" those who accomplished his defeat. We quote what he says of civil service reform, because we think it is the first instance of a congressman openly regretting that there is not "an office to every applicant." The climate of Indiana is at present unsuited to the mathematical computation of the size of a civil service in which every congressman should have an office for every applicant. It is fitting that Congressman Brown is about to retire to private life after the following:

A word about civil service reform. If I could have given an office to every applicant Stockslager would not have been in it. He would now be hanging on to the coupling pole. The people I did appoint were honest democrats and none of them were my relatives. I have tried to get appointments on, but had this bill stuck under my nose. I hate and dispise the civil service law. It should have been passed by the A. P. A. It was passed in 1883, and I have been its common enemy ever since. You are opposed to this civil service rot, and yet you put me out and put in Stockslager who voted for it.

THE monthly report, for June, of the secretary of the New York Civil Service Reform Association contains many interesting items. The association has secured the enactment of a law forbidding comptrollers or other disbursing officers of any city to authorize payment of salaries to officers or employees appointed in violation of the civil service law and rules. This is one of the most effective safeguards that could have been raised up. The party machines of seven cities which have ignored the law will now have to swallow an unpalatable dose of reform, and the bosses in many other cities where the law has been tricked can now be dealt with on even terms. An application to the excellent courts of that state to enjoin the payment of an incumbent's salary will bring forward for review the whole process by which he got his place. Party heelers will be slow to take places by tricks when they may after all fail to receive any pay. The present state comptroller applies a similar rule in the state service. The board of electrical control of New York city ignored the law in the appointment of thirteen inspectors. The present comptroller found them in office and refused to pay them. The bosses then had twelve of them pass a non-competitive examination, but the comptroller was still immovable. If any of them get upon the public pay-roll it be after an open competitive examination duly advertised.

THE thirteenth annual meeting and the first annual dinner of the Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association were held June 18. Herbert Welsh, of Philadelphia, spoke upon municipal reform, and is reported as follows:

The questions he submitted were: Can American institutions permanently succeed with dishonest management? Is public office under our American institutions to be used as a position for private gain or is it to be a great stewardship for the public? He held that these questions were as fundamental and vital as was the slavery question.

Political partisanship is more than any other thing the bane of good city government, for it presents a wholly false issue and divides citizens who really desire the well-being of the municipality into two hostile armies perpetually at war with one another. Doubtless the machine boss grins in secret and is tempted to exclaim "What fools these mortals be," when he sees that a transparent device will lead the community by the nose to its own great loss. For it is the pocket of the voter which must meet the heavy costs of official stealings and the wasteful extravagance which, in a hundred ways, is the outcome of partisan boss rule.

The stronghold of corruption in Philadelphia to-day is that alliance which we are forced to believe exists between machine leaders and the majority of the city council on the one side, and corporate wealth unscrupulously used on the other. The machine influence is systematically built up and maintained by corporate interests for purely business reasons. The maintenance of extreme partisanship is the first object of the machine, for the political partisan will sacrifice every moral consideration to his party prejudices.

We wish Mr. Welsh would give as detailed and as specific a history of the republican machine in Philadelphia as has been given of Tammany. He would not be supported, however, as the fighters of Tammany have been, by a free and untrammelled press, backing the investigation and distributing the facts.

At the dinner the new democratic postmaster, Howard H. Baker, "expressed his hearty sympathy with civil service reform and with the law which now relieved postmasters from many embarrassing situations, where formerly patronage had to be doled out to ward politicians and caucus manipulators, who are ever anxious to serve the people—"for revenue only." He rejoiced at the dawn of a new and better era." And yet ten days later Postmaster Baker is reported by the Buffalo Express as follows:

"He intended to make changes in all the positions not covered by the civil service regulations, and he believed that there were about 20 of these places. The heads of all the departments, such as the stamp, the registered letter, the money order, the superintendent of letter carriers, the superintendents of sub-stations, would be changed, but he could not tell just how soon he would appoint men to succeed those now in office. He had received any number of applications from very good men, and he realized that it would be a difficult task to make the selections."

Since the above was written there are indications that Mr. Baker is doing better than he thought he should. He is not pleasing the local machine. Mr. Baker is reported as follows:

"I am running this office and intend to get the best service I can. In many cases I didn't know the politics of the men I appointed and promoted. Take, for instance, the appointments I made to-day. I appointed Charles A. Watson first clerk in the inquiry division and Nelson S. Fairbush second clerk. Mr. Watson is a man who has been here under several administrations and his appointment was made strictly in accordance with civil service reform ideas and politics didn't figure at all."

WE have received the eleventh report of the New York State Civil Service Commission, covering the year 1893, which completed the first ten years of the civil service law of that state. The first year there were appointed from the eligible lists 18; the second, 22; the third, 57; the fourth, 58; the fifth, 29; the sixth, 47; the seventh, 62; the eighth, 71; the ninth, 101; the tenth, 129, making a total of 626 appointments from the eligible lists formed by competitive examinations in ten years. The state has 4,846 employees. The commissioner makes various explanatory statements, such as that the rules adopted by the first commission were "very elaborate, so elaborate and complex, in fact, that they have never been fully followed." The commission says "the law was new and untried, and met with little favor from many heads of departments, and was either misunderstood or not comprehended by them." Transfers from the competitive to the non-competitive classes have cut an interesting, and to the average civil service reformer, an astounding figure. The commission has much to say about this, and cites the commission of 1886 as holding that all requests by heads of departments for such transfers should be granted; but this commission says it has always required proof of confidential relation or financial trust before permitting such transfers. Turning to some instances they give, we find the superintendent of public buildings asked to have his "confidential messenger" transferred. The labor statistics man asked to have three statisticians and one private secretary transferred. The state commissioner of lunacy asked to have two transfer agents, one estimate clerk and two medical internes at each state hospital for the insane, transferred. The railroad commission asked to have its marshal and its inspector transferred. The forest commission asked to have its special agents, performing duties as foresters, transferred. The state entomologist had appointed a woman as assistant, and was much worried until he got her placed beyond the reach of competition. The factory inspector urged that his examiners were "confidential." The commissioners of statutory revision urged that their law clerks held confidential positions. These requests and others were all granted, and in a number of instances the appointments had already been made. Since, in ten years, there have been only 626 appointments to places by competition, allowing for deaths, resignations and removals, there would not seem to be 300 such places in the 4,846 places in the state service. The commission does not give the number. Forty-six places would be a liberal allowance for political places in this service, leaving 4,800 places to be filled by competition or by labor-service requirements, which entirely eliminate politics. According to the showing made by this report the manipulation of the civil service law in New York appears like a colossal triumph of Hillism.

POLITICAL INDEPENDENCE.

GEORGE W. JULIAN.

John Quincy Adams.

Among the great and heroic men of our Republic John Quincy Adams will always hold an undisputed place. In politics he was a federalist, and he was such by education, by family inheritance, and by conviction. He was honored by the friendship and confidence of Washington, and quite naturally allied himself with the great men whose shaping hand and inspiring genius gave us a nation, and not a mere confederacy of states. After the federal party, however, had completely fulfilled its mission and suffered itself to become an organized obstacle to progress, Mr. Adams declined to follow its fortunes. In 1807 the strife between the federalists and republicans over Mr. Jefferson's embargo was nearing its climax. Mr. Adams then held a seat in the United States senate from Massachusetts. Unlike his federal associates, he did not sympathize with England. He did not sympathize with France. He was eminently, nay, pre-eminently, an American, being then, as always, unhesitatingly on the side of his country and against his enemies. The hostility of the federalists towards the embargo was remorseless. They lavished upon Jefferson their sincerest and most heartfelt curses, but they proposed no policy of their own. In facing English insolence and aggression they were nerveless and servile. Mr. Adams did his best to breathe into them his own spirit of courage and independence in facing the crisis which then so fearfully menaced the honor of the country. But his labors were vain. The embargo, it is true, was a debatable measure, but it gave some promise of relief, and was a vigorous protest against English domination at a time when strong measures had become absolutely necessary; and Mr. Adams could not control himself with the purely fault-finding attitude of his party, which left Mr. Jefferson utterly without support. He therefore deserted the camp of federalism, and took his place in the ranks of the republicans. It was an act evincing the highest courage and self-renunciation. He could not have been ignorant of the consequences to himself which were to follow. He was called a traitor and an apostate. He was branded as a renegade, who had run away from a failing cause and sold himself to the enemy for the honors and emoluments of his treachery. They would doubtless have called him a mugwump; but that frightful epithet was then waiting to be born. The federalists pursued him "like a hive of enraged hornets," and opened upon him all the sluice-gates of abuse and defamation. Their warfare was as furious as it was relentless, and it had not fully died away at his death in 1848, while its echoes still linger in some parts of his native state. But he never flinched. Dr. Andrew P. Peabody, in speaking of his friend Dr. Palfrey, said he was "a man who would have defied all the powers of earth and hell in pursuit of what he deemed right, and who never failed to have heaven on his side." The language is perfectly applicable to John Quincy Adams. To him the word fear had no meaning. His courage was as flawless as his integrity, and both were perfect. In order to degrade and humiliate him the legislature of Massachusetts proceeded to choose his successor in the Senate several months before the customary time for such elections. He indignantly resigned his seat and offered his enemies his defiance. It was sufficient for him to know that he was in the right, and he lived to see his action vindicated by the judgment of history. By his change of sides in politics he did not make himself an apostate, but simply revealed the apostasy of the party he left. "It is easy to see," says his biographer, "as one looks backward upon history, that every great and successful party has its mission, that it wins its success through the substantial righteousness of that mission, and that it owes its downfall to assuming an erroneous attitude towards some subsequent matter which becomes in turn of predominating importance." Mr. Adams saw this clearly, and he had the courage of his convictions; and his example has been extensively and savingly followed in later times. He was, in fact, the father of the mugwumps, and our first great apostle of political independence.

But, although the federal party perished, and Mr. Adams regained his lost estate and finally became president, his troubles were by no means ended. Other and still severer trials of his political courage awaited him. On the 4th day of March, 1829, Andrew Jackson entered upon the first term of his presidency. Mr. L. Marcy, of New York, a man of great ability and a member of the famous "Albany Regency," fathered the political motto that "To the victors belong the spoils." President Jackson adopted it and devoted himself unsparingly to its practical illustration; and for the past fifty odd years the government has been like a city alternately sacked and retaken by two contending armies. In a speech in the Senate in 1837, reviewing Jackson's career, Henry Clay declared that his administration had "swept over the country like a tropical tornado," and that "every department of the government exhibited the ravages of the storm." So far as the spoils system was concerned, this was true, and, of course, no member of the Adams family could have any party affiliations with this new phase of republicanism. But Mr. Adams had to deal with a still more formidable question. The Democrats of the northern states had now formed their alliance with the slave-holders of the south. It was an unholy alliance, and it paved the way for that frightful southern domination which at last ripened into civil war. What did Mr. Adams do in facing these new dangers? He had left the federal party in 1807 and joined the followers of Jefferson, and he now again severed his party relations and identified himself with the new organization which became known as the whig party. But, although he was nominally a whig during the remainder of his life, he always defied party discipline and asserted his independence. He used to call the democrats "the consistent Swiss guards of southern slavery," while he spoke of the whigs as "the languid, compromising, non-resistants of the north, who were afraid to answer a fool according to his folly." Both parties feared and disliked him, and his attitude made it perfectly clear that he had completely put away ambition and was ready to taste political death in following the truth. Two years later, on taking his seat as a representative in Congress from Massachusetts, he entered upon his memorable fight for the right of petition and the freedom of debate, and after a struggle of nine years the 21st rule, known as the "Gag," was abrogated. He opposed the annexation of Texas as unauthorized by the constitution. He denounced the war with Mexico as a war of invasion, wantonly begun by the president, and he was opposed to voting supplies to carry it on and to thanking General Taylor for his military services. His term of sixteen years in the house of representatives eclipsed all the glory he had previously earned in his long and honorable public career; but it exposed him to more personal abuse and popular obloquy than had ever before fallen to the lot of any public man since the formation of the government. On his celebrated trial in the house of representatives in 1842 Mr. Wise called him a "white-haired hypocrite" who had forsaken the friends of his father and trampled on the ashes of the dead. He characterized him as one who, in the fury of his apostate zeal, could prey upon the dead like a vampire, and pronounced him "dead as Burr, dead as Arnold." The Albany Argus called him the "Massachusetts madman." The Charleston Mercury referred to him as "that eccentric old showman, John Quincy Adams." At a public dinner in Virginia the company drank as a toast, "John Quincy Adams, once a man, twice a child, and now a demon." In South Carolina this toast was drunk: "May we never want a hangman to prepare a halter for John Quincy Adams." Letters poured in upon him threatening his life, and southern members refused to sit with him on the same committee. For successive years he was undoubtedly the most thoroughly hated man in the United States. But it did not check in the slightest degree the perfect independence of his political action or the absolute freedom of his speech. In a letter replying to an invitation to address an anti-slavery meeting, he said he rejoiced that the defense of human freedom was falling into younger and more vigorous hands. They "are buckling on their armor," said he, "and the scourging overseer, and the lynching lawyer, and the servile sophist, and the faithless scribe, and the priestly parasite, will vanish before them like Satan touched with the spear of Ithuriel." Above all other public men, he was the Abdiel of the anti-slavery conflict, and one can not read the story of his heroic life and magnificent courage without applying the words of Milton:

"Servant of God, well done! Well hast thou fought

The bitter fight; who, single, hast maintained
Against revolted multitudes the cause
Of truth, in word mightier than they in arms,
And for the testimony of truth hast borne Universal reproach, far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all they care—
To stand approved in sight of God, though worlds Judged thee perverse."

But let it not be forgotten that when he was stricken down at his post of duty in the house of representatives, and the stormy life of the old hero was at last closed, he was honored by the whole nation as no man had been honored since Washington. The heroism of his life was attested by popular acclamation.

Even South Carolina and Virginia relented, and joined in the general shout of praise which went up from every section of the Union. Let the young men of our country ponder the lesson and remember that singleness of purpose and heroic endeavor are the only sure passport to renown. The people love courage. They believe on the man who will take the responsibility, and when they find him ready to forget himself in the service of a great cause they will always take him to their hearts.

Charles Sumner.

But let me illustrate my subject by another example. Charles Sumner graduated at Harvard at the age of nineteen. After completing his legal studies at the Harvard Law School and editing important legal publications, he gave three years to foreign travel, which he undertook at the age of twenty-six, receiving such a welcome from the famous scholars, jurists and statesmen of the Old World as had never before been given to a man of his years. In 1845, before he embarked in public life, he had delivered some of the masterly orations which rival the best efforts of Chatham and Burke, and will be read as long as the English language shall be spoken. He then stood at the sunrise of his magnificent career, while his heart palpitated with an ambition as pure as ever inspired the soul of a hero. But it was not political ambition. To him the thought of public life was repellant. What he coveted was the service of literature, and the moral uplifting of humanity; but events overruled his earnest wishes. In politics Mr. Sumner was a whig, but at this time the whigs of Massachusetts were divided into two hostile camps on the question of Texas annexation. On the one side were the "Conscience Whigs," with whom he mustered, who were utterly opposed to annexation, and in favor of making moral principles the basis of political action. On the other side were the "Cotton Whigs," who mainly represented the commercial and manufacturing interests of the state, and were interested in southern trade and a conservative policy. The hostility of these parties was intense and unquenchable, and the root of it was slavery. The annexation of an extensive slave-holding foreign territory to the Union was not only unauthorized by the constitution, and very offensive to the free states, but it threatened to involve the country in a war with Mexico. It was morally impossible for Mr. Sumner, with his inborn hatred of slavery, to stand aloof from such a controversy. His talents, his scholarship, his impassioned eloquence, and the unquestioned purity of his life, all singled him out for leadership, but the price of this leadership was his social outlawry by the aristocracy of Boston, with whom he had at all times held the most pleasant relations. Driving down Beacon street one day with a friend, he said: "There was a time when I was welcome at almost every house within two miles of us, but now hardly one is open to me." Of course, this social pressure fell heavily upon him. Mr. Adams, with his family lineage, his established fame, and his combative disposition, could defy such methods of warfare; but Sumner felt it. He had been a favorite in the circle from which he was now banished, and had greatly enjoyed the taste and refinement which had so warmly greeted him. It was not easy for him to understand such treatment. His nature was tender and feminine. He was a great lover, and no man ever more perfectly enjoyed the luxury of being loved in return; but never for a single moment did he allow his social relations to hold him back from the complete discharge of his public duties. It was this perfect and never failing moral courage which has given him his place in history, while the men who have faltered have been lost.

But Texas was annexed, and the predicted war with Mexico followed. The whigs denounced it as a war of conquest wantonly and unconstitutionally begun by the president, and Mr. Sumner and his friends urged them to refuse to vote supplies of men and money for its prosecution. It was Mr. Sumner who, in defending this policy, first cited the example of Burke, Chatham and other British statesmen in refusing to vote supplies for the prosecution of the war against the colonies during our revolutionary struggle or to vote thanks to the British generals for their services, on the ground that the war was one of rapine and murder. In dealing with the new territories which the war brought us Mr. Sumner continued his anti-slavery leadership, and every step he took indicated its wisdom. He had now gone too far in his political career to call a halt, and naturally took his place as a leader of the free soil revolt of 1848, and the most formidable opponent in New England of the compromise of 1850. In 1851 he yielded reluctantly and with sincere regret to the powerful pressure of his friends and allowed himself to be elected to the senate of the United States by the independent voters of Massachusetts. Here his great work began. In 1852 he spoke for three hours and three quarters on the fugitive slave law, marshalling "law, logic, history, facts, literature, morals, and religion against slavery." It was an epoch-making speech. Nothing like it had ever before been heard in congress, and it was scattered in pamphlet editions by hundreds of thousands throughout the country, reaching multitudes who had hitherto been indifferent on the question, and giving a tremendous impulse to the anti-slavery cause. In 1856 he delivered his historic speech in the senate on "The Crime Against Kansas," which was circulated by the million, and doubtless did more to create an anti-slavery public opinion in the free states than any speech ever delivered in congress. It had been made absolutely necessary by the growing and unbearable audacity of slavery, and it provoked the murderous assault of Preston S. Brooks, which exiled him from the country for nearly four years and entailed untold suffering. In 1860, he made his great speech on "The Barbarism of Slavery," which took rank with the two preceding ones in eloquence and power. Mr. Sumner, beyond all the public men of his time, was the creator and mold of opinion. Without the three great speeches referred to it is safe to say the people of the northern states could never have been successfully rallied in the war for the union in 1861. Mr. Sumner did not make his policy the foot-ball of events, but he made events the foot ball of his policy. He did not study the drifts and currents of opinion as the guide and limit of his action, but like Bright and Cobden he trusted the people, and believed that through argument and agitation they would be able to see the truth and follow it. He did not speak as a politician merely, but as the servant of truth, whose unselfish patriotism and purity of life were never questioned. His speeches embodied the best thoughts of the statesman and the moralist, and it was the work of his public life to inspire in the people his own lofty spirit. He said in 1856: "I seek nothing but the triumph of truth. To this I offer my best efforts, careless of office or honor. Show me that I am wrong, and I stop at once, but in the complete conviction of right I shall persevere against all temptations, against all odds, against all perils, against all threats, knowing well that whatever be my fate the right will surely prevail. Terrestrial place is determined by celestial observation. Only by watching the stars can the mariner safely pursue his course, and it is only by obeying those lofty principles which are above men and human passion that we can make our way safely through the duties of life."

But after the war was over and the work of reconstruction had been accomplished, the severest trial of Mr. Sumner's life awaited him. The republican party had played its grand part in crushing the rebellion and giving freedom to the slave, and he had prophesied in 1860 that after the accomplishment of its immediate work it would be "filled with higher life" and "lifted to yet other efforts," which would make its continued existence necessary. He loved the party as a father loves his child. He was as devoted to its fortunes as was Louis Kossuth to Hungarian independence. In the ardor of his feelings he did not reckon with the fact that a very great war is followed by an afterpiece of political huckstering and organized greed. The well-earned renown of General Grant as a commander did not prevent him from carrying into his civil administration the ideas and habits of camp life. The civil service of the government was prostituted to the base uses of selfishness and plunder. Carpet-bag thieves from the north made common cause with scalawags in the south in debauching the public service and making political morality a jest. Our national politics became so debased that the New York Tribune said the country was obliged to "hang its head and hold its nose and wait for the administration to pass." The disappointment and sorrow of Mr. Sumner can better be imagined than described. But he did not despair. He raised the cry of reform. The men who surrounded the president, however, told him that those who demanded reform were worse than the rogues they were seeking to expel; that the attempt to reform the party would divide it and open the way for the return of the rebels to power; and that the party was greater than any man in it, while it was the duty of malcontents to submit to its discipline. But Mr. Sumner could not be silenced. "The slave of principle," said he, "I call no party master." When the president set his heart upon the annexation of San Domingo, and undertook to accomplish it by methods unauthorized by the constitution and condemned by the law of the nations, he entered into the fight against the whole power of the administration and its camp followers. Conkling of New York, Carpenter of Wisconsin, Chandler of Michigan, and others who composed the "senatorial group" of party bosses at that time, were bent upon his humiliation. Week after week and month after month through this prolonged and painful struggle Mr. Sumner held them at bay, always preserving the decorum of a senator while meeting the ribald gibes and sneers of his assailants, whose darling scheme of annexation he finally demolished. With health rapidly giving way and his life nearing its close under the unequal burden of his work, he never appeared more grandly or triumphantly in the senate than in his heroic fight for the honor of his country. But, although his assailants were defeated and were obliged to abandon their project, the preciousness of revenge was theirs. They degraded him from his chairmanship of the committee on foreign relations, which he had so long honored, and gave it to Simon Cameron, while Sumner himself was located at the tail of the committee on education and labor, with Flanagan of Texas at its head! More cruel even than the bludgeon of Brooks was this pitiless warfare of republican leaders against the man who had done more to create and inspire the republican party than any man in the nation, living or dead, and who, in opposing this mad project, was grandly in the right, as the country then decided and nobody disputes to-day. But Mr. Sumner bowed to the inevitable without the slightest hesitation or fear. He had a genius for rectitude? He knew that the duties of life are more than life. He was what Prof. Von Holst calls him, "a man with a conscience"; and when he walked out of his party and turned his back upon its recreant leaders, he towered above them all as the Alps among mountains.

"Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal,
Nor number nor example with him wrought
To sever from truth or change his constant mind."

Our Own Day.

So much for two notable illustrations of my text, and I cite them because history is philosophy teaching by example. But the duty of political independence is likewise enforced by the general course of our politics. Indeed, political reform is impossible without political independence. Parties do not reform themselves, but constantly gravitate in the opposite direction. The leaven must come in untrammelled action from without, and this makes independent voters exceedingly unpopular with party bosses. The smallness of their numbers and the potency of their efforts make them both feared and hated. They hold the balance of power, and have repeatedly determined the result of both state and national elections. Senator Conkling used to call them "guerrillas," "tramps," "jay-hawkers," "kickers" and "impracticables who vote in the air." But epithets sometimes become honorable. Sixty odd years ago, when Mr. Garrison started his little newspaper in a small, dingy room in Boston, assisted by a negro boy, both sleeping on the floor and living on bread and water, "abolitionism" was almost universally despised and denounced. The south set a price upon his head, and the wealth and respectability of Boston turned itself into a howling mob in the effort to suppress him. But the little cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, finally spread over the whole heavens, and the slave was made free. What multitudes to-day, some of whom hurled brickbats and unmerchanted eggs at the anti-slavery pioneers, would now gladly accept the epithet and wear its honors! And, in fact, how many of them were always abolitionists, but in some mysterious way found themselves belated in the work of making it known to the world! Let me refer to the men who gave only seven thousand votes for their candidate for the presidency in 1840. They were Mr. Conkling's "jay-hawkers" and "tramps," who became disgusted with the strife of the old parties over the spoils while the underlying and real question of the canvass was utterly ignored or treated with contempt. They were the sappers and miners who prepared the way for the armies that were to follow, and are now honorably remembered as the founders of the liberty party. The free soil party of 1848 was likewise the outcome of political independence. It was composed of "impracticables" who bolted from the old whig and democratic parties, and "voted in the air;" but they laid the foundation of the larger movement which nominated Lincoln in 1860, and shared in the imperishable glory of suppressing the rebellion and establishing liberty throughout the land. But the republican party itself was a bolt. It was a combination of "kickers." Some of my old republican friends seem to believe their party is of divine appointment and necessary to salvation; but it never would have existed but for the "guerrillas" and "tramps" who turned their backs upon the old parties and made a new one out of their fragments. If every man in those old organizations had been a straight-laced partisan, who believed in all that his party had done in the past or might do in the future, the old republican ship would never have been launched, and the slave would still be clanking his chains. And if the Democrats in the free States could have raised a healthy crop of mugwumps in due season the power of slavery over the national government would never have reached its bad eminence, and the curse might have been eliminated without the frightful surgery of civil war. The bane of our politics is not too much party independence, but too little. As to the need of parties in a free government, there is no controversy. Men who think alike on important questions naturally find each other out and stand together. The end is good government, and the party the means; but whenever the end is lost sight of in our zeal for the party machine, honest men shall ditch it, and thus open the way for reform. Our politicians have often told us that an army in which each soldier goes out to fight on his own hook must prove a dismal failure, and that parties also must conform to fixed regulations. But a party is not an army. It is an aggregation of men who are supposed to have opinions, and to be capable of acting upon them. The discipline of the camp is foreign to their work, and the reference to it by the party bosses shows the clumsiness of their thinking.

In dealing with this subject I have referred to the facts of the past. Is there anything in the present state of our politics to tempt any one to tie himself to the chariot-wheel of any party? Compare the record of the last administration on the question of civil service reform with that of the present up to date, and tell me what there is in either to awaken party enthusiasm. Party loyalty finds as little to inspire it in the action of the present congress in dealing with the question of finance. As to tariff reform, members of the United States senate who call themselves democrats completely block its way in defiance of the repeated and thundering demand of the people by overwhelming majorities. These Tammanyized stipendiaries of monopolies and trusts have also been able to prevent confirmation of the most perfectly faultless and admirable nominations made by the President during his present term of office; and such is political morality in the senate that these rebels against political decency, for value received or promised, have been welcomed to the sweet dalliance of the most scholarly, distinguished and self-respecting republicans in that body. This compact between political buccaneers and moral invertebrates touches the dead line in practical politics, and measures the awful descent of a legislative body which was the pride of the republic in its better days. "To this complexion have we come at last." If we had a few such men there to-day as John Quincy Adams and Charles Sumner the work of regeneration would begin, and the people would rejoice. But there is not one. Heaven save us from the senate of the United States as now constituted and inspired, and help us to work and pray for a new one, chosen by the direct vote of the people, and obedient to their will. But the work of reform, whether in the senate or out of it, does not wait on party machinery, but political independence, and that eternal vigilance of the people which is the price of their liberty. The remedy for all curable political ills is in their hands, and if they fail to apply it the blame must lie at their own doors.

A LATE INSTANCE OF SECRETARY CARLISLE'S LOOT.

For many mouths the Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post has been sending out warnings of the various assaults being made by Mr. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury, aided by various congressmen, to force out Prof. Mendenhall, the distinguished superintendent of the coast survey. It is not worth while to place the moral responsibility for this upon Logan Carlisle. Such dirty political business has always been handed over to dirty political tools—generally not to one's own son. But it can not be denied that Logan Carlisle has shown himself to be admirably fitted for his work. The processes of "forcing a resignation" and the sufferings of the victim, in this case one of the highly-equipped scientific men of this country, are partially indicated by the following excerpts covering a small portion of the time given by the treasury department to this business.

* * *

The politicians who have been trying so long to drive Prof. Mendenhall out of the superintendency of the coast survey are now industriously circulating a newspaper paragraph in which it is being represented that Prof. Mendenhall was given his place by President Harrison as a political sop, and in defiance of the spirit of civil service reform.

During President Cleveland's first administration an effort was made to procure an eminent man of science for the head of the survey. Secretary Manning wrote to Prof. Alexander Agassiz offering him the place, but the offer was declined. A treasury officer named Thorne was presently appointed ad interim, to straighten out the finances of the bureau, which had fallen into some disrepair. It was perfectly understood on the part of Mr. Thorne, as well as of the president, that this appointment was intended to be only temporary, and that when the right scientific man could be found—one who had executive ability as well as learning—he would be placed in command. It must have been towards the close of the Cleveland administration that the American Association for the Advancement of Science adopted resolutions urging upon the president the appointment of a scientist to head of the survey, and he made another effort to find one. He sought advice from the association, but as that body had no special candidate in mind, it could give him no assistance officially. Personally, the advice of several of its members was sought, and unless the present writer errs in memory, Prof. Mendenhall himself was one of these. The inquiry resulted in the naming of several men to the president, but for some reason none of them was appointed.

At the next meeting of the American association, similar resolutions were adopted, and Prof. Mendenhall, being at that time in Indiana, was deputized to present them to Mr. Harrison, who expressed a good deal of interest in the survey, and again suggested that some men of science be named, from among whom he could safely make his choice of a superintendent. Prof. Mendenhall discussed with him a few names which had occurred to both, including that of Henry Mitchell, with whom Mr. Harrison was personally acquainted. It was understood at the time that Mitchell received an offer of the place but declined it. Soon afterwards Prof. Mendenhall was summoned to Washington by a message from the president, and to his great surprise was offered the superintendency of the coast survey himself. His engagement at the time was such as to cause him considerable doubt whether or not to accept, but Mr. Harrison advised him to think it over, and gave him time to do so. The next day Prof. Mendenhall made up his mind to take the place, stipulating only that it should be treated absolutely as a scientific, and not at all as a political office. All these facts were known to Secretary Windom, who, in speaking of them afterward to a friend, mentioned with some surprise that President Harrison had never made the slightest inquiry or conceived any idea of what Prof. Mendenhall's politics were. The attempt to discredit him and his appointee is founded on a lie, and is as contemptible as anything in the history of Washington spoils politics.—Washington dispatch to New York Evening Post, June 20.

* * *

Every one in Washington familiar with the management of the treasury department knows that Logan Carlisle, the son of the secretary, and his chief clerk, long ago fixed his eye upon the coast survey, and resolved to drive Prof. Mendenhall out of it. He has found an ally in congress in the person of one Enloe, a Tennessee democrat, who has made assault after assault upon the professor, for no better reason than that the latter preferred to run his survey on scientific instead of political lines. Every time Enloe has struck at Prof. Mendenhall, Mr. Outhwaite, of Ohio, and other intelligent democrats, have come to his defence and routed the attacking party, but it has been possible for the Carlises to loot the survey piecemeal, and it is understood that the hopelessness of keeping up a resistance to such aggression has worn out the superintendent's patience.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, June 23.

* * *

Prof. Mendenhall, in charge of the coast and geodetic survey, has tendered his resignation to the president on the ground, it is said, that the secretary of the treasury has interfered with the working of the bureau by the retirement of experts and the substitution of inefficient men. Logan Carlisle, the secretary's son, who is chief clerk of the treasury department, declared some time ago that he would have Prof. Mendenhall's official scalp in a very few weeks. The office was wanted for John C. Underwood, of Chicago, an ex-Kentuckian and friend of the secretary of the treasury. If Secretary Carlisle's counsel prevails with the president, General Underwood will be appointed.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, June 23.

* * *

If Prof. Mendenhall has been forced to resign his place as head of the coast survey by the greed of Logan Carlisle for spoils it is full time that the president interfered and sent young Carlisle back to Kentucky, or at least forbade any more political fagling with the coast survey. The coast survey is an institution of which the country has every reason to be proud. Its work is of the highest value, and is so regarded throughout the world. It has reached its present state of high efficiency by being managed on scientific principles, regardless of politics. Since Logan Carlisle has been chief clerk of the treasury department under his father, he has distinguished himself by looting every office he could lay his hands on, and of late has been driving experts and scientific men out of the coast survey in order to put democrats in their places, no matter whether they were efficient or not, and regardless of the effect on the work of the survey. Prof. Mendenhall is said to have borne this substitution as long as he could, and finally to have resigned rather submit to a constant overruling of his protests.—Springfield Republican, June 29.

* * *

If President Cleveland wants to prove the sincerity of what he has said and written in favor of reform in the civil service he has a good chance now. For several months, in fact ever since the present administration came into power, there has been a continual attack by politicians upon the coast survey because Prof. Mendenhall, the superintendent, has declined to allow political considerations to interfere with the management of the bureau. It is true that he is a republican and was appointed by a republican president, but he is not a politician, has never taken any active part in political affairs, and could not with any justice be rated as an offensive partisan. Prof. Mendenhall is one of the most famous and eminent scientists in the United States, and his reputation is universal. His ability and learning are recognized by every school of science in the world, and he is considered one of the foremost authorities in several branches of scientific investigation.

Since he has been superintendent of the coast survey he has declined to make discharges or appointments for political reasons, and has thereby offended several prominent democratic politicians, particularly Mr. Enloe, of Tennessee, who has since been persecuting him in every possible manner. Strange to say, Secretary Carlisle's sympathies appear to have been with Mr. Enloe, and, regardless of the protests of Professor Mendenhall, the secretary has made removals and appointments in the coast survey without so much as consulting the superintendent. Some of the men he has removed are experienced and valuable scientists who have no political connections whatever and have performed their duties with an ability and fidelity that were beyond criticism. The men who have been appointed in nearly every instance have been politicians without scientific attainments or any knowledge or experience to fit them for the work to which they were assigned.

Professor Mendenhall has protested to the secretary of the treasury and to the president against this kind of interference with his subordinates, but it has done no good, and now the announcement is made that he has tendered his resignation because the secretary of the treasury persists in appointing to his bureau incompetent men and making him responsible for their work. This matter has been brought to the attention of President Cleveland several times, and he has promised to talk with Secretary Carlisle about it, but if the president has given him instructions on the subject the secretary disregards them, which is very improbable.—Washington dispatch, Chicago Record.

* * *

The Worcester polytechnic institute is to be congratulated on securing as its next president Dr. Thomas C. Mendenhall, the efficient superintendent of the United States coast survey, who has been driven out of office by the folly of Logan Carlisle, the bumptious son of the secretary of the treasury. But the loss of the United States is the gain of Worcester and Massachusetts. Dr. Mendenhall has accepted his unanimous election, and will spend the next three months in visiting the principal scientific schools in Europe, returning to take up his new duties October 1. Dr. Mendenhall holds high rank in scientific circles and as a practical educator. He was called from his professorship of physics and mathematics in Ohio university to help found one or more scientific schools in Tokio, Japan, returned to his old chair in 1882, two years later entered the United States signal service, and in 1886 accepted the presidency of Rose polytechnic institute at Terre Haute, Ind. He was next appointed by President Harrison superintendent of the United States coast and geodetic survey, succeeding the late Prof. Pierce of Harvard. This place he resigned July 1, though President Cleveland has not yet accepted his resignation. Dr. Mendenhall received the degree of Ph. D. from Ohio University in 1878, and of LL. D. from the University of Michigan in 1887. Within the last few years he has delivered two courses of lectures before the Lowell institute in Boston.—Springfield Republican, July 13.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

A POWERLESS EXECUTIVE AND REIGNING CHIEFS.

Senator McPherson to-day asked the President to withdraw the nomination of Captain James Parker to be United States Attorney for the District of New Jersey, which was made last Tuesday. Speaking of his action, Mr. McPherson said:

"I had not asked for the appointment of Captain James Parker. I have recently repeatedly stated to Captain Parker that I could not consent to his appointment to that office, because I was otherwise committed. Finding, however, that the nomination had been made under some misapprehension in regard to my wishes in the matter, I have asked the President to withdraw the nomination, for I can not consent to be placed in a false position in respect to it."—Washington dispatch, July 12.

The withdrawal by the President of the nomination of James Parker as United States district attorney for New Jersey has caused considerable discussion here, owing to the peculiar attitude in which it has placed the two New Jersey senators. The facts in the matter are slowly coming out, and appear to be as follows:

Senator McPherson had an informal understanding with Senator Smith that the appointment should "belong" to him (McPherson), and on that understanding promised the award of the appointment to Miles Ross, the New Brunswick politician, who controls votes that will be valuable to Senator McPherson in his contest for re-election to the Senate next fall. Ross delayed in urging the appointment, and Mr. Parker solicited the two New Jersey senators for support in his application for the office, without conference with Ross. Senator McPherson wrote a letter to the President, of which the following is a copy:

SENATE CHAMBER, }
WASHINGTON, April 7, 1894. }

To the President:

SIR—I am informed that the bearer, Capt. James Parker, of Perth Amboy, N. J., is desirous of obtaining some position under your administration. Capt. Parker is a lawyer of good abilities and much experience, and will fill the office of United States district attorney for New Jersey, or any other office whose duties are of a legal character that he will undertake to fill, with great credit. I indorse and commend Capt. Parker in every way, and ask for him such consideration as may be possible to give. Yours, etc.

J. R. MCPHERSON.

Senator Smith's reply was that he had indorsed some other application and could not therefore help Mr. Parker. It appears that in spite of this fact Mr. Parker filed the letters from both senators together with others from Frederick R. Condit, ex-Governors Ludlow, Green, Abbett and Bedle, and Messrs. William R. Grace, Everett P. Wheeler and others, and got the nomination.

When the announcement was made Mr. McPherson expressed himself as displeased, and declared that his letter was not intended as an indorsement of Mr. Parker, a statement which he reiterated with some emphasis when protests came from Senator Smith and all the New Jersey delegation in congress except Messrs. Geissenhainer and English, and finally one from Miles Ross. He at once hastened to the White House and secured the promise of a withdrawal of the nomination, which has since been made.

The whole matter has caused a great deal of severe criticism of Senator McPherson, the more so as there has been a continual squabble over all federal appointments between the two New Jersey senators to an extent which had practically "held up" all the appointments. The fight is particularly emphasized because Senator McPherson is using every effort to employ federal patronage to secure his re-election next fall.

At the White House no information is vouchsafed regarding the case.—Washington dispatch New York Evening Post, July 16.

* * *

All the nominations of New Yorkers before the judiciary committee, except Bennett in Kings county, are to be reported favorably to the senate in executive session. The most recent nominations are considered by the "machine" as made in the interest of conciliation, and have reconciled Senator Hill and his backers to the idea of letting the rest of the names go through.—Washington dispatch New York Evening Post, July 16.

BOSS GORMAN AND HIS SUBSIDIZED PRESS.

HOW A SUBSIDIZED PAPER WORKS FOR ITS BOSS.

"The Port Tobacco Times, the Laurel Democrat, the Rockville Advocate, the Ellicott City Times, the Towson Journal, and other county journals have been throwing hot shot at the Baltimore Sun for its course on the tariff and its malice toward certain democratic leaders and for its general attempt to rule or ruin the democratic party. The criticisms have been richly merited and very forcibly applied."—Westminster Advocate.

"The editor of the Port Tobacco Times, we believe, is the clerk of the committee on printing, of which Senator Gorman is chairman. The editor of the Laurel Democrat, we believe, has recently been appointed to a good office in Washington. The editor of the Ellicott City Times, we believe, is a candidate for the position of postmaster at Ellicott City. The editor of the Towson Journal, we believe, is commissioner of immigration at a salary of $1,800 a year."—Centerville Observer.

"Editor Busted, of the Centerville Observer, errs slightly. He has not brought out the full relation of the editors named to Senator Gorman and the ring. Francis M. Cox, of the Port Tobacco Times, is clerk to the senate printing committee; Ernest P. Baldwin was editor of the Laurel Democrat when President Cleveland appointed him first auditor of the treasury, and the paper is now run by his brother, and is owned principally by Senator Gorman and Naval Officer Barnes Compton; J. Emory Hill, of the Ellicott City Times, holds a lucrative Howard county office by the grace of Mr. Gorman's following, and his associate, J. B. Morrow, was a candidate for the Ellicott City post-office, Col. William H. Ruby, of the Towson Journal, holds the place named by Editor Busted. The editor of the Rockville Advocate, Albert J. Almon, is postmaster of that town, and Editor William H. Vanderford, of the Westminster Advocate, wants to hold the same office in Westminster.—Baltimore Evening News.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE editor of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has sent the following request to the post-masters of Indiana whose offices come under the civil service rules:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 22, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR—I shall be gratified if you will kindly inform me for publication in the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE:

1. The number of employes in the post-office when you took charge.
2. The number now in the classified service.
3. The number now in the unclassified service.
4. How many of the employes in the office when you took charge are there now? How many of these were in the classified service? How many in the unclassified service?
5. How many appointments have been made under your administration to the classified service? How many to the unclassified service?
6. Do you know whether the appointees under the civil service law have included democrats and republicans?
7. Will republicans under your administration have in the classified service the same treatment as the democrats?

A prompt reply will greatly oblige me.

WE regret that the commemorative address upon George William Curtis by Park Godwin, before the Century Association, was received too late for such extended excerpts as we should like to make. The address is adequate to the subject, which is saying a great deal. Every college library should have it. All teachers of American history and literature in our high schools, should read this memorial of a great citizen. It may be had for ten cents by addressing the secretary of the Civil Service Reform Association, 54 William street, New York.

How like our own Bynum was the shifty performance of substituting the Houk bill providing for the reinstatement of discharged railway postal clerks for his own, and when questioned as to whether the two bills were the same casually replying that they were, in order to get the change without objection. Bynum's bill instructed the civil service commission to place the names of discharged employes on the eligible list. Houk's bill provided that the postmaster-general should, as fast as vacancies occur, fill them from the list of discharged employes. Bynum's bill made no provision for determining what names should go at the head and what at the foot of the eligible list, as it expressly provided for no examinations and thus was an impracticable measure which Bynum was shrewd enough to discover would have to be vetoed by the President on technical grounds alone; but Houk's bill offers a golden opportunity for the ex-postal clerks to battle and scramble for reinstatement on their political pulls. So far as the bill itself is concerned we need not worry. It will never become a law.

THE clerical force of the civil service commission has been for the most part made up of details from different departments. The departments naturally did not always send their best men. The clerks did not like to be removed from the line of promotion and the commission had no power to protect, as in the Eugene Gad-dis case, its own efficient employes from the vengeance of a Logan Carlisle. The House, in its recent onslaught on the commission and the law, struck out the amendment to remedy this unsatisfactory condition of things. But in the senate a clause was inserted granting the commission a force of thirty-six clerks of its own, duly classified, providing also that the commission might transfer to its own rolls any of the detailed department clerks who had proved useful as examiners and giving an appropriation of $52,000 for the pay of these clerks. This is a gain in many ways. It dignifies the civil service commission. It lessens the power of such fellows as young Carlisle to harry and irritate the commission and to cripple their work.

Since the above was written, the CHRONICLE has received the following from a well-informed correspondent:

Repeatedly in its annual reports, and in other ways, the commission has urged upon congress the importance of amending the law so that the men upon whom it relies to do its work shall be subject to its control. Until this session the spoilsmen have always been successful in their efforts to maintain this handicap upon the effectiveness of the commission. Sometimes they persuaded the house committee on appropriations to refuse the commission's request. Sometimes, when the committee included the appropriation desired by the commission in the bill as reported to the house, the enemies of the merit system raised a point of order in the house that as the effect of the amendment was to change an existing provision of law without thereby reducing expenditure, it was inadmissible under the house rules. Such was the method to which they successfully resorted in the house this year. In the senate, where no such rule prevails, Senator Lodge re-introduced the amendment in an improved and more practically useful form. With the assistance of Senator Cockerell, chairman of the appropriation committee of the senate, Mr. Lodge steered it successfully through all its stages in that body. In the senate, indeed, there was no opposition to the change, and no debate upon it except that Senator Platt, of Connecticut, asked a few questions to satisfy himself and the senate as to the precise purpose and effect of the amendment, and to make certain that there was nothing in it which could by possibility, interfere with the effective working of the commission. The amendment was not yet, however, out of the woods. Once before it had passed the senate only to be stricken out in the conference committee. This year it had better fortune. The house conference agreed to accept it. The report of the conference committee was adopted in the house without, so far as this amendment is concerned, any debate or question.

Good Government, familiar as it is with the practical workings of the law, declared that the change is the "most important piece of legislation in furtherance of civil service reform since the enactment of the civil service law itself eleven years ago."

The thanks of all friends of decent government are due to Senators Lodge and Cockerell who contributed more than any one else to the successful result. Senator Cockerell's course in the matter was particularly noteworthy, because in the past he has not professed to be a special friend of the reform, and, perhaps, is not now. While the merit system is part of the law of the land, however, he frankly and fully recognized his responsibility as chairman of the appropriations committee of the senate to see to it that the commissioners charged by statute with the discharge of important duties should be given power to perform them efficiently.

THE excellent and belated order of the postmaster-general, printed below, must be taken along with Mr. Cleveland's putting the railway mail service under the merit system and Mr. Harrison's taking the post-offices having the carrier service out of spoils as encouraging indications of the inevitable progress of civil service reform. All, however, were done after such pointed delays and after such conspicuous frisking in spoils that about the most one can do is to give a perfunctory sort of praise. Upon the appointment of the successors of the present postmasters who have been actively employed in what is known as "beating the law," we shall again hear the old cry: "Postmaster-General Bissell delayed his order until he knew that his postmasters had practically made a clean sweep of republicans, and now in all justice we must be allowed to equalize the service." These belated reforms, like most timid measures, are alike a severe strain upon reform and upon spoilsmen.

The following is the recent order :

To Postmasters Free Delivery Offices.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28, 1894.

Order No. 235.

For the purpose of avoiding unjust removals of clerks and carriers in the classified service, and to avoid embarrassment and annoyance to the department and postmasters with reference thereto, postmasters in free delivery offices are hereby notified that the following policy prevails in the post-office department, and will be enforced :

All removals and new employments of clerks and changes in rosters, must be reported to, the first assistant postmaster-general as soon as made.

No carrier shall be removed except for cause, and upon written charges filed with the post-office department, and of which the carrier shall have full notice, and an opportunity to make defense.

No resignation requested by the postmaster, or by any one for him, will be accepted by the department.

W. S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

IN 1891, at the annual meeting of the Buffalo association, its president, Sherman S. Rogers, spoke of the "anomaly existing in the federal building" in Buffalo. In the postoffice the civil service law was in full operation, but upstairs in the collector's office, the collector, "in full war paint and feathers," by having less than 50 employes, was able to defy the law. The custom house remained under the spoils system. This was the condition of things all over the United States, and Mr. Rogers called on President Harrison to extend the law so as to remedy the evil. "Such action would be like the march of a victorious army into the enemy's camp, and would prove the claim that Gen. Harrison is a reformer." And the association adopted a resolution asking for such extension. At the dinner in 1894, when Postmaster Baker rejoiced "at the dawn of a new and better era," Toastmaster Rogers followed with: "We hope that era will extend higher than the first story of the government building. We want it to take in the custom house." At the call of the president for a rising vote on the part of all who favored the doing away with the anomalous state of things that had too long disfigured the custom house, everybody rose, and President Rogers desired the secretary to make a minute of this fact, to be forwarded to President Cleveland.

The Buffalo Express says:

What Mr. Rogers charges is very true—and very notorious. It has been true under republican collectors and democratic collectors alike. It is claimed that there are usually more than fifty persons employed in collecting customs revenue in the district of Buffalo Creek. But all above forty-seven or so are on the pay-roll as "temporary" or "extra" employes.

We have not had this little extension because Mr. Harrison and Mr. Cleveland feared their respective party machines. We shall not get this extension or the order putting the unclassified places in the post-offices under the rules until civil service reformers clamor, make themselves disagreeable, conscientiously refrain from "sympathy" and make threats exactly as the party machine does. If a president's own party organization acts the part of a tyrant and lashes him through his administration for selfish ends, he should not complain if others follow the example for unselfish ends.

THE CHRONICLE was evidently premature in its supposition from an interview with Postmaster Baker, of Buffalo, that he would not treat his unclassified service as spoil. His collapse has begun, according to the Buffalo Express. He asked for the resignation of the superintendent of a branch office and is reported as follows:

Mr. Baker told Mr. Miller that the resignation was demanded on purely political grounds. Mr. Miller was a republican and Mr. Warner was a democrat. Mr. Miller was told that he might send in his resignation if he wished. Mr. Miller's resignation was worded something like this: "In compliance with your request I herewith tender my resignation," and so on.

Mr. Baker is also reported as stating that Mr. Miller "was a first-class man and knew his business thoroughly."

An administration that professes to believe in the merit system but puts over the rank and file, whose places were secured by competition, heads of departments whose places were doled out as spoil, is like a farmer who piously protects his sheep by the use of wolves as shepherds. The putting of these excepted places under the rules would for an entire week make all the local spoilsmen seethe and boil, but we suppose Washington officialism has the President so thoroughly in hand that he believes, if he should correct this absurd and incongruous state of things, he would disrupt his party, which seems to be an idle fear, in view of the present harmonious condition of his party, which is largely the result of his subservience to the spoils gang.

How shall we characterize the man who loses his character and thereby furthers a great reform? It really looks as if Josiah Quincy had, unintentionally, we suppose, by sacrificing his reputation given the necessary impetus to consular reform. On every hand in the daily papers, in the important magazines, are springing up witnesses qualified to judge, who show what a disgrace our consular service treated as spoil has become, and who claim moreover that reform through merit and competition is entirely practicable. We doubt if another administration in the face of the aroused public opinion would have the bravado to again treat this service as spoil. And all this public interest is due to Mr. Quincy. It was his unmistakable use of the consular service to reward party hacks, to pay party and private debts, the brutal, the reckless and callous sweeping out of decent officers, the unblushing delight in the power of patronage to influence legislation expressed by Mr. Quincy, the reformer in politics, that aroused the patriotism of many people as no ordinary spoils-mongering of an ordinary spoils-monger could have done. It is a matter of some delicacy just how to express proper gratitude to Mr. Quincy.

SECRETARY GEORGE MCANENY, of the New York Civil Service Reform Association, recently appeared before the special senate committee investigating the administration of the civil service laws. He gave the history of the efforts of the association to get the law enforced by the commission and by Governor Flower. Their method of correcting the violations of the law is unique. The report of the evidence states:

On January 16 the commission made sixteen more corrections of existing violations. Of this number six were corrected in conformity to the law. Two of the other places were transferred from the competitive to the non-competitive class at the request of Governor Flower. The correction of two of these other violations was afflicted by a change of the title of their positions and in the cases of the remaining four violations new examinations were held.

A long tabulation was put in evidence by Secretary McAneny, showing the number of violations of the law which the commission had undertaken to correct since the promulgation by Comptroller Roberts of his intention not to pay salaries to officials appointed in violation of the civil service law. The positions affected numbered over 100. Most of the corrections were accomplished by transferring the positions from the competitive to the non-competitive class.

THE Galveston News ought to have had some influence with this administration. It is an important democratic paper, printed in a section supposed to believe that a party can not survive the loss of patronage. Last May it said:

Some of the very men to whom Mr. Cleveland has given the most are the men who are telling their constituents that he is an enemy of the South. Nothing has done more to demoralize the democratic party in the South and elsewhere than the dependence of its leaders upon patronage and their great and incurable expectations and demands for spoils.

And later:

Mr. Cleveland has not succeeded in satisfying the demands of a single chronic spoilsman. The more he has given to them the more have they demanded. The greed of a party spoilsman is a most dangerous disease.

And now it might add that those who received the most from the President show not even the grace of loyalty to him.

PENSION AGENT SPENCER.

Pension Agent Spencer is reported as having reduced salaries enough to get five additional employes. This necessity for an increased force is a natural consequence of dismissing men who had learned the work and of training new men. He also is about to complete his clean sweep by the dismissal of four remaining republicans and one hold-over democrat. It is also reported that "the new force have been together for several months and have become well acquainted with each other. Acquaintance has ripened into friendship of true worth."

This "friendship of true worth" was emphasized by the recent presentation of "two handsome alabaster ink-stands and bottles" to Mr. Spencer and his chief clerk, and by the reciprocal attention of "a large box of fragrant cigars" to the male employes and "a large box of elegant candies" to the female employes. We trust that these amenities mark an end of the unpleasant decapitations that have been going on, and which no doubt have had a tendency to lower the spirits of the working force.

Mr. Spencer's suspended animation as a civil service reformer seems also to have happily ended and he is again a true-blue reformer, with certain reservations. The Indianapolis News, August 10, reports him as follows:

"Competitive examinations should be held for the various clerkships in government offices. In this way the most competent man will always secure the place. When the republicans are in power, examinations should be held for republicans only. When the democrats succeed to office, democrats alone should be allowed to pass the examinations. We can not have a spirit of patriotism unless we reward men for political and patriotic service. Under my plan, while each party would secure the results of its victory, only the best men would get office."

If the railway mail service, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company or the Atlas Engine Works should dismiss their employes once in four years and then hold examinations to which the old men were not eligible, in order to get hold of the best new material to train for another four years, we have Mr. Spencer's plan, and the obvious break-down of any business so conducted. But we wish to call attention to the statement that "we can not have a spirit of patriotism unless we reward men for political and patriotic service." Mr. Spencer's view is that to get him to continue to love his country, to perform his duties as a citizen, and as a party man to propagate his party views and to vote for them at the polls, he had to be paid with an office. No doubt he is qualified to speak for himself, but the people generally have not yet fallen so low. At present there are many who do not feel that they are in duty bound to undertake the political work that brings them into the unequal personal contest with the hirelings of a political machine. They are, we believe, justified in declining such political work so long as a congressman is allowed to subsidize editors, reward his henchmen with public offices and marshal them to throttle all free expression of public opinion; but when this tyranny of patronage is removed, the political vacuum made by the withdrawal of Mr. Spencer and all others who withdraw unless they can be paid, will be speedily filled by men who want no other reward than the pleasure of making a fight for the opinions in which they believe.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE TARIFF.

No one regrets so much as we do our frequent censure of President Cleveland, for it he, and only he, must bear the blame. We shall be delighted to let him alone if he will make Carlisle and Hoke Smith, Voorhees and Turpie, and all their many fellows, here and elsewhere, of high and low degree, let the public service alone. Whenever he shall justly earn his large salary by faithfully doing the work for which it pays; doing the whole of this work, and not a half or a hundredth part of it; doing it consistently and impartially, and not by fits and starts, now here, now there, on no intelligible principle of action or inaction, no one will recognize more gladly than we, not, indeed, that he is necessarily a saint, or a hero, or a patriot sage, but that he is an honest, conscientious man.

Whatever we may think of him, however, we shall always deal with him, and with every other public servant, as having a right, not to indulgence, but to fair treatment from his masters, and we therefore say now, what we believe every reasonably intelligent and well-informed person in the country thinks (although a few democratic attorneys for trusts and a few hide-bound republican partisans pretend to think otherwise), that his recent intervention in legislation regarding the tariff was simply the fitting discharge of his evident duty. We know that some very worthy people who have been and, we hope, are still good friends of the CHRONICLE, are grieved to see us apparently so skeptical, critical and, on the whole, indifferent as to the evils of the tariff and the attempts made to remedy them by the party in power. We must even plead guilty in some degree to the offense thus imputed to us, and confess to a lack of enthusiastic interest in the outcome of those tedious

"conferences" which are dragging their slow length along while we write, although it may be hoped that ere this issue reaches our readers they will know whether the "Wilson bill" and the "Gorman-Brice" bill have followed the example, to share the fate of the Kilkenny cats, or, by a happy union, have presented the country with a hybrid measure of multiple paternity. It may be that after all these months of talk and tinker, of waiting and wrangling, bargaining and log-rolling, the tariff will remain as it was when Harrison left the White House. It may be that their Gracious Majesties, the Trusts, will be persuaded by arguments closely analogous to those found effective to the same end with the Plantagenets, to generously remit, say a tithe, of the benevolences they levy on rich and poor alike; in neither event shall we be thrilled with patriotic pride by the statesmanship of our dominant party, or enraptured at the golden future unveiled to the nation.

But, while we think and feel thus, we can readily understand that the President may, and ought to, think and feel far otherwise. He is the successful candidate of a party which, abandoning for once in its public utterances the use of Platformese, pledged itself in the plainest English, to recast our entire system of import duties upon principles of revision so radical and far-reaching that their thoroughgoing and practical application would have worked little less than an economical revolution. He was nominated as the exponent and avowed champion of tariff reform, and ere this has doubtless persuaded himself, in perfect good faith, that he was elected because the people agreed with him; and not because they were nauseated with General Harrison and all his surroundings, with transparent hypocrisy and Wanamaker, with brazen corruption and Raun; nor yet because four years of spoils-mongering had then honey-combed the republican party with disaffection; just as a like course of political debauchery is now, before his eyes and with his connivance, fast undermining all discipline and spirit in his own party. Believing that his party was given by the people, not only full control of both branches of the national legislature and of the executive, but an explicit "mandate" as to its use of this power, he would be a far worse man than we think him, if he heard without indignation a half-dozen senators, with Gorman of Maryland as their worthy spokesman, calmly announce that either the tariff would be changed to suit the little groups of very rich men, who almost undisguisedly own them, or it would not be changed at all. Repudiation of platform promises after election is no new feature in American politics; indeed, it requires no little ingenuity (more, certainly, than we pretend to possess) to discover in the structure of the Wilson bill many splinters of the tariff plank adopted at Chicago; but, after all, a little effort towards seeming consistency, a little show of public motives, some affectation of regard for the general interest, has usually cloaked with a faint semblance of decency even the clearest breach of trust. In this case the offenders were, at least at first, cynically shameless, one could almost—

"Like the bearded Switzer, hear them say:

"That cause is sacred which gives certain pay."

They seemed anxious only to merit their own respective admissions on the ground-floor of the several Trusts they served; until the President's letter was read by Mr. Wilson, they were as though blind and deaf to the plain signs of popular anger and disgust gathering all about them. The silly outcry sought to be raised at the President's attempt to "influence legislation" by his letter, although it has fallen too flat to need serious notice for itself, curiously illustrates the slovenly habits of thought tolerated and even cultivated by so many of those who speak or write regarding public affairs. Mr. Cleveland is none the less an American citizen because he happens to be President of the United States; who is it that questions the right of an American citizen, however humble, or however prominent, to "influence legislation" by fair argument, admonition, or remonstrance, addressed to congressmen paid from the taxes he helps, directly or indirectly, to pay? He is the first politician of his party; must he alone be mute as to matters of political life or death to that party? If any one says he must, let us be plainly told why. Finally, if his action had been official instead of personal, is there any constitutional duty more clearly imposed on the President than to give congress information, in his own discretion as to time or exigency, regarding the state of the Union? and could there be any season more opportune for discharging this duty than the present?

The mustard-seed of truth hidden in the bulk of this absurd and hollow clamor is the fact that Mr. Cleveland has sought ever since his inauguration to "influence legislation," not as in this instance, by the legitimate means contemplated and prescribed by the constitution, but, to speak plainly, by a system of wholesale bribery. The spectacle of Senator Gorman standing forth as the champion of "the Senate's honor," or, indeed, of anything more commendable than lobbying or election frauds, is so strongly suggestive of opera bouffe that one can scarcely treat it seriously, but when he urged his colleagues to resist firmly attempted dictation by one who disposed of 300,000 offices, he would have discharged a patriotic duty had he meant dictation through the disposal of those offices. To "dictation" thus enforced, or, in other words, to the barter of places for votes, however, such confessors as he of legislative independence, are very charitable; if they withstand it as to the tariff, this is only because, though, for them, patronage is sweet, "sugar," or its equivalent, is sweeter. The form of dictation which they heartily hate and abjectly fear appeals for its sanction to an aroused and outraged public opinion; from that these worthies shrink as in the old southern days, a shirking, pilfering "nigger" squirmed at the crack of the overseer's whip, and for very similar reasons.

Precisely because they thus regard it through it, and not otherwise, can any President accomplish any worthy end with congress. It seems strange that Mr. Cleveland should still need to be told this; even a priori the proposition would seem, as the French say, to "leap into the eyes." No doubt it is a "consideration" for Senator Gorman to have his shiftless brother "Cal" supported at public expense, or to secure berths for "useful pensioners" like 'Gene Higgins and Morris Thomas; but this may be outweighed by even cruder arguments on the part of the Sugar Trust, by the prospect of diminished dividends from those coal or railroad companies of Western Maryland and West Virginia for which the senator entertains a concern so notoriously "altruistic," by a regard for the welfare of some one among those many enterprises soliciting legislative recognition in which, of course, he "has no interest," but "certain of his friends" occasionally may have some. In short, if President Cleveland chooses to enter the auction mart for this human merchandise with white skins but black souls, he ought to understand that when he competes with wealthy and powerful interests he may well be outbidden. But, if he does not see this possibility, surely he can not be blind to the facts that all his efforts to guide the action of congress through "conciliation" and "recognition" and the various other euphemisms for this form of bribery have been simply dismal failures. Stewart and Allen might be talking against time yet for all the good it did to "placate" Voorhees and his like; that the silver bill became a law was due to no thimble-rigging with offices, but because the President at last spoke out like a man. The "placing" of post-offices and giving a free rein to Logan Carlisle has not saved him from the income tax, or a thousand incongruities in his tariff bill; if he rescues enough of this last to be willing to count it of kin, he will owe this to another belated spurt of manliness. Public opinion is certainly very kind to him; the people so long to see him prove worthy of his place and his fortune that they are ready to cheer him to the echo at the smallest excuse; unfortunately he gives them that excuse very, very seldom.

THE REASON FOR THE GREAT DEFEAT.

How are those who were the advocates or the apologists of the purchase of votes for tariff reform with offices pleased with the result of their bargain? Gorman and his fellow democratic corruptionists in the Senate have their henchmen in office, but what has become of tariff reform? The very men whom Mr. Cleveland appointed or allowed his subordinates to appoint at Mr. Gorman's demand, are now supporting the latter in his thus far successful fight against the administration. The Maryland tariff reform journals say that the only democratic newspapers in that state which have not declared themselves on the President's side are those owned and edited by federal office-holders. Could feudal analogies go farther? The office-seekers for whom Senator Gorman secured places are his men; to him they owe suit, service, homage and allegiance. Upon their unquestioning support he and they both feel he has the right to rely even in a contest with their official superior; precisely as Henry the Lion or William of Normandy could count on the assistance of their vassals in their campaigns against the nominal sovereigns. Has Mr. Cleveland any right to complain of the position in which he now finds himself and of the humiliations to which he has been exposed? Had he in 1885 listened to the remonstrances of the Maryland reformers; had he removed Higgins twenty-four hours after that worthy's real character had been made known to him; had he thenceforward refused to make a single appointment at Mr. Gorman's demand, the latter would not have been able to crush the formidable opposition which then endeavored to make his re-election impossible. Mr. Cleveland, whether he likes it or not, must divide with the Maryland democrats the discredit of having made Mr. Gorman's present position and influence possible. Warned against him by the experience of his first term, well aware of the part Gorman played prior to and at the Chicago convention of 1892, there was no excuse for Mr. Cleveland's failure to cut loose from him altogether; cut loose from him, however, the President did not. Again, with the hope of preserving "harmony" in the party, and of advancing the cause of a sound currency and a reformed tariff he surrendered to Gorman all the federal patronage in Maryland, except the postmaster at Baltimore and the district attorney. Mr. Gorman promptly had his friends confirmed, and has now for months kept the nomination of the district attorney hung up in the senate. Disgraceful as has been the history of the Gorman bill, reeking with corruption as has been every stage of its progress, we can not pretend to feel any regret that the attempt to buy Gorman and his pals with offices, and to keep them bought long enough to count them, has come to naught. Long usage has so blinded politicians and the people alike to the real character of the office-mongering deals, which have for the last sixty-five years been going on over the entire land, that men who would scorn to buy a vote with their own money, will, without hesitation, trade public offices for political support. In the transactions themselves there is no difference.

The Sugar Trust is believed to have bought with money votes for the sugar schedule it wanted. Mr. Cleveland, his friends admit bought, or supposed he had bought with offices votes for the repeal of the Sherman act and the enactment of a tariff reform bill. The Sugar Trust used its own money. Mr. Cleveland used offices, which belong not to him, but to the American people; free coinage advocates as well as monometallists, protectionists, as well as tariff reformers, Mr. Cleveland trusted his "floaters" with the usual result. From the outcome it is probable that the Trust took no chances and made certain of the delivery of the goods before it paid the price. In no other respects do the bargains differ in essentials. One is every whit as bad as the other, whatever difference there may be in the character of the men concerned in them.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

Office-holders are the agents of the people, not their masters. * * * They have no right, as office-holders, to dictate the political action of their party associates or to throttle freedom of action within party lines by methods and practices which prevent every useful and justifiable purpose of party organization. The influence of the federal office-holders should not be felt in the manipulation of political primary meetings and nominating conventions.—From President Cleveland's order, July 14, 1886. Approved by Postmaster-General Wanamaker, April 25, 1890. Approved by Postmaster-General Bissell, July, 1894.

"I will protect you. The President can do nothing."—Gorman.

THE Vermont and Michigan post-masters attended recent democratic state conventions, despite Postmaster-General Bissell's order against offensive partisanship.

* * *

There were present at the meeting of the New York state democracy at the Cooper Institute three federal officeholders—Maurice J. Power, salary, $5,000; Deputy Collector Henry DeForrest Baldwin, salary, $3,500, and Chief Inspector of Immigration John J. Quinlan, who receives $8 per day.

* * *

The "Interstate Democratic Association" is made up to a considerable extent of officeholders, among them Josephus Daniels, chief clerk of the interior department, D. J. Murphy, deputy commissioner of pensions, and is taking on the familiar airs of the bread-and-butter brigade. A few evenings ago it made an assault upon the civil service commission, and incidentally upon the merit system as opposed to the spoils scramble. Its latest performance was to appoint a committee to wait upon Senators Brice, McPherson, Voorhees, Vest and Morgan, and inquire whether it is true, as reported, that they have been recommending the restoration of certain republicans dismissed from the government employment.

Congressman Whiting, of Michigan, who is a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor, and is making war on the Don M. Dickinson faction of the Michigan democracy, called on Mr. Roosevelt Tuesday. He called the latter's attention to the fact that the democratic postmaster of the suburb of Detroit, in which Mr. Dickinson lives, and who owes his appointment to the latter, had been elected a delegate to the democratic county convention. Mr. Whiting says that that there are a large number of Mr. Dickinson's proteges among the postmasters in Michigan who are making an active part in the campaign, and whose names appear in the lists of delegates.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, June 21.

One Shelley, an ex-member of congress from Alabama, took a room in this city a few weeks ago and began sending out political assessment circulars to Alabamians wherever they could be found in the departments. He reminded them that all their interests lay with the success of Col. Oates and against Kolb. One negro clerk in the war department who neglected to pay his assessment was removed soon afterwards, and insisted that the removal was for no other cause than his unwillingness to put money into the democratic campaign chest. The department sent out a prompt disclaimer, asserting that the clerk had been duly notified of the reasons for his dismissal, and that politics had nothing to do with them.

Some months ago the President, against the most vigorous protests of the best people of the District of Columbia, imported a black professional politician from Kansas and made him recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia. The popular protest was based upon the fact that the recordership is a local office, and that the democratic national convention which named Mr. Cleveland for the presidency had declared itself for home rule in the territories and District of Columbia, and inferentially bound its candidate to that policy. The effort to prevent the nomination of Taylor failed, and the senate, after a long wait, confirmed it; most of the republicans who knew Taylor voted for confirmation on the ground that his appointment would be a serious blow to the party which made it. The District people might have made better headway with their protest if they had dropped the home rule plea; with which the President evidently felt little sympathy, and looked up Taylor's record. They should have set about collecting testimony to show that Taylor was a common office beggar—what is known in the political vocabulary as a "bummer"—who had no claims to his place on any pretense of being a recognized representative of his race, and whose appointment would be sure, on personal grounds, if on no other, to bring discredit upon the administration.

This choice exotic from Kansas hardly gets rooted in his new place before he lays his plans for paying off to the democratic party obligation under which the party's leader has laid him. He accordingly heads a non-descript committee with the resonant title of "Advisory Board of the Afro American Bureau of Organization of the Democratic Congressional Committees" and joins in issuing a letter of which every negro who could be reached in any of the departments—clerk, messenger, or laborer—received a copy, and which invited them to a meeting. Among other things said: "It has been suggested that campaign committees be organized in the several divisions of the different departments which will act as a nucleus (sic) to the main organization." This call was not responded to and after a month Taylor and his associates sent another letter as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 28, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR—We sent you a letter some time ago from which we have had no reply. The congressional committee needs the immediate assistance of all its friends. You will therefore please call and see us immediately, either at the above address until 5:30 P. M., at the committee rooms, Wormley's Hotel, from 7 to 8 P. M., or at the headquarters of the national negro democratic league, No. 338 Indiana avenue, from 8 to 10 P. M.

Respectfully yours,

R. G. STILL, Chief.

Now here is as plain a "stand-and-deliver" threat as was ever put forth. It frightened many of the negroes to whom it came, and they have been inquiring of their friends what they can do. If they go where they are told to, and contribute their money, they have no assurance that the money will ever reach the real party managers. Among the respectable colored society of Washington Mr. Taylor is not held in high esteem, and a widely circulated story of his attempt to negotiate a note at a local bank managed by men of his race is not calculated to impress the dunned clerks and messengers with confidence.—Washington dispatch, New York Post, Aug. 6.

Seven members of the Maryland democratic state central committee are now in federal offices, and are holding their positions on the committee in practical defiance of President Cleveland's well-known policy, if not in express defiance of his orders. Among the number are Barnes Compton, chairman of the committee, naval officer; Buchanan Schley, surveyor of the port, and Dr. Frank T. Shaw, collector of customs. President Cleveland told Dr. Shaw some time ago that he had better resign from the committee.

It is known that Senator Gorman desires to continue his control of the committee and hopes to keep Barnes Compton at its helm. Should he resign, Col. Buchanan Schley, who is not a follower of Gorman, would have the appointment of Mr. Compton's successor in the chairmanship. The near approach of the time when the executive work of the fall campaign must begin has brought affairs to a crisis. It was stated to-day that Mr. Gorman had advised Mr. Compton not to resign, but to defy the President's well known wishes. The same advice was sent to other federal officials who happen to be members of the committee. Mr. Gorman is quoted as saying:

"You are now in office, you can't be removed except for good cause, and it is not good cause for removal that you are members of the committee; so hold on and I will protect you. The President can do nothing."—Baltimore dispatch, New York Times, August 9.

L. E. Lange, of Laurens, has bolted the endorsement of L. C. Baker, populist nominee for congress by democrats, and announces himself as a candidate. Lange is postmaster and publisher of a paper. As Baker's nomination was made regular by the democratic convention, of which Lange was chairman, and as Lange could have had the nomination by asking for it, democrats look upon his action as a decided case of offensive partisanship, and say they will "make it warm" for him if he shall persist in remaining a candidate.—Fort Dodge dispatch, New York Times, August 12.

The fight for the nomination of auditor still lies between Joseph T. Fanning and Joseph Reilly. Mr. Fanning has been the avowed candidate since Auditor Henderson announced that he would not make the race again. He is the chief deputy of the auditor of state at present and is without doubt one of the best qualified men in the state. Mr. Reilly is the chief clerk under Pension Agent Spencer and is the secretary of the state central committee.—Indianapolis Sentinel, August 14.

Down in the thirteenth ward John L. Shiltges, of the revenue service; Jacob Fox, a government inspector at Kingan's, and John L. F. Steeg, of the post-office, all of whose appointments are due to Bynum, went to capture the delegation for their patron. The manner in which they stole the delegation would have put the old twenty-fifth ward methods to shame. They had twenty men with them, but the antis had over sixty. The primary was held in a little tin shop in the north end of the ward, which is fifteen blocks long. The antis claim the Bynum men tried to steal the primary by holding it so far away from the homes of the democrats in the ward. Shiltges called the meeting to order. The Bynumites named P. J. Kelly for chairman and the opposition selected John H. Mahoney. The antis asked that a ballot be taken. Shiltges insisted on having a viva voce vote despite the protests.

"All that are in favor of Mr. Kelley," he shouted, "say aye."

There were about twenty voices in response.

"Mr. Kelley is elected," again shouted Shiltges, without even calling for a vote on the other candidate.

There was a loud and lusty howl at this almost unheard-of procedure, but Shiltges went right ahead dispatching business. He rushed through his slate and adjourned. Sixty-five of the democrats present signed a resolution denouncing the affair. They will carry their grievance before the convention to-day and if their delegation is not seated there will be sixty-five votes against the democratic candidate for congress in that ward on the next election day.—Indianapolis Journal, Aug. 14.

Voorhees's internal revenue collector, Joshua Jump, from Terre Haute, is looking after the senator's interests in the state democratic convention, now assembled at Indianapolis.

CONGRESSIONAL PATRONAGE IS THE GREATEST OBSTACLE TO EVERY REFORM.

The New York Post, of August 1st, has an interesting letter from its Washington correspondent, giving in detail the plan by which Assistant Commissioner Bowers, of the general land-office wanted to reform the public land service:

As it is now, a petition from the settlers on unsurveyed land goes first to the local surveyor-general. By him, when he has got around to it, it is approved and forwarded to the general land-office at Washington. Here, again, it goes to the bottom of the docket; but when it is reached it is passed upon, and, if approved, is sent back with the requisite orders to the surveyor-general, who then puts the work out by contract to the deputy surveyors. The survey occupies a short or a long time, according to the character of the country, the skill or the conscientiousness of the contractors, who, when it is finished, forward their plat to the surveyor-general, who sends it to Washington, where it is turned over to the special examiners of surveys in the land-office. If there seems to be any demand for it, one of these officers, or some other employe designated to assist them, visits the spot and examines the survey to test its accuracy. This examination necessarily costs a good deal. It may be as expensive as the original survey; for, although with the lines of a fair survey already run, the retracing of them is somewhat easier than the original work of laying them, yet all the same ground has to be gone over. If a dispute arises between the surveyor and the examiner, more time is consumed; and sometimes a case is carried into court, and tedious and costly litigation ensues, where the government has withheld the pay of a contractor, and he thinks he sees a chance to get it by a resort to legal process. These are only a part of the red-tape details, but they suffice to explain why, if the petitioners have good luck, they may obtain their perfected surveys in two years, but if not the matter may drag along three years or more. And the time and money wasted are only a part of the harm done by the present system, for the practice of contracting has so many hazardous ins and outs that the best class of surveyors do not go into it, and the government pays full prices for second and third-class work. The maps are imperfect, and they are so hastily got up that the features of the topographical descriptions are only guessed at. Nor are the subsequent examinations always an improvement; for in cases where the land-office is much pressed, a part of the work of examining has to be turned over to the surveyors-general, who hire for the purpose practical surveyors living in the neighborhood. As the same man who is a deputy surveyor this year is liable to be an examiner next year, or vice versa, a practice of log-rolling has sprung up among the second-class surveyors in the public-land states so that a survey made by one of the local contractors is rarely or never condemned by an examiner chosen from among the same set, and the government comes out of the job badly bitten on both sides.

Mr. Bowers's plan is to have all the work done by employes of the government attached to the geological survey, or under their direction, instead of by contractors. As a result, the settlers would be in possession of their survey within a year of the approval of the petition, thus saving from one to two years' delay and much uneasiness and suspense. On the other hand, the cost of the entire line survey and topographical survey together would not, according to the best estimates, be nearly so great as the cost of the present contract survey and examination, and the government would have two maps to show for its money instead of one.

But, as will be seen, one effect of the proposed new system would be to do away with the surveyor-general's offices, which are now, with their power of dispensing contracts, great strongholds of party patronage. And here was where the hitch came when Secretary Smith tried to induce congress to try the Bowers plan. The senate committee on public lands consists of Messrs. Berry, of Arkansas; Pasco, of Florida; Vilas, of Wisconsin; Martin, of Kansas, and McLaurin, of Mississippi, democrats; Allen, of Nebraska, populist, and Dolph, of Oregon; Pettigrew, of South Dakota; Carey, of Wyoming; Power, of Montana, and Dubois, of Idaho, republicans. The five republicans were induced to attend the committee meetings and Pasco and Martin on the democratic side; the rest felt no particular interest in the matter and staid away while the scheme for the new survey system was under discussion.

At the first suggestion of the amendment, Messrs. Dolph, Pettigrew, Carey and Power cried out in dismay that it must not be allowed to go upon the bill. "Why," they argued, "the contractors who have been in the habit of getting jobs from our surveyors-general would make an issue of it and fight our re-election!" So a little oil was poured upon the waters of their alarm by a further proviso:

That such additional employes as may be necessary for the execution of the public land surveys for the geological survey shall be residents of the state or territory wherein said surveys are executed.

Still they refused to be satisfied. It was one thing to let the surveyor general, a politician, pick the extra employes, but it would be quite another thing to let the director of the geological survey, a man of science, select them. The director would presumptively select bright, intelligent, educated men, making fitness for their work the only test, instead of using the "places" as political rewards or stimulents. No, they would have nothing of it.

It was urged upon them in argument that the land office was willing to take $75,000 for the coming year under the proposed new system, and make it do the work of $100,000 under the old system, with the probabilities favoring a surplus at the end of the year even then; it was pointed out that, at most, the arrangement proposed would be only experimental for the first year, and that, if they were not well pleased with the result, they could go back to the old system the next year.

No, they were too old birds to take any chances like that. They were evidently afraid that the new plan would work so well as to make a return to the old one impossible.

Ex-Postmaster J. M. Ickes, of Newark, O., was indicted and fined recently $400 for withholding campaign assessments from the salaries of clerks and carriers during the last Cleveland-Harrison campaign.

Arrangements are being made in the Agricultural Department for the approaching examinations of persons who want to be put on the register as eligibles for appointments as inspectors under the meat-inspection law. These places have been but recently put within the scope of the civil service law, and sixty inspectors now holding positions under the law will be compelled to pass an examination, showing their fitness for the positions they occupy.

Upon invitation of the Rev. Henry Ward, pastor of the East Presbyterian Church, the Buffalo letter-carriers and the clerks in the post-office attended in a body the services at that church to listen to a discourse on a subject near their hearts, "Civil Service Reform." A special programme, elaborate in character, had been prepared for the service, which proved exceptionally interesting to the large congregation that filled the church.

Secretary Carlisle has made public the following order: "The authority to nominate persons for appointment as keepers and assistant keepers of lights in the lighthouse service was taken from collectors of customs on June 6, 1894, by order of the secretary, and transferred to the Inspectors of the several lighthouse districts." Capt. Evans, naval secretary of the lighthouse board, says that this action takes the lighthouse service out of politics. All lighthouse inspectors are naval officers, and they will recommend only fit and proper persons for keepers and assistant keepers, regardless of political pressure.

WANTON REMOVALS.

George T. Buckingham, for four years a special agent of the United States treasury department connected with the New England agency and stationed at Boston, was removed by the treasury department to-day. His removal caused considerable surprise among the treasury officials in Boston, as he was considered one of the most efficient special agents in the service, having worked on about all the principal smuggling cases which have been prosecuted by the department in New England. His latest and most important case was that against Nelson J. Q. Ratte, who was arrested a short time ago on the charge of smuggling furs into the United States. The case is now pending in the United States District Court at Albany.—Boston dispatch, New York Times, June 25.

There promises to be some commotion here over the recent removal of Assistant Appraiser Cyrus A. Stevens at the port of New York, apparently to make room for Henry W. Hart. Mr. Stevens has been in the custom house some twenty years, and is represented by art connoisseurs as an expert in the department of jewelry, precious stones, books, bric-a-brac, tapestries, ceramics, and the fine arts generally, whom it would be difficult, if not impossible to replace on short notice. This department of the appraiser's office is one where a great deal of trickery is possible unless the assistant appraiser in charge understands his business thoroughly. Protests signed by leading importers, artists and art-dealers are understood to have been presented to Secretary Carlisle with a view to inducing him to reinstate Mr. Stevens.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, April 19.

"ASK SENATOR VORHEES."

There will be a shaking up at an early date among Indiana people who hold appointments in the government printing-office. There are ninety-five persons on the rolls credited to the state. About one-half of these were indorsed by Senator Voorhees.

The Indiana delegation in the house has not secured much patronage from Public-Printer Benedict. About a week ago they made a visit to the public printer, to ascertain why their requisitions for offices had not been honored. Congressmen Conn, Brown and Bretz recalled that they had not received a single appointment. Their call on Mr. Benedict resulted in their learning that Indiana had secured her full share of patronage. The natural inquiry was, "Where had the offices gone?" The answer came back, "Ask Senator Voorhees." The result was that the public printer prepared a list, showing the name of every Indiana appointment and his indorser, and sent it to each member of the delegation. The fact was brought out that Senator Voorhees had secured nearly every new appointment made by the present administration. It was found that a number of republicans also had been indorsed by him for retention. Naturally the democratic congressmen from Indiana showed some resentment at the showing, and called on Senator Voorhees at his committee-room, and demanded an accounting. One point they insisted upon was, the dismissal of Will M. Edmunds, who was recently appointed foreman of the second division, on Voorhees's recommendation. Edmunds claims Terre Haute as his home, but it is asserted that he is not only a republican, but has never voted in Indiana. He is a relative of ex Senator Edmunds, of Vermont. Senator Voorhees declined to consent to Edmunds's removal. It seems the latter's father was an old-time friend of the Indiana Senator, and at one time edited a democratic newspaper in Indiana. Senator Voorhees consented to the dismissal of a large number of others now holding office by his indorsement, and their exit will speedily follow.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, June 27.

THE MERIT SYSTEM UNDER TAMMANY.

FROM THE RECENT INVESTIGATION.

Morris Jacobs, the tailor applicant for appointment on the police force, whose testimony made a sensation on Friday, was recalled and repeated some of his testimony implicating Sergeant Ryan. He added that he was informed that a policeman named Keating had also been impersonated by "Dave" Brant before the civil service commissioners. John J. Ryan, Jacobs said, was a deputy street cleaning commissioner, and his principal business was "to get people out of trouble." Jacobs said he was not told that anybody would impersonate him before the civil service commissioners; all he was told was that his percentage would be got for him. Jacobs then told how after he failed to "get his percentage," an officer called at his store and requested him to go to police headquarters and see Supt. Byrnes. He did so, and the superintendent asked him why he did not go up before the civil service commissioners himself. Jacobs told him that it was because he had been informed by Hasbrouck and Dwyer that it would be no good to do so because if he passed the examination the clerks would give his percentage to some one else; that he could have passed the examination readily. Jacobs had a second interview with Supt. Byrnes and signed a statement containing the particulars. The superintendent told him that he wanted to get these scoundrels who had robbed him, Hasbrouck and Dwyer, dismissed. Before he went to see Supt. Byrnes "Danny" Ryan called at his (witness's) store, and told him he would be summoned to police headquarters; that Supt. Byrnes knew all about the matter and he had better tell the whole truth. Young Ryan admitted to him at the same time that Brant had also impersonated him before the civil service commissioners. Jacobs added that Supt. Byrnes knew of Sergt. Ryan's connection with the transaction. All the facts in the case were also laid before the police commissioners, but no one was prosecuted; all that was done was that Dwyer was dismissed and Hasbrouck resigned. "Danny" Ryan was subsequently appointed on the police force. The witness made a new application for appointment and went up himself before the civil service commissioners, obtaining a percentage of 87.50; that was a year after young Ryan was appointed, but although he was informed at the time he was before the commissioners that if he allowed the matter to rest for a while his previous experience would not be allowed to operate against him, he was not appointed.

Later he saw a Mr. Stapleton, who told him that John J. Ryan would get him appointed, but that it would cost him $300. He got a certified check for $300, and then saw P. J. Ryan, a brother of John J. Ryan, who told him that the way for him to do was to subscribe the money to certain of the party's clubs. Ryan told him of a meeting of a certain club one night and directed him to subscribe $50 to it that night, and $50 to another club. He went to the meeting of the first club and put down his certified check for $300 and received $250 in bills in change from John J. Ryan. The next day P. J. Ryan brought the check to him and said that his brother, John J. Ryan, wanted bills for it. He gave him bills for the check. He contributed to various clubs in this way, under John J. and P. J. Ryan's directions, and had given money in sums of $20 and $25 each to J. J. Ryan until he had paid out altogether between $1,400 and $1,500. When he complained to friends of not getting his appointment, Ryan said that he told him he should not go about complaining that Ryan had "turned him down"; that the reason he had not been appointed was that he had not been included in the first batch of eligibles; but that as soon as his name was sent before the police commissioners he (Ryan) would have him appointed.

An amusing part of the witness's testimony in this connection was an alleged statement that some men had been appointed by mistake of the clerks giving them the percentage obtained by other applicants. When the mistake was discovered the men who passed were appointed. Jacobs told Ryan he wished he would find a similar mistake in his case.

Jacobs said he saw Commissioner Sheehan recently, and Sheehan told him that the reason some men who had low percentages were appointed was that they were interceded for in time by some one having influence. Ryan, who was present at that interview, told Sheehan that he thought it would not do to appoint Jacobs then, because of the senate investigating committee, or otherwise he would have spoken to him (Sheehan) in his behalf. Sheehan said that if the lists had all been completed he would have been willing to appoint Jacobs. This interview took place in a private office, No. 156 Broadway, through the intervention of John J. Ryan. After telling about that interview, Jacobs said that last night Duffy, of boodle-alderman fame (called "Boodle Alderman Duffy" by the witness), sent for him, but he did not go.

The cross-examination of Jacobs was undertaken by Mr. Ransom, Mr. Nicoll aiding him; or attempting to do so, by laughing loudly at intervals at the witness's statements. Mr. Ransom attempted to break down Jacobs's testimony by making fun of him, by asking him questions and then interrupting him in the middle of his replies and demanding of him if he was telling the truth, or intended to do so, when those replies were fair answers to the questions. The chairman had no need, however, to protect the witness, as he proved abundantly able to do so himself. The contest between him and Mr. Ransom was most amusing, and the only difficulty the chairman had was in preserving order in the court room. Jacobs insisted on telling all the facts, and could not be diverted. The cross examination merely strengthened the evidence given on the direct examination.—New York Evening Post, June 12.

* * *

Charles W. Miller, a salesman for an electric house, said he had been an applicant for appointment on the force, and had made his application therefor through Police Commissioner McClave. He passed the civil service examination, obtaining a percentage of 81.40.

Mr. Goff—Did you pay any money for an appointment?

The witness—Yes, sir; $350.

Mr. Goff—To whom?

The witness—To the late Capt. Warts.

Continuing his evidence, after an objection by Mr. Nicoll that Warts was dead had been overruled, the witness said that Capt. Warts told him that it was necessary for any one who wished to get on the force to pay $350. Three weeks afterwards he paid that sum to Capt. Warts in bills, borrowing part of the money for that purpose from an uncle, Benjamin Pine, of East Williston, L. I. Capt. Warts declined to take a check. When he gave the money to Capt. Warts the captain told him that he would hold the money until he (the witness) got his shield, and then he would see that it went to the right party.

Mr. Miller said he had also seen George Richards, secretary for Police Commissioner McClave, at the time he got his application paper. Richards also told him that it would be necessary to put up $350 in order to get appointed on the force. In further conversation Richards told the witness that a man with only one lung could pass provided he put up the $350. Richards also explained to the witness the disposition of the $350. He said that $25 was retained by the man to whom the money was first paid, and also by the second man through whose hands it passed, $300 finally reaching the commissioners.

In further examination it appeared that the witness passed the necessary examination twice. The first time he did not put up any money, and his name did not reach the commissioner. Mr. Grant, who was Mr. McClave's private or principal secretary, told him that it would not be necessary to put up any money, as he had known Mr. McClave so long. Subsequently he learned from a man who said he came from police headquarters, and also Richards, that it would be necessary to make a new application and put up $350. This he did a year after passing the examination the first time. After passing the second time he received a notice from Lee Phillips, secretary of the civil service board, to go to police headquarters for an appointment. He went there and saw Commissioner McClave. The commissioner told him that he was sorry he could not appoint him as he had already appointed all his share, and had had to leave off about thirty of his friends. "Besides," said Mr. McClave, "you are a civil service man." The witness demurred at this and explained that he had applied to the civil service commission as directed to do so by Mr. Grant. Mr. McClave said that was all right, but he regretted that he could not appoint him, and the witness said he then left the room. As he left the office, however, an officer in uniform followed him out from the general suite of rooms in which Mr. McClave's room was situated and said to him:

"Do you want that appointment very bad?"

The witness said that he did, or he would not had taken the trouble he had to get it.

"Have you got $150 in your clothes?" asked the officer. The witness said that he had not.

"Can you get it to-day?" asked the officer.

"I don't know that I can," replied Miller, "and, besides, I do not care to pay $500 for it."

With that the witness said he left. The officer did not express any surprise at the witness's remark about $500, or his intimation that he had already put up $350.

Mr. Goff—Did you get any of your $350 back?

The Witness—Yes, sir; all of it. I got it back from Capt. Warts.

Mr. Goff—I am glad of that. Did the captain say anything to you when he gave back your money?

"Yes, sir."

"What was it?"

"That it was a damned shame that an American could not be appointed on the force when cripples and such like were appointed."—New York Evening Post, June 28.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WE print the following extract from a letter of a Philadelphia reader of the CHRONICLE:

"I read the CHRONICLE with much interest, and am glad that it takes so high and patriotic a stand in regard to the civil service of the government. I was especially pleased with the address upon 'Independence in Politics,' printed in the last number (July). I gave my copy to a friend. Will you please send me another, and if you can spare several, I should like to distribute them. * * I especially enjoyed Mr. Dewhurst's sermon in a previous number."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League will be held in Chicago, Wednesday and Thursday, October 17 and 18. The annual address will be delivered by Carl Schurz, at the Central Music Hall, corner of State and Randolph streets, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. The headquarters of the League will be at the rooms of the Commerce Club in the Auditorium Building during the two days; a luncheon will be served there each day. A joint meeting of the general and executive committees will be held Wednesday at 10:30 A. M. At 2:30 P. M. on Wednesday and Thursday meetings will be held in the Auditorium Recital Hall, where papers will be read by Charles J. Bonaparte, C. W. Walbridge, Charles B. Wilby, Herbert Welsh and Joseph Medill. At 7 P. M. Thursday there will be a dinner at the Union League Club. The Wednesday evening and both afternoon meetings will be open to the public.

This is the first time that the national organization has ever held a meeting in the west. It has been a favorite saying that this reform has no foothold here, and it is to be hoped that the number of representatives from this section present at the coming meeting will prove the falsity of that assertion. There are plenty of reformers in Indiana, for instance, who have made very little sacrifice for the cause. It is their duty now to go to the expense and trouble of attending this meeting. They will be so pleased with it that they will never miss another meeting. Every man who comes will be received and enrolled as a representative of his own community.

Since the above was in print, we have received notice from the secretary of the National League that the time of the meeting has been changed to the middle of November. The new date has not yet been determined upon.

WE have refrained from commenting upon the civil service rules adopted by the present Indianapolis city government for the reason that certain seeming loopholes were left in them when adopted, and we preferred to see what actual trial would bring forth. The rules provided for the appointment of a board to supervise their enforcement, and this board has been active and efficient in its duties. The scheme aroused the bitter enmity of a gang of party hangers-on, who are frenzied at the proposal to give out public employment by competition and merit, instead of by favoritism. In the interest of these a suit was brought to have the civil service board declared illegal. The city attorney, John E. Scott, defended the rules stoutly and the circuit court, Judge Edgar A. Brown, presiding, has decided that the civil service scheme set up by the city government is in all respects legal. The hungry spoils-men will try an appeal to the supreme court; but there is no reason to expect that they will fare any better there.

MR. JOHN H. HOLLIDAY, late editor and chief proprietor of the Indianapolis News, was, without his knowledge, nominated by the democratic convention of this county as a candidate for the legislature. In declining Mr. Holliday said:

"I am not a democrat nor am I a republican, but an independent voter, free to act with any party in support of any measure I favor. It is true that on the question of tariff reform I have acted with the democrats, and I have approved thoroughly of much of their state legislation, such as the election, tax and school-book laws, but I owe no allegiance to that party any more than I do to the republicans, and should it follow certain tendencies—one, for example, in support of what I consider unsound money—I should feel at perfect liberty to vote against it.

"I am a free-lance in politics—have been for over twenty years—and see no reason why I should not remain such as long as no supreme issue, such as the war involved, exists. It would be incongruous then for me to don a party badge."

This is the ground to be taken, as to party allegiance, by every man who wants to see better government in this country. Party organizations are not patriotic institutions. They are at present men banded together for the purpose of some kind of personal profit. If they put a good principle into a platform it is because they think it will help carry an election. They would, and do without hesitation, for the same object, put in bad principles. They are to be treated at arm's length. No voter should let them get a mortgage on him. They are to be used simply as instruments and to be given the victory according as it seems, for the time being, to promise most for the advancement of good government.

This will have to continue until all spoil is taken away, and no man can hope for any personal profit after election for work done before election. Multitudes of voters are more and more taking this position toward parties. Witness the Indianapolis city elections. Witness the elections of 1892, and witness also what will happen at the coming elections.

THE Methodist preachers in the La-Fayette conference met recently, and if reported correctly are in need of zealous ministrations of missionaries to keep them from relapsing into barbarism. One declared that the greatest political sin was to vote for a democrat and the next to that to vote the prohibition ticket; and another that the democratic party should be blown to hell with dynamite. Such partisanship from people claiming to be on the side of morality and decent government, makes them really more dangerous than the thugs of Gorman and Murphy. They are the stool-pigeons for any party machine, or any party act, and are oblivious of any and all corruption. Whenever Tammanyism or Quayism is in a life and death struggle with the forces that have never yet abandoned the hope and determination for a free government, these ministers, or their partisan likes, with the ample cloak of their respectable lives to cover all the foulness, begin to shout as they are bid, the false cries to distract public attention.

Such are now busy throwing up fortifications for Tammany. Mr. Parkhurst knows them. He recently said:

"It is to me an incessant burden and a galling, burning aggravation, the way in which men with intelligence, with a seeming appreciation of the meaning of personal liberty and free institutions, will allow themselves to be led about and tricked, coaxed, and brow-beaten by self-constituted managers, whose only qualifications for control are their shrewdness and their impudent audacity, and their only motives of action the promotion of their own ends.

The greatest political sin to-day is party partisanship, and we wish some one might devise a plan of convincing these Methodist brethren that they are really more to be dreaded than Tammany. But how can it be done? They will not read anything except of their kind; and deaf and blind, they bawl down any one disposed to enlighten them by oral argument.

EVERY few days we hear the assertion from some local or national spoilsman that party work must be paid for with offices, that party government would die out without patronage, that patronage is essential to maintain patriotism, that the merit system produces a life office-holding class, careless and inefficient, that the merit system produces bureaucracy, backward and full of officialism. Now Postmaster Dayton of New York, a Tammany democrat of the better type who has used his unclassified service for political purposes, may certainly be relied upon as not a prejudiced observer for the merit system. He has spent several weeks in a thorough examination of the postal service of London. To show how utterly divorced that service is from politics we quote as follows:

"It is hard for an American to realize how completely the notion of partisanship, offensive or defensive, has been eradicated from the civil service here. The postmaster-general is, of course, a politician, who retires with a change of administration. When he is an important public and party man, like Mr. Morley, he has a seat in the cabinet. But think of it! Out of the 125,000 men in the postal service of Great Britain, not to mention 16,000 women, he is positively the only individual whose tenure of place can be affected by any political change.

"I have devoted some time to investigating this particular question. I haven't found a case in which any of the others seem to have any sharp political opinions at all. Of course, they are perfectly free to hold party views, and I find some of my friends among them belonging to political clubs, equivalent to the Manhattan or Union League at home, but of aggressive partisanship I can't discover a trace. It isn't that they dissemble it; they simply don't feel it—don't know what it is."

Now everyone knows that nowhere on the face of the globe exists more vigorous party government than in England to-day, but if the Tammany postmaster is to be believed, it exists without patronage.

Again he says:

"They have here a much larger proportion of trained public servants in the executive and administrative sections of the imperial postal service who thoroughly know their business than we have."

And so employees who hold a position as long as they can do the work satisfactorily are better trained than under our spoils system.

Again he says:

"The officials were an earnest, accomplished, hard-working body of gentlemen without a sign of pretense or red-tape officialism about them. They were glad to give information, but they were just as eager to learn wherein our ways of doing things differed from theirs. Candidly I had not been prepared for either their excessive kindness to me personally, or the fine grasp of their work and its importance to all civilization, which they manifested."

And so the merit system is not a Chinese system after all!

THE political progress of Postmaster Dayton again calls to mind the question how much longer the country must pay for this kind of education. Here was a man who had been a lawyer and a member of Tammany Hall. This was the sum of him. He was ignorant of public administration, and yet he was put at the head of the greatest post-office in this country, and one of the greatest in the world. He sets out with a declared purpose of "taking care" of Tammany Hall. After a year and a half he goes abroad and comes home announcing the discovery that public business and party politics have no legitimate connection. That principle was in the platform upon which Dayton's party went into power, and made it possible for him to become postmaster of New York. And yet here he is just announcing his conversion to it. Thousands of men in the public service on the day he was appointed believed in that principle, and many of them had to boot a comparatively vast amount of technical knowledge and experience, and any of them would have made, the first day, a better postmaster than Dayton will make in four years.

SEVENTY-FIVE federal office-holders went from Washington to the Ashland district to help Congressman Breckinridge get a re-nomination. This fact brings to the front again in the most offensive manner the corrupt use of the public treasury by congressmen for their private ends which so generally prevails. In addition to the seventy-five from Washington practically all federal officers living in the Ashland district, amounting to hundreds, were for weeks working for this same Breckinridge. The majority of the people of his district did not want Breckinridge, to say nothing of the majority of his party. Yet a regiment of office-holders, paid by the country, have worked day and night to force him upon his district. They have to a man left their places of official duty to do this. In view of the removal of Postmaster Thompson, of this city, for having gone to a republican convention, it is pertinent to ask how many office-holders will President Cleveland remove for a like offense in the Ashland district? Not one. He could have stopped the activity of these hundreds of paid heelers by a word. How many words did he speak to stop it? Not one. Is it hypocrisy or is it not to remove an officer for "whooping up" a republican nomination and to stand dumb while a multitude of officers in plain sight are "whooping up" a democratic nomination? It is announced that about the middle of October the Indiana democratic office-holders in Washington will come home and "take off their coats" for the party. Let them come. For every vote made in this way ten will be lost. The bitter lessons of past years do not seem to have been sufficient. They will go on until those who live politically by preying upon the public service either die or are driven out of public life.

THE President's letter to Congressman Catchings is the last act of a struggle for a change in the tariff—a struggle in which he has been very much interested. We do not find fault because he was interested in that struggle. It was in line with the platform upon which he was elected and it was proper for him to further the declaration of the platform in every constitutional way, keeping in mind also the business interests of the country. But there was another promise of the platform which was just as explicit, which was just as binding upon him, which was of vastly greater importance, which it was in his power to keep, which depended upon him for its fulfillment, and which, the subject-matter being absolutely under his control, it was his first and highest duty to advance with all of his will, energy and power. This was the promise of civil service reform. He has not kept this promise nor has he displayed any interest in keeping it. Except where the law stood in his way he has allowed the federal service to be looted by congressmen. He has refused to profit by the bitterest experience. He has blindly pursued the same course and been bullied by the same buccaneer bosses that brought ruin to him and his party eight years ago, and that will bring ruin to him and his party now. When protest was made he impudently insulted the protestants in a public document. He now, in Catchings's letter, defines his position as follows:

"I love the principles of true democracy because they are founded in patriotism and upon justice and fairness toward all interests. I am proud of my party organization because it is conservatively sturdy and persistent in the enforcement of its principles."

Some of the renegade reformers who have sacrificed their principles for office or for social comfort and who have the ear of the President should advise him not to publish such statements. Judged by ordinary standards, his party organization is a great collection of political rascals. For years Tammany Hall has been in the main its ideal. For years it has caused the breakdown of the party promise to reform the civil service; it has been at the head of every movement to loot that service when its party was in power. If it had been "conservatively sturdy and persistent" in saying to Mr. Cleveland that the party's promises must be kept and that no offices must be turned over to congressmen the President's excusers would not now be urging that "he can not resist his party." Nothing is plainer than that if the democratic party is ever again to have and retain the confidence of the country it must have a party organization that is held together by something else than the hope and enjoyment of spoil. It must get rid not only of its Gormans and Brices but also of its Whitneys, Hoke Smiths and Carlises.

WITH reference to the coming appointment of a postmaster at Albany (N. Y.), Congressman Charles F. Tracy, of that district, says:

"Shortly after the President was first approached about the appointment, he told me that he would consult Senator Hill's wishes, as he believed that the senator should have a voice in the matter; therefore, I believe that Senator Hill will be perfectly satisfied with the selection that the President makes."

This may not be true. Nevertheless things as strange as that happen even with Cleveland. His administration has fostered the preying of congressmen upon the public service as much as any administration ever did; and no congressman is too mean or too corrupt to get his share. The only ones shut out are those who will not act as the President desires.

THE RECKONING.

Some voters, especially in Indiana, will be apt to take a very critical view of the democratic request for their votes this year. That party has been nearly two years in making its bed, and now, of course, it must lie upon it. Of its effort upon the tariff it is sufficient to say that the President would not sign its bill. Looking up from a reading of the sweeping promise of the party platform for civil service reform, there comes in view a looted service except where the law has acted as a drag. For a year, the President and his cabinet and the party congressmen were busy day and night dividing spoil. The Gormans and the Voorheeses of the party were given seats at the table far above the salt, although their Tammany political morals were well known. Congressmen have been allowed to divide fourth-class postmasterships among their watch-dogs at the rate of 30,000 a year. The consular service was turned over as spoil under circumstances of the basest treachery, and the President participated while the secretary of state looked calmly on. Patronage has been given to influence votes in congress, and this makes the blackest spot that has ever appeared on any administration. A great contribution to a campaign fund has been recognized as proper to be rewarded with office. The Indian service has been put under the control of spoilsmen. The Carlises, father and son, have fought civil service reform with rare and reckless impudence and bad faith; and the father, the secretary of the treasury, with his sugar-trust connection added to this, is still retained by President Cleveland, while the son still pursues his work of driving the best employes out of their places, "no matter what the mugwumps say." Indiana also, as eight years ago, has been completely turned over to the Voorhees element, although that element is known everywhere to represent the lowest political level. It made a distillery attorney collector of internal revenue, and gave us the Donham post-office case in Terre Haute and the Rockhill case in Fort Wayne. Not a single Indiana democratic congressman has attempted to stem the carnival of spoil, but to a man they have helped it on in every possible way. Some of them tried to cripple the law which is the only bulwark against them.

Voters here and throughout the country are likely to be influenced by these matters, and are likely to make their votes weigh accordingly. Extensive changes will occur; among others the people of this district seem about to rid themselves of a thorough demagogue in Congressman Bynum.

HUMBUG PENSION REFORM.

At the beginning of the present administration the THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE did what it could to secure a just and business-like treatment of the pension question. It maintained that the fraudulent condition of the pension list was due to the corrupt influence of congressmen over the pension examining boards and other pension officers "named" by them; that there would be no pension reform unless all influence of congressmen over these boards and officers was absolutely destroyed; that the only business way to find out frauds in the pension list was to begin a system of re-examinations before boards as independent as boards of army and navy officers are, and that the justice and propriety of such a system the ex-soldiers would be the first to recognize and applaud. These matters were in other ways very particularly brought to the personal attention of President Cleveland. However little might be done, this was the true course to follow.

No greater unfitness for government was ever shown than has been shown by this administration in its course actually pursued in the pension bureau. The former pension boards were swept out and congressmen filled up the places with their heelers who are now quartered upon the country to the tune of $1,700,000 a year. The same influence of the congressmen remains. These boards have the confidence of nobody; they are viewed with contempt. Along with this sweep of the boards the administration began sending notices to pensioners that their pensions were stopped. Even a rascally pensioner is entitled to a hearing. But many names thus dropped were restored again, thus showing that either the corrupt influence of congressmen was getting in its work or else the administration had made inexcusable blunders and had unnecessarily caused many families the greatest pain and anxiety; probably both were true.

In this manner was produced an impression of insolent arbitrariness, unfairness and favoritism which led to an exasperation beyond anything which has been seen before in connection with pensions. Frightened congressmen, true to their cowardly instincts, attempted to set the matter right—not by advising a business course of dealing, but by declaring a pension a vested right. And now the attempt is being made by the administration, not to show how much reform has been accomplished, but how little. It is given out with a great flourish that the pension agent at Indianapolis, upon demand from the pension bureau at Washington, has sent forward the report that only 82 names have been dropped from the Indiana pension roll, while 3,902 names have been added. Meanwhile the "old soldier" is not placated but is waiting for election day, with a grimness never witnessed before. Humbug pension reformers are likely to reap their reward. The administration can not expect to be regarded as sincere when it deliberately divides $1,700,000 worth of annual spoil among congressmen and thus shuts the door to any possible reform and then under the guise of reform flounders about like a bull in a china shop, reckless of right or wrong, and with a result which commands nobody's confidence, and which it is now attempting to hide.

A WANTON REMOVAL.

The New York Tribune says: The Hon. David A. Wells has an opportunity before him to attest the sincerity of his professions of devotion to civil service reform and at the same time render his neighbors and townsmen a useful service. The term of office of the postmaster of Norwich, Conn., where Mr. Wells resides, has expired, and no appointment has yet been made. There are two democratic applicants for the office, neither of whom has the slightest claim except that of party service, nor any knowledge of the duties except what could be gained by looking through the window at the sorting of mails. The present postmaster has held the position for four years, receiving it by promotion, having been a clerk for many years and assistant postmaster during Mr. Cleveland's former administration, serving under a democrat who was appointed upon Mr. Wells's recommendation. Through all the years of his service Mr. Caruthers, the present incumbent, has discharged the duties of the several positions he has filled to the entire satisfaction of the community, and under his administration during the last four years the office has attained the distinction of being among the two or three having the highest record for efficiency. There is no word of complaint against him, nor is there any desire for a change except for political reasons.

Mr. Wells is, as is well known, a distinguished advocate of what is called revenue reform. He has made a specialty of the study of economic questions for many years, and is looked up to as possibly the highest authority in this country on the subject of the tariff by the theorists who are now in power and endeavoring to put their theories into practical operation. But he has, also, like most of the revenue reformers who left the republican party because of differences on the tariff question, professed equal devotion to the reform of the civil service, and especially to that feature of the reform which is in opposition to the prostitution of public office to partisan purposes.

It is generally understood and no doubt true, that he has the appointment now, as he had eight years ago, absolutely within his gift. He can demonstrate the sincerity of his professions or he can show the hollowness of the pretense that public office is a public trust.

Postmaster Caruthers has, if any other than his successful official record is needed, a most creditable record as a soldier, having served through the war and bearing now the scars of honorable wounds received in the service. It is difficult to believe that Mr. Wells can long hesitate as to his duty, but the last reports from the post-office department were to the effect that the appointment awaited his action and he had not yet made his choice.

The whole story of the final removal of Mr. Caruthers is an ugly one, and discouraging in more ways than the part played in it by David A. Wells. When such things were done under the Harrison administration they were recited from one end of the country to another by all the independent civil service reform papers, and there was no glozing over in the relation of the contemptible part played by any pseudo reformer. But this case received no exposure from the independent reform press that we are aware of, and it has been a matter of difficulty to get details of the facts. It is only another of the many moral sacrifices made by certain reformers in the hope of tariff reform.

It is a matter of open notoriety in Washington that David A. Wells, of Norwich, Conn., a defeated candidate for congress, had control of the patronage of his district, and that with one exception he was more persistent in his demands for patronage than any other man in or out of congress, and that "he has handled the post-offices in his district in a way that would have delighted the hearts of Senators Murphy and Hill." Why has Mr. Wells, a professor of reform, been allowed to conduct himself as a common spoilsman, and not paid the penalty of public exposure and criticism? Have we forgotten how we pilloried the hypocrisy of Mr. Wanamaker?

It was understood by the friends of Mr. Caruthers, the postmaster at Norwich, that his fate depended upon Mr. Wells, and the appeal was made to him to consider the services of an efficient man, an old soldier, and the public interests of the city, and the wish of the people irrespective of party, and retain this employe. It was the understanding given by Mr. Wells that the postmaster would not be disturbed and it is now the impression of his townspeople that Mr. Wells played fast and loose with them, and indorsed the appointment of the present incumbent, and that the files of the department will show this to be a fact. Mr. Wells insists that he had nothing to do with the appointment. If it is true that Mr. Wells has played the rôle of duplicity and lying usual to congressmen who distribute patronage, it is doubtless one of the necessary compromises from his point of view exacted of him in his struggle for tariff reform; and, of course, while it must be an odious and disagreeable rôle, it is no worse, morally, than selling or exchanging patronage for legislation.

Of Mr. Caruthers we quote from a private letter:

We thus lose the services of the best postmaster Norwich has had in thirty years, in my judgment, and an absolutely green hand put in.

Looked at from more than one point of view, it is one of the saddest cases that I have known of flagrant violation of the spirit of civil service reform. I have known its history but it would make too long a letter. Mr. Caruthers, who, since he was eighteen years old, has given nearly all his life to the service of his country, who was wounded four times defending its flag, who rose by sheer merit from an humble position in the post-office to the postmastership, now finds himself adrift with a large family dependent on him, poor, and almost broken-hearted.

In the effort of the CHRONICLE to get further details of this wanton removal and which, we freely admit, were much more desired after reading that the son of Mr. Wells had received an important consular appointment, one correspondent declined, saying: "If any good could be done by going into details at this time, the case would be somewhat different, but as the deed is done beyond recall, the only thing to do is to try to be patient and work for better things." This view stands most in the way of stopping such things. Mr. Wells has done certain acts contrary to good morals, humanity, good government and his professions. He should taste the bitter fruit of publicity. We must not flinch because he has been our friend and co-worker, because he has had an honorable past and an unsullied reputation. Publicity will not give Mr. Caruthers his place again but the recital of his case will serve to keep some other worthy employe from being mercilessly turned adrift in the manipulation of patronage, and will put David A. Wells where he clearly belongs—in the same category with the Carlises, Quincy, Voorhees and the rest.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE LARGEST CITY IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1894.

A would-be Tammany mediator was sadly deceived to-day in the Yorkville Police Court and roundly scored by Justice Taintor. An insignificant discussion was in progress between Helen Daniels and Ellen Smith, each of whom accused the other of kidnaping a child, and neither of whom would be satisfied unless the other were locked up. At this juncture, just as Justice Taintor was about to dismiss the case, a stout man came rushing into the court-room, and up the bridge, unaware, evidently, that he was about to address a republican official.

"About this case, judge," he puffed, as he tried to lean over the desk in the customary confidential manner, "one of those women wants to be held and punished. I'm a Tammany man, name's John J. Ward, belong to the Tammany organization in the seventeenth assembly district. I was sent over here to tell you the true in'ards of this case. I'm one of the boys, you know!"

"Young man," shouted Justice Taintor, as he glared at the red-faced Tammany man angrily, "you get right straight down off this bridge, and out of court! I don't care where you're from or who you are. You get out, and get out quickly!"

Then the judge ordered one of the court officers to see that the member of the "organization of the seventeenth assembly district" did not loiter by the way, and quietly dismissed the case before him.—New York Evening Post August 13.

One of the wretched victims of last night's police raid in the Five Points district, a woman, was arraigned in the Tombs Police Court to-day before Justice Bernard F. Martin. She had been taken from her own room in a crowded tenement-house, and was arraigned on a charge of disorderly conduct by Perkins, a sixth precinct ward man, who said that he found the woman lying in bed in her own room.

"Didn't she have a right to do so in her own room, where she had been living with her husband for six years?" demanded the police-court lawyer who had "taken up" her case.

"Oh, but she was only partly dressed," explained the ward-man, "and I could see her when the door was open."

"People have no right to run about in houses without their clothes on," remarked Justice Martin, as he bent over his slips of commitment blanks pen in hand. The ward-man cast a triumphant glance at the woman, who leaned up against the bar wringing her hands.

"It ain't true, judge," she said, "and if you would only bring my husband ——" But his honor was not listening to her. His colleague, Justice Joseph Koch, had entered and amiably slapped him on the back, receiving the cordial greeting, "Hello, judge!" in reply. "Now what do you want?" added Justice Martin jovially, as with the poised pen still in his hand, he turned away from the prisoner. The lively conversation that followed, interspersed as it was with many smiles and ejaculations of good humor, was for the most part inaudible. Finally, the justice on the bench summoned one of his clerks and said: "Where did I sit on Wednesday, anyhow?" When the required information was given, Justice Martin said: "Now, I want that to be clearly understood," and Judge Koch, rising, answered, "All right. I am glad to know how that stands. Much obliged, judge." With that he departed. Turning round once more, Justice Martin beheld with mild astonishment his prisoner still wringing her hands before him.

"How about this, judge, er sergeant, er officer—oh, no—Counsellor Reilly?" he stammered. The lawyer repeated what he had said, that to lie abed at home was not disorderly conduct.

"Why, certainly not," said the justice, now thoroughly good-humored, and beaming upon the ward-man he added: "Really Officer Perkins, we are all apt to lie about in our rooms without many clothes on, sometimes."

Instead of a commitment paper a discharge blank was then hastily filled out, and the half-fainting woman prisoner was released.—New York Evening Post, August 27th.

POLITICAL OBJECT LESSONS.

"The republican clean sweep at the Vermont election is a fine object lesson of the powerlessness of party spoils of office to affect election results even to the slightest degree. There has been little scruple in giving the old democratic Green Mountain war-horses every available scrap of patronage there to build up their forlorn-hope battalion of voters. But it is proved in this election that, with a democratic administration to help the Vermont democracy by turning out all the republican office-holders who can be turned out, Vermont is more republican than almost ever before."—Boston Transcript.

One element in the overwhelming democratic defeat in Maine ought not to be overlooked. This is the dissatisfaction and even disgust in the party caused by the distribution of the spoils since Mr. Cleveland began handing over the offices a year and a half ago. The business of apportioning the spoils has been in the hands of a ring known as "the Plum Trust," and the Lewiston Journal, Congressman Dingley's newspaper, says that it has "no doubt that the dispensation of the Plum Trust lost several thousand votes for the Maine democracy."—New York Evening Post, September 14.

The large number of recent changes in the war department has afforded an opportunity to compare the work of the men appointed under the merit system with that of those appointed without examination. Of the 6,600 employees in the departments in Washington subject to examination, 4,000 entered under the merit system; but for purposes of comparison it may be allowed that the employees in the war department are evenly divided between the merit and patronage system. It is found in the record and pension office that, taken at random, out of 56 promotions 52 were of the new men and only 4 of the old men. Sixty of the men removed were appointed under the civil service rules and 91 without examination. In the other bureaus 19 removals were of men under the new system and 75 under the old. Four of the new men were reduced and 75 of the old. Of the two classes, those appointed through competitive examination solely with regard to their merit were likely to have the least influence or inclination to press upon the department their promotion or retention in service.

In the railway mail service the showing in the falling off in changes, due to the satisfactory character of the men appointed under the civil service rules, is worthy of note. This service affords the surest test of the workings of the merit system. In the last twelve of the fourteen months ending June 30, 1890, there were 1,400 appointments, whereas in the year last past there were only 718 appointments, and this notwithstanding the fact that the service has grown 20 per cent. since 1890. This diminution has been gradual year by year. In the force of 600 substitutes last year there were only twenty removals.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, August 26.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

"Base service was to plough the lord's land, to make his hedge or carry out his dung."—Blackstone.

Many of the clerks in the United States pension office attended the democratic convention, as Pension Agent Spencer issued a general leave of absence to all who cared to attend.—Indianapolis News, Aug. 15.

Wonder if Postmaster Brodie will be reported to Washington for attending the democratic state convention, by the same parties who reported Postmaster Moroney, of Chesterton, for attending the Hammond convention and voting for Zimmerman. Chesterton Tribune.

Adam S. Ebert, postmaster of Hammond, was elected vice-president from the tenth district at the recent democratic state convention, and he accepted.—Winamac [Ind.], Democrat-Journal, August 25.

When you say Cooper is the choice of a convention you talk about something of which you are ignorant. I was here and know how the delegate from the state farm was chosen. So do the rest of the Plainfield democrats. Holton, the postmaster here, sent invitations out on the sly and called the meeting at his house. One farmer, knowing I was district committeeman, brought an invitation he had received to me to know what it meant, and at Holton's home, on the sly, the state farm gang appointed one of themselves as a delegate to nominate Cooper, and Holton, the postmaster, attended that same convention.

Possibly you have heard how the convention that nominated Cooper was run; possibly you read some of the democratic newspaper comments on it—well, I did.

Postmaster Thompson, of Indianapolis, was removed from office for attending the Minneapolis convention.—From Thomas S. Pollard's letter to Indianapolis Sentinel, August 21.

John Hennessy, who is generally sergeant-at-arms at democratic conventions here, is somewhat confused as to the manner in which civil service rules are made to apply in some cases, and the manner in which they do not apply in other cases. "Some time before the state convention came on," said Mr. Hennessy, "I looked around to find men to act as ushers. There was no money in it and I thought it would be no more than right that men holding government positions, to whom loss of time would cost nothing, could serve. Among others I called on Austin H. Brown, in the office of collector of customs, and asked if there were not two or three men there who could be spared. What did Mr. Brown do but draw a printed list of civil service rules showing it could not be done. I went away satisfied, but what was my astonishment when the congressional convention came along to see Mr. Brown himself pop up in that convention as chairman of the committee on resolutions. It's queer, don't you see, how these rules fail to operate in some cases."—Indianapolis News, August 22.

Sanford Grayson, Holman's postmaster at West Point, and others were appointed to prepare resolutions. * * The Holman concern is a close corporation. Men of the rank and file who have grown gray voting for Holman will be expected to continue their disinterested services in the future for the office-holding class in the party that has been nurtured and educated into a power that defies the ordinary kicker.

The solemn protest of thousands of democrats weary of the Holman oligarchy against the renomination of the old objector was treated with the same contempt in the convention that it got among the clique in private. Is it indeed true, we ask, if free-born American citizens can or do by long subserviency to party aims and objects absolutely lose all power of individual thought and action and become putty in the hands of bosses, to be molded and used as plastic stuff for base and selfish ends?—Brookville American, August 30.

He (Congressman McNagney) has dealt dishonestly with the party in nearly every locality, and in a number of cases has squarely lied to and insulted the best men in the party. Why he did these things in this way is difficult to tell. But a man who deals thus falsely with those who have honored him can not be retired too soon.—Auburn Courier.

[Editor Barns, of Auburn, has been keeping up a fire on McNagney on account of the outcome of the post-office fight at Auburn.]

Ex-Governor Wilson, democratic candidate for the United States senate to succeed Camden, spoke here last evening. After Wilson had finished United States Marshal Vinson, who is a strong Camden man, attempted to address the crowd. There was hooting and yelling, and one of Vinson's deputies fired a revolver. The firing then became general, three of the deputies joining in it, and it is charged, but denied, that Vinson fired several shots. Vinson and his men jumped on their horses and fled. William Frygel, one of the Wilson supporters, was shot dead. Three other men were seriously wounded. There is intense indignation over the matter. It is alleged that United States Marshal Vinson himself fired the shot that killed Frygel. A posse is after Vinson and all his deputies, with warrants charging them with murder. Vinson's friends claim that he is insane.—Wayne, W. Va., dispatch New York Times, September 5.

The democratic convention of Mahoning county, O., on Saturday adopted the following resolution, in spite of the fact that the Brice delegates, among whom were several federal office-holders, fought hard to shelve it.

[The resolution denounces Brice for his betrayal of a public trust.]

—New York Evening Post, Sept. 17.

In the state convention Mr. Brice's henchmen were successful.

The Albany Journal, whose faction has been beaten in the county fight, is sore because the delegates from Albany county are Roberts men. It charges that the patronage of the comptroller's office was used to bring about the result. The Journal, however, has no rebuke for John Palmer, the secretary of state, who fought by his side in the Albany primaries and against his colleague, Comptroller Roberts.—Buffalo Express, Sept. 3.

Pursuant to the request of President Cleveland, Dr. Frank T. Shaw, collector of customs at this port, will on Monday hand in his resignation as chairman of the Carroll county democratic committee, and Deputy Collector Diffenbaugh will also resign as secretary of the same committee. These resignations will be made in accordance with the wishes of President Cleveland, who is opposed to federal officials holding posts in partisan committees and taking active part in the management of political affairs. It was in consequence of this policy of the President that Naval Officer Barnes Compton resigned as chairman of the democratic state committee several days ago. Other federal officials will resign from the various political organizations to which they belong at the first meeting of the respective bodies.—Baltimore dispatch New York Times, August 30.

Mr. Gorman gets a certain number of his tools into federal office through the weakness or good nature of the President, and at the first opportunity, in spite of the President's explicit orders to the contrary, and notwithstanding that they have been forced to resign their official places on the working committees of the machine, these office-holders work party conventions in the selfish interest of Senator Gorman, their patron.—Baltimore News.

Gorman and his lieutenant, Rasin, who recently made a profession of throwing off the Gorman yoke, understand each other perfectly, and are working together in managing the congressional conventions that are being held in Maryland. One of the best informed politicians in the state tells the News: "The people are getting the resolutions, the politicians are getting the nominees, and the old game is going on with its pristine strength and vigor. When the election is over, Gorman and Rasin will have the substantial end of the business in their control, because they boss the fellows who hold down the offices. The people will have the rope of sand in the shape of a lot of empty resolutions."—Baltimore News, about September 9.

The Madison county democrats held their county convention at Morrisville to-day. Yesterday there was one of the bitterest fights ever made to secure control of the delegates from the town of Lenox, the fight for the state organization being led by ex-sheriff Charles E. Remick and that for the administration by Richard M. Baker, recently appointed postmaster there. It was won by the Hill people, and Postmaster-elect Baker led a bolt from the town convention. At the county convention to-day he was present and attempted to get delegates favorable to the federal administration, but was defeated, and a strong Hill delegation was chosen.

The real contest was on the county committee and county organization. Luke McHenry, Hill's right-hand man in this county, was a candidate for re-election as chairman, but was defeated by P. J. Kennedy, of Oneida. Kennedy was made county committeeman yesterday on the strength of his pledge to support McHenry for chairman. Postmaster-elect Baker succeeded in getting him to enter as a candidate for that position, rallied the post-office strength to his support, and after several ballots he was named. Kennedy has always heretofore been a strong Hill democrat, but in the fight yesterday he was with those who left the town convention. What his attitude toward the state machine will be is rendered doubtful. It is a bitter disappointment to the Hill followers, who have lost control of the county organization.—Oneida, N. Y., dispatch, New York Times, September 19.

T. D. Studebaker, of the Times, postmaster at McGregor, Ia.

Alfred L. Holman, the editor and publisher of the Springville Local News has been appointed assistant cashier in the Buffalo post-office by Postmaster Baker. During the last campaign he was a strong advocate of home rule and was a delegate to the anti-snap convention at Syracuse.—Springville dispatch, Buffalo Express, August 17.

PUNISHMENT FOR SERVICE REFUSED.

Another upon whom the administration has declared war is Brice, of Ohio, and the nomination of Robert B. Palmer to be postmaster at Washington Court-House, which was made on Thursday, is regarded as the first gun of the administration in the contest. Palmer was the stenographer of ex-Governor Campbell and was urged by the latter for this appointment. Senator Brice indorsed the application of Michael Haggerty, and, in consequence, a deadlock ensued. Senator Brice gave notice that if Palmer was appointed that he should not be confirmed, and for this reason it is believed the President delayed making this appointment until after congress adjourned in order that the appointee might take hold of the office at once. Senator Brice will undoubtedly pool issues with the other anti-administration senators to secure the rejection of Palmer.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, September 3.

Before leaving this morning, the President made some appointments which are especially significant in that they reveal beyond dispute that from now he will dispose of the patronage at his disposal in rewarding his friends, and punishing those who will not bow the knee to his mandates. All the New York postmasters and the collector of internal revenue for the first New York district, whom Senator Hill would not permit to be confirmed, were given recess appointments and will now take charge.

But one of the most significant appointments to-day was that of Milton Welsh to be collector at Kansas City. About a year ago the Missouri delegates in both houses, with the exception of Mr. Cobb, of St. Louis, resolutely refused to favor the bill for the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law. As punishment the President shortly afterward filled all the federal offices in Missouri, and Mr. Cobb was the only one recognized. For surveyor at Kansas City, Senators Cockrell and Vest and Representative Tarsney were ignored, and the place given to Scott Harrison, the democratic brother of ex-President Harrison. At the instance of the two Senators, Mr. Harrison was rejected by the senate, and the fight was reopened. The senators reindorsed their candidate but Mr. Tarsney became a cuckoo and was one of the two house democrats to denounce in the house the senate tariff bill. Having thus earned his reward, Mr. Tarsney was chaperoned to the White House by William L. Wilson, and the reconciliation was effected. To-day Mr. Tarsney's candidate, Mr. Welsh, was appointed, and the senators again ignored.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, Aug. 29.

Public Printer Benedict discharged about three hundred employes from the government printing office to-day who had been appointed on the recommendation of Senator Gorman. These men were let out, it is said, on an order from the White House, and it is an incident of the war waging between the President and Senator Gorman, growing out of the tariff fight. Gorman, as chairman of the senate printing committee, has been dominating the public printing office. He was only a minority member of the committee under the Harrison administration, but controlled nearly two hundred appointments even then. As chairman of the committee under the democratic senate he has been an autocrat. He refused to allow Benedict's nominations to be confirmed until the latter had made him certain promises about patronage. President Cleveland has given orders to the public printer recently to cut off some of Gorman's unlimited privileges.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, Sept. 4.

Senator Gibson, of Maryland, has received a decided setback. President Cleveland has appointed J. W. W. Woodford postmaster of Centerville, Md., and he will to-morrow receive notification of his appointment. Centerville is Senator Gibson's native town. He has a brother now living there. His father owned a fine estate on its suburbs. Mr. Gibson recommended for the place John R. Emory, his brother-in-law, who, during President Cleveland's former term, held a position in the Baltimore custom-house, and who is now a clerk in the District building in this city. The junior senator from Maryland was deaf to all appeals from his friends in Queen Anne's county not to recommend Mr. Emory for the position. He insisted, however, that he should have it and left no stone unturned to carry out his determination. He frankly informed a delegation from Centerville, which recently called upon him at the senate in the interest of Mr.

Woodford, that his brother-in-law should have the appointment if he could secure it for him. He paid several visits to the post-office department and urged upon Postmaster-General Bissell the immediate appointment of Mr. Emory. All papers bearing on the case were sent to President Cleveland a month ago, and at one time it seemed as though Mr. Emory's appointment was a foregone conclusion. The papers, however, were returned to the post-office department, and there they rested until yesterday, when President Cleveland selected Mr. Woodford.—Baltimore Sun, Aug. 30.

THE KING AND THE BARONS.

Edward Grosse, appointed by the President on March 9 to be collector of internal revenue for the third district and who has been held up by Senators Murphy and Hill until now, was permitted to occupy the office for which he was selected. There does not appear to have been any good reason why he should not have been confirmed before. From all that can be learned, it was the presumptuous opinion of the senators from the Empire State that the men who secured his appointment were not really anxious to have him confirmed. Joseph R. Jewell nominated June 12 to be Indian agent, New York agency, was also confirmed. In this case, too, there was no real objection to the man except that he had not been nominated at the suggestion of either of the senators. A third confirmation was that of John D. Brennan to be postmaster at Medina. He was nominated December 7, 1893. There is reason enough, in the estimation of the senior senator, for delaying this confirmation. Brennan, it seems, is a resident of the town in which James Hanlon, who is an active democrat, but not quite satisfactory to the Hill men, happens to live. Brennan is employed by Hanlon, and that seems to have been the extent of his offending.—Washington dispatch New York Times August 24.

The New York Sun remarks that the appointment by President Cleveland of John H. McCarty to be United States marshal for the southern district of New York is, in its significant relation to municipal politics, the most important act of the present national administration. Closely following the appointment and confirmation of John A. Sullivan as internal revenue collector in the second district, and coupled with the nomination of J. C. McGuire, an organization man, as surveyor, says the Sun, it clinches the conviction in the mind of every New York politician that the influence of the administration, through patronage, will be cast with, and not against, Tammany Hall's municipal ticket at this year's election.—Buffalo Express July 12.

James F. Connelly, the candidate of Senator Smith for the collectorship of internal revenue for the northern district of New Jersey, the office of which is at Newark, filed his formal application for appointment at the treasury department to-day. This is another move in the Smith-McPherson fight for the New Jersey federal patronage. Major Klotz, of Newark, Senator McPherson's trusted political henchman, is the candidate of the senior senator. The delay in the filing of Mr. Connelly's application, which is elaborately indorsed, is believed to be due to a scheme of the Smith contingent to get the appointment during Senator McPherson's absence in Europe.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, September 6.

* * *

In the July CHRONICLE were the details of the appointment by the President of Col. Parker as district attorney on the supposition that Senator McPherson's letter of indorsement was a senatorial command and the President's subsequent withdrawal of Col. Parker's name upon a further senatorial command. He has since appointed Boss Miles Ross's man. Senator McPherson needs the support of Ross in his contest for re-election and so farms out his patronage. We quote from the New York Evening Post of July 30 concerning the man to whom the President gave the office:

"Mr. Beekman's standing as a lawyer is not high, and his manner in court is not dignified. He was a member of the assembly for two years, in 1892 and 1893, but made no marks there, and when the notorious race-track bill of 1893 was put through, his name was found among the list of the five who are marked 'Absent and not voting.'"

* * *

It will be remembered that the President reserved the places of postmaster and district attorney and gave Gorman the rest. Of the President's appointment to the district attorneyship, the Baltimore American (Rep.) says:

"Mr. Marbury is able and he is capable. He stands well in the community, and he is full of wit and substance. The people will admire him and the law-breakers will fear him."

We do not think it was greediness for all the patronage that impelled Gorman to "hang up" Mr. Marbury's appointment; but Senator Gorman's machine has a large element of the criminal class, and the senator's past history shows how very inconvenient he will find a prosecuting attorney of Mr. Marbury's stamp. In justice to his henchmen he could not consent to the appointment. But the President seems firm and has reappointed Mr. Marbury.

* * *

The Gorman democrats of this city and state are far from happy. Their attachment to the senior senator has consisted very largely in their confidence in his power to command patronage. The faithful have depended upon it, and the party generally has looked to it for strength. Senator Gorman's opposition to the President has not only apparently closed the door upon future favors in all the departments, but Maryland congressmen who are attached to Gorman have found that their ability to get places is constantly growing weaker, and they are viewing the prospect with considerable alarm.

On the top of it comes the action of the independent democrat whom President Cleveland made postmaster of this city—S. Davies Warfield. The patronage of the post office is the most important of all the federal offices, and the regulars have made extraordinary efforts to get Postmaster Warfield into line. Their failure amounts to a catastrophe. Not only has the new postmaster selected independent democrats and men of capacity and fitness rather than of political experience, but he gave the crushing blow by refusing to manipulate the civil service list and by appointing ten republican letter carriers because there were ten vacancies and the republican names headed the list. It is the first time that such a thing has ever been done in Baltimore. Postmaster Warfield says he will obey the letter as well as the spirit of the civil service law. Mr. Warfield is making a model postmaster.—Baltimore dispatch, New York Times, September 19.

* * *

Senator Gorman delivered a characteristic threat against the civil service commission this morning. In introducing a resolution for the printing of the civil service commission's report he intimated that the commission was responsible for "scandalous and libelous" statements in the press that the committee had unduly and intentionally delayed the printing of the report.

After declaring the falsity of that report Mr. Gorman said: "I can only say that hereafter it would be wise for the commission to see to it that they make their requests in respectful language, and that they keep out of the public press with their complaints as much as is possible."

As Mr. Gorman is practically the sole arbiter of what shall and shall not be printed, runs the government printing office as a private patronage establishment, and has it in his power to prevent or delay publications which the civil service commission may desire to have issued, this timely warning is interesting and suggestive.—Washington dispatch New York Evening Post, August 16.

* * *

Another engagement in Senator Gorman's family is that of his daughter Miss Madie to her cousin, Stephen Gambrell, Jr. Mr. Gambrell is the son of Stephen Gambrell, of Laurel, who married Senator Gorman's sister. Both the Gambrells, father and son, have positions in the departments at Washington.—Baltimore dispatch, August 20.

"I wish to acknowledge, in the most public manner, my gratitude to the President for having relieved me from all responsibility in regard to appointments in Missouri. If there is anything in my public life which has afforded me any pleasure, real and substantial, it has been the fact that the President, in the exercise of his constitutional right, of which I do not complain, informed me that he no longer desired my advice in regard to Missouri patronage. Not again during his administration will I stand in a crowded ante-room looking into the anxious and haggard faces of expectant office-holders. Not again will I be admitted in the august presence, nor will I watch the shadows—possibly produced by indigestion—that flit across the executive brow, and feel my heart sink as each shadow comes and goes. Not again will I be damned at country post-offices, upon village corners, as an ingrate who has given no offices to his friends."

Now that he has been released from all the troubles and complications involved in dispensing the spoils, Mr. Vest says that he can "fight for my principle, my party, my country."

THE MACHINE OF MURPHY, SENATOR OF THE UNITED STATES.

Eugene E. McClure was sentenced to-day to five years in the state prison—the extreme penalty of the law—for receiving stolen goods. The property was stolen by Bat Shea, who is now supposedly awaiting electrocution for the murder of Robert Ross and his pal, John McGough, who is serving a sentence of 19 years for shooting William Ross, at the election here last March. McClure had acted as a fence for the gang for years. He is 45 years old.—Troy dispatch Buffalo Express, September 11.

In the court of sessions in this city, this morning, with County Judge Griffith presiding, Michael Pillion, convicted of repeating at the polls in several wards in this city at the election last spring, was sentenced to the Albany penitentiary for one year, and to pay a fine of $500, in default of which fine the prisoner is to be detained at the penitentiary for 500 days. Pillion's conviction is the first in twenty years, that a jury in Rensselaer county has found in a case of election fraud.

Immediately after the sentence of Pillion, District Attorney Kelly stated that he had nothing more with which to occupy the attention of the court, whereupon Frank S. Black, counsel for the Troy committee of public safety, addressed the court, and read a list of indicted persons charged with election offenses who had not been brought to trial, and who had not been arrested. Mr. Black stated that the district attorney's officers had not used proper diligence in endeavoring to apprehend indicted persons, many of whom, he said, were in Troy at the present time. He also referred to the indictment against Officer William J. Butcher, of the Troy police force, who is charged with interfering with voters in the ward in which Robert Ross was shot last spring. He said that the evidence against Butcher was in the possession of the district attorney, and that trial could be moved at once, if the district attorney saw fit.

Mr. Black declared that the district attorney should be "made to move or be removed." The district attorney, in reply, said he did not have charge of the grand jury that found the indictments included in the list read by Mr. Black, as it was well known that the governor had directed that he should not be connected with the election cases. He said Butcher was the principal witness against four persons now in jail, and that he did not intend to place the officer on trial until the cases of those offenders had been disposed of.

The court issued an order directing that all persons under indictment, and who have not given bail, be arrested on bench warrants, and the trial will occur at the October term of the court of sessions.—Troy dispatch New York Times, September 13.

CARLISLEANA.

Secretary Carlisle to-day dropped every republican in the office of the supervising architect. Those dismissed were Chiefs Lowe, of the draughting division; Garretson, of the accounts division, and Millikin, of the records division. All three were eminently qualified for their positions and have been in the service many years.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, September 5.

* * *

The places of the dismissed men will be filled by putting in chiefs of divisions in the controller's office, appointed by Secretary Carlisle, who have been legislated out of office by the Dockery treasury reorganization act, which will take effect October 1.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 5.

M. W. Wines was, until a few days ago, chief of a division in the coast and geodetic survey. There was a reorganization of the force under the direction of Secretary Carlisle, and Mr. Wines, who has held office nearly a score of years, was dropped from the rolls. He had been drawing a salary of $2,200 a year. Something like twenty-two years ago he resided in Ft. Wayne. He is said to have been a democrat at that time. He was appointed from Cincinnati, however, and on republican influence.

Monday he called on Congressman McNagny with a letter from Senators Turpie and Voorhees. The senators demanded almost peremptorily that Congressman McNagny go to Secretary Carlisle and secure the reinstatement of Mr. Wines. But Mr. McNagny did not go. He suggested that Mr. Wines had lost his identity as a resident of Ft. Wayne, so much, in fact, that he had not seen fit to call on a representative from that district until there came an emergency in his affairs which demanded a political "pull." The twelfth district representative spoke rather sharply to Wines and sent him away very much crestfallen. Some of the Indiana democrats here claim that Mr. Wines has been wavering in his political affections and unable to keep his mind fixed on any one political party for any long period of time.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 29.

William H. Pugh, of Cincinnati, whose office of commissioner of customs was abolished a few days ago, has been appointed acting chief of the coast and geodetic survey. This position requires a scientific man of the highest attainments. Pugh is a lawyer without any pretensions to being a scientific man. His present appointment is said to be only temporary.—Indianapolis Journal, July 16. [Our July issue contained the full account of the methods employed by the Carlisle family to drive out Professor Mendenhall.]

There was a wholesale discharge of employes in the government printing office on Monday, over five hundred being let out. Several Indiana men were on the list, among them A. G. Defrees, of Indianapolis, son of ex-Public Printer John D. Defrees. He was one of the oldest employes in the office.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis News, Aug. 30.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League will be held in Chicago, December 12th and 13th.

IN another part of this paper are the particulars of the wide-spread assessments of office holders, and the statement of Mr. Roosevelt as to their unusual frequency. The explanation is easy. Attorney-General Olney construed the law, if honestly, ridiculously, and President Cleveland who could stop what Mr. Roosevelt fitly calls this foul blackmail, by a word, is silent, and by his silence really acquiesces. Subordinates have correctly interpreted the situation.

IT is doubtful if there were many reformers in the country who did not live in anxiety until it was certain that Hill had accepted the nomination for the governorship of New York. It seemed impossible that he would not get a respectable figure-head to take his place, but he did not, and at last Hill and Hillism are where they can be got at. A few days later their twin brothers, Tammany and Tammanyism, were surrounded by the reform German club, the committee of seventy organization, the good government clubs, and the republicans who together are grinding them as the gods grind. This is a very surfeit of good things, and every true citizen regrets that this year he does not live in New York. The result is not doubtful. Righteousness is going to have a great triumph. Hill and Tammany are going to be overthrown.

OF course there are some good men who can not bring themselves more than half-way in this matter. There always are. William R. Grace and Frederick R. Couderd, at the head of what is known as the Cleveland, or state democracy, are such. Tammany, the wholesale blackmailer, robber, oppressor, and criminal, is to be stamped under foot; but Dave Hill, the devilish enemy of Cleveland and Clevelandism, the receiver of thousands of dollars from a thieving contract, the brazen bluffer and the real principal in the Maynard crime, the chosen friend, the up-builder and the fellow of Tammany, is to be voted for. It is hard to find words to fitly characterize the stupidity or the selfishness of men who can say that Tammany should be defeated and Hill elected.

It is well known that Hill is the most dangerous character in New York politics since Aaron Burr. His nomination has called forth expressions which indicate the widespread degradation of politics. The following are instances:

Chicago Times: "New York could have no better executive."

St. Louis Republic: "The magnificent compliment paid to him Wednesday was a tribute to his superb mastery of New York politics."

Atlanta Constitution: "If any man can defeat the republican candidate in New York state this year, that man is David B. Hill."

Evansville Courier: "Thus the great democracy of New York comes together under the banner of Hill."

New York Herald: "Senator Hill is a veteran and a matchless campaigner. The issue is plain. The result is with the people."

Association of Southern Democrats in New York: "That we have witnessed with admiration the independent political career of Senator David B. Hill, and regard him as the truthful exponent of the highest order of democratic principles, and personally far beyond the control of influences which have been known to cause statesmen to swerve from their line of duty and patriotism, and we endorse his course in the United States senate."

IN giving his reasons for abandoning the state democracy and returning to Hill and Tammany, E. Ellery Anderson beatifically says:

The evils which afflict us are part of the infirmities of our human nature. The battle for their suppression is a melodrama in many acts. The curtain was raised on the performance of this singular play many ages ago, and it will not fall until the light of the eternal stars shall have burned to the last flicker as they die in their sockets. There is no short cut to the millennium. If there were, the occupation of the Almighty would be gone. He has assigned mankind to the performance of this endless play for His own good purposes.

While Mr. Anderson returns to his vomit and abandons himself to fate, in Everett P. Wheeler is offered the best candidate for governor of New York that has appeared in many a day. His view of the purposes of the Almighty is radically and vigorously different from that of Mr. Anderson.

WHEN Mayor Denny, of this city, was elected, it was one of the puzzles how he proposed to have a reform administration and have Pres. Trusler as comptroller. When the civil service rules were under consideration that part prohibiting assessments upon office-holders was on Trusler's motion struck out and was one of the suspicious loopholes we mentioned last month. The result has now come. The republican campaign committee "appointed" Comptroller Trusler to collect assessments from members of the city administration. He says: "I was ordered to collect two per cent. on all salaries over $1,000 and one per cent. on $1,000 and under." He further says: "All appointive offices are political offices and the people who get them should pay for them." He proceeded to make the assessment, and says: "The members of the police and fire departments have come in here and paid their political assessments to me." When asked as to the report that those who did not pay would lose their places, he says:

No threats have been made, nor has any one been told that if he does not pay his assessment that he will lose his job. So far as I am concerned I could not cause any one to lose his position if I wanted to. I am only one of the members of the city government.

We have here in the baldest shape a brazen and impudent levy upon the salaries of public officers to make up a fund for a party campaign. This is one of the most corrupt and dangerous evils in American government. It was money raised in this way that ultimately taught 20,000 or 30,000 voters in Indiana to sell their votes. Next to blackmailing private citizens it is the most corrupt form of Tammanyism. In the form of the disclaimer of a threat there is a threat. So great is this evil and so universal is the recognition of it that it is forbidden by the federal law. This matter has had great publicity, the Indianapolis News having repeatedly given the facts. The Journal, the party organ, is silent. Mayor Denny is silent. He should kick this comptroller out of office. This is a matter which pertains to Mayor Denny and to this city, and in due time it will come home to him and to the party which so stupidly stultifies its professions of reform.

AMONG other desirable things which seem probable in the coming election is the defeat of Congressman Bynum of this district. From the time when in the first Cleveland administration he ran into and kept in the public service such characters as Jim Dowling he has been simply a manipulator of spoil. He has been the steady and malignant enemy of the civil service law and of civil service reform. The brassy hypocrisy of his character is shown in his introduction of a bill to restore to the service the railway mail clerks turned out by Wanamaker just before the civil service rules were allowed to take effect, while utterly ignoring the men turned out in post-offices throughout the country by the present administration under exactly the same circumstances. On the top of this pious solicitation for the merit system he tried to prevent an appropriation for the civil service commission. The bullying and possessory nature of his view of public office is shown by the Irvington post-office matter. The great body of the people of that place wanted to keep their postmaster, and Mr. Julian, with great earnestness, urged the people's wishes, and a democrat was sent to Washington so that the post-office department might surely be informed. Bynum contemptuously brushed all this aside because he wanted to fix a henchman, and he fixed him. That he regards public office as a private snap is shown by his appointment of his son to be a cadet in the naval academy. A man who will do that in this age instead of throwing the place open to competition among the young men of the district, deserves the contempt of all honorable men. The only excuse made for Bynum is that he is a free-trader or a tariff reformer. Perhaps he is, but there is a limit to the shiftiness which a voter can pass, even if he thinks free trade ought to be the first qualification of a congressman.

At the Lake Mohonk conference Mr. Hailman, superintendent of the Indian schools, is reported by the correspondent of the New York Evening Post as follows:

He was told by the secretary of the interior, upon assuming the office, that it was the secretary's earnest wish to divorce the educational service from party politics. He found that his duties were wholly advisory. Later his duties were defined. He was warned, however, by subordinates in the department, that if he should try to exercise the authority given to him to the full extent, his place would be made so warm for him that he would be out of it before the 1st of July. He had not been forced out, however, but the limit of his authority had been restricted so that his power of selection and assignment of unclassified employes had been taken away. He believed that it would be best for the control of the superintendent of Indian schools to be transferred from the Indian bureau to the commission of education.

We fear that Secretary Hoke Smith will think that Mr. Hailman's candor shows a want of fitness almost disqualifying him for his position. Does not Mr. Hailman know that though it was the secretary's earnest wish to take the Indian service out of politics theoretically, yet the government could not be run except as he portioned out Indian spoil among congressmen? The secretary doubtless wrings his hands in private over this state of things, and might naturally have expected that Mr. Hailman would have appeared before the conference dwelling on Secretary Hoke Smith's keen suffering over the evil of the Indian service, in its unclassified portion, treated as spoil and insisting that the conference withhold criticism and thank the secretary for not having yielded as much as the wicked congressmen claimed.

JOSIAH QUINCY must get very tired reading the opinions of experts upon the necessity and practicability of a reform in our consular service. Admiral Erben has a long and instructive interview in the New York Evening Post of September 29th. He has had forty-six years' experience of active service in our navy, and in President Arthur's administration made a special investigation of the consular service, and he says:

"To my mind, one of the first great reforms we need is a reformation of our consular service. We need it in the interest of trade, if for no other reason. There should be established a regular permanent service, with promotions from place to place according to the fitness of the men. Let young men work themselves along in the service. Have absolutely no politics in the matter at all. In that way we should soon have excellent consuls. At present the consulships are practically rewards for political service. Many of our consuls, as I have said, go abroad because they have sick wives, or because they want to see the world."

A FEW people realize the necessity of intelligent management of the remaining forest area of this country. Attempts are made to awaken interest in this vital matter. At the recent session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Prof. B. E. Fernow read a valuable paper on "The Battle of the Forest," which ought to awaken us before it is too late. It is lamentable enough to stand by and watch the wanton destruction of forests by timber kings, but it is more lamentable to see a state like New York attempt to preserve some of the noble Adirondack forest lands by acquisition, and fail, because its governor uses its state forest commission as the reward for henchmen. Comptroller Roberts has been making an investigation, and finds that

The timber on state lands not only has been ruthlessly cut, but that the undergrowth has been destroyed, thus leaving the lands sterile wastes. In addition to this, he has obtained evidence, he says, that certain state foresters have received from timber thieves and lumber men anywhere from 35 cents up for every tree that has been cut down.

THE department of agriculture is also a part of the New York state machine, and its patronage is managed on the Hill and Murphy plan:

The Rural New Yorker alleges that in Oswego county "a saloon-keeper has been appointed to this responsible position of tree inspector, and this, too, in one of the most important fruit districts of the state, where there are a large number of intelligent and practical men who have made a study of fruit-tree diseases and their remedies. Moreover, this is said to be only an aggravated illustration of what has come to be much the rule."

It is strange that since people think it well worth while to live even amidst unwholesome and unlovely conditions made by a spoils government—dust laden air breathed, foul water drunk, adulterated food eaten, bad roads, nasty streets, no parks, or Tammany parks, denuded forests, Carlisle O'Rourke architecture and much more—if the struggle for existence is worth while with all these evils, what would it be under conditions absolutely free from the contamination of spoil? Let us consider such an improved phase of life and determine whether any party insisting that spoils is necessary to its existence had not better die at once.

INDEPENDENTS AS DEMOCRATS.

After the elections of 1884 the independent voters, especially in Massachusetts, had a distinct cleavage as to the best course to be followed in the future. There were those who argued that patronage and the effort to obtain it had debauched the organizations of both political parties, and that the most selfish, greedy and corrupt elements in both parties had complete control of the respective machines. Therefore, the quickest way to reform and the method by which to exert the greatest influence was to remain outside all party organizations, to be an uncertain voter, and to avoid all the silken chains of party fealty and thereby the dangers of apologizing for acts that should be judged justly but severely.

There were other independents who maintained that Mr. Cleveland must be helped by accepting office "to carry out his ideas," and that the way to quicken the aspirations of the new democratic party was to join it and gain the supremacy by wise counsels and disinterested work.

Time enough has passed to judge fairly of the results of the two methods. Whatever may have been the case in the past or whatever may be the case in the future, we believe that at the present time when any man abandons his party organization because he believes it has no principles or not his principles, he weakens his capacity for reform by allying himself with any other party organization. The case of Dr. Everett is a case in point. He announced himself with enthusiasm to be a democrat, and his advice to other independents was to join the party and strengthen Mr. Cleveland. We think it was the unconscious bias of this attitude that made a conscientious and patriotic man like Dr. Everett apparently impervious to facts that deserved severe censure under Mr. Cleveland's first administration and so fertile and subtle in apologies for the shortcomings of that administration.

In accordance with these views, Dr. Everett was sent to congress as a democrat. He has tried being a congressman, and has recently withdrawn his name for renomination. He says that his congressional career has convinced him that he can not act according to his convictions and satisfy his constituents at the same time. He opposed the income tax, but accepted it because he saw no chance of passing the Wilson bill without it. When the bill came back in its unrecognizable shape from the senate, however, he refused to vote for it, because it was in no sense a fulfillment of democratic pledges. He also found that, in violation of his notions of right, he was expected to use his position for the purpose of securing patronage for his constituents. He says regarding this:

It is generally held to be the duty of a member of congress to solicit from a friendly administration positions in the government service for his political supporters. I believe this congressional patronage to be a source of endless harm, with no counterbalancing good. I have tried to withdraw from it altogether. In a very few cases, where it seemed absolutely unavoidable for me to act as a medium between my district and the departments, I have confined my services strictly to bringing before the appointing power such facts as I knew, and let the people speak for themselves, remembering, always, that I was not the representative of a party organization merely, but of an integral district, every citizen of which had an equal claim to have his needs brought before the department which selects official servants.

In conclusion Dr. Everett says:

A representative in the congress of the United States by the free choice of a free people holds assuredly a great position; but, if that freedom does not extend to his own judgment, his own conscience, his own honor, he holds it by a base tenure, unworthy of his ancient birthright of American liberty.

In other words he felt himself so hampered and fettered, not, we think, as he politely states, by his constituents, but by his party machine, that he realized that all his efforts were in vain. This failure of well meant efforts is not all. The influence of whatever criticism Dr. Everett may in the future offer will be artfully belittled by the party managers as the "pessimism of a disappointed man who has been piqued by his own failure." Nor have such reform acquisitions to the democratic party as Dr. Everett had any apparent influence in strengthening the President. Too often their rôle has been simply too listen to the President's reasons for yielding to the spoilsmen of his party and then to pass out to dull the edge of just criticisms.

A CASE OF POETIC JUSTICE.

An occasional object lesson after the manner of Old Testament vengeance is beneficial to us even in these modern days, and while it is all right for the mills of the gods to grind slowly, it is excellent to be able occasionally to see them grind.

The readers of the CHRONICLE may remember that the war department of the United States servilely attempted to placate a Kentucky congressman by the name of Caruth by punishing Major Handbury, of the United States army because he had not been plastic enough about spoil. In its May number the CHRONICLE said:

Congressman Caruth is engaged in erushing a rebellion in his district in Kentucky. The rebels, like those of Gorman's, "are the very cream of the population politically, socially, and in a business way." Mr. Cleveland has popularly been supposed to represent this class of people, and these citizens of Kentucky spent money and time in the successful effort to crush the machinations against Mr. Cleveland, of men like Mr. Caruth. It does not seem that it would be too much to expect that under these circumstances Caruth and his rebels should be left by this administration to wind up their war with no outside interference. This is not the case. The treasury department, the post-office department, and the war department, have been called upon by Caruth, and they have responded. The crowning ignominy was recently made known by the Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post. Major Handbury, of the United States engineers, was assigned to Louisville to take charge of the engineering work of the Ohio Falls canal. First Caruth secured the removal of Mr. Shaw, who has been assistant engineer for fifteen years; then he designated the brother of his law partner for the place. Major Handbury thought if his competent assistant had to go, he would try to get along without anybody in his place. Mr. Caruth kept getting men dismissed, but Major Handbury kept on conducting his office on scientific and business principles. Secretary Lamont and the chief of engineers were the tools to execute Caruth's orders. At the war department, says the Post, the only information given out about the matter is that the major had made himself very obnoxious to Mr. Caruth and some other citizens of Louisville by his persistent habit of "turning down" all their requests and suggestions. The climax of this odious work was that Major Handbury was transferred to Florida and was ordered to turn over his unfinished work to a subordinate officer and to leave at once.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times rebuked the CHRONICLE for "overzealousness," and "querulousness," and proceeded to condone the removal of an army officer of high standing from his unfinished work, because "he is not a person of tact;" because, after refusing to heed a recommendation of Congressman Caruth to quarter a henchman upon the treasury, he had not refrained from "discussing with unconcealed satisfaction, in more or less public places, the decision he had shown in jumping on a politician," and thus "he had needlessly and undiplomati-cally provoked Mr. Caruth's dislike." The CHRONICLE further said in its June issue:

Again, the Times's dispatch asserts that Secretary Lamont made a minor appointment under Major Handbury, and that the latter notified the appointee, in writing, that he might not find the place comfortable, and thereupon the appointee declined it. Why are facts kept concealed? Who was this man? It has always been said that presidents and cabinet officers could not personally know men for subordinate places, but must rely upon recommendations. Who recommended this man? In the face of this studied concealment, fair-minded men will conclude that the man was a leech, a heeler, recommended by Caruth, and that Major Handbury knew the character of the man, and very properly warned him off, and thereby again showed himself a faithful and efficient officer. Upon the evidence, of his accusers the more this matter is sifted the more it appears that Major Handbury has been made the victim of an ignoble spite and sacrificed to a desire upon the part of the administration to mollify Caruth whom he had angered. The fact that Caruth did not know when the transfer was made only makes the matter worse. For Secretary Lamont or the President to attempt to give Caruth an agreeable surprise of this kind is only the more abject.

The administration thus lent its aid to Caruth by sending Major Handbury to St. Augustine and by showers of federal patronage to crush a rebellion against Caruth led by rebels who were "the very cream of the population politically, socially and in a business way." The New York Evening Post of September 27 says:

In the Louisville district Edward J. McDermott, a young lawyer of high standing, excellent character, and proved capacity for public affairs, was nominated over Congressman Caruth and one other candidate by a plurality of nearly 2,500 votes. Mr. McDermott made his campaign for the nomination without the aid of a single daily newspaper and without the aid, also, of either spoils or friendship for the spoils doctrine, for he had a conspicuous record as a civil service reformer. The defeat of Mr. Caruth was most significant in this respect, for almost his last act in the closing days of the late session was a bitter attack upon the civil service commission. The vote polled at the primaries, which in Kentucky are conducted exactly like an election, was about seventy-five per cent. of the total registered democratic vote. Under the registry law every voter gives his politics when he registers his name, and is so designated on the list. As the democratic majority in the Louisville district is from 5,000 to 7,000, there is no doubt of Mr. McDermott's election.

We rejoice that the mills of the gods have ground very thoroughly and rather more speedily than usual. Caruth's rebels have given the war department an admirable moral object-lesson. Such a chastisement ought to humiliate the administration into an understanding of the practical value of following good morals in dealing with its employes as well as with boss-ridden communities. Since the war department has failed to receive the approval of the people, it can do no less than restore Major Handbury to the post from which it so unjustly removed him.

DAVID A. WELLS AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

NORWICH, CONN., Oct. 2, 1894.

To the Editor Civil Service Chronicle:

SIR—If the large amount of personal abuse i. e., accusations of corruption by British gold, hostility to American industries and workingmen, falsification of economic data and the like—which, now for many years it has been my fortune to experience, had not hardened my mental epidermis, I should feel a very large measure of indignation at your charging me, in the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE for September, with having done certain acts in connection with the removal of Mr. Caruthers from the post-office in Norwich, Conn., “contrary to good morals, good government and his [my] professions.” As it is, I will try and content myself with saying that there is not the first scintilla of truth in your statements and accusations in this matter.

You commence your criticisms by quoting from the New York Tribune of some months past, that the appointment of the postmaster at Norwich “was absolutely within his [my] gift.” This statement—one of the loose kind which the Tribune is characteristically ready to make respecting those who politically differ with it—was absolutely untrue. I fancy the smile that would have passed over the face of Postmaster-General Bissell; of Hon. Carlos French of Connecticut, or of Mr. Clinton Davis, chairman of the democratic committee of that state, if their attention was ever directed to this assertion. My opinion was never asked by the appointing power at Washington respecting the office in question; none was ever volunteered by me, and I have had abundant reason to believe that if I ever had expressed a wish or opinion as to its disposition, it would not have been regarded.

At the commencement of President Cleveland's second term I mentally resolved that I would have nothing whatever to do with the distribution of federal patronage, either in Connecticut or elsewhere. I must confess to have yielded in a very few instances to the importunities of personal friends and to have made recommendations for the appointment of persons to offices for which I believed them to be well qualified and entitled to seek. But my measure of success in this line may be inferred from the circumstance, that the only person whom I did specially recommend, in common with many good and leading citizens and democrats, who ever obtained anything, was a graduate of Yale, a gentleman of education and fine ability, who, seeking in the first instance the consulship at Liverpool, was finally appointed to a petty post in the West Indies, where any lengthened residence for an unacclimated individual was sure to be terminated by an attack of yellow fever.

In respect to the post-office at Norwich, furthermore, I never signed the petition of any applicant for it, or made any recommendation to the post-office department, with a view of influencing its appointing policy in this particular. You assert that the files of this department will sustain your statements. If the rules of the departments at Washington will permit, you have my full consent to hunt out, read, and publish, any, or all, of the correspondence I have ever had with them on the subject of patronage.

You attempt to bolster up your case by stating that my son has recently received an important consular appointment; and that this fact had made you especially desirous to obtain “further details of the wanton removal,” which you attribute to me; thus suggesting that there was some mystery disparaging to myself and hurtful to the cause of civil service reform, that might be revealed. I shall be only too happy to furnish you with any details with which I may be conversant.

My son has not recently received “an important consular appointment.” The President, however, did nominate him to be second secretary of the embassy of the United States at London, and the senate confirmed the nomination. The post is one which has little or no attraction for the ordinary office-seeker, for the reason that the expense attendant on filling this office creditably is two or three times in excess of the salary pertaining to it. I will further add that this appointment was made without any solicitation on my part; and that I never exchanged a word with the President on this subject, except to write him a note after the appointment was made, acknowledging the compliment.

I have been, from its first inception in this country, an advocate of civil service reform. I believe its recognition and adoption in the United States essential to the purity and efficiency of its governments—federal, state, and municipal. I have never concealed my sentiments on this matter. I have contributed to the expenses of the present civil service organization. I have distributed its publications; and never intentionally antagonized its principles. The question involved in the advocacy of civil service is in a high degree a moral question. And if such is the case what claim can THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE have on the confidence of its readers or the public, when its editor, without any evidence, or reason, makes the untrue and brutal personal attack that has found a place in its columns.

In conclusion I would ask attention to some interesting points in connection with the recent Norwich post-office history that seem to have never been brought to the notice of THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, or, if known by its managers, have been suppressed. Under President Cleveland's first administration the Norwich postmaster, an honorable and efficient official, but an active republican partizan, was allowed to retain his office until the expiration of the term for which he was commissioned, a period of over two years. A democrat, a representative of the working men, who commenced life as a fireman and engineer on the Long Island Sound steamers, and educated himself up to a good degree of business efficiency, was then appointed, Mr. Caruthers being retained in his former place as deputy. Under the republican postmaster no democrat was ever allowed to have a place in the office, either as clerk or letter carrier. Under the democratic postmaster the patronage of the office was equitably divided. Within sixty days after President Harrison was inaugurated the democratic postmaster was summarily removed, without any charge of incapacity or malfeasance, and more than two years before the expiration of his commission. Mr. Caruthers was appointed in his place, and within a very brief period thereafter every democratic clerk or letter carrier, with a single exception, was removed and republicans appointed in their places again. When Mr. Caruthers retired during the present year, on the expiration of his commission, out of nineteen employes in his office—clerks and letter carriers—there was but one democrat. There is a legal maxim “that he who asks equity must be prepared to show that he has done equity.” The pertinancy of its application to Mr. Caruthers's case does not seem to require demonstration. It also is not to be wondered at that the democrats of Norwich, as a rule, do not have much faith in civil service reform. I am yours, DAVID A. WELLS.

Mr. Wells accompanied the above letter with another to the editor, in which he makes certain threats in case the foregoing were not published; and he has written to others to the same effect. Mr. Wells's letter is published, not in fear of his threats, but notwithstanding them, and in accordance with the uniform practice of the CHRONICLE. Mr. Caruthers is not asking equity or anything else that we know of, but there is an old pleading in equity applicable to Mr. Wells's letter, that it is very “uncertain, evasive, and insufficient.” He says there is not “the first scintilla of truth,” in the CHRONICLE's statements and then gives facts which go far to sustain the CHRONICLE's position, and do sustain it in the particular charge he complains of. On his own showing, he, a professed civil service reformer, was not only in sympathy with the removal of Caruthers, but he has under the two Cleveland administrations been engaged in and helping on the division of spoil and has received some of it in his own family. He is apparently discontented at his lack of success in the nefarious business of dividing offices as spoil for the gratification of personal friends. His “abundant reason to believe” that his wishes would not be regarded by the administration, must arise from a feeling of abundance of disappointment in securing favors asked not only “specially” but generally. He has been helping along the clean sweep which this administration has been making where not hampered by law, and which is the worst enemy to the progress of civil service reform. That is the end of the matter. Civil service reform is, as he says, a moral question. His course, as stated by himself, is exactly opposed to professions of civil service reform and to good government, and therefore, to good morals. Degree of offense cuts no figure. Garrison would not have been heard to say that he only bought and sold a few slaves, and that his ventures failed.

With regard to the Norwich post-office, Mr. Wells says that his opinion was never asked "by the appointing power at Washington," and that none was volunteered by him. Mr. Wells may take it for granted that the CHRONICLE knows how those things are done. The "appointing power" is the President, who usually registers the decree of some boss, and he may or may not know who in a particular instance has influenced the boss. The question is, what did Mr. Wells do, in any manner, to help or prevent the continuance of Mr. Caruthers as postmaster at Norwich?

He further says: "In respect to the post-office at Norwich, furthermore, I never signed the petition of any applicant for it, or made any recommendation to the post-office department, with a view of influencing its appointing policy in this particular." The italics are ours. This language may not mean what it seems to mean. If it means that he has signed applications, or made recommendations, but not with a view of having them weigh anything, no comment is necessary. If it means that he has signed no applications, and has made no recommendations "to the post-office department"—the question, what did he do, is still evaded.

It is idle to refer the CHRONICLE to the files of the post-office department. Mr. Wells knows what he has written to help along the division of spoil. He may take it for granted also that the CHRONICLE knows that most spoil is divided without a word being written by the actual "influence."

For some reason Mr. Wells thinks it is his duty to make out a bad case against Mr. Caruthers. Why does he not add to his statement the fact that the postmaster appointed under Mr. Cleveland's first administration to succeed, as Mr. Wells says, an efficient official, kept a meat shop and was a working politician without fitness for the office and that his appointment was pure and unadulterated spoil? We have been told that Mr. Wells helped him in. The "equitable" division of the patronage, of which Mr. Wells speaks, consisted in the dismissal of four out of five clerks, and six out of eight carriers. The dismissed men were experienced and in general very efficient. Their places were given to inexperienced men who were party workers. The result was to demoralize the work of the office. These "interesting points" are "suppressed" by Mr. Wells. Apparently even then the democrats of Norwich had little faith in civil service reform.

Mr. Wells says that Mr. Caruthers was retained as deputy. Would it not have been more candid to state that Mr. Caruthers was retained for a time [presumably to keep the office from being swamped], but was later dismissed [presumably as soon as the new postmaster felt he could stagger along without him]. We are reliably informed that charges of incapacity were made against this postmaster when he was removed.

When Mr. Caruthers was made postmaster there is no question but that he was the fittest man in Norwich for that position, and took the place of a man who ought never to have been appointed, and that he immediately improved the service. Mr. Wells does not state what is the fact, that Postmaster Caruthers reinstated, with a single exception, the dismissed employes, and instead of one democrat, as Mr. Wells states, he retained three, and when he was removed there were four in the office. Mr. Wells would do well to compare this division with the "equitable" division under the first Cleveland postmaster, which then satisfied his ideas of civil service reform.

It is not denied that Mr. Caruthers was exceptionally fitted for the place. But Mr. Wells evidently takes the ground that he should have been turned out for displacing democrats with republicans. This has been the excuse of every spoilsman who has found the principles of civil service reform standing in his way. Wherever revenge and retaliation hold sway civil service reform is halted. Nothing is further from civil service reform than such a stand. The democrats of Norwich who "do not have much faith in civil service reform," would have more reason to have faith in it if Mr. Wells had been in fact, instead of in theory, a civil service reformer. Taking the removal and appointment of postmasters in Norwich since Mr. Cleveland's first election, it is clear from Mr. Wells's letter, that he is only shocked by republican partisanship. We feel bound to say further, that if Mr. Wells treats economic data after the manner of the above letter, there is ground for criticism of him as an economist.

Political vs. Domestic Economy.—Friend—"How is it yeh ain't got that position yet?" "Lost yer pull?" Mr. Ward Heeler—"Oh, I've got the pull, plenty of pull. My application is signed by all ther political leaders in th' party." "Then wot's ther matter?" "Can't get any of 'em to go on me bond."—Life.

THE PROCESS OF BECOMING A BOSS.

Mr. Norman E. Mack, editor of the Buffalo Times, is a member of the democratic state committee and a park commissioner of the city of Buffalo.

Mr. Isaac H. Taggart, father-in-law to the aforesaid, is sheriff of the county of Erie.

Captain S. E. Nichols, late editorial writer for the Times, is pension agent at Buffalo.

Mr. James C. Stark, recently city editor of the Times, is clerk to the superintendent of police.

THE CORRUPTING POWER OF PATRONAGE.

Up to 1890 the democratic party of Wisconsin was in the minority, and, having no patronage to corrupt it, was reasonably honest. In that year it obtained power. Its first act was to set up a boss, and that boss, according to the democratic Chicago Times, has made a fortune of $200,000 while drawing a salary of but $3,000 a year.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell has started in to contribute the usual amount of campaign aid expected of his office at critical moments by a savage attack on the republican hold over fourth-class postmasters in Kansas. The Kansas democrats are having a hot fight between the populists and republicans, and it was finally decided that the situation was sufficiently urgent to ask Mr. Maxwell to start the machinery of the post-office department at work as an effective campaign bureau. About twenty postmasters were dismissed yesterday, and twenty-three followed to-day. If removals continue at this rate for a few days longer, it is clear that the department will be able to render some very "practical" aid in the fall contest.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, September 28.

Internal Revenue Collector Sullivan, having held the office long enough to measure the capacity of the present force, and finding it not indispensable, has decided upon a reorganization. With few exceptions, the thirty-five men now employed will be removed, and their places will be filled by a force calculated to improve the efficiency of the service. Changes were announced yesterday, when the following new appointments were announced:

Other nominations have been sent to Washington. It is expected that they will be confirmed within a few days. All the new appointments are democrats.—New York Times, October 7.

Inspector Leadley found the civil service laws being ignored in the Madison, Ind., post-office, and put them in force again. The appointment of a man as mailing clerk who had not taken the required examination will be reported to Washington.

THE PLEDGE.

"Public office is a public trust. We re-affirm the declaration of the democratic national convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, [Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical conduct of the government business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot box, be a brief reward of party zeal, instead of posts of honor, assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men, nor the instrument of their ambition] and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President, as in the recent republican convention by delegations composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which federal office-holders usurp control of party conventions in the states, and we pledge the democratic party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government."—National Democratic Platform, 1892.

BLACKMAILING EMPLOYEES.

From present indications the civil service commission will be busy with the investigation of cases of assessments for political purposes for some time to come. Speaking of the prevalence of these charges, Commissioner Roosevelt said:

"We have had more trouble on account of these cases this year than in any other year during which a presidential campaign occurred. I am glad to have a chance to say something about the matter now, as I always have before presidential campaigns. Under the decision of the attorney-general we can not proceed against those persons who solicit by letter. However, we shall publish broadcast what is being done and guarantee the employees that they need not pay one cent. If in any way molested we shall try to have criminally prosecuted those who molest those employees. We shall present the matter to congress and urge as strenuously as possible that legislation be had to punish solicitation by letter as well as in person. During the past month we have had two decisions favorable to our position—one in Ohio and the other in Kentucky—and both of the offenders have been heavily fined. If we can get at the offenders we will have them punished as rigorously as possible. I want to say that no man in office, whether democrat or republican, is under any obligation to contribute to a campaign fund and can not be molested in any way by his superior officers for refusing. This assessment business is mere foul blackmail and we intend to make war on it in every way possible. We intend to conduct a complete investigation of these cases."—Washington dispatch, New York Times, October 10.

The San Francisco Chronicle says that all federal employees in San Francisco have received a circular letter from the democratic campaign committee, stating that as office-holders they are presumed to desire the perpetuation of the present administration, and that the democratic ticket may be successful, each office-holder is requested to contribute 2 per cent. of his yearly salary to the funds of the party.—October 4.

The civil service commission is awaiting a reply from the Philadelphia Press to a letter sent asking information regarding charges of assessment of government employees in the Philadelphia mint for political purposes, made in a recent editorial.—Washington dispatch, October 10.

* * *

And this is not all. Government employees are being assessed heavily to help on in the good work, notwithstanding the civil service regulations. The assessments, as a rule, range from 10 to 25 per cent. It is known that in some instances the employees have been compelled to devote one month's salary.—Washington dispatch, to Buffalo Express, September 26.

* * *

The civil service commission has unearthed a number of flagrant violations of the law in Pittsburg, and Examiner Leadley is there making a thorough investigation. Under Postmaster O'Donnell there have been collusions in the examinations for appointment. Appointments have been made for janitors and watchmen who then were detailed as clerks. The employees have been assessed 2 per cent. of their salaries by the democratic committee, and one republican at $50 a month was dismissed because he stated he would not pay it. This discipline caused the other republicans to decide to pay it last week Monday, but fortunately Examiner Leadley arrived there on Friday, and on his promise that the commission would protect them, the republicans reconsidered and did not walk up to the captain's office.

The most outrageous assessment and flagrant violation was in the office of Collector Kearns, of the internal revenue district, comprising the 24 counties in Western Pennsylvania. In 1892, owing to republican dissensions and the Homestead strike, the 24th congress district of Pennsylvania, with 4,000 republican majority, elected William A. Sipe, democrat, to congress. Upon the advent of the Cleveland administration, Mr. Sipe managed to gather in this collectorship for one of his henchmen, Mr. Kearns, and therefore filled up the subordinate positions with his friends. Mr. Sipe's record in congress was not satisfactory to his constituents; but he tried to be re-elected to congress. As the anti-Sipe democrats controlled the committee of Allegheny county, and also the state, Mr. Sipe therefore could not expect any substantial aid from them. Therefore, the employees under Collector Kearns were assessed one month's salary, to be paid in two installments, and they were told that dismissal would follow a refusal to pay. They all paid, and Mr. Sipe's campaign manager raked in about $12,000. There are 130 employees in the district, and the assessment averaged nearly $100 a man. Examiner Leadley is working on this violation, and it is possible that he may implicate Mr. Sipe, as the civil service law explicitly prohibits representatives from being concerned in any manner in assessments, subscriptions, or political contributions.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, October 17.

At all events Mr. Cleveland has practically given his approval in the support tendered to us by officials under him.—John Boyd Thatcher, Hill lieutenant, New York Evening Post, October 15.

One of the democratic contests that is likely to be the topic of much discussion at the coming state convention is that in Yates county. Though in many counties of Western New York, an effort was made by both the friends of the administration and the state machine to insure harmony, the representatives of the factions in Yates appear to regard their differences as irreconcilable.

The Hill faction, which is led by Calvin S

Huson, formerly deputy controller and Thomas Carmody, chief examiner of the state civil service commission, held its convention on September 8th, and elected a delegation headed by Joel Lewis. This convention nominated a county ticket, on which for member of assembly appears the name of Darius A. Ogden, an old democratic war-horse, who in his long public career of half a century has served as consul to Hawaii, canal appraiser, member of assembly, and as the last canal commissioner elected in the state previous to the abolition of that office.

The administration element is led by M. A. Leary, a Penn Yan lawyer, who for the past dozen years has been chairman of the county committee. At the Saratoga convention of last year, the Leary delegation was placed upon the preliminary roll, but the Huson men were admitted on the recommendation of the committee on contested seats. This gave the Huson organization in Yates the stamp of regularity, but the old county committee of Yates county has never accepted the result, and under its call a convention was held last Saturday, at which a second delegation was elected, headed by Ernest R. Bordwell. Another county ticket was also placed in the field, with Evan J. Potter as a candidate for the assembly. Since last year's contest, Mr. Leary has become postmaster of Penn Yan, having assumed that office December 1st last. His name was among the list of those unconfirmed at the recent adjournment of congress, but a new commission was immediately issued to him by the President, at the same time when the other New York postmasters who remained unconfirmed were appointed.—Penn Yan dispatch, New York Times, September 2.

SALE OF PATRONAGE FOR LEGISLATION.

The Nebraska correspondent of the New York Evening Post gives in the issue of October 16 particulars of the consequences of President Cleveland's use of the patronage of that state to coerce legislation. Congressman Bryan is fighting for the senatorship. The democratic party since last year has changed front on the currency question, declaring for the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the present ratio. Men are supporting Bryan who do not believe in his principles. The Post's correspondent says:

But, undoubtedly, the very strongest cause of his success has been the attitude of the federal administration towards him. From the first it was learned that, because of Bryan's position on silver, he would not be permitted to distribute any of the patronage. He was not recognized as a democrat, although the only democratic congressman from this state. This action was wholly unwise. It assisted Bryan's cause very much. In the first place, of course, the applicants for office deserted Bryan and fawned upon Secretary Morton. It is claimed by the Bryanites that the democratic state convention last year was composed of these office-seekers and their friends. It was, indeed, proven that all candidates for office were given to understand that they must attend that convention, if possible, and support the administration's silver policy. Accordingly, many democrats who had been loud free-silver advocates voted against it for the sake of office at hand or expected. Of course this sort of enlightened opinion and expression could not last long. The offices did not "go around" to all these seekers. The patronage brokers could not extend this sort of deal another year, and the result was that nearly all the disappointed ones were anti-Cleveland and pro silver men after their disappointment. Even the chairman of last year's convention, who made unjust rulings against Bryan's friends and was a candidate for postmaster, became this year a leading free coinage democrat and attended a free-silver democrat conference in this city, and later was a prominent delegate to the state convention last month. He did not get the post office he sought. The bulk of the democrats were disgusted at this patronage deal at the state convention last year, and were inclined to take sides with the "under dog" on that occasion. They shared the general disgust with the acts of the President and congress, and thought best to rebuke him and congress by espousing the cause of the men most repugnant to them, especially as Mr. Bryan is known and esteemed in this state so very much more highly than the men who have obtained the federal offices.

But, to assist Bryan's silver schemes, the federal office-holders seemed to have labored fiercely in the primaries leading to the recent state convention. These federal office holders began from the start a campaign against Bryan. They were offensively in evidence on all occasions, deserting their offices to attend caucuses, primaries and meetings to defeat Bryan's tickets. That they had received instructions of this sort from their masters is not proven, but their acts disgusted thousands of honest-money democrats all over the state. In this city these office-holders did things which were dishonorable, such as forging Bryan's signature to a primary ticket which was against Bryan and free silver. The result was that the Bryan silver ticket carried this county by a majority of five to one. To illustrate how such things operate: a rector of an Episcopal parish, one of the most intellectual and loved men in Omaha, and an able opponent of free coinage, walked two miles to attend a democrat primary for the purpose of voting for the free-silver ticket. He had never before attended a primary, but his vote was a rebuke to the dishonorable actions against Bryan and a testimony to his belief in Mr. Bryan's honesty. He could not see, he said, why office-holders considered it a part of the duties of their offices to interfere in politics, and become offensive and conspicuous in attempting to defeat any candidate, especially by unfair means. This illustration explains why this county, which last year sent a solid delegation to the democratic state convention in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law, sent this year a solid delegation for free coinage.

It is semi-officially stated here to-night that President Cleveland has appointed Samuel Klotz collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of New Jersey. Mr. Klotz held the office before, and is Senator McPherson's candidate. His appointment means a big victory for the senior senator over Senator Smith, who has tried hard to get the place for ex-Mayor Haynes or James F. Connolly, or any one to defeat McPherson's candidate. Coming immediately after the removal of Supervisor O'Rourke, who was Senator Smith's protégé, it is taken to indicate that Senator Smith, by his attitude on the tariff question, has lost favor with the administration.—Newark dispatch, New York Times, September 20.

SALE OF PATRONAGE FOR MONEY.

There seems to be no doubt that such buying and selling of places in the civil service has been going on in Iowa ever since the Cleveland administration began distributing the spoils. Specific charges of the disposal of particular offices for certain sums are made by a prominent German newspaper, the Iowa Staats Anzeiger, whose editor was an applicant for the Des Moines post office. He says in so many words that he would have got the place if he had felt disposed to offer $500 a piece to "a certain congressman," "a certain prominent official in Washington," and two Iowa democratic politicians, whom he names, and he quotes his successful rival as saying that "it cost him $5,000 to secure the office." He affirms that he "saw a dispatch that an offer of $500 was made to a man in Washington for an office, and another dispatch wherein that offer was accepted;" and he mentions reports that the Marshalltown post-office cost the successful applicant from $600 to $1,000, the Ottumwa office not less than $600, while in "fifty other cases" the delay about changes in the post-offices was not due to the settlement of difficulties, but appointments were held back by the members of the ring for some one of the various candidates to make them a bid for their indorsement and support.—New York Evening Post, October 5.

The treasury presented an appearance of mingled gloom and festivity this morning. The forty two clerks who received notice of dismissal two weeks ago are bidding farewell to their friends, and leaving the building amid tearful expressions of regret. Red eyes were visible and voices were choked on every side in quarters where the reductions of force had been made. These upheavals are so disturbing to the steady progress of business that the chiefs of division in the reorganized bureaus are already looking forward with dread to the exhaustion of the thirty thousand-dollar appropriation for temporary service, when the rest of the doomed clerks will be dismissed.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, October 1.

PLATFORMS AND REPORTS.

The constitutional convention of New York has adopted the following amendment for submission to the people, 40 out of 54 democrats and 57 out of 97 republicans voting for it:

"Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and of cities shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, so far as possible, by examinations, which shall be competitive. Honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors who are not otherwise disqualified for such appointment or promotion shall be exempt from the provisions of this section. Laws shall be made to provide for the enforcement of this section."

According to the Springfield Republican we are indebted to George Fred Williams for the straightforward and explicit statement of the Massachusetts state democratic convention upon civil service reform. It also says that the declaration was not read by Josiah Quincy, and that he was not chairman of the committee on resolutions, and in fact appeared as a lonely figure in the proceedings he so lately has been wont to engineer. The resolution is as follows:

The scope of the national civil service system should be extended as fast as the civil service commission deems practicable, to the end that all federal position to which the merit system of appointment is applicable may be placed by law upon a strictly non-political basis. The administration should now formulate and recommend some plan by which the post-offices may be brought within the merit system, and the continued tenure of faithful officials be secured.

The anti-Tammany and anti Hill democracy which has nominated Everett P. Wheeler for governor says in its platform:

The public service should be manned throughout by honest men, selected for merit, fairly paid, giving the government a dollar's worth of work for a dollar's worth of pay, and, in places not political, secure tenure during good service. We demand an efficient enforcement of the civil service laws and an extension of the classified service in state and nation.

We favor home rule in cities, separate municipal elections, the suppression of bosses and rings, and the business administration of municipalities.

The annual report of the Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association has been received. It says of the two papers published solely for the furtherance of civil service reform:

During the past year the committee has continued its support of Good Government by subscribing in behalf of every one of our active members. The value of Good Government can hardly be overestimated. The vigor and ability with which it is edited have, if possible, increased from the start.

The committee have also subscribed to ten copies of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, to be distributed among various reading rooms, etc., in Cambridge. It is to be desired that more of our members should take the CHRONICLE, which supplements Good Government admirably, covering a comparatively limited field with a directness of speech and a wealth of concrete instances which are impossible for the national organ. A better object lesson than its columns can not be found.

Of the administration it says:

Mr. Cleveland has as yet made no extension of the rules. He has strengthened the civil service commission by a removal and an appointment, both of which were admirable. He has apparently not interfered with the members of his cabinet, but has allowed each one to adopt whatever attitude toward appointments he deemed best. The President has himself, on several occasions, administered to the office-seekers rebukes more direct than they have received from any of his recent predecessors. Except for special reasons which seemed to him sufficient, and except in the consular service, changes have not been made with quite the same rapidity as heretofore. Where they have been made, the same principle seems to have been followed as in his former administration: namely, to appoint civil service reformers in places where, as in Boston, there was a developed public sentiment in favor of the reform, and spoilsmen in states like Indiana.

In two cases where the public interest, and perhaps even the public safety, seemed to him to demand imperatively the passage by congress of certain measures (the repeal of the Sherman act and the change in the tariff), it is hardly open to doubt that he has used appointments to office, irrespective of the fitness of the appointees, in order to secure votes in favor of the legislation he deemed necessary. He has also done the same in the unsuccessful effort to secure the confirmation by the senate of two of his nominees to office—Messrs. Hornblower and Peckham.

The report advocates a campaign of education such as the believers in a low tariff carried on in the years from 1888 to 1892:

This should be by constant agitation of the subject whenever an opportunity occurs; by the use of the newspaper press, multiplied as this use may be by the collection and reproduction of clippings; by the constant search for extreme cases of the abuse of the spoils system, and their exposure; by the circulation of pamphlets and leaflets; and by public addresses wherever possible. It is needless to say that no such widespread propaganda of civil service reform has ever been possible; the work done has been almost wholly done irregularly and by volunteers, because the funds have never been forthcoming with which the National League could maintain a permanent bureau and an adequate clerical force. Such work must be done, however, if the present halting progress of the reform is to be quickened. The National League is the body to take charge of the work, and is ready to do so if the money is provided.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

I see you quote with approval Postmaster Dayton's opinion that English post-office officials had "not a sign of pretense or post-office officialism about them." This is a natural expression of opinion for Mr. Dayton, who, having got into office under the spoils system, wishes to stay in under the merit system. But is it true? Doubtless the higher officials were courteous to Mr. Dayton. He came accredited and they regarded him as their social equal. I have repeatedly heard exactly the reverse of English officials. Over and over again, as a Washington correspondent, I have taken English travelers over the departments at Washington, and they have spoken with amazement of the complete absence, in the men whose offices we visited, of the sense of ownership and proprietorship which pervades English offices like an atmosphere. I did not meet the higher English post-office officials, but in a very short stay in England, four weeks of which were passed in a small country town twenty miles from London, and I longed for the readiness, the sense, the personal interest in the public I would have found in a like American office. The clerks were in for life, the public opinion of their work was of no consequence, and I was treated with an official insolence which still makes me tingle. Take our consular service. It has its evils. I know them all; but if I were in trouble I would tenfold rather go to the American consul, who may not speak the language, but who does not look on his office as his personal property and a vested life interest than to the English consul, with his in-born sense of social superiority, and his consciousness that he is safe from all but serious criticism, can wholly disregard the poor man's cry. Ten to twelve years ago, Mr. Mundella warned an American that we would inevitably find a permanent tenure bred a disregard of public opinion, such as in the English educational department made reform difficult, and allied the office-holding class, as a whole, with Conservatism. I understand perfectly why my reforming friends with wealth, with social position and with acquaintance, find English officials in England and out, all they can ask. I know something of the poor, the friendless and the unknown, and the permanent official gives them a treatment which would modify many a reformer's views. The oldest permanent civil force in this country is the New York police. Close to 40 years ago, its members were made removable only for cause. Look at the result!

I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours,
TALCOTT WILLIAMS.

Thees hackneyed objections to civil service reform are given place only that both sides may be heard. The merit system proposes no life or permanent tenure. Instant dismissal is, except under boss rule, and always will, and ought to be, the penalty of official insolence. There is no way in which the merit system can be twisted to give any one reason to suppose that he has an ownership of an office. The American people do not and never will brook official insolence. The oldest employes of the government are not tinctured with it. They are the most attentive, the most courteous, and the best liked by the people. The only officials who are insolent in this country are the heelers who get and hold their places through bosses and not through merit and efficiency; to these the rule of instant dismissal can not, on account of boss influence, be made to apply. To the citation of the Tammany police in New York as an instance of the merit system, we can only cite an answer to a man who last year calmly advocated the benefits of slavery, made by Mr. Julian whom it reminded of a mule that said it always tired him to kick at nothing. The observations of the service of foreign countries made by a man who soberly tells you that the condition of the Tammany police is the result of a rule of removal for cause only, made forty years ago, are unreliable and valueless, whether from prejudice or lack of discernment.

A few soreheads, who failed to get the appointments they desired, have been fighting Taylor all through his term of office, and have constantly failed to give him credit for what he has done. He turned out all the republican postmasters and had in democrats almost before any other congressman had begun the good work.—Evansville dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, September 22.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has received some complaints that the paper is not regularly received. Especially this seems to be the case with libraries and its exchange list. The request is made that all such cases be promptly reported.

THE annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League will be held in Chicago on December 12 and 13. The civil service reformers of the west should remember that there is a general impression abroad that not much interest is taken in the objects of the League in this part of the country and that this time there will be no excuse for a sparse attendance. All who expect to be at these meetings should notify William Potts, 54 William street, New York City.

READERS of the CHRONICLE in Indiana may wish to be reminded of the fund to be raised in memory of George William Curtis and that the committee will welcome the interest evidenced by the smallest contributions. It is proposed to use a small part of the fund for the bust of Mr. Curtis, but most of it will be used to establish a lectureship for the purpose of disseminating ideas of good government. Remittances should be made to William L. Trenholm, Treasurer, 160 Broadway, New York City.

AS THE CHRONICLE predicted the people of this district finished with Congressman Bynum on election day. His opponent, Charles L. Henry, beat him by the great majority of 4,443 votes. There is on every hand a feeling of relief that we are rid of Bynum. He had few merits and many demerits. From the beginning of his career he has been on the side of the buccaneers in politics, openly and defiantly. Such a man can no longer hold the respect of this district, and we are very glad to be able to say so. Eight years ago his Barney Conroys and Jim Dowlings were notorious throughout the country, and he is now engaged in a characteristic escapade with ex-office seekers as is shown on another page, and in which he sets out how he withstood offers of bribery. Ordinarily offers of wholesale bribery by prominent citizens are denounced at once, but Mr. Bynum waited a year and until he was overwhelmingly defeated. If the people had known the full measure of his uprightness, it might have made some difference with the votes.

BRIBERY and offers to bribe are the natural results of dividing offices as spoil. If a man can get an office for setting up a primary for a congressman, there is to his mind no reason why he should not have an office by paying his congressman money. If a boss is in payment for services allowed to control certain appointments, he can see no reason why he should not receive cash for the places. This was Justice Paddy Divver's view when he offered in return for services a place, a gold watch and a banner. These are his reputed words:

As the leader of this district, I will give the captain of the election district that polls the most votes for the democratic ticket a $1,500 place. He can take the place himself or give it to one of his friends. [Most enthusiastic cheering.] To the captain of the district that polls the second largest number of votes I will give a gold watch and chain, and to the third largest I will give this silk banner.

In Divver's domain there were some election districts in which the returns under the above incentive did not show a single republican vote. We published last month an account of the sale of offices under the present administration in Iowa, and not many years back a regular system of sales came to light in Missouri. All this goes to show that Tammanyism exists not only in New York but all over the country, and that Tammanyism and the spoils system are one.

At the election in Cincinnati November 6, the republicans carried the city by more than 20,000 majority. November 13, just one week later, at a special election for judge of the insolvency court, the republican candidate was beaten by 3,000 majority. He was put forward by the Cox machine on the principle that the republican machine could do anything and still carry elections. The machine in Indiana had better take warning in time, before it gives way to its desire to loot the penal and benevolent institutions of the state. All the talk now going on about bi-partisan boards has no meaning in the mouths of the men who make it except to put in boards who can turn out democrats to make places for republicans. If it did not have this meaning, these men would not object to a system which would take these institutions absolutely out of politics. We repeat that there is no way to set this question at rest except by the introduction of the merit and the labor service systems.

THE order of the President, which extends the classified service to custom houses having twenty employes and to many excepted places in the custom houses, in the departments in Washington and in the post-offices can hardly be sufficiently praised. The stroke is one of the heaviest and most sweeping that has ever been delivered for the merit system. It is not in the great number of places, about 3,000 in all, but it is in their importance and in the number of gaps stopped, and more than all in the fact that the scandal of going upon the street and picking up politicians, and placing them as heads of divisions over men a thousand times better fitted than themselves, is, let us hope, forever ended. In the Indianapolis post-office, the only spoil left is the assistant postmaster and two janitors. The rank and file in the service will now have a chance to compete for something higher and the service will be benefited beyond measure. It is proper to speak also of the civil service commission. The law could not be more fortunate in having a commission impartial, qualified, determined and fearless. It is a pleasure to know that Mr. Proctor has largely added to the commission in these respects.

The order was received throughout the country either with praise or as a matter of course. There is nowhere that we have seen an objection or a criticism. This is a convincing proof that the reform has at last met general acceptance. We are not disposed to throw it up that the President ought to have done this sooner. He has shown that he knows how to do it and can do it when he gets ready, and we are promised more in the near future. We are convinced that he missed a great opportunity in not refusing to divide the fourth-class postmasterships and the pension examiners among congressmen and in not forcing congress to legislate these places out of politics or leave them in the hands of republicans. But with the rest of the service his opportunity is not gone. He has more than two years yet and by transfers to the classified service and by making and enforcing labor service rules he can so nearly destroy the spoils system as to make for the country and for himself more valuable history than in all the rest of his public service together.

THE civil service reform movement has often been hindered and made ashamed by actions of men nominally in its own ranks. It has had enrolled a considerable number of persons of local or national reputation, who have gone glibly through all the forms of profession, but who in practice have not been different from the ordinary spoilsmen. Gorman himself could not have been more thorough than Quincy was with the consulships. They have kept up a steady chorus of excuse for the failures of the respective administrations which they happened to favor; and their excuses have been the more unctuous according as they have had the ear or the notice of any particular administration. Some of them are open and above board in their recreancy and some attempt to be very secret about it. Some enter openly into the distribution of patronage; others din the departments or the President in person, while all the time looking in every direction to make sure that no one sees them. These work by a secret word or hint to a political boss, or a direct or roundabout word to the appointing power. We want it understood that THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE makes war upon all these men. The only excuse which can be offered for President Cleveland is that they have misled him. No man who is claiming to help break up the spoils system can have anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the distribution of spoils. Such men have been a curse to the reform movement. When found out, they and their followers set up a cry of "capititious criticism." No greater service to the reform can be rendered than to let the public know who they are and what they are doing.

WE desire the heelers, the ward bummers, the rounders, the wheel horses and the bosses, high and low, who for years have been glibly declaring that if the people once got a chance at the merit system, they would make short work of it, to take note that an election was held in the State of New York, November 6, at which the following amendment to the constitution was adopted by a great majority:

"Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, and of all the civil divisions thereof, including cities and villages, shall be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive; provided, however, that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors from the army and navy of the United States in the late civil war, who are citizens and residents of this state, shall be entitled to preference in appointment and promotion, without regard to their standing on any list from which such appointment or promotion may be made. Laws shall be made to provide for the enforcement of this section."

This is the end of the claim that the people are not in favor of this reform. As THE CHRONICLE has always maintained, the only persons opposed to it are those who, without regard to merit, desire to quarter themselves or their friends upon the public treasury.

THE natural result of Carlisleism in the treasury department has appeared in the bureau of engraving and printing. Two democratic congressmen asked to have one Smith given a job, and Carlisle promptly gave it, and just as promptly Smith began to steal postage stamps. Again, the smart chief of the bureau thought that, with the political mendicants under him, he could make postage stamps and save the government money over private contracts. He has now lost $1,000 by theft, and the country is "stuck" with many thousand dollars worth of stickless stamps, which must be recalled and destroyed.

THERE were 69,809 post-offices in the United States, June 30, 1894. Of these, 66,677 were fourth-class, and 3,428 were presidential. The total number of appointments during the year was 23,166, and there were 8,966 classed as removals. In the railway mail service, during the year ending June 30, 1893, there was one error to 7,144 pieces of mail matter handled. In the year ending June 30 last, the proportion was one error to 7,832 pieces handled. In the classified service like the railway mail service, the people can find out by the records kept what they are getting for their money. Here again is also shown the value and the steady progress which is due to the competitive system. Outside of the classified service, there is nothing by which to measure the services of the host of new appointees, their own self-sufficient declarations not being worthy of weight. It is impossible that any business which takes on 23,166 green hands in a single year can be run on principles of business and economy. Above all is this true of the presidential post-offices, where the practice of going out upon the street and picking up a local politician and putting him at the head of a great business institution, with the workings of which he is not in the least familiar, is no longer short of the ridiculous.

A GOOD illustration is the recent appointment of James P. Willett postmaster at Washington. The President has perhaps done unusually well in this case under the system which he follows. Yet when we collate the facts as to fitness it is claimed that Mr. Willett is fifty years old, has been a steadfast friend of Mr. Cleveland, is secretary and treasurer of the Woodmont rod and gun club, is a Knight Templar, has manifested public spirit on many occasions, has been one of the leaders of the district democracy and is a leading hatter. There is not a single word about his knowledge of the postal business which no man without years of experience can acquire so as to fitly fill a place like the headship of the Washington post-office. This system would wreck any business which did not have the people to tax to make up for losses arising from mistakes or from forced idleness while subordinates do the work of which the postmasters are ignorant. This becomes vivid by the exact parallel of supposing the appointment as cashier of the largest Washington bank or as superintendent of a division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, running out of Washington, of a man fifty years old, a leading hatter, a prominent democrat, a steady supporter of the president of the corporation, a Knight Templar, a secretary of a gun club, and so on, but without any experience in banking or railroad business. This whole system must go. Postmasters must disappear as local politicians. They must be officers in a division of the postal service who in the higher post-offices get their places in the line of promotion and who are subject to transfer as officers and employes of the railway mail service now are.

WHAT DID IT?

Explanations of the recent defeat go briskly on. The Indianapolis Journal has collated the following from democratic sources:

Democratic explanations of how it happened are nearly all in, and they run about this way:

It was the administration's attitude on the silver question—and the offices.

It was the Wilson bill—and the offices.

It was the hard times—and the offices.

It was Blount and the flag—and the offices.

It was the sending of troops to Chicago—and the offices.

It was the distribution of the offices.

The notable feature of our elections is the tendency of great numbers of voters to overthrow the powers that be. Mr. Bynum says, "that these sudden and overwhelming changes are evidences of a demoralized, if not a diseased public mind."

The Indianapolis Sentinel thinks that the causes are not upon the surface but are down deep, meaning thereby, we suppose, class oppression. It does not seem to THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE that it is necessary to go far for causes which have of late years produced election revolutions. We regard these changes, and the will and ability of the American people to make them, as exceedingly healthy. They come from the fact that nearly all the really able and at the same time honorable men in this country, are driven out of political life. The men we choose do not know how to bring about good government. As we have often said, they are largely of the ward politician type, who think that ward politics as they know it is the only essential to government. Witness Secretary Carlisle and Mr. Morton's coachman. The only lasting impression which our present democratic senators and representatives have made is in heading squads through the streets of Washington to the White House, running down spoil. For a year after the last election of President Cleveland, the majority in congress almost literally did nothing but divide offices. The people are not fools. That this clamoring crowd could have no capacity or desire for good government was plain to the plainest. It is preposterous to suppose that a country can not be governed without being racked as this has been for a year. The present set are not the first set, nor the second, whom the people have found out. It is not within the province of this journal to discuss general measures, but it can declare the one essential first step. Election revolutions will go on so long as primaries, conventions and party machines are controlled by patronage, because the product will be officials who live by patronage. The first step is to break up completely the patronage system. A congressman shall not have even a laborer's place to give away. Men who will make statesmen must be called into public life and when there, their sole business must be to master the principles of government and put them into operation. So long as we are ruled by bosses and henchmen, the "evidences of a demoralized, if not a diseased public mind," will continue.

THE INDIANA PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

The republicans in this state are stunned by their victory. They have carried the state by about 45,000. Such an enormous change, after being disastrously defeated in 1892, is proof too overwhelming that party ties have gone to pieces, and that at the next election the republican machine may be overthrown. At last the republican managers realize that their hold upon the people will be according to their works. It is with them to decide whether they will destroy their great majority before the election of 1896. Already here and there appears an itching to spoil the benevolent and penal institutions. It is covered with careful phrases, but there is a noticeable avoidance of advocacy of the only measure that will take these institutions once for all out of the domain of party politics. The party can wreck itself upon this question in the sixty days during which the next general assembly will be in session. The Indianapolis Journal warns the party that there must be "no ignoring of the reforms which republicans have been advocating for years past." This is the true stand to take. The first truth to be recognized is that merely making up boards from members of different parties is of itself valueless as a reform measure. Tammany Hall, in New York, nearly always had bi-partisan boards, and its police board now consists of two republicans and two democrats. It simply amounts to dividing the spoil between two sets of partisans. The suggestion that members of the boards should serve without pay is of great value. The governor should have the appointment of these boards, with full power of removal upon cause stated.

But, however carefully the upper frame work of the administration of these institutions may be arranged, they will be a source of political corruption, of public and private wrong, and of great party danger so long as there is any opportunity left for the exercise of favoritism in choosing employees. The sum of it is, that the merit-system of open competition, without regard to race, religion or politics, should be introduced for all the higher places, and what is known as the Boston labor system for the lower places. The first of these is found in its highest efficiency in the railway mail service, and the second is found in the city of Boston and in the navy-yards. These two systems are now so firmly rooted that it is recognized on every hand that they will soon revolutionize the conditions of public employment in this country. Why should Indiana be behind?

Since 1884 the republicans in this state have in conventions repeatedly declared for the merit system as it now exists in the federal service, and in the general assembly they have repeatedly voted unanimously for bills designed to introduce that system into the state service. The last of those bills was the Magee bill in 1891, which received the vote of every republican senator. There is absolutely no other way of finally settling the benevolent and penal institution question in this state. The republicans should stand by their reiterated professions in this matter. Now that they have the power, they can not dodge or adopt a subterfuge.

INDEPENDENT VOTING IN BALTIMORE.

The defeat of Charles G. Kerr, the "regular" candidate for associate judge of the supreme bench of Baltimore, shows that even in that ring-ridden city it is possible to beat a bad candidate if the people really want to do it. The bosses in Baltimore had no question of their ability to elect their man. Time and again they had re-elected him as states attorney in the face of the repeated censures of his administration by numerous grand juries. In his several campaigns for re-election he had beaten, by many thousands of votes, some of the ablest, best known and most respected lawyers at the Baltimore bar. Whether a republican or an independent democrat was opposed to him, apparently made little difference. Every time he came before the people his majorities became larger, although every year added more and more convincing demonstration of his utter unfitness for his place, and of the dangers to public morality which resulted therefrom.

This year a judge was to be elected. "Sonny" Mahon, who represents the gambling and whisky-selling elements of the dominant party, insisted on Mr. Kerr being nominated for the place. The other leaders preferred some one else. Many of the "regular" democrats prominent at the bar or in the business community, privately protested against the nomination, but the "pull" of the criminal and semi-criminal classes prevailed, and Mr. Kerr was nominated for judge unanimously, without a single other name being as much as mentioned in the convention. There was no organized independent movement in opposition to him, as there so often had been in the past. The republican candidate, although a well-trained lawyer of excellent character, who had been, as a member of the executive committee of the civil service reform association and a member of the reform league, an earnest but not conspicuous worker in the cause of good government, was not very widely known.

The prohibitionists moreover divided the moral forces which it might have been supposed would have been united in their support of Mr. Dobler, the republican candidate, by placing a nominee of their own in the field. Mr. Wallis, the clearest minded and most single purposed of all the Maryland independents, was dead. Mr. Cowen, their most vigorous fighter, had accepted the regular democratic nomination for congress, and was nightly speaking at meetings held in support of Cowen and Kerr, although it is believed that Mr. Cowen himself was careful to say nothing upon the judgeship.

Every newspaper in town predicted Mr. Kerr's election. The republican party organ made only a perfunctory opposition to him. Only the News, an independent democratic evening paper, vigorously urged his unfitness for the bench. Even it, however, did not expect to defeat him. The Baltimore reform league published in all the newspapers and circulated throughout the city its protest against his election, and the reasons upon which their protests were based. The good citizenship committee of the union of Christian Endeavor societies actively but quietly exerted themselves to compass his defeat. Still at four o'clock on election afternoon, the News, which had done such good service against him, conceded his election by a majority of thousands, expressing the opinion that he was running ahead of his ticket. When the ballots were counted, it was found that he had been beaten by a plurality of more than 3,500 votes.

NEWLY CLASSIFIED INDIANA POST-OFFICES.

An investigation of the newly classified post-offices in Indiana has been made with a view to determining what the postmasters have been doing with the places under them. The following is a summary of information, which shows in general the acts of the present Indiana postmasters under this administration up to July 31, 1894. We have treated all separations from the service, except by death, as removals. There are undoubtedly a very few genuine resignations, but we know from experience the great bulk of those so reported are forced and are, in effect, removals. The dates indicate the time when the present postmaster took charge, or when the office was classified.

Anderson—D. J. Crittenberger, postmaster, dem. May 6, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 13 competitive places. Made 6 competitive removals.

Columbus—Thomas A. Rush, postmaster, dem. August, 1893. Had 1 spoil and 8 competitive places. Made 1 spoil removal and 5 competitive.

Connersville—John M. Higgs, postmaster, dem. April 17, 1894. Had 1 spoil and 6 competitive places. Made no removals.

Crawfordsville—Ed Voris, postmaster, dem. September 28, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 6 competitive places. Made 2 spoil and 4 competitive removals.

Elkhart—E. A. Carpenter, postmaster, dem. February 16, 1894. Had 2 spoil and 11 competitive places. Made 2 spoil and 2 competitive removals.

Evansville—John J. Nolan, postmaster, dem. June 17, 1893. Had 16 spoil and 35 competitive places. Made 7 spoil and 24 competitive removals.

Fort Wayne—W. W. Rockhill, postmaster, dem. July 20, 1893. Had 7 spoil and 29 competitive places. Made 8 spoil and 19 competitive removals.

Frankfort—T. J. Smith, postmaster, dem. May 9, 1894. Had 1 spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 1 competitive removal.

Goshen—J. A. Beane, postmaster, dem. December 11, 1893. Had 1 spoil and 8 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 6 competitive removals.

Huntington—J. F. Fulton, postmaster, dem. November 20, 1893. Had 1 spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 4 competitive removals.

Jeffersonville—Patrick C. Donovan, postmaster, dem. December 11, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 3 competitive removals.

Kokomo—C. H. Leach, postmaster, dem. November 20, 1893. Had 1 spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 7 competitive removals.

Lafayette—Michael H. Kennedy, postmaster, dem. September 28, 1893. Had 13 spoil and 19 competitive places. Made 4 spoil and 6 competitive removals.

A REMOVAL FOR "CAUSE."

John McGrath, mail-carrier at Lafayette, set his heavily-filled mail pouch on the steps leading to the residence of John F. McHugh, while he delivered a letter to Mrs. McHugh. The walk was very slippery and the footing insecure. A young man named Will Evans [whose brother, we are informed, is an applicant for position of carrier—ED. CHRONICLE] captured the pouch and threw it into his sleigh, and although several citizens attempted to head him off, he drove rapidly to the post-office, where he preferred a charge against McGrath of abandoning his mail and exhibited the pouch in proof. The postmaster promptly suspended McGrath, whose politics are off-color.—Indianapolis News, Feb. 21, 1894.

La Porte—S. E. Grover, postmaster, dem. September 28, 1893. Had 1 spoil and 8 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 5 competitive removals.

Logansport—V. C. Hunawalt, postmaster, dem. January 31, 1894. Had 2 spoil and 14 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 12 competitive removals.

Madison—E. G. Niklaus, postmaster, dem. March 21, 1894. Had 2 spoil and 9 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 2 competitive removals.

Marion—C. M. Hawkins, postmaster, dem. May 6, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 13 competitive places. Made 9 competitive removals.

Michigan City—H. R. Harris, postmaster, dem. March 20, 1894. Had three spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil removal.

Muncie—Frank Ellis, postmaster, rep. May 6, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 11 competitive places. Made one spoil and one competitive removal.

New Albany—C. W. Schindler, postmaster, dem. September 28, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 15 competitive places. Made 2 spoil and 8 competitive removals.

Peru—John M. Jackson, postmaster, dem. December 19, 1893. Had one spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil removal.

Richmond—John G. Schwegman, postmaster, dem. January 18, 1894. Had 3 spoil and 15 competitive places. Made 3 spoil and 3 competitive removals.

Shelbyville—E. A. Major, postmaster, dem. February 16, 1894. Had 1 spoil and 6 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 1 competitive removal.

South Bend—Walter Harrigan, postmaster, dem. March 9, 1894. Had 5 spoil and 17 competitive places. Made 5 spoil removals and 1 competitive.

Terre Haute—A. H. Donham, postmaster, dem. May 13, 1893. Had 7 spoil and 25 competitive places. Made 8 spoil and 13 competitive removals.

Valparaiso—John Brodie, postmaster, dem. March 20, 1894. Had 1 spoil and 5 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 2 competitive removals.

Vincennes—Royal E. Purcell, postmaster, dem. May 27, 1893. Had 2 spoil and 7 competitive places. Made 1 spoil and 6 competitive removals.

AMERICAN FEUDALISM.

A spoils episode, showing how the chief fools his henchmen, and their retaliation, and illustrating the treachery and moral degradation that go along with public offices farmed out to congressmen and by them to their henchmen.

BEFORE THE ELECTION.

A bogie that is haunting Congressman Bynum is the office of collector of customs in this city. The charge has been made for months that in appointing a man to the position, he violated a number of promises, which, like chickens, have now come home to roost.

One of the staunchest of his friends was the late John A. Reaume, who stood by him during the time of the bolt, when Leon Bailey wanted to go to Congress. The friends of Reaume say that on several occasions Bynum assured them that at any time he could be of service to them he could be counted on. One day, the story goes, he stopped into Reaume's store and told him that he felt as if he would like to do something for him. He suggested that Reaume apply for the position of collector of customs at this port. So Mr. Reaume made the application when the proper time came, and went on to Washington to see Bynum. His friends say that he had a solemn promise of the place, and, until another man got the office, he was confident that he would be appointed.

While Reaume and his friends were so confident, there were others who felt just as sure. Among them was Maurice Donnelly. The friends of Donnelly say that they were assured that he should be appointed. Two of them were ready to make affidavit that they were given to understand that there was no question but he should have the place. Donnelly did a good deal of "hustling," and felt reasonably certain that he was to be the happy man. But there were other forces at work. It was asserted that what one faction of the local democracy called the "court-house crowd," had a candidate for the place in John Rail, of the fifteenth ward, who has been with the water company for many years.

It is claimed that on a Sunday before Mr. Bynum started for Washington, there was a meeting at the Spencer House. At that conference there were present Bynum, Thomas Taggart, Sterling R. Holt, John R. Wilson and James L. Kcach. It was the latter who was the sponsor of Rail. At that meeting the doom of Donnelly was sealed, and a promise given that Rail should be appointed. Bynum suggested that it would be a good idea to have three or four letters sent him by the friends of Donnelly, to the effect that as there was no show for Donnelly's appointment, and Rail would give satisfaction to Donnelly's friends. Each undertook to get the letters. He showed Rail's application in Bynum's handwriting to several of Donnelly's friends, but they did not fall over each other to write the asked-for letters. On the contrary, several missives in any thing but complimentary terms concerning Rail were sent to Bynum. But Rail's friends were confident, and it is told that he was requested to go to the custom-house to become acquainted with the duties that he would soon be called upon to perform. Rail waited. Meantime other candidates entered the field. Thomas Madden was told that he stood a first-class show, and he went to Washington to see about it. On his return his friends were jubilant. "Captain Tom" had positive assurance that he was the man who would eat the plum. Then it was claimed that Daniel Burton had been made the man by the machinations of John E. Sullivan. There was not a happier man in town than Burton. And while he was enjoying his new-found happiness, Charles Bridges was not going around with a heavy heart. The collectorship, he thought, was within his grasp. In all there were some fifteen or sixteen persons who thought they had a promise of the place. But none of them got it. The prize went to George Tanner, an "unknown" in the race.

In this connection the friends of Rail are telling an anti-convention story. Charles Polster has always been a strong Bynum man. Tanner has always been against anything that Polster and his crowd favored. Polster and Tanner live in the same ward. When the convention met in that ward to select delegates to the congressional convention, there was an agreement, it is said, that, when Polster called the meeting to order, he was to recognize no one but Tanner on the calls for permanent chairman. Tanner was to nominate Thomas Taggart and Polster would see that the election of Taggart was assured. This arrangement was carried out. Tanner nominated Taggart for chairman; he was elected without opposition and named the Bynum delegates to the congressional convention. The friend of Rail says that the meeting was not held, as reported, at the No. 1 engine-house, but in the oyster-house attached to Polster's saloon.

Sterling R. Holt was asked concerning the meeting at the Spencer House.

"I heard that Bynum was at the Spencer House, but I did not see him there. I never had any direct communication with any one who was at that meeting.

"What do you know about Mr. Bynum's promise to Rail?"

"I only know that he promised the place to Rail if he could get it for him."

Thomas Taggart was more inclined to furnish information on the subject.

"I was present at that meeting, and Mr. Bynum did promise Mr. Rail that he would recommend him for the place on the strength of the recommendations that had been furnished Mr. Bynum. The reason that Mr. Rail was not appointed was because certain persons here sent to the President protesting against the appointment on the grounds of Mr. Rail's illiteracy, and with the protests they sent some resolutions introduced in the board of aldermen by Mr. Rail to show that his education was not such as fitted him for the position. Mr. Bynum was loyal to Mr. Rail until the President informed him that he could not appoint Mr. Rail to the place."—Indianapolis News.

AFTER THE ELECTION.

Congressman Bynum's charge that three of the candidates for the office of surveyor of customs offered him bribes for the appointment is beginning to bring out expressions from some of the applicants. One of them is dead. Several others express themselves.

Thomas Madden writes the following open letter to Mr. Bynum:

"The Hon. W. D. Bynum:

"DEAR SIR—Your published interview in the Indianapolis News of the 7th inst. charges applicants for the office of surveyor of customs in this city with attempts to bribe you in sums of 20 per cent. of the receipts of the office to $5,000 cash in hand. As my name was mentioned at one time in connection with that office, I think it but just and fair to all that you name the would-be bribers. And you are at liberty to publish any correspondence that we have had. Very respectfully,

"THOMAS MADDEN."

Maurice Donnelly, whose name was mentioned among the applicants, says to The News:

"In your issue of Wednesday, in an interview with Mr. Bynum, he was quoted as applying some very ungentlemanly epithets to the applicants for surveyor of customs of this port. He thought fit to give the parting kick to the many men who made personal sacrifices in order that he might be launched into prominence. If Mr. Bynum is sincere in what he states about the considerations offered him, why should he not publish the names of the persons who made him the offers, and not cast odium upon all who went to Washington to attend the inauguration of Grover Cleveland.

"I can confidently state that I was too poor to take $5,000 along to give Mr. Bynum for the position of collector. I felt satisfied from what I heard from several sources that such a position could only be obtained by such means as he now feels disposed to condemn." * * *

—Indianapolis News, November 10.

* * *

Mr. Madden says:

"Practically the surveyorship was offered me by Mr. Bynum. It came about in this way: One evening in August, 1893, Austin H. Brown, one of my particular friends, came to my house and told me that I had better see Bynum. 'Mr. Bynum wants to see you. He is at the Grand Hotel, and I think you had better go down to-night,' were the exact words used by Mr. Brown. I clearly understood that Mr. Bynum wanted to see me about the office of surveyor of customs, but the hour was late and I decided to wait until morning before going to the hotel. Monday morning I called at the Grand Hotel, and was told that Mr. Bynum had left the night before for Washington. Two days later I took the advice of my friends and started to Washington. I was there just two hours and a half, and saw no one but Congressman Bynum. I found him at his house and abruptly told him I had understood he wanted to see me about the collectorship. 'Yes, that is true,' he said. We talked for an hour about the matter. At the outset I said:

"'Mr. Bynum, I have understood that Maurice Donnelly and John Rail are both applicants for this place. I want to know about this, and will not permit my name to be used until this is made clear. I also want to be sure about my appointment before my name is presented to the President.'

"'You may understand, Mr. Madden,' said the congressman, 'that the President will never entertain the applications of Messrs. Donnelly and Rail. If President Cleveland was in the city at this time your name would be gazetted before you return to Indianapolis.'

"This concluded the conversation between Mr. Bynum and myself," continued Mr. Madden, "and I returned home at once with the understanding that as soon as I forwarded my list of letters, my name would at once be placed before the President. I have since learned that my name at no time came before the President, and I am positive that the names of Maurice Donnelly and John Rail shared the same fate. Within a few weeks after my return to Indianapolis I secured a number of letters from well-known gentlemen, one of which was given me by Mr. Tanner, the present surveyor of customs. I forwarded them all to Mr. Bynum, and received an acknowledgment from him. That was the last I heard of my appointment until November, when I received a letter from Mr. Bynum. He wrote at length and said a great many things. One of his statements was 'that there was a time' when he could have done certain things for me. I understood by his letter that I would not receive the appointment. I wrote a reply, in which I said that the democratic party would not lose a single vote on account of the turn affairs had taken. Before posting the letter I was told that some charges had been made against my character in Washington. I did not understand this, and instead of sending the reply I had written, I went to Washington. I saw Mr. Bynum and went to the theater with him. There he denied that my character had been assailed, but used this expression: 'It is said in Indianapolis, Mr. Madden, that there has been a bargain and sale between you and me.' I resented this, of course, and told Mr. Bynum that it was untrue; that I was above corruption in the matter, and had never entertained such an idea. * * * On my first visit to Washington, Mr. Bynum asked me what I thought his chances would be in the next congressional race. I told him plainly that it would not be possible to elect any democrat to congress from this district. Although I was friendly to him then, I told him that Mr. Henry would be the republican nominee, and that he would be elected. I further said to Mr. Bynum that it would cost him (Bynum) $20,000 to make the race; that it would require that much to fix the 'heelers.' * *

Maurice Donnelly said last night that he was anxious for Congressman Bynum to produce the names of the alleged bribers. He had seen the Washington interview with Mr. Bynum, in which the latter had said he would reply to the Dounelly-Madden card as soon as he had seen it.

"Until he does this," said Mr. Donnelly, "I haven't much to say. I don't like this thing of having 'bribery' flaunted in my face. It stings. I never made any such overtures to Mr. Bynum. I only applied for the position of surveyor of customs, because it was the understanding that the positions were to be given out to representative men of the different nationalities. The post-office was to go to a German and the surveyorship of customs to an Irishman. I did not get the office for reasons which I could not talk of intelligently at this time. It looked, however, as if the office was to go to the highest bidder."

"Do you mean to impute corruption or bribery to Mr. Tanner?" was asked.

"No; I haven't anything to say about Mr. Tanner. I know nothing of his relations with Mr. Bynum."—Indianapolis Journal, Nov. 12.

CONGRESSMAN BYNUM'S LETTER.

Mr. Thomas Madden, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of a copy of the Indianapolis News of Saturday last containing an open letter addressed to me by you. In answer to the same I wish to say the original interview with me, of which you complain, as it appeared in the News, was not correctly reported.

I was reported to have said "that a party had drawn out of bank $5,000 and had come to Washington and offered the same to me if I would secure his appointment as surveyor of the port of Indianapolis." What I did say was that I had been informed by a credible person that a party had drawn out of bank a large sum and stated that he was going to Washington to secure the appointment; that the only person who came here and personally sought my indorsement never received it.

Whether the party who was said to have drawn the money and intimated his intention of trying to purchase the office was yourself I do not pretend to say, as no name was given to me. All I know is that you came to Washington and personally sought the position; that during our conversation you spoke of your successful business during the previous year, that the compensation of the office was not an important matter with you, and that if you should secure the same you could and would make very generous contributions for campaign purposes. I replied to you that my recommendation carried no such obligations, that the only assurance I desired was that whoever should be appointed should faithfully and honestly discharge the duties. I am frank to say to you that at the time I did not think you intended to make an immoral proposition, but only to give assurance that in case of your appointment you would not be inclined to shirk a legitimate party obligation. It was not until I returned home for the campaign and was advised of your infamous and false insinuations that I had intimated to you that you could have my indorsement for a consideration, and of the further facts that some one had come to Washington with the avowed intention of trying to secure the position by improper methods, that I viewed with suspicion your proposition for liberal contributions for campaign purposes and became impressed with the belief that it was only made as a "feeler" and that you were ready to make a much bolder one upon the slightest encouragement. So far as your letters, written to me after your visit, there is nothing in them but the most honorable statements, especially of yourself, and expressions of the appreciation of the courteous treatment you had received from myself.

I desire to add that after the President had expressed a disinclination to appoint Mr. Rail, the contest between his and Mr. Donnelly's friends became so bitter that I deemed it best to recommend some one not seriously involved in the controversy. I practically made up my mind to recommend your appointment. I had the highest opinion of your abilities and character, and expressed myself to two of your friends as willing to overlook your opposition in 1886, when you did everything in your power to defeat me. I so informed you when you came to Washington, but at the same time cautioned you that you could not succeed by becoming an avowed applicant; that so long as there was the least hope for Mr. Rail's appointment I intended to stand by him. Instead of pursuing the course I indicated and returning and remaining perfectly passive, you at once openly became an applicant by securing indorsements and publishing the fact in the News. This, as I told you at Indianapolis when there attending the city election, gave your opponents an opportunity to attack your party fealty, which they did in such a vigorous manner that I felt I could not stem the opposition. After this generous action upon my part you can imagine my surprise to learn, when I returned home, that one in whom I had placed so much confidence, and of whom I entertained such high opinions, was not only opposing my election by caucusing almost nightly with others to aid in my defeat, but was endeavoring, by the most willful, malicious and false insinuations, to injure me in the estimation of those who had so often honored me.

While I may have done injustice to some of the honorable gentlemen who desired the place by going entirely outside for a candidate, I congratulate myself that I escaped the odium of recommending one whose character was so fully impregnated with ingratitude, treachery and perfidy. As you are interested only in so far as my interview cast a reflection upon yourself, I deem this all the information to which you are entitled.

W. D. BYNUM.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 12.

* * *

It was Wednesday afternoon of last week at the Grand Hotel that Congressman Bynum, within a short time of his leaving for Washington, voluntarily made a remark that led to his statement given in The News of that afternoon concerning offers of money having come to him if he would recommend certain men for appointment as collector of customs of this port. The initiatory remark to The News reporter was: "If any one says I made him a promise or promised to recommend any one for office and did not fulfill it, he is a d—d liar." Mr. Bynum then denounced the men—without naming them—who had sought his favor for appointment to office, and not receiving it had opposed his reelection. He used the word rascal several times, and his profanity was somewhat robust.

"One man," he continued, "offered me, and I have it in writing, 20 per cent. of the proceeds of the office of collector of customs if I would recommend him for appointment to that office."

Chairman Taggart, of the democratic state central committee, and Attorney-General-elect Ketcham then joined the congressman and reporters. The congressman repeated the remark quoted, and, continuing, said: "Another man offered me $5,000 cash and another drew $5,000 from bank and went to Washington to see me."

"Can I use that?" asked the reporter.

"Yes," said Mr. Bynum, "but leave out the cuss words."

That there should be no mistake about the matter, the reporter asked Mr. Bynum as to the material points of his voluntary statement, and in less than fifteen minutes had the interview written as it was repeated.

Mr. Bynum's statement that "another drew $5,000 from bank" was direct. It was not qualified by "his having learned it" since he had been here, but was given as a transaction of which he and the applicant alone had knowledge. "I became so disgusted with the rascals," said he, "that I wrote to Mr. Tanner, asking him for permission to use his name, in recommending an appointment for the office. Before that I had no communication of any kind with Mr. Tanner. I had not thought of him in that connection. His appointment occurred to me as the shortest and best way out of the disreputable and disgusting struggle. The letter I wrote him and his reply were all that passed between us in regard to the appointment."

"Will you let me have the letter containing the 20 per cent. offer for the office?" the reporter asked Mr. Bynum, when he and the reporter were again alone.

"I would rather not give that out for publication. It would serve no good purpose. The writer is dead."

"As to the two other offers?"

"I do not care to name them." It will be time enough for that, if they think proper to say anything. I am ready for them."

A man from out of town then approached Mr. Bynum, and, talking with him a few minutes, left with no satisfactory replies from the congressman. "It has been my experience," said Mr. Bynum, turning again to the reporter, "that when you have an office to fill and there are thirteen applicants, you make twelve enemies and one ingrate."—Indianapolis News, November 13.

* * *

Maurice Donnelly this morning received a letter from Congressman Bynum. The letter came by registered mail, and in it Mr. Bynum said that as to the charges he made of an attempt to purchase federal appointment, he wished to exonerate Mr. Donnelly and his friends from any corrupt implication. He added that if Mr. Donnelly had said that he understood that such methods would procure the office, basing his remarks on anything that Mr. Bynum had said or done, it was a malicious falsehood.

In regard to the letter, Mr. Donnelly said: "I shall reply to Mr. Bynum and let him make the reply public if he wants to. I did not say I understood that such methods would procure the office, and he equivocates when he says this. I did say that it was common talk among members of his own party in this congressional district that such means would procure the appointment."—Indianapolis News, November 15.

DEFIANCE OF THE PRESIDENT'S ORDER.

Joseph C. Nichols, chief law clerk of the auditor's office of the treasury department, will leave to-morrow for Indiana, where he will plunge into the campaign. Washington dispatch Indianapolis Sentinel, October 24.

Judge Lewis Jordan, chief of the miscellaneous bureau of the treasury department at Washington, has returned home to spend his annual vacation. While here he will take an active part in the state campaign.—Indianapolis Sentinel, October 22.

[Jordan spoke at Camden, Cynthiana, New Harmony, Spencer, Boonville.]

Sam Myer of Rockport, document clerk of the government printing office, and Capt. Ben Johnson and James Compton of Indianapolis, left for home this afternoon to take part in the campaign.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis Sentinel, November 1.

Deputies in the state offices for several days have been addressing envelopes for the democratic state committee. To the complaint that state employes should not be allowed to do work for the political parties, the explanation was made that it is customary. Some of the deputies are required to go to the committee-rooms at night to address envelopes.—Indianapolis News, October 22.

* * *

Complaint is made that Joseph L. Reiley chief clerk in the local pension office, violates President Cleveland's rule governing the political activity of federal office-holders in acting as secretary of the state democratic committee.

Mr. Reiley was found to-day in the democratic committee rooms. When asked about the charge that he has violated the federal rules, he said:

"I have never read Mr. Cleveland's rule and it cuts no figure in my case, I think. The President's letter is not necessarily binding. Work in the pension office is light at this time; and my committee duties are not interfering with my supervision of the pension clerks."

Pension Agent Spencer said: "Mr. Reiley is not occupied in the committee work but a part of his time. His work in the office is done first. I do not think he is violating the President's rule. My aim in this office is to obey the law, and for this reason I have not made speeches in the present campaign."—Indianapolis News, October 26.

[October 26, District-Attorney Burke spoke at Patriot.]

Walter H. Bunn, who is United States appraiser, was hard at work at headquarters last night. James H. Grier, Corresponding Secretary of the Granite Cutters' National Union of New York City, sent a letter to Senator Hill yesterday, informing him that the local branch of the order had unanimously indorsed him on account of his attitude toward organized labor.—New York Times, October 31.

* * *

Senator Hill had a busy day. Beside seeing ex-Mayor William R. Grace, Francis M. Scott, Mayor Gilroy, James J. Martin, and Senator Faulkner on the congressional business, he also saw many democrats of prominence from up the state. One of these was William A. Poucher, of Oswego, United States district attorney for the northern district of New York. Speaking of the canvass, Mr. Poucher said:

"The democratic outlook in Oswego county, and the northern tier of counties, was never better."—New York Times, Oct. 24.

* * *

Internal Revenue Collector Edward Grosse may have charges preferred against him for "pernicious activity" during the late political campaign.

The offense that he is alleged to have committed was in assailing Senator Hill at public meetings, and in refusing to allow public speakers to address meetings under his management until they had promised not to mention Senator Hill's name.—New York Times, Nov. 11.

* * *

Adam Bode, United States marshal of Minnesota, resigned because he wanted to pitch into campaign work. Attorney-general Olney says in his letter of reply:

"I have just been obliged to call for the resignation of a United States marshal who, beginning a political campaign with speech-making, ended by shooting, and is now under indictment for murder. From the tone and temper of your letter, it would not be surprising to find you in the like predicament, should you undertake to be a political worker and United States marshal at the same time. Undue excitement and recklessness are almost inevitable when to ordinary political partisanship is added the personal interest inseparable from office-holding."

TRUE TO THEIR KIND.

A Washington paper says: "Secretary Carlisle regrets as much as any one that he was compelled by public business to decline invitations to speak in New York this week. He is thoroughly in sympathy with the democrats in the Empire State, and it is his earnest wish that the party meet with success on election day."

"The secretary said yesterday that he earnestly desired to see not only Senator Hill, but the entire democratic ticket, elected. He said that democrats in New York especially should sink their personal feelings, and give loyal support to the democratic ticket, as the election in New York would have an important bearing on the presidential election in 1896."

"He believed that, if every democrat did his duty, and voted the straight ticket, there would be no question as to the result next Tuesday."

"As Senator Hill has always been successful heretofore, the secretary believed that victory would again perch on the Senator's banner this year."—Washington dispatch New York Times, October 31.

* * *

Assistant Secretary of the Navy McAdoo left Washington to-night to help Senator Hill in New York. He will speak to-morrow night at Cohoes and Friday night at Peekskill. He expects to talk at Wilmington, Del., Saturday night, and on Monday he will make several speeches in Hoboken and Jersey City.—Washington dispatch New York Times, Oct. 31.

* * *

Public Printer Benedict is very hopeful of democratic success in New York. He is in very close touch with the democracy of the state, and is in constant correspondence with the leaders. His letters assure him that the party is united and enthusiastic, and as soon as possible he will start for home to assist in securing the victory which he expects. He says the Wheeler ticket has no strength outside of Kings, New York, and Erie counties.—Washington dispatch New York Times, October 31.

THE RECENT BLACKMAILING.

October 24, Postmaster-General Bissell addressed a circular letter to all free delivery offices, citing the law, and saying:

It also must be clearly understood that no clerk, carrier or other employe of your office will be jeopardized in his position for a refusal to comply with a request for a political contribution. Upon receipt of this letter you will prepare a number of copies thereof and post same conspicuously in each division of your office.

In the August number of this paper were the details of the "stand and deliver" assessment of Taylor, Recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, and the Shelley circular to the Alabamians in the departments. Mr. Roosevelt, in a recent interview, says:

The commission recently had before it the case of the Recorder of deeds, Taylor, and during the investigation it was proved that wherever the civil service law did not obtain in Washington a condition of actual terror existed in the public service, and that janitors, porters and all other employes were forced to pay politicians for places and pay to retain them. Anything more degrading, more servile, more vicious can not be imagined.

In the October number were mentioned the reports of the blackmailing of federal employes at San Francisco, the Philadelphia mint, and at Pittsburgh. We give the following regarding the San Francisco assessments:

It appears that the campaign assessor in San Francisco is one Lee D. Craig. The form of his letter to the federal employes in that city recalls the familiar Jay Hubbell circular of 1881, in the frankness with which it names even the amounts which the clerk is expected to put up. It reads:

SIR: Feeling that as an office-holder, you are desirous of seeing the present administration perpetuated, and to that end are anxious that the democratic ticket be successful at the coming election, you are advised that it has been decided to ask of you a subscription towards defraying the expenses of the coming campaign. It is suggested that an amount equal to two (2) per cent. of your yearly salary would be about the sum you should subscribe, and it is trusted that your patriotic sentiments and sound democracy will prompt you to respond without delay. Please call on Mr. Lee D. Craig, notary public, at No. 316 Montgomery street, who is authorized to receive this subscription and give receipts for same. Respectfully,

LEE D. CRAIG.

If this man were strictly an "outsider," and contrived to keep within the terms of Attorney-General Olney's curious interpretation of the law, by addressing his victims only by letter, he might not come within so easy reach of the secretary's hand. But it seems that he is a notary public, and, by grace of a permit from Mr. Carlisle, is given the privilege of keeping his desk in the custom-house. He has a large sign hung prominently in the building, advertising his business, and the employes who have to swear to vouchers for services, do so before him, paying him twenty-five cents every time he signs his name to a jurat.—Washington dispatch New York Evening Post, October 29.

* * *

The civil service commission investigated the Pittsburgh assessments, and found as reported in the New York Evening Post, of October 25:

Postmaster O'Donnell has levied no assessments himself and has neither advised nor directed the political action of any clerk or carrier, so far as can be learned. But on the other hand he was aware that assessments were being levied right and left, and does not appear to have done anything to prevent it. The treasurer of the local democratic committee, a man named Fleming, has come down upon every clerk and carrier in the post-office for a campaign contribution. His mode of procedure was the customary one—first, a letter sent to the victim, requesting him to call at a certain address; when the victim responded, a stand-and-deliver demand. The amount called for was about 2 per cent. of the employe's salary. Mr. Fleming sheltered himself behind the opinion recently given by Attorney-General Olney, that solicitation within a government building is not solicitation, so long as it is made by letter and not orally. The success which attended this scheme stamps it as political blackmail pure and simple, since the republicans in the force were frightened at the prospect of losing their places if they did not hand over their money. Some of them did so at once, and the others were about to do so when the commission stepped in and interfered.

In the internal revenue office matters are in a still more offensive condition, though the law has not been violated. The internal revenue district embraces several congressional districts, including those of Representatives Sipe and Sibley. Mr. Sipe, being in favor with the administration, has enjoyed by far the largest amount of patronage of any one in the district. It was at his instance that the collector, Mr. Kearns, was appointed, and Kearns returns the compliment by giving Sipe pretty nearly anything he wants in the collector's office. Sibley, with his heterodox views on silver and the tariff, has been frowned on in Washington, and has got very few appointments, even of those properly pertaining to the district, the majority being made on the recommendation of the local party bosses. The effect of this arrangement is, of course, to fill up the collector's office with active ward workers, the sort of fellows who manage things at the primaries and the polls. They have not been blackmailed, for the very simple reason that it is not necessary to blackmail them. Educated by their experience in practical politics to recognize in an appointment to office nothing but a purchase and sale, they have been honest in carrying out their share of the transaction, and, for value received, have handed over to the treasurer of the campaign fund various sums, ranging all the way from $35 to $150 apiece, or making an aggregate of some six or seven thousand dollars.

Kearns, as the readers of the Evening Post may remember, was the spoilsman who made the most consistent record of any of equal authority in the country in the year 1893. Secretary Carlisle made him custodian of the public building at Pittsburgh, and the first thing he did after taking charge was to call for the pay-roll. He found there twenty-one employes of both sexes. He discharged every one of them on twelve days' notice, and proceeded to fill their places without more ado. The women were cleaners, getting three hundred dollars a year, and Kearns frankly admitted that they earned it all; the men were engineers and stokers, elevator conductors, hallmen, doorkeepers, watchmen, and the like. Most of them were democrats, appointed during the former Cleveland administration, who had been retained by the republicans because they gave satisfactory service. When a democrat ventured to inquire why he included men of his own party in his sweep, Kearns answered:

"These employes received their notice of dismissal last November. It is a mistake to say that there are any good democrats among them. Every one of them held office under a republican administration, and that wipes out all the democracy they ever possessed. Why, if I had found my own brother here when I came, and he had been drawing a salary under a republican administration for one day, I would have fired him at once. That's the kind of democrat I am! The people demanded a change last November—not only a change in the heads of the government and departments, but a change clear down to the charwomen, and that is the kind of a change it is my sacred duty to give them, as far as is in my power. Some of the discharged employes are good people, I know, but they are not good democrats."

* * *

The civil service commission has received from a postmaster in Washington state a copy of a circular from the democratic committee levying an assessment of $5 on each postmaster. It has the heading of the committee and is signed by Charles De France, secretary. It states that "The committee having had under consideration the necessity and ways and means of raising funds for the campaign, has concluded that those who are enjoying the benefits of democratic success in the past should contribute to the expenses of the present campaign. The committee has, therefore, assessed you $5."

* * *

The commission discovered, early in the campaign, that in certain Indiana towns the democratic county committees were soliciting campaign contributions from officeholders. The commission accordingly issued a circular explaining to officeholders that they need not contribute anywhere, and this was hung up in public buildings wherever practicable. An attempt to collect assessments was made in Boston, but was checked by the action of the collector of customs himself. There were efforts to collect assessments also in Illinois and Kansas. All the persons implicated were careful to shield themselves behind the attorney-general's opinion, and the commission could do nothing save give publicity to what was going on and explain to the persons from whom money was sought that they need not pay a cent. Mr. Olney's interpretation of the law appears to have given the blackmailing crowd more solid comfort than anything that has happened since Jay Hubbell was pitched out of public life.—Good Government for November.

CURRENT SPOIL.

President Cleveland to-day nominated James W. Burgess as postmaster at Dunkirk. It was made on the recommendation of Congressman Martin, who sought to have the appointment made before congress adjourned, and asked for the removal of the republican incumbent.—Washington dispatch Indianapolis News, October 27.

An illustration of the Tammany tactics was given the other day when Mike Lawler, formerly chief of police, now keeping a grocery with saloon attachment, asked John E. Lamb for a position in the revenue office. Lamb asked him where he bought whisky and beer for his saloon. Lawler said he bought whisky from Indianapolis and his beer from the Indianapolis Brewing Company. Lamb retorted: "If you would buy your whisky of Hulman & Beggs and your beer of the Terre Haute brewery there might be a chance of your getting a place."—Indianapolis Journal, November 4.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE,
Indianapolis, Ind.

The advantages to the public service of an adherence to the principles of civil service reform are constantly more apparent, and nothing is so encouraging to those in official life who honestly desire good government as the increasing appreciation by our people of these advantages. A vast majority of the voters of the land are ready to insist that the time and attention of those they select to perform for them important public duties should not be distracted by doling out minor offices, and they are growing to be unanimous in regarding party organization as something that should be used in establishing party principles instead of dictating the distribution of public places as rewards for partisan activity.—From the President's Message.

THE meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League, in Chicago, December 12 and 13, was the most vigorous held by the league for years. The effect of the rapid spread of the reform was shown in the appearance of new men from all directions. The address of Mr. Schurz was of the highest order and was the equal of anything he has ever written. The signs indicate that there is to be almost a race on every hand in states and cities to establish the merit and the labor service systems; Illinois for instance, is almost certain to do so this winter, and bills are all ready for many legislatures. Open opposition to the reform has for the present at least ceased. The fellow who fears the Chinese system, or an aristocracy of office-holders, is still here, but the people are no longer interested in him. The reform has become popular. The original, "way-back" civil service reformer is rising up everywhere and he is welcome; no one will dispute any claim he may make if he has now got ready to stand up and lay about him and help get laws through his legislature.

Referring again to the league meeting, the speech of Mr. Schurz is published in full in the New York Evening Post, of December 13, and the full proceedings of the meetings will be published in the organ of the league, Good Government, for December.

THE National Letter Carriers' Association sent delegates to the league meeting, and they asked the meeting to indorse a bill of their association which provides that carriers and other large classes of federal employes shall not be dismissed, unless indicted for crime, until charges have been filed against them, under rules fixed by the head of the department, and they have had a chance to be heard. The sentiment of the league seemed nearly unanimous in favor of their bill, but the matter was referred to the executive committee with discretionary power to act. It is a question of the greatest importance and both sides should be well considered. Would such a law legislate reform into a rut? There is no question but that there has all along been an enormous abuse of the power of dismissal and that wrong without limit has been committed by it. There is also no doubt but that such a law would bring a quicker remedy than will otherwise be reached and that it would afford a decided present reform. On the other side is to be considered whether the same end will not within a reasonable time be reached by executive order and public opinion. We think this has already been attained in the railway mail service and with letter carriers by an order of Postmaster-General Bissell. The matter goes to the question of discipline and efficiency, and whether the same words in a law of congress will not tend to make the subordinate less careful of his duty than if they are embodied in an executive order or in effect in a public sentiment which makes it odious for any officer to abuse the power of dismissal.

DON'T let us have any mistake about "bi-partisan" boards, if we do have them, and try to saddle them off on the state of Indiana as reform. Let there be no theories about each stern Roman on his bi-partisan board watching the other party to see that his colleague is doing full duty to the tax-payers; each bi-partisan has an eye single to getting an equitable division of spoil. Should it come to any attack on the spoil itself the bi-partisan board ceases to know any party distinctions. The way these boards work in practice is illustrated by the following from the New York Evening Post of April 25, regarding the New Haven Board of Public Works and street patronage:

"The scheme has created general dissatisfaction, for I am looking out for the republicans, and they have not received a fair share of the distribution of the work," said Commissioner Johnson. "If Commissioner Brown does not care for the patronage, it should go to Commissioner Bishop and myself, the two other republicans of this board."

"You ought to be thankful to get as much as you do," retorted Commissioner McGann amid a general laugh.

The mayor then asked Commissioner Johnson if he would like to put an A. P. A. man at work on the streets.

"I do not know whether my men are A. P. A.'s or not, but I can not sit here without protesting against the unequal division of the work," said Commissioner Johnson in reply to this serious inquiry. The democrats have ten teams on the streets, while we have only four. This matter can be adjusted outside this meeting, and the subject dropped."

SINCE the last issue of the CHRONICLE the President has put under the classified service the employes of the geological survey, numbering about 150 places. This was done at the request of Secretary Smith. He has also put the internal revenue service under the law, some 2,471 employes. The dispatches say this was done after a consultation with Secretary Carlisle and it perhaps explains why the appointees for the collection of the income tax are not included as they certainly should have been. There has been no greater scandal than the internal revenue service engaged for weeks in setting up pins for the renomination of their congressmen; and after it got them nominated engaging in a violent struggle to get them elected. In many parts of the country it was an unpleasant realization of being ruled by an office-holding class.

IN the CHRONICLE for June, 1893, was given an account of how Bynum and Turpie had determined that none but "good sound democrats," male or female, could be trusted to inspect meat for export, and had made a clean sweep in that department at Indianapolis. In November following was given an account of how Bynum had set up another bureau to inspect meat for home consumption and had filled the places also with "good sound democrats." He appointed as meat inspectors Fox, the shoemaker, Wampner, the carpenter, and Peggs, the teamster, and for taggers he named Quinn, Clegg and Kilian. Months passed and the recent election came and went. Now the head of the bureau, Dr. E. H. Pritchard, begins to find the persons foisted upon him wholly incompetent, and a few days ago he discharged Quinn, Clegg and Killian for that reason. But Congressman Bynum, although overwhelmingly discredited in his own district and knowing nothing of the fitness of the men, seems yet to have a pull with Secretary Morton, and two of the men have been reinstated. Dr. Pritchard says in the Indianapolis Journal, "There is little for me to say further than that two of my men have been reinstated through the influence of Mr. Bynum, after I had reported them unfit for the positions." There is reason to believe that Bynum's pull will not last; at least Secretary Morton should understand that the people of this district have had enough of Tammanyism.

THE Voorhees crowd in Indiana are true blue to the last. Their openly-avowed plan of clearing out the Terre Haute post-office in order to cheat the civil service law and the trouble it made are matters of history. Now, again the day before the rules are to take effect in the internal revenue service, Collector Joshua Jump, of the Terre Haute district, assisted, it is said, by Lamb and Voorhees at Washington, worked ten henchmen into places. Probably we must expect such expiring kicks from men who are upheld solely by the spoils system; but this picayune treachery to the reform professions of the administration should not be sanctioned by Jump's superiors, and every one of these appointments should be revoked.

THE Indianapolis News has celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, and it is entitled to the gratitude of every citizen who cares for the character of the state of Indiana. This state has a low political reputation; in fact it is higher than Ohio, Maryland, Pennsylvania, or even New York. Its dubious name continues because Indiana was bigoted, hide-bound, moss-backed and chained to the party fetish. To the unswerving independence of the Indianapolis News, and its influence in favor of honest men, honest politics and honest government, for its hostility to spoils and spoilsmen, is largely due the fact that Indiana has outgrown its former condition. A great deal of this feeling for reform is yet inarticulate in the state. It votes but it does not talk. Its clergy, its school teachers, its colleges are still reticent and timid. The CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE is sent to the reading rooms of many Christian associations. It is doubtful whether it is yet put within the reach of readers in one-half of these. There is a leading college in the state which prints in its annual catalogue a list of the periodicals donated and purchased for its reading-room. The CHRONICLE has been sent for years, but its name is never mentioned. This is old Indiana, fearful of independent speaking. But a new Indiana is moving forward quietly and irresistibly.

IN the new life of Whittier, by Samuel J. Pickard, facts are candidly given which explain why we never saw a sympathetic word from the quaker abolitionist for the reform stand taken by Lowell and George William Curtis, fellow-abolitionists, upon the spoils system. We understand too why before every important election Whittier yielded to some sinister influence, and wrote a letter that in fact acted as a decoy for the respectable partisans whose consciences had been a little troubled by party deeds but who were always quick to go back into the party fold upon such appeals of good men. Whittier was an abolitionist, but he was a partisan and politician, and a "valiant henchman of Caleb Cushing." A reviewer says:

"Nor do these pages afford any evidence that he ever repented of his early doctrine of the claim of the political victors on the spoils. If there is a hint of his devotion to or interest in civil service reform, it has escaped our scrutiny."

AN example of painful and positive moral debasement is the aged Frederick Douglass. Brave men of such lofty and unselfish patriotism have sacrificed themselves in behalf of him and his race that his stand seems shameful and indefensible. Hear him as reported by the Springfield Republican:

Frederick Douglass has come out as a defender of the negro politician Astwood, who has flopped back into the republican party because the democrats would not give him an office. Douglass says that Astwood has done rightly and that the grounds for his action are approved. Then he goes on to say that the only place for a negro who wants an office is in the republican party, and cites several instances to prove his assertion. George T. Downing is one; he left the republican party some years ago, "but he has gotten nothing." "T. Thomas Fortune left us also, but he was shrewd enough to see how things were going and he jumped back." Douglass goes on at some length, in the interview from which these quotations are taken, to the same effect, the whole tendency of his talk going to show that the average negro politician—himself included—is a mercenary whose only idea of party is a machine for distributing offices, and whose only principles are those of the spoilsman.

ANOTHER historic example ought to be studied by the earnest citizens of to-day. Who shall be the guide, Garrison, Quincy, Lowell, Sumner and Giddings or the late Robert C. Winthrop? The first, so burned with the wickedness of slavery that they were forced to plain and disagreeable speech, and no political party could ever bind their acts or their principles. Mr. Winthrop was of singularly lofty character, but first of all he was a whig. He recognized the evils of slavery, but as a whig and as a gentleman his conscience only drove him to such protest as was always seemly. His was a noble type of American, but so noble that it was almost a blot not to have been nobler. The abolition of spoils involves every sentiment involved in the abolition of slavery except the bodily stripes; it is as cruel, as spiritually debasing as slavery, and it has been the cause of the moral deterioration of more men who started with worthy aspirations than ever slavery was. The great movement of our day should be studied by the candid examination of these leaders in the other great movement, and we believe every one must feel that the radical group was in closer touch with the great truths of reform and personal duty than was Mr. Winthrop.

THE REFORMER.

Before the monstrosity wrong he sets him down—
One man against a stone-walled city of sin.
For centuries those walls have been a-building;
Smooth porphyry, they slope and coldly glass
The flying storm and wheeling sun. No chink,
No crevice lets the thinnest arrow in.
He fights alone, and from the cloudy ramparts
A thousand evil faces jibe and jeer him.
Let him lie down and die; what is the right,
And where is justice in a world like this?
But by and by, earth shakes herself, impatient;
And down, in one great roar of ruin, crash
Watch-tower and citadel and battlements.
When the red dust has cleared, the lonely soldier Stands with strange thoughts beneath the friendly stars.

—E. R. Sill, 1887.

THE CHRONICLE has been so crowded that no notice has been given to the admirable address of Mr. A. T. Anderson, postmaster at Cleveland, O., before the fifth annual convention of the national association of letter carriers in that city, September 18. He is what all civil service reformers have claimed that a postmaster should be—the friend of this reform. Besides this, his address bears all signs of one whose knowledge of the merit system is well matured. He says:

We now have civil service laws to get into the service, and your efforts should be in the direction of equally stringent laws to get you out of the service. There is no doubt that ninety per cent. of our citizens are in favor of the principles embodied in what is known as the civil service law. The other ten per cent. are probably enthusiastic spoilsmen beating their tom-toms in the congress of the United States, and upon the curb-stones of our large cities. * * *

In 1871 a law was passed providing for the appointment of three commissioners to determine the fitness of persons entering the service, and in January, 1883, the present law was approved. At that time the law was considered nearly perfect, as entrance into the service seemed to be well guarded, and it was supposed that faithful service gave security of tenure. But laws are slow to satisfy the fellow on the outside, with cold feet and his eyes on your job. In some places an effort was made to establish the principle that a letter-carrier could not properly deliver mail if he belonged to a political party with which the postmaster did not affiliate. This principle carried to its logical conclusion would mean the removal of a carrier if the color of his hair did not please the esthetic tastes of some small individual clothed with brief authority. The men who declaim loudest against the merit system are the most inconsistent. They never employ a shoemaker to build a house, or a blacksmith to tune a piano. They always employ the best and most skillful tradesmen in the particular line of work they want done, thereby recognizing the merit system; and we say, if it is a good system in private affairs, it is equally good in public affairs.

You should give to the civil service commission the moral support of your great organization, for it is beneath their shield your safety is found.

Some congressmen complain about the great expense of the civil service commission. Why! This commission costs the people about $44,000 a year, and protects about forty-four thousand employes, and would take in more if the same congressmen would pass the necessary laws. Think of it! The enormous tax of one dollar per capita, that the government employe may be fairly treated. No, it is not the expense that is the contention, but the opportunity to go into the political market places and auction off the forty-four thousand places for seats in congress.

It is impossible to understand how even partisan assurance can attempt to palm off upon the people of Indiana bi-partisan boards as a reform in our public institutions. Such a board has never been and never will be a reform. In this case it is meant to form them of republicans and democrats, ignoring every other party. When they take charge of the public institutions, if the majority give all of the appointments to their own party, it will not be different from the ordinary spoils favoritism. If one-half or one-third are given to the minority, the places will be filled in part by republican favoritism and in part by democratic favoritism. This is not reform. Reform is to exclude favoritism and can only be done by adopting the reform methods of appointment which are now spreading over the country. A bi-partisan board must work upon the plan of favors, concessions, deals, combinations and tricks. In a short time no member is in shape to attack his colleague. They are in the same boat and they work together. Examine the recent appointments of Mayor Gilroy, of republicans, Jake Hess and Kearney, appointed sub-way commissioners. A good authority says:

"They are now expected to show gratitude for their appointments by working at Albany to save the democratic sub-way commissioner, Amos J. Cummings. Deuel is also expected to do all in his power to save the Tammany police justices by preventing the abolition of the board of police justices."

Platt understands the value of bi-partisan boards as a reform measure. Tammany gave him two places on the police board. Tammany was about to be investigated and Platt's legislature was in danger of responding to popular clamor. Platt limited the inquiry to the police department and put a harmless Rochester lawyer in charge. But even Platt has occasionally to bend before a storm and Goff took the investigation in hand with what results we know.

The New York Evening Post says:

"While the committee is thus adding to its absolute demonstration of the boundless evil of bi-partisan control of the police force, Mr. Platt and his allies are working with might and main to prevent the abolition of such control. They are determined that the present system shall be maintained, and they will maintain it unless the public arouses itself to an irresistible demand for its abolition."

Of course bi-partisan boards in Indiana are not likely to produce such startling corruption as a Tammany-Platt board but the difference is simply of degree.

WE have received a letter from an enraged reader who wants nothing more to do with us because we condemned President Cleveland and in the same column denounced Hill, and therefore we mean "republicanism." We can not say that this will not occur again. President Cleveland has frequently done things to which the CHRONICLE is diametrically opposed, and we do not yet regard him as wholly converted. Admonition in that direction may, therefore, continue to be a duty, and it is certainly the duty of everybody in the world to denounce Hill. We doubt if the "republicanism" of the CHRONICLE would pass much of a muster. It long ago became used to deep dissatisfaction when the other ox was goled.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL BISSELL'S REPORT.

It is refreshing to read the report of an officer which is written with an eye single to the business of his department. In such a report, Postmaster-General Bissell has set forth the postal affairs of the country. In all matters with which the CHRONICLE is particularly concerned, no such straightforward and even fearless report has been before written by any postmaster-general. Mr. Bissell says with evident pride that "the civil service law is being strictly and successfully enforced throughout the free delivery service." He issued an order, June 28, 1894, that letter carriers, before removal should have a hearing upon written charges, with opportunity to make defense, and points out that this cuts off frivolous charges by postmasters and also recognizes a new right. Some check in favor of other employes would be equally just. His recommendation that postmasters should with the approval of the postmaster-general be allowed to suspend employes for short periods in the way of minor punishment, calls for a measure which is much needed. The country has had to pay, or will have to pay, several hundred thousand dollars, on account of "over-time" claimed by letter carriers. We have always regarded this as little short of a wrong. Mr. Bissell dealt with the matter by simply issuing an order, directing carriers to perform their duties within legal hours, and they are doing it. When the railway mail service in 1889 came under the protection of the civil service law, its errors were as 1 to 2,834. Its efficiency has risen, until in 1894 its errors are as 1 to 7,831. Mr. Bissell attacks the spoils system with great vigor and denounces it as the one hindrance which keeps the postmaster-general tied down a larger part of his time to controversies about appointments, to the exclusion of all other business, and he calls upon congress to do something to relieve the department of the incubus. Referring to the bill providing for the appointment of fourth-class postmasters by means of civil service inspectors, instead of by congressmen, Mr. Bissell says.

I trust that congress, using the bill which is now before it as a basis, or substituting one which it is satisfied is better, will lose as little time as possible in coming to the relief of the department.

This official declaration from the head of the department states what has been for many years a most glaring violation of the constitution—the coercion of the appointing power by congressmen, and the corrupt use by the latter of the fourth-class post-offices. The days of this among other evil things are numbered. Whether the present congress will break up this greatest single spoils practice or will pass it over in doltish ignorance of the spirit of the times remains to be seen. It is the greatest single reform of the civil service yet to be accomplished, and the results can hardly be estimated. The removal of these and a comparatively few other offices from the clutches of congressmen will lead to a great change in the character of the latter. They will have to stand on their merits, and can not be helped out, and the new men will not want to be helped out by a watch-dog office-holder at every cross-roads.

"SPURIOUS" REFORM.

There is a good deal of agitation in certain circles over "spurious" civil service reform. The complaint now is regarding the recent classification of chiefs of divisions. Before, it was over President Harrison's classification of the employes of free delivery post-offices and before that, over Mr. Cleveland's putting the railway mail service under the merit system. The practice has been first to use the places so far as possible for political rewards, and then to cover them with the protection of the law. Civil service reformers used to worry a great deal about the necessity of first getting an ideal state of equity in the division of spoils then covering the places with the merit system, but experience has taught them that all this is comparatively a minor matter. A large proportion of spoils appointees under the incentive of the merit system, for the sake of permanent employment really become efficient, conscientious employes, and a sturdy manhood asserts itself and they fall off as henchmen when they find a more manly way of supporting their families. Besides this, if any employe under the merit system is not a good man and an efficient employe, or if he is so persistent a partisan as to unfit him to properly do the work of the public, civil service reform sanctions a prompt dismissal. It does not sanction a sneaking dismissal, under secret and lying charges, nor a dismissal because of his political opinions. Civil service reformers will cheerfully accept every extension of the merit system, whether spurious or not, and they will see to it also that spoilsmen like Bynum do not succeed in correcting the spurious features which so lacerate their fine moral senses.

THE "ISSUE" OF CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Before the recent election the Indianapolis Sentinel addressed the following to the Indianapolis News:

But, says the News, Mr. Bynum is a "spoilsman." Possibly. But he is no more a "spoilsman" than he has always been while the News was supporting him. And certainly the News will not pretend to say that there is any issue of civil service reform before the country, or that there is likely to be any very soon.

We wish to call attention to that part of the paragraph which stated that no issue of civil service reform was before the country or was going to be very soon. It is quite true both party machines, in making up their platforms, avoided the subject whenever they dared, and when they did not dare, with some notable exceptions—as the Massachusetts democratic state platform—spoke in as vague and meaningless a manner as possible. Quite true also that political speakers, as a rule, did not consider it an "issue." Yet, after the election, not only the people in this country who mean to crush the spoils system were agreed that an opportunity had been taken to punish a party that had been for nearly two years fighting and dickering and trading over spoils; but the politicians say that the squabbles over offices was a potent cause of defeat, and it is to the losses from distributing patronage that many congressmen attribute their defeat.

Now turn to slavery. That was never owned to be an issue. Platforms and speakers loathed the subject. Nobody was interested except a handful of wild abolitionists. Says Daniel Webster in 1850,

"I shall support no agitations having a foundation in ghostly abstraction." Charles Sumner in Faneuil Hall said, "The public conscience will not allow a man who has trodden our streets as a free man to be dragged away as a slave." President Fillmore's message considered the slavery question ended and "probed gently to discover whether some change might not be made in the tariff, and political effort turned back into those more practical and profitable channels which had once engaged our national discussion." In 1857 President James Buchanan said, "Most happy will it be for the country when the public mind shall be diverted from this question to others of more pressing and practical importance." Yet in four years the storm burst which swept away slavery. And now, if signs mean anything, the destruction of the spoils system is first in the public mind and is in the near future.

THE REPUBLICAN PLEDGES.

We have watched carefully for some indication of recollection by republicans of Indiana that their party has a record upon the subject of the management of the civil service of the state. This record is practically unbroken and it is one which they can not now ignore without self-stultification. As we said last month there are two systems now thoroughly tried and proved, which successfully remove politics from any public service to which they are applied. These are the merit system of open competition for places requiring skill and the labor service system for unskilled labor. The first of these has been for twelve years in the federal service and is referred to in the extracts given below. In 1885, two years after the adoption of the federal law, a bill embodying all of its principles was introduced into the upper house by Mr. Foulke and after being explained and debated at length every republican voted for it.

In 1886 the Indiana State Republican Convention adopted the following:

We favor a thorough and honest enforcement of the civil service law and the extension of its principles to the state administration wherever it can be made practical to the end that the corruption and flagrant abuses that exist in the mismanagement of our public institutions may be done away with and they be liberated from partisan control.

In 1887 what was at that time regarded as the strongest and best civil service bill which had been written was introduced into the lower house of the general assembly by Mr. Griffiths, and after full debate and explanation the bill passed, receiving every republican vote. The deadlock between the two houses prevented a vote being reached in the upper house.

In July, 1888, General Harrison, then a presidential nominee, in a speech before a republican convention called at Danville, Indiana, to choose delegates to a state convention said:

There are some questions that ought not to divide parties but upon which all good men ought to agree. I speak of only one; the great benevolent institutions—the fruit of our christian civilization, endowed by the bounty of the state, maintained by public taxes, and intended for the care and education of the disabled classes of our community—ought to be lifted above all party influence, benefit or control. [Cheers.] I believe you can do nothing that will more greatly enhance the estimation in which the state of Indiana is held by her sister states than to see to it that a suitable, well regulated and strict civil service is provided for the administration of the benevolent and penal institutions of the state of Indiana.

In 1891 a bill was introduced into the upper house of the general assembly by Mr. Magee, embodying the best results of experience up to that date, and covering both the merit and the labor service systems. This bill was fully debated and every republican voted for it.

This is the record which the republicans of Indiana have themselves written. They have not been in a majority in the general assembly at any time since the foregoing attempts and declarations began. But if those acts mean anything, they mean a promise that at the first opportunity the republicans will carry out what they have been all these years seeming to try to bring about. To ignore this record is for the republicans to say that they did not mean these former attempts, and that in making them they were hypocrites and liars. It does not seem that they will so declare themselves, but rather that they have been honest and earnest, and will make their word good. They can not afford to do anything else. The spoils system is doomed, both in state and nation. It is daily going to the wall before the two reforms we have mentioned. It is for the republicans to decide whether they will put this state in the front rank of civil progress or not. They will have an opportunity to do so. If this general assembly refuses, some other general assembly will do it. Reformers can wait, and this great reform can wait, for it is sure of its own in time. Can the republican party wait? Can it stand the rack of refusing to keep its promises, and of the inevitable loot of our public institutions which will follow?

HOW TO STOP THE ASSESSMENT SCANDAL.

In an other part of this paper are the facts relating to the swinish greed of several recently elected state officers. They are surprisingly rapacious and brazen at the outset of their career, so much so that at last accounts the culprits all bore signs of party discipline. It will be noted that every man had in mind to recoup himself for a campaign assessment that had been forced out of him, larger than he could afford to pay. He felt that his party had made him pay for the office and his chief thought was how to reimburse himself out of the public office. The public can not afford to let this mercenary and venal conception of a public office continue. It will continue so long as these scandalous assessments continue and these will continue only so long as the spending of the money is buried in secrecy. This legislature should pass an act which should provide not only for a public itemized statement of the money spent by a candidate by himself but in his behalf by individuals and party committees. The amount that can be spent should also be limited. For all judicial offices the candidate should not be assessed and he should not be permitted to contribute. Tammany assessed judicial officers from $10,000 to $20,000. This year Recorder Smythe swore that he gave Tammany Hall $35,000 for his nomination. Amos J. Cummings gave $2,500 for his nomination to congress and $2,200 beside. Nearly one year's salary for an office of two years' duration. As the Evening Post says, no corporation would venture to give $50,000 as a campaign fund if the fact were to be made public after election.

We believe both parties would welcome such a law. It would relieve them of the leeches that bleed them, but which neither party dares kick out the door for fear the other will at once extend a welcome. The citizens of this country are ready to pay their campaign expenses if they can see the bills. With a good law all legitimate expenses will dwindle into a reasonable sum. Such expenses will not be one-fourth what election expenses are now. Private citizens now refuse to give, because they largely regard the men who will handle the money as corrupt and thievish. This suspicion has good grounds. When the accounts are published, and the amounts expended are greatly reduced, the practice of buying votes by giving a lot of worthless fellows "employment," by paying rents and other debts, and by paying worthless campaign speakers, both expenses and wages will cease, and along with it will cease the necessity of blackmailing public employes by party assessments.

CONSULAR REFORM.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post, in an interesting letter to that paper, recalls that the present demand for consular reform is a revival. Some twenty years ago applicants for consulships had to pass an examination, particularly in the modern languages. It was not a competitive test, but such as it was it gave this country a much higher average of quality in the lesser places of the service than it has had since. There is also given a copy of an examination propounded in 1873, which we wish we might see tried upon Reformer Quincy's selections. We read in the dispatches of the sudden recall of Chapman Coleman, secretary of the embassy at Berlin, after twenty years' service, whose departure is regretted deeply by Ambassador Runyan and his colleagues; at the same time different commercial bodies of the country have taken the matter of our spoils consular service in hand, and are expressing themselves vigorously upon the shameful practice.

The Denver (Colorado) chamber of commerce says:

That our senators and representatives in congress are hereby requested to aid in enacting such laws as will improve the consular service by appointment under the civil service rules, as adopted for other branches of the government; all consuls and vice-consuls. That all such appointments made shall be strict non-political, and only persons of eminent ability. That the appointee be required to speak fluently the language employed by the country to which he is about to be appointed, or be required within a reasonable time to acquire such language. That the appointee must possess a knowledge of the products and manufactures of this country, and its regulations governing imports and exports, and that they be instructed to keep in view at all times the importance of ever increasing the commerce between the United States and the countries to which they are appointed. That all consuls appointed under civil-service rules, who discharge their duties in a loyal and efficient manner, may look hopefully forward to a continuance of their service, and held in line for promotion as their abilities justify.

The president of the chamber of commerce of Portland, Ore., says that the subject of consular reform will be presented at their next meeting, and the president of the Providence, R. I., board of trade writes to the same effect. Mr. Lawrence W. Jones, late president of the Kansas City board of trade, says that the first step is to put our consular service on a business basis and banish the political hacks; that Kansas City handles annually more than $75,000,000 in live stock, and their packing houses turn out products more than $50,000,000 in value, and consular reform is a practical matter to them. The St. Paul chamber of commerce says:

"That in our opinion the present system of appointments for the consular service of the United States is injurious to the commercial interests of the country, appointments being made at the dictation of politicians and as a reward for party adherence, rather than with a view to the practical fitness of the person selected.

"If this branch of the government service were entirely divorced from politics and placed under the civil service rules, appointments made solely with reference to special qualifications for the service, and promotions made upon merit alone, a regular permanent service would be established, which we believe would be of greater efficiency and materially aid in the extension of our foreign trade.

A SPOILS EPISODE.

The strained relations which have existed for months between Secretary Carlisle and Supervising Architect of the Treasury Jeremiah O'Rourke came to their logical end late this afternoon, when Mr. Carlisle demanded Mr. O'Rourke's immediate resignation.

Mr. O'Rourke was appointed on the recommendation of the New Jersey senators early in 1893, succeeding W. J. Edbrooke, of Chicago. Soon afterwards the employes of the office discovered that they had an irascible chief to deal with.

The offense which induced Mr. Carlisle to demand his withdrawal is said to have been a "misunderstanding" with W. B. Fleming, chief of the law and contract division of the office. Mr. Fleming happens to be a strong personal friend of Mr. Carlisle. Recent removals in Mr. O'Rourke's department, about which he was not consulted, are said to have been one of the immediate causes of the altercation which has led to his decapitation.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 17.

This morning the secretary received a letter from Architect O'Rourke, in which he stated that he had received the demand for his resignation with "amazement." He recalled the statement, which he said the secretary had made to him early in his administration, that, should any charges be made against him, as was not unusual in one occupying that position, he would have an opportunity to meet those charges before any action was taken by the head of the department. This, he alleged, had not been done. Mr. O'Rourke further stated that he had known for several months that a conspiracy existed in his own office to bring about his downfall, and he denounced the conspiracy in strong language.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 18.

* * *

Now that he has been compelled to dispense with the services of his supervising architect, the secretary of the treasury may have occasion to regret, among his other occasions for regret, that he allowed the official whom he now finds impossible to dictate the course of the department upon the bill for improving the public architecture that congress had been induced to pass. The motive of Mr. O'Rourke for making difficulties and nullifying the law, appears to be that the architects who had interested themselves in trying to get the new law put into practice, urged that it should be enforced in a new public building for Buffalo, and that they unanimously failed to admire a design prepared in the office of the supervising architect for that building.—New York Times, September 19.

* * *

Mr. O'Rourke, in conversation, said he had no apologies to make for his conduct of the office. He left it in better condition than it had ever been. What demoralization there was in it was caused by the action of his subordinates. The conspiracy mentioned in his letter to Secretary Carlisle, he added, referred to persistent misrepresentations by Mr. Logan Carlisle, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Kemper, who never lost an opportunity to prejudice the mind of the secretary against him. A delegation of his friends came to Washington to see the secretary and to fix the matter up. He told them that he did not wish them to intercede for him, and that it was not a question as to whether or not he would withdraw his resignation if asked to. He would only do it under one condition, and that was that the corrupt element in his office should be expelled, and that Logan Carlisle should have no authority to make appointments or dismissals in the architect's office without consultation and agreement with him.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, September 22.

* * *

The reason for the forced resignation of Supervising Architect O'Rourke of the treasury department is said to be a quarrel between O'Rourke and Logan Carlisle over the distribution of spoils in the architect's office. O'Rourke, so the story goes, objected to some proposed removals and wanted to be consulted about all changes to be made in his force, while Carlisle insisted upon making such removals and appointments as he chose. The outcome was so much unpleasantness that O'Rourke was ordered to resign upon pain of removal. It is not certain that the country will suffer seriously from the loss of O'Rourke's services, for his seems to have been a political appointment, carrying the power to inflict architectural monstrosities upon the cities of the land that congress endows with public buildings, because his "influence" was stronger than that of his competitors. He seems to have been a product of the system which has led to his undoing, a system whose natural tendencies are to fill public offices with incompetents, to a greater or less degree, who have a pull.—Springfield Republican, September 28.

* * *

O'Rourke was a political architect appointed by President Cleveland as the man of the New Jersey senators. He was incompetent, which was a minor matter. Secretary Carlisle evidently found acceptable his hostility to any plan whereby the public buildings of the United States might have the benefit of open competition and be the means of developing a great national architecture. But when O'Rourke showed a want of tact and pliancy with Logan Carlisle and Carlisle favorites he had shown an "unfitness" for his position that merited instant and stern decapitation. His place will be filled by another political architect possessed of a properly disciplined political temperament and the people will pay more millions of dollars for more and more political architecture and on the top of this will continue to be insulted by assurances that an artistic architecture is only possible under aristocracies and monarchies.

PUBLIC OFFICE A FAMILY SNAP.

Party Assessments and What They Lead to.

Bribery is said to have been brought to bear upon State Geologist Blatchley by men in the republican party. Money has been offered for the privilege of naming the assistant officers in the geologist's department—the oil inspector and the gas inspector. Mr. Blatchley himself was the author of the statement this morning. He made it while contradicting the story that he had appointed Mr. Berry, of Terre Haute, to be oil inspector.

"This report grows out of malice," said the geologist. "It is an infernal lie. You may say that Mr. Berry neither has been nor will be made oil inspector. The story is altogether false that Mr. Berry has purchased the place from me.

"Republicans have come to me since I have been here in Indianapolis and have offered me money if I would allow them to name the men for the offices under me. I would entertain no such proposition."

"Who were the men who offered you the money?"

"I do not care at this time to make them public."

"What amounts were offered as an inducement to you?"

"As to that I will say nothing. But I want it understood that I am making my own appointments, and that I am here to serve the people as best I can."

The places of the oil and gas inspectors, about which Mr. Blatchley says that the bribery has been attempted, will not be vacant until March. For the two positions there are more than fifty applicants.

Simon T. Yancey, of Fortville, who was appointed state oil inspector by Governor Hovey, and who was ousted from office by the supreme court, is an applicant for the position of oil inspector. At the Denison House this morning he declared that he spent a great deal of money in litigation over the office, and that he was entitled to the appointment. He was indignant when he read in a paper that Mr. Blatchley had appointed Mr. Berry, of Terre Haute, oil inspector. "Mr. Blatchley has deceived me," said he. "He promised that place to me in a room in this hotel before the convention. He said to one of my friends in Ft. Wayne, one of them in Wabash, and to several others, that I should have the place. We got out and worked for him, and got the nomination for him. He could never have got it but for us. It was reported around this hotel yesterday that Mr. Blatchley was selling the deputyships under him. I mentioned the story to a former member of the state committee, and he said that it might have grown out of what he said to Blatchley before election. He said that he had told Blatchley that he ought to select his deputies before the election and make them pay his campaign assessment. If it is true that Blatchley is charging $800 apiece for each of his three appointments, he is more than getting back the amount he was assessed."—Indianapolis News, November 22.

* * *

Previous to my nomination a man not a candidate came to me and offered me a large sum of money to control my appointments, but this I refused in an emphatic way that I think he will so remember.—Indianapolis Sentinel, November 23.

* * *

Simon T. Yancey persists that Geologist Blatchley promised him the place of oil inspector. Blatchley is emphatic in his denial. He says that Yancey will not be appointed. Yancey's friends say that they propose to take Blatchley before the tribunal of the republican legislature.

A state officer says that the oil inspector is one of the best paid men in the state's employ. As he expressed it, the oil inspector makes "more than Greene Smith" did.

Yancey says that it pays $4,000 a year; and Blatchley says that it does not pay more than $3,000. The office is of four years' term.—Indianapolis News, November 30.

* * *

The scramble for the office of oil inspector and Geologist Blatchley's delay in selecting the man, have led to the discovery that the office is one of the richest in the state. The inspector makes from $7,000 to $9,000 in fees, although Blatchley and Yancey say only $3,000 or $4,000 a year. The Standard Oil Company pays 90 per cent. of the fees. The office was supposed, by those who did not know when they voted to create it, to be worth $1,500 a year. Now it is supposed to yield not only a big revenue to the man who holds it, but to the party in power.

Numerous delegations of office-seekers have been laying siege at Blatchley's door. Prominent republicans, who do not want office for themselves, have called upon the geologist. John K. Gowdy, chairman of the republican state committee, called upon Blatchley, and the two were in a lengthy conference. County Clerk J. W. Fesler also visited Blatchley. It is said that Blatchley has made Fesler his political confidant, and is taking his advice in the making of his appointments.

Blatchley still declines to announce the name of the man he will appoint oil inspector. Republicans say they have received information that C. F. Hall, of Danville, will be appointed to the place. Hall is an uncle of Blatchley. It was he who introduced Blatchley into politics. He managed Blatchley's campaign at the state convention, and looked after his interests during the campaign. Hall was formerly postmaster at Danville.—Indianapolis News, December 4.

* * *

Oil Inspector Hall is an uncle of the man who appointed him. The inspector is said to make from $7,000 to $9,000 a year in fees from the office, although Geologist Blatchley claims that the office will only pay from $3,000 to $4,000.—Indianapolis Journal, December 5.

The report prevails in the state house that the four daughters of Alexander Hess, formerly of Wabash, and now clerk of the supreme court, are of office-holding age, and will be installed as his assistants.

His neighbor across the way, Hervey D. Vories, has his wife and a nephew on the payroll. Mr. Hess has already appointed one of his family to a deputyship, and said to an employe in the building that "blood is thicker than water." The report is current that he further added, "My family first, and the public afterward."

Not counting the members of the family whom he is to put upon the pay roll Hess receives $3,000 a year from the state for his own possession; he also receives 10 per cent. of all collections he makes.

As to the story that all the Hesses are to have a state position, there are some doubts, as there are but four places at Mr. Hess's disposal, and one of these has already been given to Miss Mary Peacock. The work to which she has been assigned is that of chief clerk, or second deputy, for which the pay is $900 a year. Her help is a necessity to the new force. She has been in the clerk's office since it was first established.

One of the clerkships has already been disposed of to one of Hess's younger daughters. She will receive $600 a year. Two places are yet to be filled, with three members of the family to hear from. These are the positions of clerk at $600 and of chief deputy at $1,500. The capital employes have concluded that he will bestow upon his own kin the fifteen-hundred-dollar position, in preference to the other place at $50 a month. This will make the salaries from the clerk's office to the Hesses as follows: One clerk supreme court, $3,000, with fees of at least $1,000; one deputy clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $600; one clerk, $600. The total will be $6,700. As the family will be in office four years, Hess and his will have received more than $25,000.

When Hess came into the office of the clerk a few days ago, he informed his employes that they would be continued in place for some time. The inference was that they are to be retained until New Year's at least. Hess said that he would give them due notice when he was ready to dismiss them.

Yesterday he announced that his daughter had been appointed a clerk. At the same time he went to Miss Katharine Sweeney, who held a place under her brother in the former term, and told her that she would be released to-night. Hess is reported to have said at the time he discharged Miss Sweeney that he was not a candidate for re-election. He added that the republican party had made him pay about $3,500 for the office, and that he proposed to get all out of it that he could.

"Is it true that a second daughter of yours has been appointed to a place under you?" Mr. Hess was asked, as he was leaving his office at noon.

"It isn't true," said Mr. Hess. "I have a daughter in Chicago who is coming here in February to visit us, and I have told her that if she wants a place she can have it. She has been working at Chicago, and it would be nice if she could work here and be at home."

"How much did the republican party assess you for this job, Mr. Hess?"

"Well, I wouldn't like to say as to that. I will say, however, that with assessment and other expenses, it has cost me more than thirty five hundred."

"And you propose to get everything out of it that you can?"

"I am going to get all that the law allows me."—Indianapolis News, November 28.

* * *

The income of the clerk of the supreme court has always been more or less in doubt, as he is not compelled to make any accounting for his funds. It was said that A. M. Sweeney made $12,000 a year for four years. Hess says that Sweeney made $60,000 out of the office. The law was changed, and Hess is serving under a new fee and salary arrangement. It is commonly supposed that he does not receive as much as Sweeney did. Last night, however, Hess said, in speaking of the the $60,000 which Sweeney is said to have made out of the office: "I do not expect to make more than half of that amount out of it." Mr. Hess denied that he had ever quoted the adage that blood is thicker than water; he said: "All this talk about blood being thicker than water, and my family first and the public afterward—there is nothing in it. I used no such expression. I am devoted to my children; my daughters desire to work, and why should I not give them employment?"—Indianapolis News, Nov. 29.

The official term of William S. Beck, M. D., who has been county coroner for two years, ended to-day. Coroner Wagner, the last republican, held the office from Nov. 20, 1886, to Nov. 20, 1890, and in four years the office cost the county $22,770.68. Dr. Manker, the democratic successor of Dr. Wagner, made the total for two years $13,861.10. Dr. Beck's bills for two years will be about $22,500.

From 1880 to 1885 the total cost of the office was $11,771.22, an average of $2,354.25 a year. From 1885 to 1890 the expense was $24,436.99, an average a year of $4,887.39. In the last four years it has cost about $40,000, an average of $10,000 a year. For the fiscal year ending June 1, 1893, seven-twelfths of which, perhaps, was Dr. Beck's, the county paid $8,808.30. From then to June 1, 1894, Dr. Beck received $12,967.25. Since then, until the 1st of this month, he has drawn $5,529.40.—Indianapolis News.

"I was elected on a platform declaring for an economical management of public affairs, and I intend to stand on the platform to the letter. In making this statement I do not wish to convey the impression that the cost of administering the office of coroner will be reduced to what it was ten years ago, but it will not reach the exorbitant amounts which have been paid for the service in the past two years."—Interview in Indianapolis Journal, November 17, with Coroner Castor.

* * *

Coroner Castor filed his first bill with the county commissioners yesterday afternoon. It is for services rendered between November 17 to December 1. With it were filed the bills of his clerk and constable and three post-mortem bills. The total for the fifteen days was $576.40. During the fifteen days included in the bill filed by Dr. Castor, he had twenty cases. In no case was his charge less than $12.50. According to his bill he put in fifty-one days on the cases, although he had been in office only fifteen days. In each case mileage was taxed. Of the fifty-one days he received twenty "original" days (or days on which he viewed remains), and for which he received $200; for the thirty-one other days he received $78.50; his mileage amounted to $7.60. The average length of time on a case was not quite two and a half days.—Indianapolis News, Dec. 4.

* * *

In the coroner's bill is a charge of $12.50 for holding an inquest in the case of the death of brakeman Myers, who was killed by a Big Four train in Shelby county. Yesterday the commissioner received a letter from W. P. Knapp, coroner of Shelby county, stating that he had held an inquest the day this man was killed and rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts. When the body was sent here for burial Coroner Castor held another inquest and examined all the witnesses in the case. At the time this inquest was held Coroner Castor was asked why he conducted it instead of allowing the coroner of the county in which the death occurred to make the investigation. He answered that it was the duty of the coroner in the county where the remains were buried to hold the inquest. Dr. Castor said last night, in speaking of the Myers case, that he held the inquest believing no previous inquest had been held.—Indianapolis Journal, December 6.

* * *

The office promises to cause me a financial loss at any rate, considering the expenses of the campaign and the interruption of my professional business.—Indianapolis News, December 6.

* * *

Miss Ray, who was the clerk and stenographer of Coroner Beck, and who went from his office to that of Coroner Castor, will leave the coroner's office this evening. She has fulfilled many of the duties of a deputy coroner. She has examined witnesses by herself, asking the questions and writing the answers. For this work the coroner is allowed a fee of $2.50 a day.

Her place is to be taken by Miss Edna Castor, a sister of the coroner. Dr. Castor has employed a young man named Harvey Meyer, but he says, "I let him go because I was satisfied that he had an ambition to be something higher than a clerk in a coroner's office. I wanted some one whom I was sure would stay with me."

Harvey Meyer says that he was discharged, after a week's employment, without cause.

Coroner Castor says that his sister will get the fees of the office that usually go to the clerk.—Indianapolis News, December 11.

At least ten subordinate offices are held in the the state house by men and women related to their chiefs. Two wives are deputies to their husbands; in one office a daughter has been made a clerk; in another the officeholder's brother has a place.

In the governor's office Miss Callie McMicken, a niece of Governor Matthews, is his private secretary. She was such, however; before he entered office, having been a member of his household for several years.

In Superintendent Vories's office Mrs. Vories continues as chief deputy at a salary of "more than $1,200" a year. John Vories, a nephew of the superintendent, has been made a clerk, although he is said to have had no previous experience in school work.

In the auditor's office Will F. Henderson, a brother of Auditor Henderson, has been a clerk.

C. N. Metcalf is the secretary of the board of health, and his wife is one of his clerks.

Clerk Hess has made Grace Hess, his daughter, a clerk at a salary of $600 a year. He has promised a place to another daughter if she will take it.

The reporter of the supreme court, Sydney R. Moon, has his son as an assistant, but the place is not paid from public appropriation.

S. J. Thompson announced to-day that his son, M. J. Thompson, would be his assistant in the state statistician's office. The son has had experience in newspaper work.

Geologist Blatchley last night made known the appointment of his uncle, Chester F. Hall, of Danville, to be oil inspector, with an income which exceeds that of most other state officers.—Indianapolis News, December 5.

* * *

When Mr. Fesler was asked this afternoon regarding his payment of money to secure his nomination, he said no payment of any amount was required of him, with that understanding. "There is not, nor has there been, any question of money in the matter," he continued. "I have paid my assessment, but that was not until several days after I was nominated by the committee. I gave no more than what Mr. Joyce had been assessed, and the money he had paid to the committee is to be returned to his estate. I do not think it proper to state what I gave, but it was nothing near the amount which it is said I have paid. The nomination did not cost me a cent aside from this assessment."—Indianapolis News, October 22.

PATRONAGE A SOURCE OF PARTY WEAKNESS.

Senator Murphy must have had several bad half hours since his triumphal appointment of the postmaster of Troy, because another follower of his has been pronounced guilty of the murder of Robert Ross. It is the old story of an American community in the grip of a boss, until it seems to the outsider to have lost all courage, all patriotism and all moral sense. [How it looked last summer.]

* * *

The 13th ward, Troy, where Robert Ross met his death, nobly tells the story of the success of the struggle against the Senator Murphy machine. Last year it gave Molloy, machine candidate for mayor, a majority of 343. This year it gave Mr. Black, republican candidate for congress, 324.—Troy Times, Nov. 10.

One of the peculiar things about the election in this state, yesterday, is the fact that the democratic counties which have secured the largest share of the federal offices have gone republican. Carroll county, which has the collector of customs, the best office in this state, the special deputy collector, and a large number of minor offices, went republican for the first time since 1866, and Harford county, which has the collector of internal revenue, and more minor places than any other county in the state, in spite of the usual large democratic majority, went republican. Senator Gibson's county, Talbot, which has 18 men in good federal offices, also went republican.—Baltimore dispatch, Boston Journal, Nov. 8.

The latest returns available indicate that, of the eighty members of the house who voted last session to defeat the appropriation for the civil service commission, the following forty-five will stay at home after the fourth of next March:

Alderson, W. Va.; Alexander, N. C.; Barnes, Wis.; Bland, Mo.; Bretz, Ind.; Bunn, N. C.; Cabaniss, Ga.; Capehart, W. Va.; Caruth, Ky.; Cockrell, Tex.; Coffeen, Wyo.; Covert, N. Y.; Cummings, N. Y.; DeArmond, Mo.; Dunn, N. J.; Edmunds, Va.; Ellis, Ky.; English, N. J.; Enloe, Tenn.; Epes, Va.; Forman, Ill.; Fyan, Md.; Gorman, Mich.; Grady, N. C.; Hatch, Mo.; Heard, Mo.; Houk, Tenn.; Hunter, Ill.; Ikert, O.; Lane, Ill.; Layton, O.; Lynch, Wis.; Mallory, Fla.; Morgan, Mo.; O'Neill, Mo.; Paynter, Ky.; Pearson, O.; Pendleton, W. Va.; Shell, S. C.; Snodgrass, Tenn.; Stockdale, Miss.; Stone, Ky.; Taylor, Ind.; Wells, Wis.; Wise, Va.—November Good Government.

There is evidence that, as usual, many claims for pensions which have been pending for a long time, are being allowed on the eve of election. Several veterans in this city, who have had claims on file for two years or more, have received their pensions during the last two weeks. These men, most of whom are republicans, have been reminded that Congressman Bynum asked that the claims be allowed. After the pension had been allowed, the commissioner of pensions sends to the congressman a slip of paper, on which is the statement that a pension had been allowed, and there is a footnote saying that the congressman asked that this claim be allowed. This slip from the commissioner of pensions is remailed by the congressman to the veteran who received the pension.—Indianapolis Journal, November 4.

Congressman Bynum did not please the democrats of Haughville or North Indianapolis with the post-office appointments, and some of them are going to scratch him. The democrats of Haughville were divided at the time of the post-office agitation. Bynum did not favor the candidate of the "reform element" of the party in the suburb, but named the candidate of what was called the "clique." In North Indianapolis he chose a man who was a comparative stranger in the suburb, as against democrats who had lived and worked for the party there many years. He also overlooked the candidature of a woman who was supported by a host of the suburban people.—Indianapolis News, November 4.

Congressman Brookshire was given a cool reception last night. P. T. Jett, chairman of the democratic township committee, would not attend the speaking. Neither would he distribute the bills announcing the meeting. With the ushering in of the Cleveland administration, Brookshire had pledged his support to Mr. Jett in his candidacy for postmaster. Soon after this Mr. Brookshire wrote a letter to one of the ring democrats here stating that he had recommended the editor of the Clay City Sentinel, W. E. Naugle, for the position; and soon after wrote another letter stating that he had not made such recommendation.—Clay City dispatch, Indianapolis Journal, September 27.

OFFENSIVE PARTISANSHIP.

In May, Postmaster-General Bissell sent out Mr. Cleveland's executive order of July 14, 1886, warning federal employes against political activity.

At the democratic legislative convention, held in June, eight employes of the Pittsburg post-office were elected delegates and served. When the news of this reached the postmaster-general, he rebuked the postmaster for permitting it, and warned him not to let it be repeated; yet, in defiance of Mr. Bissell's authority, within two months afterwards, four of these men ran for delegates to another convention, and a fifth was very active at his primary meeting, but was not a delegate.

* * *

The civil service commission this afternoon gave Postmaster-General Bissell a hard nut to crack. It relates to the recent investigation at Pittsburg of violations of the civil service law. The main point brought out was that four employes of the Pittsburg post-office, including Financial Clerk Atwell, had participated as delegates to a democratic convention in August in the face of the warning issued by the postmaster-general in May, forbidding such actions by the employes of the post-office. As the records of the commission show that Mr. Bissell approved the dismissal of four clerks in the railway mail service for being delegates to republican conventions the commission to-day sent him the names of the offending Pittsburgers, and at the same time called his attention to his previous action respecting the republicans.

In the meantime, the democrats of Pittsburg are working to save Atwell, and Postmaster O'Donnell, of Pittsburg, was here on that errand to-day.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, October 24.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Civil Service Chronicle:

It was with some astonishment that I read in your issue for October the letter from Mr. Talcott Williams citing official insolence as an objection to civil service reform. Mr. Williams must have come to Philadelphia after the leaven of reform had begun to work, or perhaps he has not had much experience of our public offices; otherwise he would never have suggested that "many a reformer's views" would be modified by the better treatment accorded to plain citizens by officials holding office under the spoils system than by those under the merit system. The condition of nearly all the city and county offices prior to the spasm of virtue which attacked the citizens of Philadelphia early in the eighties is a sufficient refutation of his entire argument. The reforms then instituted have not as yet entirely lost their good effect, but as they failed to go to the root of the matter by putting these offices on a business-like footing, that is by establishing the merit system, we are gradually drifting back to our old evil condition. As evidence to this effect I inclose the following letter to the Public Ledger of this city, the authorship unknown to me, which I read in that paper a few days after reading Mr. Williams's communication to you:

"INSOLENCE OF OFFICE."

To the Editor of the Public Ledger:

I had occasion to call at the prothonotary's office to-day to take out first papers. In answer to usual questions from a clerk who temporarily occupied the place of Mr. Smith, the gentleman in charge of the department, I told him my name and that I was a native of Ireland. He immediately called out to the other clerks, "Here's another from Ireland, Charlie; blow him in," etc. He imitated what I presume he meant to be Irish brogue, and his manner was altogether offensive and insulting. The gentleman who accompanied me, a native of this country and a republican in politics, expressed his astonishment that a clerk in a public office should treat any one going there on business in such an outrageous way. I do not know why any discrimination should be made in the case of "natives of Ireland." Certainly it is not the intention of the government that they should be gratuitously insulted.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

IT is not to the credit of Governor Matthews that in his long message to the general assembly of Indiana the other day he found no room to advocate the abolition of the spoils system in Indiana. Politically he displayed a surprising lack of perspicacity. His message is a voluminous statement of the commonplace matters of the state. But a statesman is a leader. He sees the coming tide and takes advantage of it. The rising tide now is for the abolition of Tammany methods, but Governor Matthews seems not to have seen it.

THE republicans in this state are still keeping up some show of talk about bipartisan boards for the public institutions as though it were a great reform. It is not a reform at all. The Tammany police board of New York has two republicans and two democrats, and Platt wants to keep it so because he likes Tammanyism, and this in the face of nearly all of the people in the city of New York. The republicans of Indiana should not copy Plattism. If they have been honest all these years, they will pass a civil service law.

THE law of the state puts the election of the state librarian in the general assembly. It would be difficult to find a more stupid method. Some seventy persons tried to get the place. To send them before a board where they might compete for the place would be so simple and effective and just that not to do it is per se venal. As it was, days of time were taken up in strife, and when the nomination by the majority party came on not the slightest attention was paid or was pretended to be paid to securing the best qualified person among the applicants. The only one of them who was fitted by experience in library work and the only one who was in fact qualified for the position was the daughter of the late ex-Governor Baker. She lived, however, in Marion county and therefore could not be given the place. The supporters of three other persons combined and selected one for the office upon the promise that she would make the other two her assistants. It is now said that she refuses to be bound by this promise. Could anything more belittle a great state than for its general assembly to be engaged in such work.

REV. G. A. CARSTENSEN, rector of St. Paul's in this city, at the Jackson dinner, January 8th, eulogized the late Thomas A. Hendricks. He said that the latter believed "that reforms were to be accomplished by parties and not by individuals; least of all by individuals assuming to be better than their party. He was in the best sense a practical politician. He never went wool-gathering in a mugwump Utopia." Mr. Hendricks was certainly not a mugwump. He was always in favor of any amount of reform in the abstract, but of concrete reform his record is bare. It is true also, that he did not take to individual reformers of any kind whether they assumed to be better than their party or not. Mr. Carstensen might also have added that the bond of friendship and admiration between Mr. Hendricks and Tammany Hall was strong and mutual, and never shaken by any circumstance of any nature. He was the most polished and gentlemanly of those Indiana democratic leaders who have made this state a by-word throughout the country. Their party made no progress until it began to get from under their influence.

ANDREW JACKSON rendered great military services to his country, and on this account his name is illustrious. But as President he did a wrong which can not be adequately set out in words. Yet it is not for his military services that democrats every year on the 8th of January meet together and celebrate his memory. Not one democrat in ten thousand if he told the truth would give any other reason than that Jackson "was a good sound hickory democrat, who took in the boys with cold toes." This statement of the case will stir the affirmative enthusiasm of every "Jacksonian democrat" who reads it. At all such meetings we should therefore naturally expect sounding brass and we get it. "The democratic party is the party of the constitution, the party of Jefferson, Madison and Jackson. The party that is destined to live as long as this government shall endure" (sic), said Minister Isaac P. Gray, at the Jackson dinner. "Whatever is good and grand and true in the progress of the United States is due to the democratic party and to her alone," said Charles Duffin. "I challenge contradiction when I affirm that a democrat is a man who is an adherent or advocate of democracy," said W. R. Myers. "Our patron saint, Andrew Jackson, naturally comes first, and may it never be wholly forgotten that he originated the phrase now sometimes tabooed, yet not altogether unwholesome, that 'to the victors belong the spoils,'" said ex-Governor James E. Campbell, the Ohio spoilsman.

The only man at the dinner who displayed any political grasp of the times was Charles L. Jewett. Party wreck and ruin has had its effect upon him. No one can read the history of this country for thirty years preceding the rebellion, without realizing that in spite of the bank, the tariff and the dozen other questions which were crowded to the front, the one question which was making history and was destroying and undermining parties, was the question of slavery. And as we have often said, in spite of the currency and the tariff and the dozen other questions which are crowded to the front, the one question which is now making history is the question of spoils in public office and business; it is the question of Tammany methods, not in any one locality but everywhere wherever there are public offices and wherever there is public business—town, city, county, state or national. Mr. Jewett recognized this, and as we show by his remarks, printed elsewhere, cried out in bitterness of soul that he repented.

THE civil service commission in its last report gave high praise to Postmaster Sahm of this city. The CHRONICLE is glad to be able to add something more. The supreme test of the competitive system has always been known to be the question whether competitors of opposite politics from the appointing officer would be cheated out of their rights, when they reached the top of the eligible list. In the face of serious obstacles, the principle of fair play has constantly asserted itself and has had its effect upon the appointing officers. We believe the question is settled finally in the Indianapolis post-office. Mr. Sahm is a democrat, but republican after republican comes to the top of the list and receives his appointment because he has won it by fair competition, and without any regard to his politics or to the politics of the other two men who are certified with him.

It may be hoped that the last post-office contest under the spoils system in this state has recently been enacted at Muncie. The last presidential postmaster has been removed and the customary broils and intrigue have been rending the party at Muncie and at Washington. The senators had selected Editor McKillip, of the Herald, but the elections of last November have not left them with sufficient vitality to contest with their former autocratic spirit post-office patronage and they yielded with a great show of respect for democracy to a vote of the democratic patrons of the office who selected Edward Tuhey. Editor McKillip protested against an election and one Kirkwood went on to Washington and claimed that Tuhey's election was secured by fraud; nevertheless he was appointed. The curtain now drops in Indiana over three years of demoralizing post-office brawls. When it next rises, we believe, the state will be divided into postal districts and the postmasters will be selected solely with a view to an efficient public service and they will not be the watch-dogs or the henchmen of Indiana congressmen.

When the democrats were in control of this city, they had for inspector of sweeping and sprinkling one of those life office-holders who believe in rotation in office provided the rotation is from one office to another, and they paid him $100 a month. Then came the reform administration of Mayor Denny, and in pursuance of its professions, the pay of this office was reduced to $60 a month, which considering the work to be performed is enough. The new board of public works then appointed a republican rotator, and dated his appointment back of the reducing ordinance and gave him $100 a month. Perhaps most anything may be expected from an administration which permits a blackmailing political assessment upon its employes upon the publicly stated theory that they should pay for their places and where the mayor publicly declares that he sees nothing wrong in the transaction.

JANUARY 4 the President made another extension of the civil service rules by an order which includes 122 superintendents of carrier stations. These stations are sub-post-offices in large cities and in fact 122 large post-offices have been withdrawn from the field of politics and placed upon principles which govern the ordinary business of the world. The change is of great importance. One of the hardest struggles the civil service law has had has been in the injustice of picking up politicians from the street and placing them over large numbers of men, each of much wider experience and nearly all more capable of filling the place than the new appointee. Added to this has been the smart trickery which many new appointees felt it their duty to attempt. It should never be forgotten that this same reason applies not alone to sub-stations but to all postmasters throughout the country. They should not be mere local politicians but members of a permanent, highly-skilled service subject to transfer, promotion, discipline or dismissal without any regard to politics.

THE Buffalo Express is very much in point when it says that since the first state civil service commission appointed by Governor Cleveland, there has never been one which when appointed believed in the reform. Several have been converted by proximity to the work of the merit system, but the Express goes on to say, "the custom has been for a governor to get rid of a commission as soon as it developed a desire to enforce the law, and again to put the reform out to nurse with its enemies."

Not only friends of the merit system living in new York but all over the country feel an anxiety over the action of Governor Morton with regard to the commission. There ought to be a clean and prompt sweeping out of the present members. They have shown apathy and feebleness for doing all proper work, but great alacrity in assisting Governor Flower to make the law no hindrance to spoils and spoils-men. There are disquieting reports that Governor Morton will retain the Watertown editor because he is a fellow-townsmen of the late governor. It was Editor McKinstry who, in the recent investigation of the operations of the New York civil service commission, showed his unfitness in the following testimony:

I have never made a careful study of the civil service rules. I have always acted on the belief that the commission was subordinate to the governor. I do not know why, in our report to the legislature, the designations showing what positions were in the competitive and other schedules were omitted.

It is also rumored that Morton will fill out the commission by appointing W. A. Cobb, editor of the Lockport Journal, a man who has only been heard of in partisan politics, and E. L. Adams, editor of the Elmira Advertiser, who is backed by J. Sloat Fasset. Since the above was written Cobb, described as the only Platt editor west of Rochester, has been appointed, and the New York Civil Service Association is protesting at Albany.

CHARLES A. SCHIEREN, mayor of Brooklyn, in a speech before the Union League club of Chicago, on January 8, declared that Brooklyn was the first city to effect a radical change and smash its ring of corrupt politicians, and he declared as the first necessity that absolute civil service reform in its most rigid form was the prime requisite. Another important matter was the absolute divorce of politics from the police and fire departments.

Such explicit and straightforward recognition that the spoils system must be crushed before we can advance any in the solution of municipal questions, is what we want, and it is within a comparatively recent time that this vital necessity has been widely recognized. How a city becomes debauched when from top to bottom spoils control, is well illustrated by the following from a Chicago paper, deploring the recent attempt to suppress gambling in that city:

"Probably as many as 10,000 persons in the city—men, women and children—were dependent on the gambling 'business.' In each of the resorts a considerable number of men were employed as attendants, watchmen, operators, 'cappers,' 'pluggers,' and so forth. Many of these drew regular wages and supported their families out of the money they took in. All of this class, besides the professionals, are thrown out of work."

The Union League club has at hand a considerable work, and it is satisfactory to see that it recognizes its responsibility when it asks the views of men like Mayor Schieren.

THE governor of New York has named George W. Aldridge superintendent of public works. About all is known that need be in the one fact that he is a Platt man. The Erie canal has for years been one of the powerful instruments for building up a political machine. Large patronage is involved, and from Albany to Buffalo it affords a chance to distribute every few miles nuclei of "workers." Mr. Aldridge is reputed to have said that he will "make the canal republican from the lock-tenders up." Thus Mr. Platt endeavors to hold together his machine. To be sure the constitutional amendment adopted in New York will put the canal employes under the merit system. But with the usual civil service commission appointed in New York City and in the state, Tammany and Hill and Flower have found the law rather an agreeable diversion; so may Platt now. All these matters are not of local interest. They are of vital concern to the whole country.

SECRETARY MORTON is complaining that foreign governments have spies watching his meat inspectors in this country. We do not know of anything that would be productive of more good. When Mr. Morton turns over meat inspectorships to be filled by such men as Congressman Bynum, with teamsters, shoemakers and other electioneering agents, he need not expect any one to have any confidence in their work. Every lesson of this kind which teaches "practical politicians" that the foreign trade does not want democratic meat or republican meat, but wholesome meat, is of great benefit.

LATE years have afforded many instances of parties coming triumphantly into power and then proceeding by a series of conceited blunders to destroy their majority. The republican party in New York is already well along in the process of wearing down its 150,000 majority. Of course that majority was in a large measure due to the absolute necessity of defeating Hill, but along with that always went the hope that Hillism was not to be succeeded by Plattism. That hope does not appear to have been well founded. Governor Morton has appointed Aldridge, of Rochester, to be superintendent of public works, a position which if corruptly used may prostitute a large number of public offices and places into "patronage." Aldridge goes to New York and "sees Platt" and then declares that "the canals shall be republican from the lock tenders up." The state civil service commissioners under Flower let the law go to the dogs; but Morton, instead of appointing commissioners who understand the law and want to see it enforced, seems likely to retain one of Flower's men and has chosen a Lockport editor, who is simply a politician, for another place on the board, and everything looks to a continuation of Flower methods. The assembly elected Ham Fish speaker, and he thereupon immediately took a trip to New York and "saw Platt," and brazenly confessed that it was for the purpose of getting Platt's opinion about his committees. Platt is a man who lives up in the center of the state and is in the express business in New York. He has no public office of any kind yet at present he controls the government of the state of New York, both executive and legislative, as surely and as effectively as the czar controls Russia. He accomplishes it all by means of a political machine which he keeps in working order by the distribution of spoil. This is not free government; it is the most odious form of despotism. It was hoped that the republicans of New York had learned that this kind of government was coming to an end in this country; but it seems not. The people of New York will next have to deal with Plattism at the polls. If the republicans behind their 150,000 majority think they are safe no matter what they do they will find that they are mistaken.

EVERY day brings further corroboration of the triumph of Plattism. The New York Evening Post, of January 16th, gives the following:

It is clearly the purpose of Mr. Platt to give the people of this city opportunity to decide whether or not they desire to have him for their ruler. He ostentatiously took charge of the legislature yesterday as boss, going to Albany in company with Governor Morton, and quite publicly assuming the right to direct the course of the republican majority in legislation affecting this city. He held a conference with the Lexow committee and instructed them as to the report which they should present. He granted audiences to the members of the legislature and to the reporters, and openly declared his wishes and intentions as to pending and proposed legislative measures. "What do you think of Dr. Parkhurst's plan for a single-headed police commission?" asked a legislator. "I don't think we are quite ready yet for a revolution," replied the boss. "Then the board of four members is to remain as it is?" said the inquirer. "Yes, if we are going to have any police legislation this winter," said the boss.

No one pretends that Platt represents the people in this impudent assumption of authority. He does not represent one in ten thousand of the people; as stated elsewhere, he simply controls a political machine made up of henchmen whom he pays out of the public treasury by assigning offices or by other means of profit. Through this machine he controls conventions and nominations, and in this manner gets a senile tool like Morton at the head of the ticket. It was a great victory to sweep out Hillism; it will be equally great to sweep out Plattism. The people of New York will hardly submit tamely; their political morality is not so low that it is exhausted by a single struggle.

MR. CARDWILL'S CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

We favor a thorough and honest enforcement of the civil service law and the extension of its principles to the state administration wherever it can be made practical, to the end that the corruption and flagrant abuses that exist in the mismanagement of our public institutions may be done away with, and they be liberated from partisan control.—Indiana State Republican Platform, 1886.

There are some questions that ought not to divide parties but upon which all good men ought to agree. I speak of only one: the great benevolent institutions—the fruit of our christian civilization, endowed by the bounty of the state, maintained by public taxes, and intended for the care and education of the disabled classes of our community—ought to be lifted above all party influence, benefit or control. [Cheers.] I believe you can do nothing that will more greatly enhance the estimation in which the state of Indiana is held by her sister states than to see to it that a suitable, well-regulated and strict civil service is provided for the administration of the benevolent and penal institutions of the state of Indiana.—General Harrison at Danville, July, 1888.

In 1885, bill introduced by Mr. Foulke, in the upper house and every republican voted for it.

In 1887, bill introduced by Mr. Griffiths in the lower house and every republican voted for it.

In 1891, bill introduced by Mr. Magee in the upper house and every republican voted for it.

A COMPREHENSIVE civil service bill, which is printed elsewhere, has been introduced into the house by Representative George B. Cardwill, of New Albany. The bill provides for three commissioners who are to serve without pay. It applies the merit system of competitive examination, open to all, to the state service. It also requires the adoption of the labor service system which has been found in the federal navy yards and in Massachusetts to effectively exclude politics in the employment of unskilled labor. Any city may place the whole or any part of its service under the law by a vote of its common council and a like step may be taken by the county commissioners and trustees of towns. The bill embodies the ideas which in practice have for years been found to work best. The republican party in Indiana has now an opportunity to keep the promises which for so many years it has been making. The subject is no longer visionary. Over and over again the merit and labor service systems have proved their absolute superiority over all other methods of distributing public employment; this is no longer argued, it is admitted on every hand. The man who sneered at "snivil service reform" is silent. The man who claimed that the examination was upon the height of the mountains of the moon, although there never was such an examination, no longer finds a listener. In Indiana it is simply reduced to the question whether the republican party leaders, including the Indianapolis Journal, Ex-President Harrison and Charles W. Fairbanks, who is anxious to become a United States senator, and others, are going to let the republican party keep its promises. So far we have looked in vain for any indication from them that the party ever made any promises of this nature.

SCHOOL COMMENCEMENTS AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

School Commissioner Charles C. Wehrum, to whom Tammany Hall through Mayor Gilroy yesterday refused a reappointment, was one of the oldest and well known to be one of the most useful members of the board. Having retired with a fortune from business, Mr. Wehrum found in the schools the chief field of his interest and activity. No other member of the board was so free, and none more anxious, to give his thought and time to the service of the city's educational system. There was not a public school in the whole city which he had not visited and extended his personal interest to, something, it is said, which no other commissioner has ever done. During the summers, when most men of leisure and means leave the city and its institutions to take care of themselves, Mr. Wehrum has looked after the extensive repairs to the school-houses which are made at that time.

The reasons for not reappointing Mr. Wehrum are perfectly patent. Tammany Hall wants all it can get during its brief remainder of power. It wants the presidency of the board for the ensuing year, and the division in the board between Tammany and its enemies is uncomfortably close. One or two of the commissioners last appointed as friends of Tammany Hall have shown some signs of revolt. Mr. Wehrum had to make way, therefore, for a commissioner whose vote can be better counted upon to re-elect Mr. Knox. Mr. Wehrum opposed Mr. Knox's candidacy at the last election and voted against him. A third reason for the latter's "turning down" no doubt is that he was too vigilant and interested, kept himself too well informed of all that was going on throughout the school system and was at the same time independent, honest and incorruptible.

The above, from the New York Evening Post, is only a single instance of the baleful influence of spoils upon the public schools of New York. Incompetent teachers given positions because they are the dependents of henchmen, incompetents retained in the face of facts for the same reason, and the paralyzing influence upon good work of insecure tenure where there is no political pull, thousands of children running in the streets of New York because there are insufficient accommodations, school buildings dark and foul with the stench of garbage and bad plumbing—these are only a few of the wretched conditions springing out of the spoils system. And while New York may be the most wretched instance of the results of the spoils system, there are many other cities almost as bad and there are few public schools in the towns or the villages of this country where upon close inspection the trail of the spoils serpent may not be discovered.

For nearly twenty years we have watched at the commencement season the subjects of the graduating speeches and essays. Teachers belong to the thoughtful class. They wield a great moral influence. They are supposed to understand the value and necessity of patriotism and courage in dealing with public questions in this country. Certainly during this time influential papers like the New York Nation, the Evening Post, the New York Times, have spoken in season and out that the system must be destroyed or the country could not survive. Some of the greatest men have protested against the long train of evils inherent in this system. But the boys and the girls, the young men and the young women, have to the slightest extent only been influenced to examine and write of a system at their very doors, if we may judge from these commencement subjects. That is probably the reason. The way that spoils have come to be interwoven with the decent life of a town has made cowards of teachers and others who felt that by its intrigue and malice it would be only too easy a matter to take away their own bread and butter.

But now that the politicians through bitter experience are shouting from the house tops and even at Jacksonian banquets that the spoils must, as a matter of good policy, be taken away from a political party, let the teachers over the country take courage and start the young people in the schools to an examination of the system. Particularly let them be encouraged to make a study of the effects of spoils in the schools of the many cities of the country. May we not hear fewer biographies of old Greek and Roman and middle-age heroes and more studies of living bosses. Let us hear less of patriotism in the abstract and more of the moral and material benefits that would result from the abolition of spoils in municipal affairs. Let us get a spirit in the youth of this country that would cause the callow demagogue who in this day and age pronounces the sentiment, "to the victor belongs the spoils," to be hissed down—of course in a gentlemanly and decorous manner.

PHILADELPHIA BOSSES AND SPOILS.

We have read that Philadelphia's moral sense has been shocked by the nude in art and by Trilby. But when it comes to those peculiar and intricate relations between business and politics, it has a moral digestion as all-embracing as the digestion of the ostrich is reputed to be. Mr. Herbert Welsh, whose heart has not yet failed after many efforts to induce his fellow-citizens to forget partisanship and to trample down bosses and spoils, said recently, in a public address in Minneapolis:

We of Philadelphia, where nearly the entire press of the city is either in open alliance or covert sympathy with the machine and the evil influences that cluster about it, are at present greatly hindered in our efforts to reach the ear of the public. We have no organ through which we can utter facts and arguments that we wish to lay before the voters.

Then he went home to do what he could to assist those who were trying to beat Quay's candidate for the nomination for mayor. Dave Martin, of whom the CHRONICLE readers may refresh their memories by consulting the index of its first volume, is the power to whom the committee of ninety-five made a vain protest against this nomination. The mayor has great power in Philadelphia. He appoints the head of the police department and the head of the public works department. The New York Times, in its issue of January 9, says, if Penrose, Quay's candidate, should be nominated:

Politicians who are ambitious to trade away public places for personal advancement will be equally glad. Corporations which own the city councils now, and only need to own the mayor to have such a grasp upon the city that they may be fairly said to own that, will expect to see their stocks advanced if Penrose is nominated. It is the common expectation that the councils will give the traction company, by the passage of a new ordinance, the ninety-odd miles of streets in the suburban districts, and that Mr. Penrose will help it along by allowing the ordinance to become a law. The members of council who are members of the electric lighting companies, or have established relations with these companies, or who are members of private firms which sell the city large quantities of gas, under directions from councils, will also be glad.

But now arises that curious Philadelphia press, moved by secret and unknown springs, when a boss is almost brought to his knees. The Times (democratic), in its issue of January 8th, forgets all partisanship and nobly rushes in to defend the man whom Quay and Dave Martin want to nominate.

"It was not the churches, nor was it the moral sentiment of the community that started the opposition to Senator Penrose. It came from the jobbers, the contractors, the slums of political strife, and in the sensitive condition of the public mind carefully-invented scandals were welcomed by many good citizens without inquiring the source from whence they came. There has not been an assault upon the character of Senator Penrose that was not invented and systematically diffused by the worst political elements of the city. When they were presented to the public, every reputable newspaper of this city carefully investigated them and found them to be unwarranted."

And the Times added in conclusion: "We have but one purpose, but one interest, but one desire, and that is to secure the most upright, the most capable and the most courageous man within the range of selection for the office of mayor of Philadelphia. That man is Senator Boies Penrose."

The Buffalo Express's pertinent comments is—

"That is a pretty strong indorsement to come from the enemy, and the remarkable fact about it is that it is many times stronger than any indorsement given to him by any of the papers of his own party."

It is usually best not to interfere with any nomination a boss wants to make. The moral effect of a defeat at the polls is much greater than a caucus defeat. If Quay decides to follow the advice of the Philadelphia Times, and nominate that most "upright," "capable," and "courageous" man, Penrose, a greater victory can be won over him by Mr. Welsh and the reformers at the polls. If Quay is as astute as he is reputed to be, he will break the force of the reform movement by nominating one of those most respectable dummies—the helpless tool of bosses, high and low—that is always at hand.

Since the above was written, Dave Martin has defied Quay and refused to nominate Quay's man. It is said that Chris Magee, who has before met Quay, and has been defeated, is behind Martin. And now it stands that the reformers have made it possible to defeat Quay's candidate, and his rebelling henchman has nominated a man who, the New York Times says,

"Has been for much of his life an office-holder, more or less in touch with the men who were rebuked yesterday, though not of them. We have had such mayors in New York, and they have not been reforming or satisfactory mayors. The committee of ninety-five have confidence enough in Mr. Warwick to refrain from opposing him. They will accept and support him—some of them probably with misgivings."

A PRACTICAL POLITICIAN WHO HAS HAD ENOUGH.

[From the speech of Charles L. Jewett at the Jackson dinner, January 8, 1895.]

Never in the history of the party might one more truly say that he was proud to be a democrat than during the campaign that has just closed. Then, why these disasters? You know me for a partisan, one who has ever been an unyielding, zealous, blind partisan. While neither wanting nor seeking federal office myself, my keenest wish has been to see every post of honor and profit in all these states filled by a sound, earnest, deserving democrat. And you are also partisans. After all the years of toil, privation and defeat through which we marched to our first real victory in 1884, what words were so sweet to our ears as those attributed to the great Marcy, "To the victors belong the spoils." And did we not, when we entered upon the cares of government, frequently declare as a profound political truth that the party charged with the responsibility of the government ought to have all the power? Was not much grandiloquent talk indulged about "the boys in the trenches" and all that sort of thing, by which was simply meant that when our man secured the presidency the offices and public employes should all be vacated by our opponents, and we, the true believers, the salt of the earth, at once enjoy all the contents of all the flesh pots? It is a beautiful theory. I held to it a long time, and it hurt my pride greatly to find it hollow, but the fact is this very fine theory has proved horribly disappointing in practice. Now, every man will admit, who is willing to admit the truth, that party patronage under existing conditions and as now distributed is a fatal source of party weakness. Its mere possession is a handicap, and its exercise invites disaster. Witness the result of the effort to enact democratic policies into laws during the last eighteen months. Observe how united a party, assembled at Washington, soon after the last inauguration, and proceeded to redeem one of the pledges upon which the election had been won by the repeal of a financial monstrosity called the Sherman act. And then note the hatred, jealousies and heart-burnings, which a year later resulted in the President being openly attacked on the floor of the senate, divided our leaders into factions, filled our newspapers with bold and bitter criticism of those in authority and brought anger and sorrow to the great mass of democratic voters everywhere. The cause of this is not to be found in any change of principle. It is not because of any change of men. Why were great senators exiled from the White House, and why did they, in turn, desert and baffle democratic measures and confuse and dishearten democrats everywhere? Simply because of the disappointments, jealousies and hatreds, arising out of the distribution of the party patronage. Instances might be multiplied, but what need to prove that there is no party advantage to be gained from a system so wretched that it drove the accomplished Conkling from the senate and sent the murdered Garfield to his bloody grave.

Let us see about the other false pretense by which the managers of the spoils system have pulled the wool over people's eyes. How about the "boys in the trenches?" How about those "victors" that demagogues glibly declare shall receive the spoils? Of all political lies and shams this is the meanest. It may well be denounced as a contemptible cheat, a confidence game which has been played on the masses of both parties until the limit of patience has been reached. The spoils do not go to the "victors," if by that term you intend to designate the great mass of working, earnest, worthy, modest democrats. On the contrary, these places are, as a rule, given to the crafty, the persistent, the brazen; to dependents and incapables. With some honorable exceptions, men elected to congress by the dominant party act as if the simple fact of their elevation to the office of senator or representative gives them the absolute right to bestow all other places. And they proceed to do so, but how? Do they seek out the capable, worthy, deserving, working democrats? By no means. One class of these thrifty politicians fill these places with their favorites, relatives and flatterers. Another class bestows the places on such as have a "pull," such as have exercised or may have influence in precinct, county or congressional conventions.

All these office brokers agree to one thing, and that is that public office is a private perquisite. If you complain they whisper to you in great confidence that the President is acting very badly toward the party. If you seek an appointment, and can get the proper assistance from the great man who represents your district or state in one of the halls of congress, you will succeed, no matter how little you deserve from the party. On the other hand, if after years of faithful, earnest, modest work for the party you seek a place, you may as well throw your party service to the winds, for you must succeed by other methods. You must find favor in the eye of your master, this congressional middle man, or you will surely fail, no matter how long you have been getting cold and wet doing duty with the other "boys in the trenches." True, under this system it sometimes happens that an office is worthily bestowed. There have been admirable appointments made in our own state, but in the great majority of cases the most deserving applicant did not succeed, and some of the appointments are bad. Since then there is neither party strength nor justice to the individual in this system, ought the party and the President to longer endure its evil and odium? The position of President does greatly suffer in strength and dignity from the vexations incident to the struggle of rival politicians from the loss of support to his policy and administration, and from the scandalous clamor and abuse of the disappointed and vindictive. Few men have endured more in this regard than the great American who is now President of the United States and through no fault of his.

SPOIL.

A new congressman-elect in Ohio sent this dispatch to the fourth assistant postmaster-general: "Stop all appointments in this district until I can see you. I am elected."

The department is in receipt of your communication of the 22d inst., requesting that a lot of flower and garden seeds be sent to you for distribution among the women of your county, in order to influence the result of the election to be held next month, in reply to which I would say that the appropriation for the purchase of seeds, made to this department by the government, was not intended for any such purpose. To act upon your suggestions would be to violate law and public decency. The democratic party was placed in power by the people on the assumption that it would act honestly and justly toward all the people, irrespective of political or religious beliefs, and if one were to choose some method for the destruction of the democratic party, I do not think that he could devise a scheme which, if carried out in detail, would more effectually do it than to listen to your suggestion.—Letter of Agricultural Department to a Candidate for Congress, Washington dispatch, New York Times, October 22.

The new republican governor of Iowa has just given an example of civil service reform by removing the state librarian, Mrs. Mary Miller. Mrs. Miller is a republican, and was appointed to office by Governor Martin. She performed her duties so acceptably that when Governor Boise came into office he retained her in her position. Now Governor Jackson removes her to make a place for the wife of a political friend who knows nothing whatever about library work.—Indianapolis Sentinel, May 16, 1894.

The collector of internal revenue for the district is Ben Johnson, a shrewd and able politician. Mr. Johnson is no mugwump, and announced, directly after his appointment, that an ax wouldn't be fast enough for him to cut off the heads of the republican office-holders in his district; he would use a guillotine.

The day after President Cleveland promulgated the order putting gaugers and storekeepers under the protection of the civil service laws, Mr. Johnson took the local newspapers into his confidence about his plan for evading the ruling. He said that as soon as he learned the rule would be promulgated he discharged all his men, then notified them if they would write him out their resignations, to take effect when he desired, he would reappoint them. They did so. The story was published with his knowledge and consent.—Louisville (Ky.) dispatch Buffalo Express, December 17.

Serious scandal has been disclosed in connection with the post-office at Stony Creek, east of this city. In last April, Richard Howd, a farmer, was made postmaster and has since been removed, though a remonstrance against his removal was extensively signed. Howd now claims that he gave by check a local politician $50 for Representative Pigott to secure the appointment, and that after it was obtained he was made drunk just at the time a postal inspector was brought to town, and as a result his successor was appointed. Representative Pigott denies absolutely that he was a party to the alleged conspiracy, and has asked the post-office department for an investigation.—New Haven dispatch, New York Evening Post, January 12.

The Leader (rep.) here announces to-day as a new phase of the long and acrimonious fight over the New Haven collectorship of customs, that Representative Pigott has indorsed for the place H. H. Babcock, a widely known Yale graduate living here. Mr. Pigott first indorsed James McGann, who was rejected by President Cleveland because he was a saloon keeper. J. Rice Winchell, the present republican collector, was asked by Secretary Carlisle to resign before the expiration of his term, but has persistently refused.—New Haven dispatch, New York Evening Post, November 9.

The President to-day appointed James F. Connelly, of New Jersey, collector of internal revenue for the fifth New Jersey district. Mr. Connelly was appointed on Senator Smith's indorsement. His appointment is the sixty-third appointment of an internal revenue collector since the incoming of the Cleveland administration. All the collectors now are democrats.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, November 1.

First Assistant Postmaster General Jones and Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt, who have been investigating the alleged violations of the civil service law at the Lancaster post-office, ended their inquiry this afternoon. They found considerable conflicting testimony and they therefore decided to accept the situation in the office as it is at present, withdrawing all charges. No employes in the future will be disturbed on account of their political affiliations, and the postal and civil service laws will be strictly enforced.—Lancaster, Pa., dispatch, New York Times, August 31.

The agencies of the Pabst and Anheuser-Busch brewing companies at Terre Haute are making serious charges, in effect that the Terre Haute Brewing Company has a "pull" with the police, and that the police are warning saloon-keepers that if they do not handle Terre Haute beer their poker rooms will be raided. Fred Seidentopf, manager of the Anheuser-Busch agency, is very plain-spoken in these charges, he claiming that even the ill-resorts, which handle only bottled beer, and which have not even a government license warranting them to sell intoxicants to be drunk on the premises, through fear of police interference are barred from handling the St. Louis and Milwaukee products.—Indianapolis News, February 21.

THE CARDWILL CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

A BILL for an act to improve and regulate the employment of officers and persons in the service of the state and of the several counties, cities, and towns thereof.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That the governor shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, three persons to be commissioners of the civil service, who shall hold office for the term of four years from the date of commission, and until their respective successors shall have been appointed and shall have qualified. All appointments, both original and to fill any vacancy which may occur in the office of commissioner, shall be so made that at least one commissioner shall be appointed from each of the two political parties casting the highest number of votes at the last preceding general election. The governor shall have power to remove any commissioner for cause stated by him in writing. The commissioners shall serve without pay except traveling and other expenses necessary to the discharge of their official duties.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of said commissioners to prepare rules consistent with the provisions of this act, and adapted to carry out the purposes thereof, for the selection of officers and persons to be employed in the service of the state and of the several counties, cities, and towns thereof; and said commissioners shall supervise the administration of the rules so established.

SEC. 3. The said commissioners shall appoint a chief examiner, removable by them for cause stated in writing, who shall, under their direction, superintend any examination held under this act, and shall perform such other duties as they may prescribe. Such chief examiner shall receive a salary of $2,500 a year, and shall be paid his necessary traveling and other expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duty. They may also employ upon competitive examinations clerks and other assistants at a compensation to be fixed by them but not to exceed in all the sum of $2,000 per annum. Every examination held shall be attended by the chief examiner or by some person authorized to attend the same under the rules of the commission. And said commissioners shall have power to make investigations regarding all matters necessary to the efficient execution of this act, and to issue and serve subpoenas, administer oaths, and examine witnesses, in all such investigations. The attendance of witnesses in such investigations shall be compelled when necessary, by order of the circuit court of the county in which said investigation is held, as in cases in said court.

SEC. 4. The rules mentioned in section 2 of this act may be made from time to time, and they shall provide among other things:

First. For the classification of the positions and employments to be filled.

Second. For open and competitive examinations by which to test applicants touching their practical fitness to discharge the duties of the positions which they desire to fill.

Third. For the selections of officers and persons for positions in said services in accordance with the results of said examinations.

Fourth. For promotion on the basis of merit previously ascertained by competition.

Fifth. For a period of probation before permanent appointment or employment.

Sixth. For reports to be given in writing by the appointing power to said commissioners of the person or persons appointed or employed, of rejections after probation, of transfers, resignations, suspensions and removals, and the dates thereof, and in the case of suspension or removal, of the cause thereof.

Seventh. For the transfer of officers and employes from any position in the service of the state, or of any of the counties, cities or towns thereof, to any other position of the same grade in the service of the state, or of the county, city or town, in which such officers or persons may respectively be employed.

Eighth. For determining the moral, and where necessary, the physical fitness of applicants for examination.

SEC. 5. The said commissioners may appoint, and in their discretion remove, local examiners in places where examinations are to be held, who shall serve without pay.

SEC. 6. The said commissioners shall grade the competitors in the various examinations in the respective classes for which they are examined, make lists of the same accordingly, ranging from the highest downward, and shall re-arrange such lists after each examination. No name shall be retained in said lists longer than one year from the time of examination.

SEC. 7. Within three months after this act shall take effect the said commissioners shall, for the purpose of the examination herein provided for, arrange in one or more classes the offices and places of employment under the state, within the scope of this act. And at the end of said three months no person shall be appointed or promoted to any such office or place so classified until he shall have passed an examination in conformity herewith.

SEC. 8. The said commissioners, with the consent of the board of county commissioners, of any county in the state, shall, for the purpose of the examination herein provided for, arrange in one of more classes the whole or any part of the offices and places of employment in the service of any such county, within the scope of this act. And after such classification no person shall be appointed or admitted or promoted to any such office until he shall have passed an examination in conformity therewith.

SEC. 9. The said commissioners, with the consent of the common council of any city or of the board of trustees of any town in the state, shall, for the purposes of the examination herein provided for, arrange in one or more classes the whole or any part of the offices and places of employment in the service of such city or town within the scope of this act. And after such classification no person shall be appointed or admitted or promoted to any such office or place so classified until he shall have passed an examination in conformity therewith.

SEC. 10. Wherever an appointment is to be made in said classified service, the appointing power shall give notice of the same under the rules of the commissioners, and thereupon under said rules the three highest names from the corresponding list of examined persons, with their respective ratings, shall be certified to said appointing power, and one of said persons shall receive said appointment. If the appointment shall be given to any except to the person standing highest in the list the appointing power shall file with the commission the reason why the highest was not chosen.

SEC. 11. No question in any examination under the aforesaid rules shall relate to political opinions, and no appointment, suspension, or dismissal shall be affected by political reasons, influence, or affiliations. Examinations shall be practical and shall relate to matters which will fairly test the relative fitness of the applicants. The commissioners shall openly publish in all notices of examinations to be held that the competition is impartial to all, without regard to political opinions or affiliation.

SEC. 12. No recommendation or statement concerning any person applying for office or place under this act, except as to the character of the applicant, shall be received or considered by any person concerned in holding any examination or making any appointment under this act; and said recommendations or statements as to character shall be in writing.

SEC. 13. Elective or judicial officers, heads of any benevolent, penal or corrective institutions or of any of the principal departments of the state, or of any of the several counties, cities or towns thereof, teachers of the public schools, the private secretary of the governor or of the mayor of any city, and laborers shall not be affected as to their election or selection by any rules made as aforesaid.

SEC. 14. The said commissioners shall make a separate classification of the labor service under the state, and shall keep registers of deserving applicants for places in said labor service, and shall make rules for determining what applicants are entitled to have their names entered upon such registers. Such rules should guard against political or other favoritism in securing entry of names upon said register; but for meritorious reasons, such as having families to support, or where special qualifications are required, they may provide for preference for employment among those registered; otherwise laborers shall be employed in the order in which they stand on the respective registers. No laborer shall be discharged from said labor service for political reasons. The said commissioners shall in like manner classify the labor service of any county, city or town of the state with the consent of the board of commissioners of such county, or of the common council of such city, or of the trustees of such town.

SEC. 15. All notices and reports required herein, all recommendations concerning character, all lists of persons examined, with their respective ratings, all records of examinations, all examination papers, with the rating given to each answer marked thereon, and all records of said commissioners shall be open to public inspection.

SEC. 16. All expenses necessary to carry out this act shall be certified by the civil service commissioners and shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon an order from the auditor of state.

SEC. 17. The said commissioners shall be provided, under the direction of the governor, with an office, properly furnished, heated and lighted, in the state house, suitable for the performance of the duties imposed by this act; and the county commissioners of counties, and the mayors of cities, and trustees of towns, where examinations are to be held, shall provide suitable places for holding the same.

SEC. 18. The said commissioners shall annually prepare and submit to the governor for transmission to the legislature, a report of all proceedings and expenses under this act, with their recommendations, for the printing of which report, for traveling expenses, and for stationery and necessary incidentals, they may incur an expense not exceeding $2,500.

SEC. 19. The sum of $7,000 is hereby annually appropriated out of any funds not otherwise appropriated for the payment of all expenses made necessary by this act.

SEC. 20. No senator, representative, alderman, councilman, town trustee, or any officer or employe of either of said bodies, and no executive or judicial officer of the state, and no clerk or employe of any department or branch of the government of the state, and no executive officer, clerk or employe of any department of any county, city or town government, shall personally, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription or contribution for any political purpose whatever: but this shall not be construed to forbid such persons to be members of political organizations or committees.

SEC. 21. No person shall, in any room or building occupied for the discharge of official duties by any officer or employe of the state, or any county, city or town thereof, solicit in any manner whatever, or receive any contribution of money or any other thing of value for any political purpose whatever.

SEC. 22. No officer or employe of the state, or any county, city, or town thereof, shall discharge, or promote, or degrade, or in any manner change the official rank or compensation of any other officer or employe, or promise or threaten to do so, for giving or withholding or neglecting to give or withhold any contribution of money or other valuable thing for any political purpose, nor for any other political reason whatever.

SEC. 23. No person shall solicit or be concerned in soliciting any contribution for any political purpose from any officer or employe of the state or of any county, city, or town therein, nor shall any such officer or employe solicit any such contribution from any person whatever.

SEC. 24. Whoever willfully violates or attempts to violate any of the provisions of this act or any of the rules lawfully established in pursuance thereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or to imprisonment of not less than six days nor more than two months.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Of Secretary Smith's recommendation that the civil service rules be extended to the scientific bureau of the interior department, the Chattanooga Times (dem.) says: "Let the good work proceed. Whatever else is happening about now to the democratic party, it is still in position to round out a magnificent work for the honor of the country, that it began in 1882 when it passed through congress a practical law for the taking of patronage away from the power of cheap, nasty politicians, and putting the servants of the people beyond the control of those who used them as mere stock in trade."

The spoils politician will object strenuously to the recommendation that fourth-class postmasters be brought under the civil service regulations. The postmaster-general, however, says that if postmasters of that class were removed for cause only the result would be a vast improvement in the post-office service, and there is no doubt that the statement is correct. It is difficult to get competent men to accept the little post-offices that pay $50 to $100 a year, and when a competent man gets one of those offices he ought to be allowed to hold it as long as he wants it. The good of the service should be aimed at. The wishes and interests of the spoilsmen should not have any weight.—Savanna (Ga.) News (dem.).

* * *

Rebuking the St. Louis Republic (dem.) for its persistent attacks on the civil service law, the Atlanta Journal (dem.) says: "The tendency is not towards the repeal of the civil service law, but towards its extension. There is no doubt that it will before long include the consular service and probably other departments not now under its rules. No political party will ever be foolish enough to go to the country as the avowed enemy of this law. It has come to stay and all efforts to repeal it will be as futile as commands to the waves of the sea."—New York Evening Post, January 9.

R. E. Bliss, of Sherman, is probably the oldest man in the railway mail service in Western New York, if not in the State. He completed his 21st year on April 23, and on account of his great efficiency in the service, he has steadily maintained his position, except for one year under President Cleveland's former administration, ever since he entered the service in 1873. Mr. Bliss's present run is with the fast mail between Cleveland and Chicago.—Buffalo Express, May 7, 1894.

THE CHURCH AND GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

It [the church] hasn't given sufficient attention to its civic duties; it has failed to assert itself in the domain of politics and become a leader in the reform movements of the day, and in this double negligence it must plead guilty of a shameful lack of patriotism and public spirit. * * * And right here I wish to controvert the stupid notion that ministers should not preach politics, and should keep quiet on all subjects not technically known as spiritual. My candid opinion is that a more pestilential doctrine never entered the church, and has done incalculable damage to society by sealing the lips of the ministry and retarding the progress of various reforms. In these days the press is the coadjutor of the pulpit, whenever the preacher really has something to say.—Rev. John L. Scudder, of Jersey City, before the Maryland Convention of Christian Endeavorers, October 25, 1894.

* * *

Rev. Thomas J. Ducey, Rector of St. Leo's Roman Catholic Church, in a signed statement as to the great victory of the reform movement at last Tuesday's election, says:

"I have been asked to say something in review of the victory gained last Tuesday by truth, honesty, honor and religion over the fraudulent, impure and gross methods of Tammany Hall.

"Until Tuesday last this hall was the tyrant and disgrace of our city, and by its methods was poisoning the life of the country. I can not refuse to give my expression of thanks for the good work done by the press of the country. Their news columns and editorial pages have been most powerful factors in bringing about the emancipation of New York from the slavery of Tammany's corrupt methods. 'I am a democrat,' but for the first time in my life I voted the straight state republican and reform ballot, as I believed it the only way to coffin corruption and wrong in this great city of New York."—New York Times, November 11, 1894.

"No cry about religious liberty from the principal of the Maynard theft can make the people forget that now before them stands that principal awaiting his punishment. Was it not this theft, rewarded as it was with a seat in the United States senate, that inspired and encouraged the members of his organization to the carnival of crime against the suffrage which swept over the State last fall, filling the prisons from Gravesend and lower New York, brutally murdering the citizen in Troy, debauching the ballot in all the cities under their control? Pretended imaginary dangers of religious liberty can not make the people forget the shame of Gravesend, New York, Troy and Buffalo.

"When infamous corruption so seizes upon a municipality that the knowledge of the facts come into the possession of every citizen, it would be sad in the extreme if the great body of Catholic churchmen must be forced to stand by this corruption. To-day no man, high or low, can plead ignorance of the foulness disclosed by the Lexow committee's revelation of Tammany's rule of New York City.

"Nameless vices and beastialities have been carefully cherished and tenderly protected by this organization; the merchant has been blackmailed, the unfortunate has been robbed, the very poor have been brutally outraged and humiliated in every possible manner. To-day is there any one standing between this organization and overwhelming, ignominious defeat? Is there any man or set of men so blind, so infatuated as not to foresee the terrible outburst of public wrath that will meet any effort to thwart the righteous indignation of the aroused citizens?

"Catholics surely can not afford to connect their religion with such infamies. Catholics, because of their religion, must help wipe out such rotten associations. They can not follow the men who have done all this wrong if they love the republic and mean to live here in the confidence and respect of patriotic citizens."—Rev. Sylvester Malone, Catholic divine and regent of the State University of New York, November 2, 1894.

* * *

It is somewhat remarkable that while other religious bodies have recognized and indorsed Dr. Parkhurst's efforts in behalf of political reform in New York, the first effort to obtain such an indorsement from the church of which he is a member should have failed. In the New York Presbytery, on Monday, a member proposed that a committee be appointed to draw up suitable resolutions on the subject. "What's that?" asked a reverend objector. When informed that it was a proposed recognition of Dr. Parkhurst's work for reform he at once declared his opposition to the motion. He said that inasmuch as Christ did not enter into social reform movements and the whole business of Christ's ministry was preaching the gospel he should feel that he had not discharged his duty if he did not say that the presbytery had no more right to take notice of what Dr. Parkhurst was doing than it had to take notice of what any other good citizen was doing, outside of the work of the ministry. The objecting brother evidently forgot that even Christ once suspended his preaching long enough to drive the money-changers and hucksters out of the temple and overthrow their tables. [The resolution has since been passed in a recent meeting.]

THE BROTHERHOOD OF LOOTERS.

Two years ago there sat in a room in East Fourteenth street a gentleman who, though only a private citizen holding no public office, was recognized as the real ruler of this city and state. * * * At the same time there sat in the office of a business corporation, on lower Broadway, another private citizen; private citizen and voter of Tioga county, doing business in this town. His power was not so large as Mr. Croker's, for his party was in the minority in both city and state, but he had an intimate knowledge of and acquaintance with the active managing politicians of both parties throughout the state, and had made the infinitesimal details of political management an unceasing, sleepless study. He, too, sat beside a button and a bell. He talked rather more than Croker, for, unlike, Croker, he enjoyed intensely, beyond the mere sense of power, the intoxication of the footlights, and the consciousness of the index finger of the public. But he listened as well. He listened to candidates for office, to ambitious young men who gave promise of future usefulness, and to the older politicians who had attained prominence and influence, and were already factors of consequence in the game of politics. If they wanted nominations he touched his button and communicated his wishes to his lieutenants—for he, too, had gathered round himself a well-disciplined corps of followers, whom a common aim and common purpose had cemented together without any machinery of organization such as Croker had—and the thing was done. If they were already in nomination and wanted money to carry on their campaign, he rang his bell and called down some wealthy corporation for a contribution, with an understanding, express or implied, that the consideration for the same was a mortgage on the candidate. And he did it always with a sweet graciousness which invariably heightened the sense of obligation, allusion to which was carefully avoided. And whenever it was deemed necessary in his own or the interest of his followers to have an understanding with the other cool, clear-headed leader in East Fourteenth street, he touched the button and they came together. That, too, was an enormous power; little less than Croker's. On the 6th of the present month the voters of this city and state—more especially of this city—gave concrete expression to their hostility, not to the two men who have been its most conspicuous exponents, but to the system itself, of bossism. It was in the nature of a political revolution. The voters astonished themselves by its magnitude. But they are not so much astonished that they fail to comprehend its meaning. And they will not be balked in the fulfillment of their purpose.—New York Tribune (rep.) in November.

* * *

The whispering to which we have referred relates, it is believed, to some as yet undeveloped scheme by which to defeat the determination of the voting citizens of this town to drive out of office and off from the pay-rolls, every official who holds his place directly from Tammany, or through any deal or dicker with its leaders. Current rumor connects the name of ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt with this as yet undeveloped scheme. * * If any such negotiations as those hinted at are in progress, or if in any quarter there is the remotest possibility of their being entered into, for any purpose whatever—and unfortunately, Mr. Platt's reputation as a political trader, who has previously had mysterious secret understandings with Tammany leaders, gives color to the suspicion—it is best that the matter be thoroughly discussed at the earliest moment. * * The temper of the voters will not permit any favor to be shown or any quarter to be given either to the rogues who have ruled the town or the trading politicians who have had commerce with them. Mr. Platt has made it necessary to discuss freely his relations to politics and parties by his constant assumption of leadership, and the persistence with which he thrusts himself into prominence, as well as by the bad eminence he has attained as a trading politician.—New York Tribune (rep.) in November.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE is one of the beneficiaries of the public spirit that prompted Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, of Boston, to devote to public purposes the money which he received in connection with the investigation of the public institutions.

THERE is no chance for mistake as to what is best, and as to what is the only correct method in dealing with the benevolent and penal institutions of this state. The merit and labor service systems as practiced in the federal service, have proven themselves infinitely above all other systems and as the only systems now known which can eradicate politics in the transaction of public business. No half-way application of these methods, such as a general direction to the different boards to apply them, will be worth anything. This will be understood to be a mere trick to beat these reforms under the pretense of adopting them. To show the futility of such a direction, suppose the federal law had instructed each postmaster to apply these methods. The result would have been a travesty. The right system is a thorough and honest system, that comprehends the whole state service, and leaves no room for republican bosses to work in their henchmen, and that is what this republican legislature, notwithstanding the volume of republican promises, does not mean to adopt if it can help it. This comprehensive system will finally, however, be adopted in Indiana.

THE republican party of Indiana is undergoing a test of which it does not seem to realize the importance. We have, month after month, set out some of the party's reform promises and have sent the CHRONICLE to every member of the general assembly. The party has in that body a large majority and can do anything it wants to do. The members have not been button-holed or coaxed by reformers. They have been told in a straightforward manner what the party has promised, and it now rests with them to say whether those promises were made to be kept or whether the party representatives in the general assembly are a mere band of mercenaries. It must be confessed that the proceedings in the senate on February 15, when the bill forbidding railroads to give passes was defeated, goes far to prove that the members are a band of mercenaries. The author of the bill had to promise not to ask for a roll-call on the vote in order to get his bill reported at all by the committee. When brought forward in the senate it was literally howled out of existence, and Lieutenant-Governor Nye seemed to lend a helping-hand. Many legislators before have thought that the people cared nothing for bribery and corruption and have found themselves mistaken. Every railroad pass given to any public officer, in whatever office, is either a bribe or it is blackmail, and no amount of casuistry, subterfuge or bluster, can make anything else of it.

IF the party is the reform party it has claimed to be, it will pass a corrupt practice act which will require a record of every cent spent in a campaign, whether for nomination or election, and will make it a public record. There is no other single blow which would strike out so much corruption. For more than a month the party has had before it in the general assembly a bill introduced by Mr. Cardwill which embodies the best methods now known for civil service management; yet it has never been reported by the committee. Instead, the party has met in caucus and has resolved to "take possession" of the benevolent and penal institutions of the state. The full meaning of this is that the party means to loot the two or three thousand places in these institutions for the benefit of the members of the general assembly, and of other party bosses. A man whom they call "Jack" Gowdy, who is chairman of the party state committee, and therefore at the head of the party machine, is doing his utmost to bring the party to this act of treachery. In the CHRONICLE for October, 1892, will be found a circular put forth by Gowdy, addressed to government employes, calling for money and containing this threat, "The success of the ticket is involved, as well as the pleasant conditions about you. * * * We confidently expect you to give generous assistance." Gowdy is a fit leader in this mercenary onslaught which proposes to disregard the welfare of the powerless prisoner, the feeble-minded, the soldiers' orphan children, and the insane. Ex-President Harrison has openly declared himself against the proposed course and for a civil service law. The Indianapolis Journal is doing what it can to stem the tide. Mr. Fairbanks and other prominent leaders have not been publicly heard from. The result means much for the republican party in Indiana. While the loot of the public institutions goes on, if it does go on, there will not be wanting those who will keep all the facts before the people.

ONE phase of the situation, when the party in power is cursed as now in New York and in Indiana by pirates and adventurers, is that these men are incapable of regeneration. They are numerous, they are powerful, they control the party machine and therefore the party actions and just now they are insolent with victory. Moreover, they care nothing for success under other conditions than that the spoils shall be divided. Patriotism, honest administration and political principles are nothing to them. If the party can not succeed in their way and then follow their plan of a loot of the public treasury, they want the party to fail. The republican party to-day is loaded down with such men. It will have to put them under or go down with them.

THE furious frenzy over spoil is illustrated by the visit of Thomas Taggart, of the state democratic committee, and George Shanklin, to Washington, to get the Mexican mission for Editor Shanklin. While Minister Gray's dead body is being brought from Mexico, there is this unseemly jostling for the place of a political associate. Says the Indianapolis Sentinel naively: "Mr. Taggart will present the petition of the Indiana democrats urging Mr. Shanklin's appointment, during the week, and will return previous to the time of the funeral of the dead minister."

In the issue of February 21, the Sentinel's Washington correspondent goes on to say that Voorhees and Turpie and Congressmen Taylor and Brown, Chairman Taggart and Tax Commissioner Allen called at the White House on the 20th. That "the petition for the appointment of Mr. Shanklin was not presented out of respect for the memory of Minister Gray." Then follows this curious information, which must be regarded as the new etiquette of the Indiana democratic court ceremonial. "It was understood," the Sentinel says, "that the visit was one of ceremony on the part of those who made it to show the President the respect of the democracy for its dead leader." After "expressions of sorrow" had been passed "on either side," this ceremonial committee of Indiana pirates composed their faces and got down to business and informed the President that the Indiana democrats "would present a man," and then they proceeded to "mention Mr. Shanklin." The Sentinel says the "President showed flattering respect for the opinions of the visitors." As the CHRONICLE always means to be fair, it is bound to add that the Indianapolis Journal's Washington correspondent says that Private Secretary Thurber "was at no pains to conceal his indignation," and that Mr. Cleveland "greeted the delegation very coldly," and promptly informed Taggart "that he knew all he wanted to know about Mr. Shanklin." In fact, according to the Journal account, the President nearly kicked the delegation out of doors. We doubt very much, however, whether the Indiana democrats will perceive anything comic or indecent in the occurrence.

SENATOR WILLIAM F. VILAS, of Wisconsin, is at his old tricks again. Congressman Bynum, whom the people of this district lately so unmercifully disposed of, got a bill through the house reinstating a set of discharged democrats in the railway mail service. It was a measure of the worst kind with a viciousness of the usual Bynum stripe. Vilas took charge of the bill in the senate and the other day quietly asked the unanimous consent for its consideration, describing it as a "short bill unanimously reported by the committee." Nobody paid any attention, but as the clerk was rattling the bill off, Senator Lodge, busy with other matters, caught the words "civil service commission," and instantly objected, and Vilas's snap movement came to an end. Vilas is an old and steadfast friend of the enemies of civil service reform. In his famous secret circular opening up the system of secret charges for the removal of fourth-class postmasters, in 1885, he dealt the first Cleveland administration, of which he was a cabinet member, its first and ugliest blow and he has since made his acts square with that act.

THE civil service commission has just made public its letter to Secretary Carlisle calling his attention to the fact that since July 1, 1893, he had removed 88 women who had obtained their places by competition. Seventy of these were colored women. All were printers' assistants, of whom the entire number is 367. Also that in the year preceding June 30, 1894, 45 women, including 10 colored women, were passed over upon certification without selection. In the preceding administration appointments were made from the highest on the list, and in five years they were only 18 dismissals of women. At present there are only 8 colored women remaining, and of those dismissed there was no charge of misconduct. The Carlisles seem to be at their usual congenial business. But it is a very dirty business.

At the late election it was known in every corner of the country that the people of New York City had deliberately gone outside of party machines and had nominated and elected a man for mayor with the sole object of eliminating politics, partyism, bossism and an enormous load of corruption from their city government. Mayor Strong, to carry out this idea, has lately made some very important appointments and has chosen men who seemingly will do what the people intended. This was the most natural thing in the world to do, and any other course would have convicted Mayor Strong of infamous treachery. Yet on account of these appointments, Tom Platt, Judge Jake Patterson, Wicked Gibbs, Abe Gruber, Charley Hackett, chairman of the republican state committee, and the whole crowd of Platt's members of the state legislature are "sick." For several days in the legislature scarcely any business could be done, but the members gathered in groups and talked as though a crushing public calamity had come. This is a good measure of the work which has yet to be done. The people are not dissatisfied; they are greatly pleased. But the republican machine, made up of Platt men and completely in Platt's grip, is dissatisfied to exasperation, and it has great power for harm. The belief is yet prevalent through all the rotten highways and by-ways of the city government that Plattism will yet triumph and that politics, with all the accompaniments which the late investigation brought to light, will resume its sway. There is only one course for voters to pursue. Plattism must be killed everywhere, or the republican party organization must be destroyed. That organization now thinks it is invincible, but if it continues to espouse Plattism, citizens without organization may and will fearlessly invite the contest.

MAYOR STRONG, of New York, has given the CHRONICLE a great vindication. It strenuously maintained at the beginning of President Cleveland's present term, that if he would notify congressmen that there were no fourth-class post-offices to be divided as spoil, nor any reorganization of those offices to be made until congress, by legislation, had provided for taking them out of politics and would then sit down, the people would see to it that congress enacted the legislation. The opportunity was let to pass as seemingly not worth a thought. Mayor Strong came into office with a city government full of Tammany officials, and of everything which the whole world now understands by Tammanyism. To accomplish any reform here, also, legislation was necessary, and Platt controlled the legislature. The mayor refused to dicker, or make promises, or enter into deals. The Platt machine waited, and made excuses, and tried tricks until at last, whipped along by the threatening attitude of the people, it had to pass a power of removal bill, giving the mayor the full authority which he is now exercising to their infinite disgust. As Mayor Strong triumphed, President Cleveland might have triumphed.

Few things have done more to belittle successive Presidents and reduce them to the level of smart politicians than the repeated practice of extending the civil service rules over groups of offices after they have filled them with their partisans. There has heretofore been the excuse that other offices were filled with partisans of the other party. But that can not be urged now in excuse of President Cleveland's failure to extend the rules over the three hundred new deputy collectorships before the places were filled. It was supposed, and it had been given out from Washington, that the spoils system was done for. Yet there is now going on a bare-faced and disgraceful loot of three hundred places of the highest importance. This is politics of the most offensive form. The competitive system would have been an ideal method of filling these places. The new officials are to manage the income tax, which is odious in every feature. It was of the first importance that the men who were to collect it should be free from the suspicion of being anybody's or any party's men. Instead, we are to have the usual crop of tools of political bosses, with enemies to punish and friends to reward. The following dispatch from Lexington, Ky., shows how these offices are being filled:

Desha Breckinridge, son of Representative W. C. P. Breckinridge, has been appointed income-tax collector of the Lexington (Ky.) district by Collector Shelby, father of Col. Breckinridge's law partner. Young Breckinridge made himself notorious during the electioneering canvass in the Ashland (Ky.) district, which resulted in the defeat of his father for renomination, by William C. Owen. Among the men with whom Desha Breckinridge quarreled was ex-Judge George Kincaid, a supporter of Owen on whom he drew a knife, on the streets of Lexington. He was disarmed before he could do any damage. Col. Shelby, the son of the collector, who has named young Breckinridge as one of his assistants, has also been concerned in an affray, since the celebrated Ashland canvass, and during the Pollard-Breckinridge trial at Washington, he was mixed up in a discreditable court scene, and was rebuked by the presiding judge.

THE civil service reformers of Buffalo are refreshingly straightforward and plain-spoken, and this same candor may be found in the utterances of the Buffalo Express, which is a republican paper and an anti-spoils paper. It does not flinch from rebuking the republican mayor. Mr. Jewett won his election on his pledge that "municipal government is business, not politics." Like too many men of high social and business standing introduced into new and close political relations with clever bosses, he appears to be falling by the wayside. He removed Harbormaster Doyle, an efficient man, a democrat, and put in his place an inexperienced man, a republican, although marine-men protested against the removal. He removed twelve democratic bridge tenders and then filled their places with republican politicians, certifying that there was no eligible list instead of waiting for an eligible list. This looks very like a trick. Instead of excusing Mayor Jewett on the ground of "tremendous pressure" and that he has been "misled by bad advisers," a speaker at a recent meeting said, "If what Mayor Jewett is quoted in the newspapers as saying in defense of his appointments is correct, and I have every reason to believe it is, then he and the good government clubs are at war, and no disguise should be made of the fact. No armed truce should be maintained. Our position should be pronounced and strong."

This is the way to talk. We must have a high standard for our public men, and when they fall short they must be told of it, no matter how much it hurts us to be disagreeable and them to hear us.

WHEN President Harrison was paying the political committeemen with offices, there were, if we remember correctly, loud protests and innuendoes about the Indiana way of doing things. Massachusetts appears to have even surpassed the Indiana way. Within a few days we read how Daniel F. Buckley, for years secretary of the democratic state committee and latterly chairman of the executive committee, gets the surveyorship of the port of Boston. Mr. Robinson, who succeeded Mr. Buckley as secretary, has been selected by United States Marshal Swift as one of his deputies, and so the democratic state committee will have to be equipped with a new secretary and chairman of its executive committee.

Moreover Massachusetts has further ret-rograded. No faithful federal officers appear to be re-appointed. We used to hear in Indiana a good deal about local option in civil service reform, and Massachusetts explained her better condition as owing to a more enlightened and exacting public opinion. The shock of President Harrison's failure to continue General Corse in the Boston post-office, and Colonel Rice in the Springfield office, bore out this view; but week after week we have read of faithful officers being displaced in that state, and untried politicians appointed over faithful subordinates. Recently the competent assistant postmaster of Chicopee, who had practically run the office for years, was not promoted, but so bad an appointment was made that the disgusted citizens have called upon the senate to reject the appointment. The "faithful incumbent" of the office of surveyor, at Springfield, had to make way for a new man, "indorsed by John E. Russell," and a retiring county treasurer will succeed to a new office as the surveyor's deputy. The root of the matter is, that the good appointments and general care for Massachusetts, in Mr. Cleveland's first administration, and these bad political appointments for the democratic machine in his last administration, are based on the same radically vicious plan—appointments made upon private recommendations. It is the same bad principle, whether John E. Russell or the late George M. Stearns make recommendations, carefully thinking of the whole democratic party, or whether Josiah Quincy selects with a view only to strengthening the machine.

THE republican mayor of Boston, Mr. Curtis, selected an able civil engineer for superintendent of streets and an experienced business man for fire commissioner, and he re-appointed the city auditor, engineer, treasurer, and collector, capable men, but democrats. He also ordered heads of departments to notify him of vacancies before filling them, interpreted by the Boston Journal as meaning that "spoilsism will not be permitted anywhere." A blunt and frank spoilsman, Jesse M. Gove, rebuked this order of things at a recent political banquet. "From the man who picks in the sewer, to the head of the greatest department, you must have men in sympathy with you, to have a successful administration," he said. The Boston Journal, a strong partisan republican newspaper, tells him he is a "survival," that the "species to which he belongs is by no means extinct, but among republicans it is fast becoming so." But is not the Jesse Gove type less dangerous than the Olney type? Gove would feel no repugnance to the job of using the political axe himself on the men in the sewers and upwards.

The attorney-general appears to shun the commonness of a personal contact with patronage, but we find no civil service reformer who feels any confidence in his technical and unfriendly interpretations of the civil service law, a mistrust possibly intensified by the fact that he can remain an active director of a railroad upon which, as attorney-general, he might be required to enforce the provisions of the federal inter-state commerce law. Men like Gove have been frank allies of the spoils system, but the shifting of parties since 1884 has brought out a number of conspicuous theoretical anti-spoils men like Attorney-General Olney, who appear to be compelled to stab civil service reform upon contact.

IN the fact that congressmen hate to forego the power and authority of allotting spoil, the Indianapolis News recently gave the real reason why they continue to be hostile to all reform legislation, though they fully realize the danger and weakness it is to a party as well as to themselves. The smaller the man of course the more he loves to have his fellow-men fawn and cringe and serve to buy his favor. This pride and vanity is the sort of madness the gods bestow before they destroy a man, as Josiah Quincy will sadly learn. He has felt the satisfaction of having strings of followers in his ante-room patiently waiting their turn to present their claims for recognition. With so much power that he can place his men in offices over the protests of a majority of his own party personally interested in any office, why should he not swell with triumph? Every one else knows that Massachusetts will surely in time gather herself together to chastise severely any boss, but most severely will she chastise the boss evolved from a reformer.

WHY does not some friend of civil service reform reprint in pamphlet form "The Office Seeker," by Bret Harte; "The Plum Idiot," by Octave Thanet; "A Fourth-class Post-office," by Margaret Deland and "Brooks: A Story of the Civil Service," by Julia Schayer; and that charming story of Mr. Chaplin's about the Italian colony and the Boston custom house, the name of which we can not recall? There should be a short preface emphasizing the baseness of the spoils system as revealed truthfully in these stories, and there should be an appeal to the reader to join the Anti-Spoils League. These tracts should be sent north and south, east and west, among ministers and school teachers and high school students, and we might rest assured we could have no more effective missionaries in the field. There has been far too little of the work that appeals to the emotions in the fight for the merit and competitive systems. The money raised has for years been the generous offering of the same friends of the reform. Is there no one who can raise among the more recent friends of good government enough money for a more wide-spread propaganda?

WE have received the abstract of the monthly report of the secretary of the New York Civil Service Reform Association containing many interesting facts. In the federal service the recent orders of the President add to the competitive list 8,167 places, including four chiefs of divisions. When the 300 additional deputy collectors are appointed there will be in all 1,213 offices of this grade in the internal revenue department and all of them spoils. The boards of trade of nearly all of the large cities of the country have resolved in favor of putting the consular service out of politics. There are about 200,000 persons in the civil service of the United States. Civil service bills are now pending in the legislatures of Illinois, Indiana and Minnesota.

Persons interested in the subject will find much in these monthly reports which they can receive by forwarding their names to the secretary, George McAneny, 54 William street, New York.

It seems to be generally taken as a matter of fact that Comptroller Trusler, of this city, is laying his plans to run as the successor of Mayor Denny. Just what manner of boss the community may, in the event of his election, live under is illustrated from the following from the Indianapolis News of September 2, 1891. Trusler, when a member of the common council, demanded that a captain twenty-two years in the fire department be dismissed:

"Isn't he a good republican?" asked Chief Dougherty.

"Yes."

"Isn't he a good fireman?"

"Yes."

"Well, why should he be dismissed?"

"Because he is no friend of mine."

This was the exalted plan under which the department was run when Trusler was boss and when he was perfecting a scheme to have the appointing power taken from the chief and absolutely lodged in himself—or his board, which he dominated.

COMMUNISM OF SPOIL.

THE New York Tribune, purified by a late conversion from Plattism, continues to warn its readers how close has been the connection of Tom Platt with Tammany. For years other people have been trying in vain to convince the patriotic partisans of this connection. The following from the New York Times of October 7, 1891, illustrates the fraternity of Platt and Tammany:

T. C. Platt, of Tioga, who runs the republican party in the city of New York as well as in the state, announced yesterday that it had been determined that the republicans should nominate a straight ticket locally.

Platt's announcement that there is to be a straight local republican ticket means a walk-over for Tammany in local affairs, and no one knows this better than Mr. Platt of Tioga, whose orators are making the fight against Tammany in the state. Platt says that "the republican party is perfectly sincere in its desire to rout Tammany out of office and depose it from power both in city and state."

"There are some very funny things in politics," said an observer yesterday when he read this declaration of Mr. Platt's. "Let me see, how long is it since T. C. Platt stopped making deals with Tammany? Not more than two years, is it? How was it that the bill increasing the number of police justices in 1889 was passed? Wasn't Mr. Taintor appointed a police justice as a result of the deal on this bill, and wasn't Mr. Platt the man who made that deal with Tammany in behalf of the republicans? I don't say that Taintor was Platt's man, but Platt expected to get three police justices out of the deal and he was particularly strenuous in his effort to get Mayor Grant to reappoint Police Justice Jacob M. Patterson.

"Why, it is not two years since Mr. Platt was in the mayor's private office laboring with the mayor to reappoint Patterson. Mr. Grant wouldn't do it. Some of the Tammany people thought that the mayor should yield the point. Mr. Platt cried out that faith was not being kept with him by Tammany and the mayor. Even this cry did not save Patterson. He was not reappointed.

"The result of the mayor's refusal to name Mr. Patterson was rather curious. It was not long after Mr. Platt's last visit to the mayor's office that the senate committee on cities was made up and care was taken to put Senator J. Sloat Fassett upon it. It was not long after that that the republican senate resolved that its committee on cities should investigate all the cities in the state. It never visited any city but the city of New York, did it?"

THE collusion of bosses of the different political parties is one of the commonplaces of politics and yet they can always fool the bulk of respectable men who have ordinary shrewdness regarding questions outside of politics. Steve—now Senator—Elkins and Gorman have been for years in close association. The following from the New York Evening Post illustrates the same intimacy of bosses in San Francisco:

"Chris" Buckley, who controls the democratic machine, is notable as the "blind boss," the loss of his eyesight not having injured his capacity for pulling wires and laying pipes. The republican boss is "Colonel" Burns (with the "Colonel" always put in quotation marks), who was once clerk of an interior county, and went out leaving a deficit for his bondsmen to make up, and was afterward secretary of state, with the result of losing the state $31,000. The courts failed to determine who committed the theft, but the San Francisco Bulletin, a republican newspaper, says that "there is no doubt on the outside about it." The blind boss of the democrats and the defaulting boss of the republicans are hand in glove, and the honest men in both parties are trying to secure their overthrow by a non-partisan movement.

FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY.

Indiana is now in the full enjoyment of rare specimens of public wisdom. Governor Matthews says that if he appoints the boards for the public institutions, he will put two democrats and one republican upon each, as though the quality of the political opinions of members of these boards should have something to do with their treatment of the criminal, the insane and the feeble-minded. The republican members of the general assembly in caucus declare that the plain meaning of the words "non-partisan boards" in their platform last fall is that such boards must have two republican partisans and one democratic partisan, and they are evidently going to enact this meaning into a law. If they had anything but the worst political motives, they would not care what the politics of the boards were, but would enact a law which would prevent the boards from using the state service as spoil.

They propose also to postpone the time of the election of the county superintendents of schools to a date when the new township trustees largely republican who elect by counties will be in office and can select republican superintendents. When this proposition was debated in the state senate, Senator "Al" Wishard, from this county, said:

"You are talking to the wind. You know what we intend to do. We have the power, and we will use it. There are seventy-three county superintendents whom we can elect, and we propose to have them. Ours is the party in power. The people will hold us responsible for the conduct of the schools, and we will have our way, if we are responsible."

"Do you mean to say that it is the intention of the majority of this senate to make the public schools of this state political?"

"To this extent, we do."

Who shall answer these fools according to their folly? Such fools have been answered before, and will be again. In the meantime the situation illustrates how we are governed. There is not a thing on the part of the republicans in these controversies except a struggle for opportunities to work henchmen into the public employ. The weight of the republican press of the state is heavily against these unworthy and treacherous representatives of the peole; but they do not care for that; they are "in politics for what there is in it." It is not the first time that the people have been cheated in choosing representatives. This instance affords a new overwhelming argument that a voter should hold himself absolutely independent of any party machine. Successive defeats will finally drive out of public life the men who now control these machines.

POLITICAL ARCHITECTURE.

THE CHRONICLE has before called attention to the spoils architecture of this country, involving an enormous waste of public funds, and bringing into existence a lot of public monstrosities. The architects of the country have been protesting against the abuse, and the McKaig bill, leaving the administrative portion of the public architecture in the department and dividing and entrusting the artistic part of the work to the best architects of the country, represent their views. They find that somebody at Washington has thwarted their plans. Logan Carlisle appears to be the object of their suspicion. We had the Raum boys, and then we had young Carlisle; and it seems probable that we shall have to bear this upstart spoilsman two years longer, for he is a bigger man than his father, too big apparently for the President to kick out of the department he has scandalized. Possibly for two years more this large and generous country will freely provide funds for this bullying spoils monger's architecture.

Says Montgomery Schuyler in the July Forum:

The architect who has for forty years had the spending of two millions and a half a year, and with it the unchallenged power to play any pranks he chose with the public architecture, and to debauch the taste of the American public from Maine to California, has been the successor and representative of the clerk-of-works of the treasury building. With an influence much beyond that of any European ministry of public works, he is a clerk, holding office at the pleasure of the secretary of the treasury, unrecognized by law except in the annual appropriations, and with no guarantee whatever of his professional competency, except that the secretary of the treasury has seen fit to appoint him.

The position of supervising architect was offered to John M. Carrere, and two hundred architects urged him to accept the position. He made a thorough investigation of the possibilities of the position, and felt obliged to decline it on the ground that under the present conditions nothing could be accomplished. The following is an extract from his letter to Secretary Carlisle, and shows how shameful is the abuse of a great opportunity:

The work of this department, irrespective of its present organization, or of any improvement that could be made in the same, comprises a staff of about 150 employes, their duties comprising (1) a legal department having charge of all contracts, purchases of sites, deeds, interpretation of laws, classification of the same, and other legal matters relating specifically to this department; (2) an extensive system of accounting, burdened by the vast number of small accounts, resulting from the maintenance and repairs of buildings, and needing a very great amount of detail; (3) the technical or drafting division, in which all computations of quantities and cost of work are made, auditing of all accounts, all original designs and working drawings; specifications and calculations comprising both the artistic and practical work, and involving sanitary heating, elevator, lighting, ventilating, and other plants of a purely technical nature; also, the superintendence, supervision and inspection of all these works. The work itself is scattered over the entire United States, and is absolutely beyond the reach of any one man except by proxy, and practically beyond his control.

The number of buildings now in course of construction—some of them well advanced, others hardly started, and many of them still untouched—is 115, ranging from marine hospitals, the appropriation for which is only about $2,000, but involving much troublesome detail and waste of time, up to buildings like the San Francisco post-office, the appropriation for which is about $2,000,000; Buffalo post-office, about $5,100,000; Kansas City post-office, about $1,000,000; the New York appraisers' stores, $2,000,000; these being the most important buildings, the others ranging all the way from $500,000 to $50,000 and under. In addition to this, eight buildings are now about to be appropriated for, ranging from $100,000 up to $4,000,000 for the Chicago post-office, the latter to be constructed within a period which I understand is not to exceed two years.

In addition to the above, congress appropriates about $200,000 a year for the maintenance of over 250 buildings; most of the money is spent in small amounts ranging from fifty cents upwards, for repairs, etc., involving indefinite trouble and drudgery, and demanding much time and attention.

The present condition of this work is in such a disorganized state that it would take the best part of any man's time to reorganize the work itself, irrespective of the department. The accumulated waste of money is beyond belief. The department, in the main, seems to be well organized, though cumbersome. The personnel is efficient in a measure, but ill adapted to the class of work which the country expects of our government, and absolutely deficient in artistic worth. The tenure of the office is controlled either by civil service rules or by political influence, and with this state of affairs the office of supervising architect, legally, is merely that of the clerk of the department appointed by the secretary of the treasury; and though his responsibility is supposed to cover all of the above work, his authority is absolutely dependent on the secretary of the treasury, and much of it is divided with the heads of departments.

Any man, no matter what his ability or his power for work and concentration, and no matter what conditions might be offered to him, even those of absolute responsibility with absolute authority, would have to devote himself either to managing the office, allowing the designing to be done by draftsmen, as at present, or to designing, allowing the office to be managed by heads of departments, as at present; and no man of ability with a reputation to lose as an artist would be presumptuous enough to accept the office, even if his duties were to be confined to designing, irrespective of any other work or responsibility, because it is absolutely beyond the grasp and ability of any one man who has ever lived to imprint his personality upon this much work, and much less to design it and study it himself.

After all these years and after the expenditure of all these millions, the country has scarcely a single beautiful or noble structure.

The Court of Honor proved conclusively what American architects can do. They can accomplish unexcelled architectural beauty and grandeur. The existing United States architecture proves conclusively all that a long line of political bosses, ending with the present weak Covington politician, can accomplish.

THE BUFFALO PLAN

Of Improving Citizenship Through the Public Schools.

The CHRONICLE has received from Mr. Emerson, the superintendent of the public schools of Buffalo, the following interesting letter, which it prints in full:

I was interested in reading an article in your issue of January, 1895, on the subject of school commencements and civil service reform. For ten years I was a teacher in the high school of this city and afterwards was principal ten years. I have observed how reluctant teachers are to advocate the principles of good government in our public schools. It seems to me supreme folly to spend millions of dollars for public schools without making any attempt to point out to the boys who are soon to be voters the duty of good citizenship. While I was principal of the high school I took occasion at least once a year to explain to the assembled school, numbering 700 or 800 boys and girls, the claims of the principles represented in the merit system, and did much, I believe, to remove the prejudices which so commonly exist against it.

Since becoming superintendent of the city schools I have introduced a system of civic training, extending from the third year of the primary through the grammar grades. I send you a copy of our course of study (under separate cover) that you may see what the plan is. I do not think that a similar attempt has been made in any other city in the country. It is only a first attempt and will doubtless be perfected as time goes on. We have tried in years past the plan of having a text-book for a year or two, but this made the work mechanical and it was not a success. By this method of oral instruction I am sure the boys and girls will leave the grammar schools with a good general knowledge of the institutions under which they live, and of the dangers which beset them. Yours truly,

HENRY P. EMERSON.

Buffalo, Feb. 5, 1895.

The course referred to by Mr. Emerson is as follows:

THIRD GRADE.

The meaning of government, its necessity and uses, should be developed. In connection with the geography of Buffalo, the word mayor should be explained and his name given. The necessity for money to carry on the government should be shown. How are the public schools supported? The fire department? The police? Why, then, do we pay taxes? Consult Fisk, pp. 5-7; Townsend, pp. 1-2; Peterman, pp. 17-21, 57-63, 157, 158, 201-204.

FOURTH GRADE.

While teaching the geography of Erie county, show that a county is made up of towns, with sometimes one or more villages and cities. Show by a diagram how a village is formed in a town and why; how a village becomes a city and why. How many towns in Erie county? How many counties in the state? Name two villages in our county; name one city. Teach the duties of sheriff and give his name; the same of governor and president. Bring out the relative size of this state; the population of Buffalo and New York state (approximately). Peterman, pp. 51, 56-59, 85. Fiske, pp. 79, 116-136.

FIFTH GRADE.

As the lessons in geography leave the United States to take up other countries of the world, the different kinds of government should be touched upon, as monarchy, absolute and limited (or constitutional); republic, etc.; such words as representative, hereditary, elective, should be explained and illustrated. Review what has gone before in the third, fourth and fifth grades. Amplify the ideas as you review them. Show that we live under three governments, local (city), state and national. Illustrate: Schools, police and fire protection, pavements, sewers and park system, paid for by local government; insane asylum, canals, building of capitol at Albany, by state; Fort Porter, the breakwater, light-houses, post-office and letter carriers, by United States. Why is this so in each case? Townsend, pp. 4-6; Peterman, 159; Fiske, 274.

SIXTH GRADE.

The city, county and state government should be taken up more in detail. Use the supplementary circular on this subject prepared by the superintendent. Present no more than you can make interesting. Fiske, 48, 79, 100, 167-172; also Northam.

SEVENTH GRADE.

[Refers especially to United States history, and is therefore omitted.]

EIGHTH GRADE.

Review from the beginning. Then take up the federal constitution, the full text of which is given in the history. Emphasize the three branches of government: (1) Congress; the two houses; how elected and length of term; what congress has power to do, and what it may not do; special powers of each house; restrictions on the general government; restrictions on the states. (2) The executive; how elected; inauguration; his duties and powers; messages; his cabinet; principal duties of each department; the diplomatic and consular service. (3) The supreme court; its jurisdiction.

NINTH GRADE.

This grade should be reserved for a general review of the subject and the consideration of matters of importance to us as a city. Our city government when first organized; our present charter, when adopted; how it may be changed; the common council; powers of the mayor; important appointments; the city departments; elective or appointive heads. (See chart prepared by the superintendent.)

Legal qualifications for voting; the duty of voting; the Australian ballot; the New York system, is it the best? the voting machine. Fiske, 347.

Difficulties in the way of good government in large cities; municipal extravagance. Fiske, 116-136.

Bribery and fraud in elections; the corrupt practices act. Fiske, 342. The "spoils system;" civil service reform.

Parties and party machinery: The caucus (primary); conventions; platforms, nominating candidates.

Revenue: Direct and indirect taxation; tariff duties; free trade and protection; arguments for and against.

We have studied the above excellent programme with great interest. Just as it is, it is a valuable training, but if it is intended to be a factor in good citizenship it is incomplete. Whatever hints to good citizenship are given are left until the ninth grade as if they were something separate and apart from the other instruction. If a child is told in the third grade, as he should be, that public schools, the fire department, and the police department, are supported by money collected of all the people, then is also the time to begin to impress the fact that taxes are trust funds. By apt illustration a very young child will grasp the moral principle that trust funds must be spent more carefully than one would spend private funds. It is not too soon to show by simple but specific illustrations that what the city has paid for must be managed for the city, and not for the selfish interests of a few. So in the fourth grade where the facts are given of the duties of a sheriff, the governor, and the president, inseparable from the formal facts of the functions pertaining to those offices, are the facts that they must use their offices as a public trust. All this may be done in the most elementary way, but the fact that a public office is a trust is inexorable, and it should be taught. As early as attention is called to the formation of the village and the city, should begin to be taught the necessity for the city or the village to be clean, healthful and beautiful, and how this is effected by water, pavements, sewers and parks, and the sin of squandering the people's money by bad work. Here, too, is the time to impress the individual duty of everybody, even children, to aid in securing a clean city.

In short, step by step, the wrong of any abuse of public money, the stern obligations of public office over private interest, the undeniable facts that no bribery or fraud can be tolerated in our public business must be specifically and persistently illustrated and a high standard of public duty be demanded along with the understanding of the mere functions of government. Ways and means of attaining these ends differ, and are proper subjects for discussion, and are, therefore, to be simply explained. The Australian ballot system, free trade and protection, the merit or competitive system, belong to this latter class and are properly left until children are more mature, but that every office exists solely for the benefit of the public, and never for the benefit of an individual or a party, that it is wrong to use offices to pay men for party work, that it is wrong to increase the public pay-roll in view of an approaching election, or for an appointing officer to quarter his relatives upon the public, or for a congressman to use the fourth-class postmasters to work up his primaries, as well as the wrong of a multitude of other improper uses of public offices must be taught. The very class Mr. Emerson most hopes to reach are those who not only live amidst great ignorance of the functions of national, state, and city government, but they are even more ignorant of the moral principles and duties of citizenship. We can easily conceive that the lads in the neighborhood of Canal street would recite the facts of this course as stated with glib intelligence, and yet be perfect miniature Tammanyites in the belief that public funds exist in order to be filched by people smart enough to learn the ropes.

CURRENT SPOIL.

Franklin W. Joplin was appointed postmaster at Elizabethtown, Ky., vice Mrs. Benjamin Helm. The circumstances surrounding the case makes it one of unusual interest. Gen. Ben Hardin Helm, the husband of Mrs. Helm, was one of the most gallant soldiers of the confederate army. He was the commander of the famous orphan's brigade, and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga. Mrs. Helm, the postmistress who was removed to-day, was a younger sister of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, who was a Tod. Col. Robert Lincoln was her nephew, and when he was appointed secretary of war by President Garfield, he secured his aunt's appointment as postmistress of Elizabethtown. That position she has held through three administrations—Arthur's, Cleveland's and Harrison's. Although an effort was made to have Mrs. Helm removed during Mr. Cleveland's first term it was not urgently pressed and was unsuccessful. The appointment of Franklin W. Joplin to-day was made on the recommendation of Representative Montgomery.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, January 16.

A movement has been begun here to secure the removal of E. P. Kearns, collector of internal revenue for the twenty-four counties in Western Pennsylvania. Representatives Sibley and Kribbs, two of the three democratic members in that revenue district, are engineering the move. The trouble can be traced back to the patronage involved. All of the trio had candidates for the collectorship, but Representative Sipe carried off the prize and Mr. Kearns was appointed. It was agreed, however, that the other representatives should name the appointments to be made in their districts. Collector Kearns failed to keep the agreement and when cornered gave various excuses, the principal one against Mr. Sibley being that he recommended populists only. Messrs. Sibley and Kribbs appealed to Mr. Sipe to see to it that the agreement was kept, but to their surprise Mr. Sipe told them that as they had not supported Mr. Kearns for the appointment they had no right to attempt to dictate his appointments. Now all three statesmen will be out of jobs after March 4th.

* * But the principal charge is said to come from influential business men of Pittsburg and vicinity. They do not desire that Mr. Kearns be in control when the time arrives to collect the income tax. They fear, it is said, that private information secured through the inquisitorial features of that law would not be kept inviolate if he remains in charge, and their fear was aroused by his course in collecting the other taxes.

As Collector Kearns has a good record with the internal revenue bureau, and the officials will not allow party politics to control, the impression prevails that he will hold on. He is here on the ground ready for the fight and is sustained by Mr. Sipe. As he will have four or five income tax agents or deputies to appoint, it is hinted that the charges are simply a bluff to compel him to make a divvy with the kickers. The places have salaries ranging from $1,440 to $2,000 per annum.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, December 19.

* * *

The principal charges are in sworn affidavits by J. S. Bryner and W. W. Graham. They allege general mismanagement; that the employes were assessed a full month's salary to aid in the attempt to re-elect Representative Sipe; that numerous other employes holding responsible positions were permitted to leave distilleries unguarded to work in behalf of Mr. Sipe; that several of the employes were drunkards and incompetents, and that one was retained because his brother was one of the collector's bondsmen. But the most serious charge was that the collector would levy contributions of wine, whisky and cigars upon the whisky men and others in his district, with the intention of not paying for them, and that he did not pay for them. The gaugers were required to make these levies until they grew ashamed of the dirty work, and one of them is alleged to have said he could not perform his official duty exactly towards these victims while this was going on.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, January 8.

Postmaster Frank Lalor, of this city, who was appointed by President Cleveland about a year ago, is severely criticised for recommending the discharge of a letter-carrier. Michael Stahovski is an intelligent Pole who was appointed by Postmaster Yard, the republican who preceded Mr. Lalor, and was considered by Mr. Yard one of his most efficient men. He was first appointed a substitute carrier in July, 1892, and was made a regular carrier in February following. He had passed an excellent examination under the civil-service rules, and was selected because he stood at the top of the class examined with him.

Stahovski says he had not the faintest idea of any trouble until December 18, last, when he received a letter from First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones, informing him that charges had been preferred against him of offensive partisanship, visiting a liquor-saloon while on duty, and drinking, working for the republican ticket on November 8, 1892, and intoxication while on duty. Stahovski replied promptly, denying each charge specifically, except the third. In regard to that he said, that at the time of the election he was still only a substitute carrier, and on election day was not on duty at all. Being interested in the election, he exercised his right as an American citizen, and worked for his favorite candidates. After his appointment as a regular carrier he never took part in political affairs. Stahovski asked for a trial, at which he could prove his denials. The department was silent until January 23, when he received the following:

After a careful consideration of the charges made by the postmaster against you as carrier, I have decided to approve the postmaster's recommendation for your removal, and he has been instructed to nominate your successor.

About two weeks prior to receiving this summary letter, Stahovski says he was asked by Postmaster Lalor if he had yet heard from Washington, to which he replied in the negative, and made a similar inquiry from the postmaster. Mr. Lalor said he had not, and then Stahovski asserted that the charges were untrue. The postmaster replied:

You have bitter enemies and I do not know that I can do anything for you in the matter, as I am a democrat and you are a republican.

After receiving the letter of January 23, Stahovski asked of Mr. Lalor a hearing to disprove the charges, but was told that nothing could be done for him. "Everything in Washington is one-sided," said the postmaster. "The department looks up the last charge against a republican and tries to remove him, and would like to get all republicans out if it could."—Trenton dispatch, New York Evening Post, January 31.

Postmaster Lalor celebrated his appointment to office by writing a letter to Senator Smith, of New Jersey, saying that he had inherited a number of republicans on his force whom he would like to get rid of, and inquiring by what means he could go about it without rendering himself liable to punishment under the civil service law. Senator Smith turned Mr. Lalor's letter over to the civil service commission; but the commission sent a copy of the postmaster's letter to the post-office department, with a suggestion that the department might be interested in knowing his point of view when it became necessary to act upon his recommendations.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 1.

TAMMANY REPUBLICANISM.

It is related of the late Judge George Shea that when he retired from the marine court judgeship in 1882, he did so because Tammany Hall demanded as the price of his re-election a year's salary of the office, $15,000. To this he answered, with true Roman scorn, that if his services to the city had not been such as to warrant his re-election on his own merits, he did not desire the office.

A story is told concerning City-Judge Cowing of the court of general sessions which, if true, forms an interesting commentary upon his assertion to the grand jury that in the Robertson General Sessions bill, politics for the first time entered that court, and makes also a valuable exhibit to be attached to the statement of reasons Recorder Goff has given why he should be empowered to reorganize the force of employes. The story comes from a usually trustworthy source, and in substance is as follows:

When Judge Cowing was nominated in 1892, by Tammany Hall, after being renominated by the republicans, a condition said to have been imposed either directly or indirectly, by express agreement or tacit understanding, was that he should pay a large contribution into the Tammany Hall campaign fund, and should give his patronage as judge to that organization. It is matter of public knowledge that the judge paid over $10,000 to the Tammany campaign committee, and that he defended his action in the newspapers. The attendants whom he had origi-
